

Majjhima Nikāya

The Middle Length Sayings
of the Buddha

Translated from the Pali
by I.B. Horner, M.A.

Majjhima Nikāya

The Middle Length Sayings

Translated from the Pali by I.B. Horner, M.A.
Associate of Newham College, Cambridge
First Published in 1954

Copyright The Pali Text Society
Commercial Rights Reserved
Creative Commons License

Namo tassa Bhagavato arahato Sammā-sambuddhassa

Praise to the Lord, the Perfected One, the Completely Self-awakened One

Credits

Original Texts: Pali Text Society (PTS)

This collection of e-books has been compiled from the ongoing and continuously updated HTML source files found on BuddhaDust.net . Although there may be errors related to the Optical Character Recognition (OCR) that was used to scan the original books, it was felt that this edition of the e-book was good enough for release in its current state. If there are any doubts concerning the changes made by the editors, the original scans can also be found here on the website.

There have been some good faith alterations to the original hard copy text, and many of the suttas which were abridged originally have been fully rolled out. Some archaic word spellings have been modernized, but most words were left as they were in the original. Certain editorial comments contained in the text and made by the BuddhaDust editor are identified by [Ed.: ] in the footnotes.

I give much appreciation and gratitude to Stephen J. Torrence, who spent many tedious hours writing RegEx macros to transform the Buddhadust.net website into a proper e-book. Stephen also did the covers and many other action items including manually creating the Tables of Contents for the SN and AN. Without his help, this project would probably never have come to fruition or would have been far from the professional “look and feel” I believe we have achieved.

I would also like to thank Brad Garrison, Michael Rickicki, and Peter N for helping with the spell checking process, and especially Lean Lim who checked several batches I sent her.

May all beings share in the fruits of this great merit!

— Bhante Bhikkhu Subhūti

---

The original scanned texts (in image format) can be found at:

http://buddhadust.net/backmatter/indexes/idx\_downloads.htm#pts\_pdfs

Issues or mistakes may be reported on

<https://github.com/bksubhuti/buddhadust/issues>

Recent versions can be found at <https://github.com/bksubhuti/buddhadust/tree/master/pts-ebooks>

Table of Contents

Title

Credits

Table of Contents

1. Discourse on the Synopsis of Fundamentals

Mūla-Pariyā'ya Sutta

2. Discourse on All the Cankers

Sabbāsava Sutta

3. Discourse on Heirs of Dhamma

Dhammadāyāda Sutta

4. Discourse on Fear and Dread

Bhayabhera Sutta

5. Discourse on No Blemishes

Anaṅgaṇa Sutta

6. Discourse on What One May Wish

Ākaṅkheyya Sutta

7. Discourse on the Simile of the Cloth

Vatthūpama Sutta

8. Discourse on Expunging

Sallekha Sutta

9. Discourse on Perfect View

Sammā Dīṭṭhi Sutta

10. Discourse on the Applications of Mindfulness

Satipaṭṭhāna Sutta

11. Lesser Discourse on the Lion's Roar

Cūḷa Sīhanāda Sutta

12. Greater Discourse on the Lion's Roar

Mahā Sīhanāda Sutta

13. Greater Discourse on the Stems of Anguish

Mahā Dukkhaḅkhandha Sutta

14. Lesser Discourse on the Stems of Anguish

Cūḷa Dukkhaḅkhandha Sutta

15. Discourse on Measuring in Accordance with

- Anumāna Sutta
16. Discourse on Mental Barrenness
Cetokhila Sutta
17. Discourse on the Forest Grove
Vana-Pattha Sutta
18. Discourse of the Honey-Ball
Madhu-Pindika Sutta
19. Discourse on the Twofold Thought
Dvedhā-Vitakka Sutta
20. Discourse on the Forms of Thought
Vitakka-Santhāna Sutta
21. Discourse on the Parable of the Saw
Kakacūpama Sutta
22. Discourse on the Parable of the Water-Snake
Alagaddūpama Sutta
23. Discourse on the Anthill
Vammīka Sutta
24. Discourse on the Relays of Chariots
Ratha-Vinīta Sutta
25. Discourse on Crops
Nivāpa Sutta
26. Discourse on the Ariyan Quest
Ariya Pariyesana Sutta
27. Lesser Discourse on the Simile of the Elephant's Footprint
Cūḷa Hatthi-Padopama Sutta
28. Greater Discourse on the Simile of the Elephant's Footprint
Mahā Hatthi-Padopama Sutta
29. Greater Discourse on the Simile of the Pith
Mahā Sāropama Sutta
30. Lesser Discourse on the Simile of the Pith
Cūḷa Sāropama Sutta
31. Lesser Discourse in Gosīṅga
Cūḷa Gosīṅga Sutta
32. Greater Discourse in Gosīṅga
Mahā Gosīṅga Sutta
33. Greater Discourse on the Cowherd

- Mahā Gopālaka Sutta
34. Lesser Discourse on the Cowherd
Cūḷa Gopālaka Sutta
35. Lesser Discourse to Saccaka
Cūḷa Saccaka Sutta
36. Greater Discourse to Saccaka
Mahā Saccaka Sutta
37. Lesser Discourse on the Destruction of Craving
Cūḷa-Taṇhā-Saṅkhaya Sutta
38. Greater Discourse on the Destruction of Craving
Mahā Taṇhā Saṅkhaya Sutta
39. Greater Discourse at Assapura
Mahā Assapura Sutta
40. Lesser Discourse at Assapura
Cūḷa Assapura Sutta
41. Discourse to the People of Sālā
Sāleyyaka Sutta
42. Discourse to the People of Verañjā
Verañjaka Sutta
43. Greater Discourse of the Miscellany.
Mahā Vedalla Sutta
44. Lesser Discourse of the Miscellany.
Cūḷa Vedalla Sutta
45. Lesser Discourse on the (Ways of) Undertaking Dhamma
Cūḷa Dhamma-Samādāna Sutta
46. Greater Discourse on the (Ways of) Undertaking Dhamma
Mahā Dhamma-Samādāna Sutta
47. Discourse on Inquiring
Vīmaṃsaka Sutta
48. Discourse at Kosambī
Kosambīya Sutta
49. Discourse on a Challenge to a Brahmā
Brahmā-Nimantaṇika Sutta
50. Discourse on a Rebuke to Māra
Māra Tajjaniya Sutta
51. Discourse to Kandaraka

- Kandaraka Sutta
- 52. Discourse to a Citizen of Atthaka Atthaka-Nāgara Sutta
- 53. Discourse for Learners
Sekha Sutta
- 54. Discourse to Potaliya
Potaliya Sutta
- 55. Discourse to Jīvaka
Jīvaka Sutta
- 56. Discourse with Upāli
Upāli Sutta
- 57. Discourse on the Canine Ascetic
Kukkura-Vatika Sutta
- 58. Discourse to Abhaya
Abhaya-Rāja-Kumāra Sutta
- 59. Discourse on Much to Be Experienced Bahu-Vedanīya Sutta
- 60. Discourse on the Sure Apañṇaka Sutta
- 61. Discourse on an Exhortation to Rāhula at Ambalatthika Ambalatthikā-Rāhul'ovāda Sutta
- 62. Greater Discourse on an Exhortation to Rāhula
Mahā-Rāhul'ovāda Sutta
- 63. Lesser Discourse to Mālunkya \(Putta\) Cūḷa Mālunkya Sutta
- 64. Greater Discourse to Mālunkya \(Putta\) Mahā Mālunkya Sutta
- 65. Discourse to Bhaddāli
Bhaddāli Sutta
- 66. Discourse on the Simile of the Quail Laṭukikopama Sutta
- 67. Discourse at Cātumā
Cātuma Sutta
- 68. Discourse at Naḷakapāna
Naḷakapāna Sutta
- 69. Discourse on Gulissāni

- Gulissāni Sutta
70. Discourse at Kīṭāgiri
Kīṭāgiri Sutta
71. Discourse to Vacchagotta on the Threefold Knowledge
Tevijja-Vacchagotta Sutta
72. Discourse to Vacchagotta on Fire
Aggi-Vacchagotta Sutta
73. Greater Discourse to Vacchagotta
Mahā-Vacchagotta Sutta
74. Discourse To Dīghanakha
Dīghanakha Sutta
74. Discourse to Māgandīya
Māgandīya Sutta
76. Discourse to Sandaka
Sandaka Sutta
77. Greater Discourse to Sakuludāyīn
Mahā Sakuludāyī Sutta
78. Discourse to Samaṇamāṇḍikā's Son Samaṇamāṇḍikā Sutta
79. Lesser Discourse to Sakuludāyīn
Cūḷa Sakuludāyī Sutta
80. Discourse to Vekhanassa Vekhanassa Sutta
81. Discourse on Ghaṭṭikāra
Ghaṭṭikāra Sutta
82. Discourse with Ratthapāla Ratthapāla Sutta
83. Discourse on Makhādeva
Makhādeva Sutta
84. Discourse at Madhura
Madhurā Sutta
85. Discourse to Prince Bodhi
Bodhi-Rāja-Kumāra Sutta
86. Discourse with Aṅgulimāla
Aṅgulimāla Sutta
87. Discourse on "Born of Affection"

- Piya-Jātika Sutta
88. Discourse on the Foreign Cloth
Bāhitika Sutta
89. Discourse on Testimonies to Dhamma
Dhamma-Cetiya Sutta
90. Discourse at Kaṇṇakatthala
Kaṇṇakatthala Sutta
91. Discourse with Brahmāyu
Brahmāyu Sutta
92. Discourse with Sela
Sela Sutta
93. Discourse with Assalāyana
Assalāyana Sutta
94. Discourse with Ghoṭamukha
Ghoṭamukha Sutta
95. Discourse with Caṅkī
Caṅkī Sutta
96. Discourse with Esukārī
Phasukārī or Esukārī Sutta
97. Discourse with Dhānañjāni Dhānañjāni Sutta
98. Discourse to Vāsetṭha
Vāsetṭha Sutta
99. Discourse with Subha
Subha Sutta
100. Discourse with Saṅgārava
Saṅgārava Sutta
101. Discourse at Devadaha
Devadaha Sutta
102. Discourse on the Threefold Five Pañca-t-taya Sutta
103. Discourse on "What Then?"
Kinti Sutta
104. Discourse at Sāmagāma
Sāmagāma Sutta
105. Discourse to Sunakkhatta

- Sunakkhatta Sutta
106. Discourse on Beneficial Imperturbability.
Ānañjasappāya Sutta
107. The Discourse to Ganaka-Moggallāna
Ganaka-Moggallāna Sutta
108. The Discourse to Ganaka-Moggallāna
Ganaka-Moggallāna Sutta
109. Greater Discourse (at the Time) of a Full Moon Mahā Punṇama Sutta
110. Lesser Discourse (at the Time) of a Full Moon
Cūḷa Punṇama Sutta
111. Discourse on the Uninterrupted Anupada Sutta
112. Discourse on the Sixfold Cleansing
Chabbisodhana Sutta
113. Discourse on the Good Man
Sappurisa Sutta
114. Discourse on What is to Be Followed and What is Not to Be Followed Sevitabba-Asevitabba Sutta
115. Discourse on the Manifold Elements
Bahu-Dhātuka Sutta
116. Discourse at Isigili
Isigili Sutta
117. Discourse Pertaining to the Great Forty.
Mahā Cattārīsaka Sutta
118. Discourse on Mindfulness when Breathing In and Out Ānāpāna-Sati Sutta
119. Discourse on Mindfulness of Body.
Kāyagatā-Sati Sutta
120. Discourse on Uprising by Means of Aspiration Saṅkhār'uppatti Sutta
121. The Lesser Discourse on Emptiness Cūḷa Suññata Sutta
122. The Greater Discourse on Emptiness Mahā Suññata Sutta
123. Discourse on Wonderful and Marvellous Qualities

- Acchariya-Bhuta-Dhamma Sutta
124. Discourse by Bakkula
Bakkula Sutta
125. The Discourse on the "Tamed Stage" Dantabhūmi Sutta
126. Discourse to Bhūmija
Bhūmija Sutta
127. Discourse with Anuruddha
Anuruddha Sutta
128. The Discourse on Defilements
Upakkilesa Sutta
129. Discourse on Fools and the Wise Bālapandita Sutta
130. Discourse on the Deva-Messengers Devadūta Sutta
131. Discourse on the Auspicious
Bhadd'Eka-Ratta Sutta
132. Ānanda's Discourse on the Auspicious
Ānanda-Bhadd'Eka-Ratta Sutta
133. Mahā Kaccāna's Discourse on the Auspicious
Mahā Kaccāna-Bhadd'Eka-Ratta Sutta
134. Lomasakaṅgiya's Discourse on the Auspicious
Lomasakaṅgiya-Bhadd'Eka-Ratta Sutta
135. Discourse on the Lesser Analysis of Deeds
Cūḷa Kamma-Vibhaṅga Sutta
136. Discourse on the Greater Analysis of Deeds Mahā Kamma-Vibhaṅga Sutta
137. Discourse on the Analysis of the Sixfold \(Sense-\) Field Salāyatana-Vibhaṅga Sutta
138. Discourse on an Exposition and Analysis Uddesa Vibhaṅga Sutta
139. Discourse on the Analysis of the Undefined
The Arana-vibhaṅga Sutta
140. Discourse on the Analysis of the Elements
Dhātu-Vibhaṅga Sutta
141. Discourse on the Analysis of the Truths

- Sacca-Vibhaṅga Sutta
142. Discourse on the Analysis of Offerings
Dakkhiṇa-Vibhaṅga Sutta
143. Discourse on an Exhortation to Anāthapindika Anāthapindik'ovāda Sutta
144. Discourse on an Exhortation to Channa Chann'ovāda Sutta
145. Discourse on an Exhortation to Punṇa Punṇ'ovāda Sutta
146. Discourse on an Exhortation from Nandaka Nandak'ovāda Sutta
147. Discourse on an Exhortation to Rāhula
Cūḷa Rāhul'ovāda Sutta
148. Discourse on the Six Sixes
Cha-Chakka Sutta
149. Discourse Pertaining to the Great Sixfold (Sense-) Field
Mahā Saḷāyatanika Sutta
150. Discourse to the People of Nagaravinda Nagara-Vindeyya Sutta
151. Discourse on Complete Purity for Alms-Gathering Piṇḍapāta-Pārisuddhi Sutta
152. Discourse on the Development of the Sense Organs Indriya-Bhāvanā Sutta

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
1. Mūlapariyāya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
1. The Division of the Synopsis of Fundamentals

1. Discourse on the Synopsis of Fundamentals

Mūla-Pariyā'ya Sutta

Praise to the Lord, the Perfected One, the Completely Self-awakened One

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
1. Mūlapariyāya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
1. The Division of the Synopsis of Fundamentals

2. Discourse on All the Cankers

Sabbāsava Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered One," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"I will discourse to you, monks, on the means<sup>1</sup> of controlling all the cankers.<sup>2</sup>

Listen and attend carefully,
and I will speak."

"Yes, Lord," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"I, monks, am speaking of the destruction of the cankers in one who knows,
in one who sees,
not in one who does not know, does not see.

And what, monks, is the destruction of the cankers in one who knows,
in one who sees?

There is wise attention<sup>3</sup> and unwise attention.

Monks, from unwise attention cankers arise that had not arisen, and also cankers that have arisen increase.

But, monks, from wise attention cankers that had not arisen do not arise, and also cankers that have arisen decline.

There are, monks,
cankers that should be got rid of by vision,<sup>4</sup> there are cankers that should be got rid of by control, there are cankers that should be got rid of by use, there are cankers that should be got rid of by endurance, there are cankers that should be got rid of by avoidance, there are cankers that should be got rid of by elimination, there are cankers that should be got rid of by development.<sup>5</sup>

---

And what, monks, are the cankers to be got rid of by vision?

Herein, monks, an uninstructed ordinary person,<sup>6</sup> taking no count of the pure ones,
unskilled in the dhamma of the pure ones,
untrained in the dhamma of the pure ones;
taking no count of the true men,
unskilled in the dhamma of the true men,
untrained in the dhamma of the true men, does not comprehend the things which should be wisely attended to, does not comprehend the things which should not be wisely attended to.

He, not comprehending the things that should be wisely attended to, not comprehending the things that should not be wisely attended to, wisely attends to those things which should not be wisely attended to, does not wisely attend to those things which should be wisely attended to.

And what, monks, are the things that should not be wisely attended to,
but to which he wisely attends?

From his wisely attending to these things, monks, the canker of sense-pleasure arises which had not arisen before or the canker of sense-pleasure, arisen, increases; or the canker of becoming arises
which had not arisen before or the canker of becoming, arisen, increases; or the canker of ignorance<sup>7</sup> arises which had not arisen before or the canker of ignorance, arisen, increases.

These are the things to which he wisely attends but which should not be wisely attended to.

And what, monks, are the things that should be wisely attended to,
but to which he does not wisely attend?

From his wisely attending to these things, monks,
either the canker of sense-pleasure which had not arisen does not arise, or if the canker of sense-pleasure has arisen it declines; or if the canker of becoming has not arisen it does not arise, or if the canker of becoming has arisen it declines; or if the canker of ignorance has not arisen it does not arise, or if the canker of ignorance has arisen it declines.

These are things that should be wisely attended to, but to which he does not wisely attend.

If he wisely attends to things which should not be wisely attended to,
if he does not wisely attend to things which should be wisely attended to, cankers arise which had not arisen before and also the cankers, arisen, increase.

In these ways he is not wisely attending:
if he thinks,

'Now, was I in a past period?<sup>8</sup>

Now, was I not in a past period?

Now, what was I in a past period?

Now, how was I<sup>9</sup> in a past period?

Now, having been what, what did I become in a past period?

Now, will I come to be in a future period?

Now, will I not come to be in a future period?

Now, what will I come to be in a future period?

Now, how will I come to be in a future period?

Having become what, what will I come to be in a future period?'

Or, if he is now subjectively<sup>10</sup> doubtful about the present period, and thinks:

'Now, am I?

Now, am I not?

Now, what am I?

Now, how am I?

Now, whence has this being come?

Where-going will it come to be?'

To one who does not pay wise attention in these ways, one of six (wrong) views arises:

'There is for me a self'<sup>11</sup> - the view arises to him as though it were true, as though it were real.<sup>12</sup>

Or, 'There is not for me a self.'<sup>13</sup> - the view arises to him as though it were true, as though it were real.

Or, 'Simply by self am I aware of self.' - the view arises to him as though it were true, as though it were real.

Or, 'Simply by self am I aware of not-self.' - the view arises to him as though it were true, as though it were real.

Or, 'Simply by not-self am I aware of self' - the view arises to him as though it were true, as though it were real.

Or a wrong view occurs to him thus:

'Whatever is this self for me that speaks, that experiences and knows,<sup>14</sup> that experiences now here, now there,
the fruition of deeds
that are lovely and that are depraved,<sup>15</sup> it is this self for me that is permanent,
stable,
eternal,
not subject to change,
that will stand firm like unto the eternal.'<sup>16</sup>

This, monks, is called going to wrong views,<sup>17</sup> holding wrong views,
the wilds of wrong views,
the wriggling of wrong views, the scuffling of wrong views, the fetter of wrong views.

Fettered with the fetter of wrong views, monks, the uninstructed ordinary person is not set free from birth, from old age and dying,
from griefs,
from sorrows,
from ills,
from tribulations,
from miseries,
he is not set free from anguish, I say.

But the instructed disciple of the pure ones who takes count of the pure ones, who is skilled in the dhamma of the pure ones,
well trained in the dhamma of the pure ones,
who takes count of the true men, who is skilled in the dhamma of the true men, well trained in the dhamma of the true men - he comprehends the things that should be wisely attended to, he comprehends the things that should not be wisely attended to;
he, comprehending the things that should be wisely attended to, comprehending the things that should not be wisely attended to,
does not wisely attend to those things which should not be wisely attended to, he wisely attends to those things which should be wisely attended to.

And which, monks, are those things which he does not wisely attend to because they should not be wisely attended to?

Those things, monks,
by wisely attending to which there arises the canker of sense-pleasure
which had not arisen before,
or the canker of sense-pleasure which,

arisen before,
increases.

Or there arises the canker of becoming
which had not arisen before,
or the canker of becoming which,
arisen before,
increases.

Or there arises the canker of ignorance
which had not arisen before,
or the canker of ignorance which,
arisen before,
increases.

These are the things to which he does not wisely attend because they should not be wisely attended to.

And which, monks, are the things to which he wisely attends because they should be wisely attended to?

Those things, monks,
by wisely attending to which there does not arise the canker of sense-pleasure
which had not arisen before
or the canker of sense-pleasure which,
arisen before,
declines;

those things, monks,
by wisely attending to which there does not arise the canker of becoming
which had not arisen before
or the canker of becoming which,
arisen before,
declines;

those things, monks,
by wisely attending to which there does not arise the canker of ignorance
which had not arisen before
or the canker of ignorance which,
arisen before,
declines.

These are the things to which he wisely attends
because they should be wisely attended to.

If he is one who does not wisely attend to things that should not be wisely attended to, if he is one who wisely attends to things that should be wisely attended to, both the cankers which have not arisen do not arise, and the cankers which have arisen decline.

He, thinking:
'This is anguish,'
wisely attends.

He, thinking:
'This is the origin of anguish,' wisely attends.

He, thinking:
'This is the stopping of anguish,'
wisely attends.

He, thinking:
'This is the course leading to the stopping of anguish,'
wisely attends.

Because he wisely attends thus,
the three fetters decline:
wrong view as to one's own body,<sup>18</sup> doubt,

adherence to (wrongful) rites and ceremonies.

These, monks, are called the cankers to be got rid of by vision.

---

And what, monks, are the cankers to be got rid of by control?<sup>19</sup>

In this teaching,<sup>20</sup> monks, a monk, wisely reflective,
lives controlled with control over the sense-organ of the eye, lives controlled with control over the sense-organ of the ear, lives controlled with control over the sense-organ of the nose, lives controlled with control over the sense-organ of the tongue, lives controlled with control over the sense-organ of the body, lives controlled with control over the sense-organ of the mind.

Whereas, monks, if he lived uncontrolled in regard to control over these sense-organs, cankers which are destructive and consuming might arise.

But if he lives controlled with control over these organs, then the cankers which are destructive and consuming are not.

These, monks, are called the cankers to be got rid of by control.

---

And what, monks, are the cankers to be got rid of by use?

In this teaching, monks, a monk,<sup>21</sup> wisely reflective,
uses a robe simply for warding off the cold,
for warding off the heat,
for warding off the touch of gadfly,
mosquito,
wind and sun,
creeping things,
simply for the sake of covering his nakedness.

Wisely reflective,
he uses almsfood not for sport,<sup>22</sup> not for indulgence,
not for personal charm,
not for beautification, but just enough for the support and sustenance of the body, for keeping it unharmed,<sup>23</sup> for furthering the Brahma-faring,<sup>24</sup> thinking:
'Thus do I crush out former feeling and do not set going new feeling; and there will be for me faultlessness and living in comfort.'

Wisely reflective,
he uses lodgings only for warding off the cold,
for warding off the heat,
for warding off the touch of gadfly,
mosquito,
wind,
sun
and creeping things,
only for dispelling the dangers of the seasons, for the purpose of enjoying seclusion.

Wisely reflective,
he uses the requisite of medicines for the sick for warding off injurious feelings that have arisen, for the maximum of well-being.

Whereas, monks, if he does not use (the requisites),
the cankers which are destructive and consuming might arise,
but because he does use (them), therefore these cankers which are destructive and consuming are not.

These, monks, are called the cankers to be got rid of by use.

---

And what, monks, are the cankers to be got rid of by endurance?

In this teaching, monks, a monk, wisely reflective,
is one who bears cold,
heat,
hunger, thirst,
the touch of gadfly,
mosquito,
wind and sun,
creeping things,
ways of speech that are irksome, unwelcome;
he is of a character to bear bodily feelings which, arising,
are painful,
acute,
sharp,
shooting,
disagreeable,

miserable,
deadly.<sup>25</sup>

Whereas, monks, if he lacked endurance,
the cankers which are destructive and consuming might arise.

But because he endures,
therefore these cankers which are destructive and consuming are not.

These, monks, are called the cankers to be got rid of by endurance.

---

And what, monks, are the cankers to be got rid of by avoidance?

In this teaching, monks, a monk, wisely reflective,
avoids a fierce elephant, avoids a fierce horse,
avoids a fierce bull,
avoids a fierce dog,
a snake,
the stump of a tree,
a thorny brake,
a deep hole,
a mountain slope,
a refuse pool,<sup>26</sup> a rubbish pit.<sup>26</sup>

Wisely reflecting,
he avoids that which is not an (allowable) seat,<sup>27</sup> and that which is not a (lawful) resort (for alms),<sup>28</sup> and those who are depraved friends.

For if he were sitting on what is not an (allowable) seat like that, if he were walking in what is not a (lawful) resort (for alms) like that, if he were associating with depraved friends like that, his intelligent fellow Brahma-farers would suspect him of depraved qualities.

Whereas, monks,
if he does not avoid (these occasions),
the cankers which are destructive and consuming might arise,
but if he avoids (them),
therefore these cankers which are destructive and consuming are not.

These, monks, are called the cankers to be got rid of by avoidance.

---

And what, monks, are the cankers to be got rid of by elimination?

In this teaching, monks, a monk, wisely reflective, does not give in to thought about sense-pleasures<sup>29</sup> that has arisen,
he gets rid of it,
he eliminates it,
makes an end of it,
sends it to its ceasing;

he does not give in to malevolent thought that has arisen
he gets rid of it,
he eliminates it,
he makes an end of it,
sends it to its ceasing;

he does not give in to thought of harming that has arisen,
he gets rid of it,
he eliminates it,
he makes an end of it,
sends it to its ceasing;

he does not give in to evil unskilled mental objects that have constantly arisen, he gets rid of them,
eliminates them,
makes an end of them,
sends them to their ceasing.

Whereas, monks, if he does not eliminate (these thoughts),
the cankers which are destructive and consuming might arise,
but if he eliminates (them),
therefore these cankers which are destructive and consuming are not.

These, monks, are called the cankers to be got rid of by elimination.

---

And what, monks, are the cankers to be got rid of by (mental) development?

In this teaching, monks, a monk, wisely reflective, develops mindfulness as a link in awakening and which is dependent on aloofness,<sup>30</sup> dependent on lack of attraction,
dependent on ceasing,
ending in renunciation.<sup>31</sup>

Wisely reflective, he develops investigation of dhamma<sup>32</sup> as a link in awakening
and which is dependent on aloofness,
dependent on lack of attraction,
dependent on ceasing,
ending in renunciation.

Wisely reflective, he develops energy as a link in awakening
and which is dependent on aloofness,

dependent on lack of attraction,
dependent on ceasing,
ending in renunciation.

Wisely reflective, he develops rapture as a link in awakening
and which is dependent on aloofness,
dependent on lack of attraction,
dependent on ceasing,
ending in renunciation.

Wisely reflective, he develops serenity as a link in awakening
and which is dependent on aloofness,
dependent on lack of attraction,
dependent on ceasing,
ending in renunciation.

Wisely reflective, he develops concentration as a link in awakening
and which is dependent on aloofness,
dependent on lack of attraction,
dependent on ceasing,
ending in renunciation.

Wisely reflective, he develops even-mindedness as a link in awakening
and which is dependent on aloofness,
dependent on lack of attraction,
dependent on ceasing,
ending in renunciation.<sup>33</sup>

Whereas, monks, if he does not develop (these links in awakening), the cankers which are destructive and consuming might arise.

But if he develops (them),
therefore these cankers which are destructive and consuming are not.

These, monks, are called the cankers to be got rid of by development.

---

Monks, in whatever monk those cankers to be got rid of by vision are got rid of by vision, in whatever monk those cankers to be got rid of by control are got rid of by control, in whatever monk those cankers to be got rid of by use are got rid of by use, in whatever monk those cankers to be got rid of by endurance are got rid of by endurance, in whatever monk those cankers to be got rid of by avoidance are got rid of by avoidance, in whatever monk those cankers to be got rid of by elimination are got rid of by elimination, in whatever monk those cankers to be got rid of by mental development are got rid of by mental development, this monk is called, monks, one who is controlled with control over all the cankers.

He has cut off craving,<sup>34</sup> done away with fetter,<sup>35</sup> and by fully mastering<sup>36</sup> pride<sup>37</sup>
will make an end of anguish."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse on All the Cankers: the Second.

---

<sup>1</sup> Here MA. i. 61 says pariyāya is karāna, means or method.

<sup>2</sup> āsava. There are four cankers, "influxes" or corruptions: kāmāsava, or attachment to the fivefold sensual realm; bhavāsava, attachment to bhava, literally "becoming," meaning attachment to the planes of form and formlessness; ditthāsava, the attachment to (false) views; and the āsava of avijjā, ignoring, nescience (here of the four Truths); see MA. i. 67 and cf. Nārada Mahāthera, Dhp., p. 16, n. 5.

<sup>3</sup> Yoniso manasikāraṃ, attention to the means, the Way; ayoniso mana-, is not attending to the means, or attending to (or, in) the wrong way, turning the mind against the truth so that you think permanence is in the impermanent, happiness in suffering, self in what is not-self, and the fair in the foul; and if there is ignorance, then "conditioned by ignorance are the saṅkhāras," and so on to the end of the "causal" chain: "the arising of this whole mass of anguish." See MA. i. 64-65.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. A. iii. 387-390, where, however, "vision," the first of the seven ways of riddance, is omitted; and see G.S. iii. 276, n. 1. Above "vision" refers to the vision pertaining to the first stage of arahantship or perfection, the sotāpattimagga, from its giving the first vision of Nibbāna, MA. i. 74. Hence saṃsāra, or vaṭṭa, the endless round of births, is grounded on unwise attention. But a man of rational attention will develop the eightfold Way, beginning with perfect view. This is knowledge (yā ca sammāditṭhi sāvijjā): from the arising of knowledge, from the stopping of ignorance is the stopping of the saṅkharas, and so on to the stopping of this whole mass of anguish. Thus Nibbāna (here called vivaṭṭa, being devoid of the round of births) is said to be grounded on wise attention; MA. i. 64 f.

<sup>5</sup> bhāvanā, meaning mind-development.

<sup>6</sup> As above, p. 3.

<sup>7</sup> MA. i. 07 explains the absence of the canker of false views, which often appears as the third of the four cankers, by saying: "the canker of sense-pleasure is the attraction connected with the five strands of sense-pleasure; the canker of becoming is the attachment to desire for the planes of form and formlessness; it is craving for the jhānas accompanied by the false views of eternalism and annihilationism. In this way the canker of false views is included in the canker of becoming itself. The canker of ignorance is not knowing in regard to the four Truths."

<sup>8</sup> Cf, M. i. 265 for these questions.

<sup>9</sup> MA. i. 69: what was I like, tall or short, fair or dark?

<sup>10</sup> ajjhata. He doubts his own components, khandhā, his own existence, atthibhāva, MA. i. 69.

<sup>11</sup> This is the view of the Eternalists. It holds that the self exists permanently through all time.

<sup>12</sup> saccato thetato, as at e.g. S. iii. 112.

<sup>13</sup> This is the view of the Annihilationists, from their holding to the de-becoming (destruction, vibhava) here and there of the essential being, sato sattassa, MA. i. 70.

<sup>14</sup> As at M. i. 258. Vado vedeyyo, that speaks, that knows and feels, is explained at MA. i. 71 as "This is a conviction of those who hold eternalist views. Here 'that speaks' is vado. It is a mode of vocal act. 'That experiences (or, feels), vediyati, is vedeyyo. And it means 'that knows, that experiences' (amubhavati, partakes of, undergoes). What does it know-and-feel (vedeti)? It experiences (paṭisamvedeti) now here, now there, the fruits of deeds that are lovely and that are depraved. 'Now here, now there' means in this or that class of womb, bourn, station, abode." Cf. MA. ii. 305 on vado vedeyyo:" that which speaks, that knows-and-feels, and that which experiences now here, now there, the fruits of deeds that are lovely and depraved, this is that consciousness that I am speaking about."

<sup>15</sup> As at M. i. 258.

<sup>16</sup> As at D. i. 18 ff. "Like unto the Eternal" means what is usually taken to be eternal by the world: moon, sun, sea, great earth, mountains; MA. i. 71.

<sup>17</sup> As at M. i. 486; Dhs. 381.

<sup>18</sup> MA. i. 73 says this and adherence to rites and ceremonies are reckoned as Asavas - that of wrong views as well as fetters. But doubt is a fetter only.

<sup>19</sup> Cf. A. iii. 387 ff.

<sup>20</sup> idha, so explained at MA. i. 75.

<sup>21</sup> MA. i. 77 does not comment on the following terms, but refers to Vism. (pp. 30-36 = P. Purity, i. 35 ff.).

<sup>22</sup> Stock, as at M. i. 355; A. ii. 40, 145; Dhs. 1346; Pug. 21; Vbh. 249.

<sup>23</sup> vihimsūparatīya, or "for allaying the pangs of hunger" as at G.S. iii. 277, P. Purity, i. 38.

<sup>24</sup> Two kinds discriminated at Vism. 32, that of complete instruction, and that of the Way(s).

<sup>25</sup> A person under twenty years of age is not considered able to endure these hardships, and is therefore not to be ordained at such an early age; see Vin. iv. 130. See B.D. iii. 12 for further references to this stock description.

<sup>26</sup> Both words occur at M. i. 448; A. i. 161.

<sup>27</sup> anāsana. MA. i. 80 says what is not a proper seat is anāsana, and refers to the Aniyatas where monks are forbidden to sit down with a woman in a private place or on a secluded seat (Vin. iii. 188, where these terms are defined. See B.D. i. 332). agocara. Five kinds, referred to at MA. i. 80, are given at Vbh. 247.

<sup>28</sup> agocara. Five kinds, referred to at MA. i. 80, are given at Vbh. 247.

<sup>29</sup> This, and the two following "thoughts" are three evil modes of thought. Mentioned also at M. i. 114 (with their opposites); D. iii. 215, 226; A. i. 276, ii. 252, iii. 429, 446; Vbh. 362 (cited at MA. i. 81), etc.

<sup>30</sup> MA. i. 85 enumerates the five aspects of aloofness as at VbhA. 316; Pts. ii. 220.

<sup>31</sup> vossaggapariṇāmī. MA. i. 85 f. = VbhA. 316 = SA. i. 159 explain this as the abandonment of the depravities, kilesa, and the resulting leaping or springing forward to Nibbāna, and say that the Way itself is an ending in renunciation, maggo eva ca vossaggapariṇāmī. This and the three preceding terms are used at S. i. 88 in connection with developing each of the factors of the eightfold Way. Cf. Pts. i. 194, pariccāga- and pakkhandana-nissagga.

<sup>32</sup> MA. i. 83, that is, into the four true things. Dhamtmvicaya might be "investigation of things," or "mental objects." Cf. below, p. 80.

<sup>33</sup> With the above passage cf. M. iii. 88.

<sup>34</sup> Cf. M. i. 122; A. i. 134, ii. 240, iii. 246, 445, iv. 8; S. i. 12, iv. 205; It. 47; Expositor, i. 77.

<sup>35</sup> MA. i. 87 says that this means a tenfold fetter.

<sup>36</sup> By vision and by getting rid of, MA. i. 87.

<sup>37</sup> As at Sn. 342. A tenfold aspect given at Nd. i. 80 = Nd. ii. 505.

---

Majjhima Nikāya

I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa

1. Mūlapariyāya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings

I. The First Fifty Discourses

1. The Division of the Synopsis of Fundamentals

3. Discourse on Heirs of Dhamma

Dhammadāyāda Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered One," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Monks, become my heirs of Dhamma, not heirs of material things.<sup>2</sup>

I have sympathy with you and think:

How may disciples become my heirs of Dhamma,
not heirs of material things?

If you, monks, should become heirs of material things,
not heirs of Dhamma,
not only may you become in consequence
those of whom it is said:

'The Teacher's disciples
are heirs of material things,
not heirs of [17] Dhamma.'

but I too may become in consequence
one of whom it is said:

'The Teacher's disciples
are heirs of material things,
not heirs of Dhamma.'

But if you, monks, should become my heirs of Dhamma,
not heirs of material things, then you may become in consequence
those of whom it is said:

'The Teacher's disciples
are heirs of Dhamma,
not heirs of material things.'

and I too may become in consequence
one of whom it is said:

'The Teacher's disciples
are heirs of Dhamma,
not heirs of material things.'

Therefore, monks, become my heirs of Dhamma,,
not heirs of material things.

I have sympathy with you and think:

How may disciples become my heirs of Dhamma,,
not heirs of material things?

---

Take a case where I, monks, may have eaten<sup>3</sup> and be satisfied,<sup>4</sup> (the meal) ended, finished,
I having had enough,
as much as I pleased.

But it may be that some of my almsfood is over and is to be thrown away, when two monks may arrive worn out with exhaustion and hunger.<sup>5</sup>

If I should speak to them thus:

'I, monks, have eaten and am satisfied (the meal) ended, finished,
I having had enough,
as much as I pleased.

But some of my almsfood is over
and is to be thrown away.

Do eat it if you (so) desire;<sup>6</sup> if you do not eat it I will now throw it away where there is no grass or I will drop it into water that has no living creatures in it.<sup>7</sup>

Then it may occur to one monk:

'Now, the Lord having eaten and being satisfied
(the meal) ended, finished,
having had enough,
as much as he pleased.

But this almsfood of the Lord's is to be thrown away;
if we do not eat it,
the Lord will now throw it [18] away
where there is no grass
or he will drop it into water that has no living creatures in it.

But this was said by the Lord:

Monks, become my heirs of Dhamma,
not heirs of material things.

But this is a material thing, that is to say, almsfood.

Suppose that I,
not having eaten this almsfood, in spite of this hunger and exhaustion, should pass this night and day thus?'

He, not having eaten that almsfood, in spite of that hunger and exhaustion, may pass this night and day thus.

Then it occurs to the second monk, thus:

'Now, the Lord having eaten and being satisfied
(the meal) ended, finished,
having had enough,
as much as he pleased.

But this almsfood of the Lord's is to be thrown away;
if we do not eat it,
the Lord will now throw it away
where there is no grass
or he will drop it into water
that has no living creatures in it.

Suppose that I,
having eaten this alms-food,
having driven away this hunger and exhaustion,
should pass this night and day thus?

He, having eaten that almsfood,
having driven away that hunger and exhaustion,
may spend that night and day thus.

Although, monks, that monk, having eaten that alms-food,
having driven away this hunger and exhaustion,
should pass this night and day thus,
he, having eaten that almsfood,
having driven away that hunger and exhaustion,
may spend that night and day thus,
yet that first monk is for me the more to be honoured and the more to be praised.<sup>8</sup>

What is the reason for this?

It is, monks, that it will conduce for a long time to that monk's desirelessness, to his contentment, expunging (of evil),
to his being easily supported,
to his putting forth energy.<sup>9</sup>

Therefore, monks, become my heirs of Dhamma,
not heirs of material things.

I have sympathy with you and think:

How may disciples become my heirs of Dhamma, and not heirs of material things?"

Thus spoke the Lord;
when the Well-farer had spoken thus,
rising from his seat,
he entered the dwelling-place.

---

Thereupon the venerable Sāriputta, not long after the Lord had gone away, addressed the monks, saying:

"Reverend monks."

"Your reverence,"
these monks answered the venerable Sāriputta in assent.

Then the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus:

"In what respects, your reverences, while the Teacher is staying in seclusion, do disciples not follow his example of aloofness?"

And in what respects,
while the Teacher is staying in seclusion,
do disciples follow his example of aloofness?"

"We would come even from afar to learn from the venerable Sāriputta the meaning of this that is said.

It were good indeed
if the meaning of this that is said should be spoken out by the venerable Sāriputta, so that monks,
having heard the venerable Sāriputta, might master it."

"Very well, your reverences,
listen,
attend carefully,
and I will speak."

"Yes, your reverence,"
these monks answered the venerable Sāriputta in assent.

Then the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus:

"This is a case, your reverences,
where, while the Teacher is staying in seclusion,
disciples do not follow his example as to aloofness, they do not get rid of those things of which the Teacher [19] has spoken of getting rid, they are ones for abundance<sup>10</sup> and are lax, taking the lead in backsliding,<sup>11</sup> throwing off the yoke<sup>12</sup> of seclusion.<sup>13</sup>

Among them,<sup>14</sup> your reverences, monks who are elders
become contemptible in three ways:

If, while the Teacher is staying in seclusion,
disciples do not follow his example as to aloofness -

this is the first way
in which monks who are elders
become contemptible.

If they do not get rid of those things
of which the Teacher has spoken of getting rid -
this is the second way
in which monks who are elders
become contemptible.

If they are ones for abundance and are lax,
taking the lead in backsliding,
throwing off the yoke of seclusion -
this is the third way
in which monks who are elders
become contemptible.

So, your reverences,
monks who are elders become contemptible
in these three ways.

Among them, your reverences, monks who are of middle standing<sup>15</sup>
become contemptible in three ways:

If, while the Teacher is staying in seclusion,
disciples do not follow his example as to aloofness -
this is the first way
in which monks who are of middle standing
become contemptible.

If they do not get rid of those things
of which the Teacher has spoken of getting rid -
this is the second way
in which monks who are of middle standing
become contemptible.

If they are ones for abundance and are lax,
taking the lead in backsliding,
throwing off the yoke of seclusion -
this is the third way
in which monks who are of middle standing
become contemptible.

So, your reverences,
monks who are of middle standing become contemptible
in these three ways.

Among them, your reverences, monks who are newly ordained monks<sup>16</sup>
become contemptible in three ways:

If, while the Teacher is staying in seclusion,
disciples do not follow his example as to aloofness -
this is the first way
in which monks who are newly ordained monks
become contemptible.

If they do not get rid of those things
of which the Teacher has spoken of getting rid -
this is the second way
in which monks who are newly ordained monks
become contemptible.

If they are ones for abundance and are lax,
taking the lead in backsliding,
throwing off the yoke of seclusion -
this is the third way
in which monks who are newly ordained monks
become contemptible.

So, your reverences,
monks who are newly ordained monks become contemptible
in these three ways.

In these respects, your reverences,
while the Teacher is staying in seclusion,
do disciples not follow his example as to aloofness.

But in what respects,
while the Teacher is staying in seclusion,
do disciples follow his example as to aloofness?

This is a case, your reverences,
where, while the Teacher is staying in seclusion,
disciples follow his example as to aloofness and get rid of those things
of which the Teacher has spoken of getting rid,
they are not ones for abundance, they are not lax,
they throw off the yoke of backsliding and take the lead in seclusion.

Among them, your reverences,
monks who are elders
become praiseworthy
in three ways:

If, while the Teacher is staying in seclusion,
disciples follow his example as to aloofness -
this is the first way
in which monks who are elders
become praiseworthy.

If they get rid of those things
of which the Teacher has spoken of getting rid -
this is the second way
in which monks who are elders
become praiseworthy.

[20] If they are not ones for abundance,
if they are not lax,

if they throw off the yoke of backsliding
and take the lead in seclusion -
this is the third way
in which monks who are elders
become praiseworthy.

So, your reverences,
monks who are elders
become praiseworthy
in these three ways.

Among them, your reverences,
monks who are of middle standing
become praiseworthy
in three ways:

If, while the Teacher is staying in seclusion,
disciples follow his example as to aloofness -
this is the first way
in which monks who are of middle standing
become praiseworthy.

If they get rid of those things
of which the Teacher has spoken of getting rid -
this is the second way
in which monks who are of middle standing
become praiseworthy.

If they are not ones for abundance,
if they are not lax,
if they throw off the yoke of backsliding
and take the lead in seclusion -
this is the third way
in which monks who are of middle standing
become praiseworthy.

So, your reverences,
monks who are of middle standing
become praiseworthy
in these three ways.

Among them, your reverences,
monks who are newly ordained monks
become praiseworthy
in three ways:

If, while the Teacher is staying in seclusion,
disciples follow his example as to aloofness -
this is the first way
in which monks who are newly ordained monks
become praiseworthy.

If they get rid of those things
of which the Teacher has spoken of getting rid -
this is the second way
in which monks who are newly ordained monks
become praiseworthy.

If they are not ones for abundance,
if they are not lax,
if they throw off the yoke of backsliding
and take the lead in seclusion -
this is the third way
in which monks who are newly ordained monks
become praiseworthy.

So, your reverences,
monks who are newly ordained monks
become praiseworthy
in these three ways.

In these respects, your reverences,
while the Teacher is staying in seclusion,

do disciples follow his example as to aloofness.

---

Herein,<sup>17</sup> your reverences, greed is evil
and ill-will<sup>18</sup> is evil;
for getting rid of greed
and for getting rid of ill-will there is the Middle Course<sup>19</sup> which, making for vision,<sup>20</sup> making for knowledge,<sup>20</sup> conduces to tranquillity,<sup>21</sup>
to super-knowledge,
to awakening,<sup>22</sup> to Nibbāna.<sup>23</sup>

And what, your reverences,
is this Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna?

It is this ariyan Eightfold Way itself,<sup>24</sup>
that is to say,
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect mode of livelihood,
perfect exertion,

perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

It is this, your reverences,
that is the Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna.

---

Herein, your reverences, anger<sup>25</sup> is evil and malevolence is evil
for getting rid of greed
and for getting rid of ill-will
there is the Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to awakening, to Nibbāna.

And what, your reverences,
is this Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna?

It is this ariyan Eightfold Way itself,
that is to say,
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect mode of livelihood,
perfect exertion,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

It is this, your reverences,
that is the Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna.

---

Herein, your reverences, hypocrisy is evil
and spite is evil for getting rid of hypocrisy and for getting rid of spite
there is the Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to awakening, to Nibbāna.

And what, your reverences,
is this Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna?

It is this ariyan Eightfold Way itself,
that is to say,
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect mode of livelihood,
perfect exertion,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

It is this, your reverences,
that is the Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna.

---

Herein, your reverences, envy is evil
and stinginess is evil
for getting rid of envy and for getting rid of stinginess

there is the Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to awakening, to Nibbāna.

And what, your reverences,
is this Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna?

It is this ariyan Eightfold Way itself,
that is to say,
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect mode of livelihood,
perfect exertion,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

It is this, your reverences,
that is the Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna.

---

Herein, your reverences, deceit is evil
and treachery is evil for getting rid of deceit and for getting rid of treachery
there is the Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to awakening, to Nibbāna.

And what, your reverences,
is this Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna?

It is this ariyan Eightfold Way itself,
that is to say,
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect mode of livelihood,
perfect exertion,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

It is this, your reverences,
that is the Middle Course which,

making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna.

---

Herein, your reverences, obstinacy is evil
and impetuosity is evil for getting rid of obstinacy, [21] for getting rid of impetuosity
there is the Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to awakening, to Nibbāna.

And what, your reverences,
is this Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna?

It is this ariyan Eightfold Way itself,
that is to say,
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,

perfect action,
perfect mode of livelihood,
perfect exertion,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

It is this, your reverences,
that is the Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna.

---

Herein, your reverences, arrogance is evil
and pride is evil for getting rid of arrogance and for getting rid of pride
there is the Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to awakening, to Nibbāna.

And what, your reverences,
is this Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,

to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna?

It is this ariyan Eightfold Way itself,
that is to say,
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect mode of livelihood,
perfect exertion,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

It is this, your reverences,
that is the Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna.

---

Herein, your reverences, conceit is evil
and indolence is evil for getting rid of conceit and for getting rid of indolence
there is the Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,

to super-knowledge,
to awakening, to Nibbāna.

And what, your reverences,
is this Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna?

It is this ariyan Eightfold Way itself,
that is to say,
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect mode of livelihood,
perfect exertion,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

It is this, your reverences,
that is the Middle Course which,
making for vision,
making for knowledge,
conduces to tranquillity,
to super-knowledge,
to Nibbāna.

---

Thus spoke the venerable Sāriputta.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said.

Discourse on Heirs of Dhamma
the Third.

---

<sup>1</sup> Referred to at M.A. ii. 246.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. It., p. 101. Āmisa is material goods or gains, such as the four types of requisites, which, however, MA. i. 89-90 says are only figuratively āmisa.

<sup>3</sup> bhuttāvin.

<sup>4</sup> pavārita, see B.D. ii. 326, n, 2; MA. i. 93 distinguishes four kinds of pavāraṇā, "invitation " to take and therefore "satisfying."

<sup>5</sup> Cf. M. i. 114, 364.

<sup>6</sup> At Pāc. 35 (Vin. iv. 81 ff.) monks may eat food that is left over.

<sup>7</sup> For this sentence cf. Vin. i. 157, 225, ii. 216; S. i. 169; M. i. 207, iii. 157; Sn. p, 15. At Pāc. 20 and 62 it is made an offence for monks knowingly to make use of water that contains life (Vin. iv. 48 f., 125).

<sup>8</sup> Quoted at Miln. 242.

<sup>9</sup> Cf. Vin. iii. 21, and see B.D. i. 37, n. 6.

<sup>10</sup> I.e. of robes, etc., MA. i. 101. Cf. A. i. 71 (where monks such as these are put among the unariyan company), A. ii. 148, iii. 108, 179 f.; M. i. 32.

<sup>11</sup> okkamana, in regard to the five hindrances, MA. i. 101.

<sup>12</sup> nikkhittadhura, throwing off responsibility. Cf. dhuraṃ nikkhipati at Vin. iii. 50, and dhuraṃ nikkhittamatte at Vin. iv. 128, 280, 291, 297, 302.

<sup>13</sup> Aloofness from attachment, Nibbāna, MA. i. 101.

<sup>14</sup> tatra, explained at MA. i. 102 to mean among these disciples.

<sup>15</sup> Those, as MA. i. 102 remarks, who have been ordained from five to nine years.

<sup>16</sup> Those who have been ordained for less than five years.

<sup>17</sup> I.e. in the foregoing teaching, MA. i. 103.

<sup>18</sup> I.e. ill-will or anger or resentment at not getting the foods you were greedy to get. Following terms occur at A. i. 299; cf. also A. i. 95, 100.

<sup>19</sup> MA. i. 104 says that it is the Way, called "Middle," because the two ends (or, dead-ends) of greed and ill-will do not touch it, it is free from them.

<sup>20</sup> Of the Truths, MA. i. 104.

<sup>21</sup> By the allaying of attachment, rāga, and so on.

<sup>22</sup> sambodho ti maggo, awakening is called the Way; because it conduces to this it conduces to awakening, MA. i. 104.

<sup>23</sup> Because it conduces to the realisation of the deathlessness of Nibbāna, by making it clear (or, present), it is said that it conduces to Nibbāna, MA. i. 104.

<sup>24</sup> MA. i. 105 quotes Dhp. 274: "This itself is the Way -there is not another - for the purification of vision (dassanā)." The (Way) goes slaying the corruptions, or it tracks out Nibbāna, or it is followed by one seeking Nibbāna,. Each factor of the Way - and each is the Way - gets rid of its opposite, and Nibbāna, is made a mental object, MA. i. 105-106. Taken together the eight factors constitute a process (see M. iii. 76) with right or perfect view (understanding or knowledge, vijjā) as the forerunner (M. iii. 71; A. v. 214).

25 The following terms down to sātheyya, treachery, are defined at Vbh.
357.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
1. Mūlapariyāya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
1. The Division of the Synopsis of Fundamentals

4. Discourse on Fear and Dread

Bhayabhera Sutta

---

[21]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then Jaṇussoṇi the brahman<sup>1</sup> approached the Lord;
having approached,
he exchanged greetings with the Lord;
having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy, he sat down at a respectful distance.<sup>2</sup>

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Jāṇussoṇi the brahman spoke thus to the Lord:

"Good<sup>3</sup> Gotama, these who are sons of respectable families,<sup>4</sup> who [22] have gone forth from home into homelessness

out of faith in the honoured Gotama, of these the honoured Gotama is the leader, to these the honoured Gotama is of great service, of these the honoured Gotama is the adviser,<sup>5</sup> and these people emulate the views of the honoured Gotama."

"That is so, brahman, that is so, brahman.

These who are sons of respectable families,
who have gone forth from home into homelessness
out of faith in me,
of these I am the leader,
to these I am of great service,
of these I am the adviser.

And these people emulate my views."

"But, good Gotama, remote lodgings in forest<sup>6</sup> and in woodland wildernesses<sup>6</sup>
are hard to put up with,
arduous is aloofness,
it is difficult to delight in solitude;
methinks forests distract the mind
of a monk who does not secure concentration."

[17] "That is so, brahman, that is so, brahman.

Remote lodgings in forest and in woodland wildernesses
are hard to put up with
arduous is aloofness,
it is difficult to delight in solitude;
methinks forests distract the mind
of a monk who does not secure concentration."

---

Brahman, before my Awakening, and while I was yet merely the Bodhisatta, not a fully self-awakened one,
it occurred to me also:

Remote lodgings in forest
and in woodland wildernesses
are hard to put up with
arduous is aloofness,
it is difficult to delight in solitude;
methinks forests distract the mind
of a monk who does not secure concentration."

■

In connection with this
it occurred to me, brahman:

Whatever recluses or brahmans,
not wholly pure in bodily actions,
frequent remote lodgings in forest and woodland wildernesses,
these worthy recluses and brahmans, because they are not wholly pure in bodily actions, indeed evoke (in themselves) unskilled<sup>7</sup> fear and dread.

But I, not of impure bodily actions,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I am wholly pure in bodily actions,
I am one of those ariyans who,
wholly pure in bodily actions,

frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I, brahman, beholding in myself
this complete purity of bodily actions, gained greater assurance<sup>8</sup> for living in the forest.

■

[23] In connection with this,
it occurred to me, brahman:

Whatever recluses or brahmans,
not wholly pure in action of speech,
frequent remote lodgings in forest and woodland wildernesses,
these worthy recluses and brahmans,
because they are not wholly pure in action of speech, indeed evoke (in themselves) unskilled fear and dread.

But I, not of impure action of speech,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I am wholly pure in action of speech,
I am one of those ariyans who,
wholly pure in action of speech,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I, brahman, beholding in myself
this complete purity of action of speech, gained greater assurance for living in the forest.

■

In connection with this,
it occurred to me, brahman:

Whatever recluses or brahmans,
not wholly pure in action of thought,
frequent remote lodgings in forest and woodland wildernesses,
these worthy recluses and brahmans, because they are not wholly pure in action of thought,
indeed evoke (in themselves) unskilled fear and dread.

But I, not of impure action of thought,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I am wholly pure in action of thought,
I am one of those ariyans who,
wholly pure in action of thought,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I, brahman, beholding in myself
this complete purity of action of thought,
gained greater assurance for living in the forest.

■

In connection with this, it occurred to me, brahman:

Whatever recluses or brahmans, covetous,
strongly passionate in their desires,<sup>9</sup>
frequent remote lodgings
in the forest and woodland wildernesses,
these worthy recluses and brahmans,
because they are covetous and strongly passionate in their desires, indeed evoke (in themselves)
unskilled fear and dread.

But I,
not covetous or strongly passionate in my desires,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

Without covetousness am I,
I am one of those ariyans who,
being without covetousness,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I, brahman, beholding in myself
this lack of covetousness, [18] gained greater assurance for living in the forest.

■

In connection with this, brahman,
it occurred to me:

Whatever recluses or brahmans,
corrupt in heart,
wicked in thought and purpose,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses,
these worthy recluses and brahmans because they are corrupt in heart, wicked in thought and purpose,
indeed evoke (in themselves)
unskilled fear and dread.

Not corrupt in heart, nor wicked in thought and purpose
do I frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

Of a mind of friendliness am I,
I am one of those ariyans who,
with a mind of friendliness,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I, brahman, beholding in myself
this mind of friendliness,
gained greater assurance for living in the forest.

■

In connection with this, brahman,
it occurred to me:

Whatever recluses or brahmans, obsessed by sloth or torpor,<sup>10</sup>
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses,
these worthy recluses and brahmans, because they are obsessed by sloth and torpor, indeed evoke (in themselves)
unskilled fear and dread.

Not obsessed by sloth and torpor
do I frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I have got rid of sloth and torpor,
I am one of those ariyans who,
rid of sloth and torpor,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I, brahman,
beholding in myself

that sloth and torpor were got rid of,
gained greater assurance for living in the forest.

■

[24] In connection with this, brahman,
it occurred to me:

Whatever recluses or brahmans, unbalanced, of unquiet minds,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses,
these worthy recluses and brahmans,
because they are of unquiet minds, they indeed evoke (in themselves)
unskilled fear and dread.

Not unbalanced,
not of unquiet mind
do I frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

Of quiet mind am I,
I am one of those ariyans who,
with quiet minds,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I, brahman,
beholding in myself this quiet mind,
gained greater assurance for living in the forest.

■

In connection with this, brahman,
it occurred to me:

Whatever recluses or brahmans,
doubting, perplexed,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses,
these worthy recluses and brahmans,
because they are doubting, perplexed,
they indeed evoke (in themselves)
unskilled fear and dread.

Not doubting, not perplexed
do I frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

Crossed over doubt<sup>11</sup> am I,
I am one of those ariyans who,
crossed over doubt,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I, brahman,
beholding in myself this doubt crossed over, [19] gained greater assurance for living in the forest.

■

In connection with this, brahman
it occurred to me:

Whatever recluses or brahmans,
extolling themselves, disparaging others,<sup>12</sup>
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses,
these worthy recluses and brahmans, because they are extolling themselves, disparaging others,

they indeed evoke (in themselves)
unskilled fear and dread.

Not extolling myself,
not disparaging others
do I frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

Not an extoller of self am I,
not a disparager of others,
I am one of those ariyans who,
not extolling self,
not disparaging others,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I, brahman, beholding in myself
this lack of extolling self, this lack of disparaging others,
gained greater assurance for living in the forest.

■

In connection with this, brahman
it occurred to me:

Whatever recluses or brahmans, terrified, affrighted,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses,
these worthy recluses and brahmans,
because they are terrified, affrighted,
they indeed evoke (in themselves)
unskilled fear and dread.

Not terrified,
not affrighted

do I frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

Not horrified<sup>13</sup> am I,
I am one of those ariyans who,
not extolling self,
not horrified,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I, brahman, beholding in myself
this [lack of horrification? horror?]<sup>ed1</sup>, gained greater assurance for living in the forest.

■

In connection with this, brahman
it occurred to me:

Whatever recluses or brahmans, striving after gains, honours, fame,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses,
these worthy recluses and brahmans, because they are striving after gains, honours, fame,
they indeed evoke (in themselves)
unskilled fear and dread.

Not striving after gains, honours, fame
do I frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

Of few desires am I,
I am one [25] of those ariyans of few desires who frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I, brahman, beholding in myself
this ['fewness of desires?']<sup>ed1</sup>
gained greater assurance for living in the forest.

■

In connection with this, brahman
it occurred to me:

Whatever recluses or brahmans, lethargic, lacking in energy,<sup>14</sup>
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses,
these worthy recluses and brahmans,
because they are lethargic and lacking in energy,
they indeed evoke (in themselves)
unskilled fear and dread.

Not lethargic,
not lacking in energy
do I frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

Of stirred up energy am I,
I am one of those ariyans of stirred up energy
who frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

Of stirred up energy am I,
I am one of those ariyans of stirred up energy who frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I, brahman, beholding in myself
this stirred up energy
gained greater assurance for living in the forest.

■

In connection with this, brahman,
[20] it occurred to me:

Whatever recluses, of muddled mindfulness,
not clearly conscious,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses,
these worthy recluses and brahmans, because they are of muddled mindfulness,
not clearly conscious,
they indeed evoke (in themselves)
unskilled fear and dread.

Not of muddled mindfulness, not not clearly conscious, do I frequent remote lodgings in forest and woodland wildernesses.

Of raised up mindfulness am I,
I am one of those ariyans
of raised up mindfulness
who frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I, brahman, beholding in myself
this raised up mindfulness
gained greater assurance for living in the forest.

■

In connection with this, brahman,
it occurred to me:

Whatever recluses or brahmans,
not composed,
their minds wavering,

frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses,
these worthy recluses and brahmans, because they are not composed, because their minds are wavering, indeed evoke (in themselves)
unskilled fear and dread.

Not not composed,
my mind not wavering
do I frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

Possessed of concentration am I,
I am one of those ariyans who,
possessed of concentration,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I, brahman, beholding in myself
this possession of concentration,
gained greater assurance for living in the forest.

■

In connection with this, brahman, it occurred to me:

Whatever recluses or brahmans, weak in intuitive wisdom,<sup>15</sup> drivellers,<sup>16</sup>
[26] frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses,
these worthy recluses and brahmans, because they are weak in intuitive wisdom, drivellers,
indeed evoke (in themselves)
unskilled fear and dread.

Not weak in intuitive wisdom, not a driveller
do I frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

Possessed of intuitive wisdom am I,
I am one of those ariyans who,
possessed of intuitive wisdom,
frequent remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses.

I, brahman, beholding in myself
this possession of intuitive wisdom,
gained greater assurance for living in the forest.

---

In connection with this, brahman,
it occurred to me:

Suppose that I,
on those recognised and fixed nights:
the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth of the half-months,<sup>17</sup> should stay in such frightening and horrifying lodgings as park-shrines,<sup>18</sup> forest-shrines,<sup>19</sup> tree-shrines,<sup>20</sup> so that I should see that fear and dread.

So I, brahman, after a time,
on those recognised and fixed nights,
the fourteenth, the fifteenth and the eighth of the half-months,

stayed in such frightening and horrifying places as park-shrines,
forest-shrines,
tree-shrines.

As I was staying there, brahman, either an animal came along, or a peacock<sup>21</sup> [21] broke off a twig, or the wind rustled the fallen leaves.

It occurred to me:

Surely this is that fear and dread coming.

Then it occurred to me, brahman:

Why am I staying longing for nothing but fear?

Suppose now that I,
in whatever posture I may be as that fear and dread come upon me should, while in that same posture, drive out that fear and dread?

If, brahman,
that fear and dread came upon me while I was pacing up and down,
I, brahman,
neither stood still nor sat down
nor lay down,
but drove out [27] that fear and dread as I was pacing up and down.

While I was standing, brahman,
that fear and dread came upon me.

So I, brahman,
neither paced up and down nor sat down
nor lay down
until I had,
while I was standing,
driven out that fear and dread.

While I was sitting down, brahman,
that fear and dread came upon me.

So I, brahman,
neither lay down
nor stood up
nor paced up and down
until, while I was sitting down,
I drove out that fear and dread.

While I was lying down, brahman,
that fear and dread came upon me.

So I, brahman,
neither sat down
nor stood up
nor paced up and down
until I had,
while I was lying down,
driven out that fear and dread.

---

Now there are, brahman, some recluses and brahmans

who suppose that night is similar to day and who suppose that day is similar to night.

Of these recluses and brahmans
I say that they are living in bewilderment.

For I, brahman,
suppose that night is similar to night,
I suppose that day is similar to day.

Whoever, brahman,
in speaking aright should say:

'A being not liable to bewilderment
has arisen in the world
for the welfare of the many-folk,
for the happiness of the manyfolk,
out of compassion for the world,
for the good,
the welfare,
the happiness of devas and men, then, in speaking aright of me he would say:

'A being not liable to bewilderment
has arisen in the world
for the welfare of the many-folk,
for the happiness of the manyfolk,
out of compassion for the world,
for the good,
the welfare,
the happiness of devas and men.'<sup>22</sup>

Unsluggish energy is stirred up by me, brahman, unmuddled mindfulness is raised up, my body is tranquil,
impassible,

my mind composed,
one-pointed.

So I, brahman,
aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind, entered into the first meditation<sup>23</sup> which is accompanied by initial thought and discursive thought, is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful.

By allaying initial and discursive thought,
with the mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point, [22] I entered into and abided in the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration,
and is rapturous and joyful.

By the fading out of rapture,
I dwelt with equanimity,
attentive,
and clearly conscious;
and I experienced in my person
that joy of which the ariyans say:

'Joyful lives he
who has equanimity and is mindful,'

and I entered into and abided in the third meditation.

[28] By getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down
of my former pleasures and sorrows, I entered into and abided in

the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

Thus with the mind composed,
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable,
fixed,
immovable,
I directed my mind
to the knowledge and recollection of former habitations<sup>24</sup>:

I remembered a variety of former habitations, thus:
one birth,
two births,
three births,
four births,
five births,
ten births,
twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,
fifty births,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
and many an eon of integration
and many an eon of disintegration
and many an eon of integration-disintegration;
such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,

such and such a colour,
so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I came to be in another state<sup>25</sup>
where such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I arose here.<sup>26</sup>

Thus I remember divers former habitations
in all their modes and detail.

This, brahman,
was the first knowledge attained by me in the first watch of the night;
ignorance was dispelled,
knowledge arose,
darkness was dispelled,
light arose,
even as I abided diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute.

Then with the mind composed,
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,

grown soft and workable,
fixed,
immovable,
I directed my mind
to the knowledge of the passing hence
and the arising of beings.

With the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men
I see beings as they pass hence
or come to be;
I comprehend that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going,
according to the consequences of their deeds,
and I think:

Indeed these worthy beings
who were possessed of wrong conduct in body,
who were possessed of wrong conduct of [29] speech,
who were possessed of wrong conduct of thought,
scoffers at the ariyans,
holding a wrong view,
incurring deeds consequent on a wrong view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

But these worthy beings
who were possessed of good conduct in body, [23] who were possessed of good conduct in speech,

who were possessed of good conduct in thought,
who did not scoff at the ariyans,
holding a right view,
incurring deeds consequent on a right view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

Thus with the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men
do I see beings as they pass hence,
as they arise;
I comprehend that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going
according to the consequences of their deeds.

This, brahman,
was the second knowledge attained by me in the middle watch of the night;
ignorance was dispelled,
knowledge arose,
darkness was dispelled,
light arose,
even as I abided diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute.

Then with the mind composed
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,

grown soft and workable,
fixed,
immovable,
I directed my mind
to the knowledge of the destruction of the cankers.

I understood as it really is:

This is anguish,
this is the arising of anguish,
this is the stopping of anguish,
this is the course leading to the stopping of anguish.

I understood as it really is:

These are the cankers,
this is the arising of the cankers,
this is the stopping of the cankers,
this is the course leading to the stopping of the cankers.

Knowing this thus,
seeing thus,
my mind was freed
from the canker of sense-pleasures,
and my mind was freed
from the canker of becoming,
and my mind was freed
from the canker of ignorance.<sup>27</sup>

In freedom
the knowledge came to be:

I am freed;

and I comprehended:

Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close is the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done, there is no more of being such or such.<sup>28</sup>

This, brahman,
was the third knowledge attained by me in the last watch of the night;
ignorance was dispelled,
knowledge arose,
darkness was dispelled,
light arose
even as I abided diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute.

[30] But it may be, brahman, that this occurs to you:

'Is the recluse Gotama
even today
not devoid of attachment, not devoid of aversion,
not devoid of confusion, and that therefore he frequents remote lodgings
in forest and woodland wildernesses?

But this is not to be taken in this way, brahman.

I frequent<sup>29</sup> remote lodgings in forest and woodland wildernesses, brahman, beholding two special reasons: beholding for the self<sup>30</sup> an abiding in ease here and now,<sup>31</sup> and being compassionate for the folk that come after.<sup>32</sup>"

"The folk that come after have the compassion of the revered Gotama [24] because of his perfection, because of his complete self-awakening.

Excellent, good Gotama,
excellent, good Gotama.

It is as if one might set upright
what had been upset,
or might disclose what was covered,
or show the way to one who had gone astray,
or bring an oil-lamp into the darkness
so that those with vision might see material shapes - even so
in many a figure
has dhamma been made clear by the revered Gotama.

Thus I am going to the revered Gotama for refuge, to dhamma
and to the Order of monks.

May the revered Gotama accept me as a layfollower going for refuge
from today forth
for as long as life lasts."

Discourse on Fear and Dread
the Fourth

---

<sup>1</sup> A brahman by birth. But the pure ones (ariyans) are called brahmans because they exclude evil, MA. i. 109. Jāṇussoṇi was not a name given him by his parents, but was that which he received in virtue of his office as chaplain to the king.

<sup>2</sup> See B.D. ii. 42, n. 5.

<sup>3</sup> bho.

<sup>4</sup> MA. i. 111 divides these into two kinds: those who are such by birth, and those who are such by right conduct.

<sup>5</sup> samādapetā, as at M. iii. 4, 6, of Gotama as the adviser or instructor in the Way to Nibbāna. MA. i. 111 however says "training them in moral habit and the rest."

<sup>6</sup> Defined at Vbh. 251, and quoted at MA. i. 112.

<sup>7</sup> akusala, explained at MA. i. 113 as sāvajja akkhema, blameable, faulty; and unsafe, insecure ... fear is unskilled through being based on sāvajja, dread through being based on akkhema.

<sup>8</sup> palloma. Word occurs at D. i. 96. See JPTS. 1889, p. 206 for notes, MA. i. 114 gives pannalomata; and also khema, sothibhāva, security.

<sup>9</sup> Cf. A. ii. 30.

<sup>10</sup> See A. i. 3; ii. 211. iii. 92, v. 163; D. i. 71.

<sup>11</sup> tiṇṇavicikiccha, as at D. i. 71, 110; A. iii. 297, iv. 186.

<sup>12</sup> Cf. M. i. 95.

<sup>13</sup> vigatalomdhamṣa, "gone is horripilation, hair standing on end."

<sup>14</sup> Cf. Dhp. 7, 112; It. p. 27, 71, 116.

<sup>15</sup> paññā, extra-sensory wisdom or knowledge.

<sup>16</sup> eḷamugā, as at M, i. 32. Translated at G.S. iii. 305 as "dullard." See also G.S. ii. 257, n. 1. Cf. mūgasūkara at Vin. i. 102. The idea is a "driveller." MA. i. 118 says "eḷamugā means eḷamukhā: the ga comes from the kha. It comes to be called lālāmukha (saliva-mouths). While those of poor wisdom are talking, saliva drips from their mouths. It is called lālā and eḷa. Accordingly it is said: 'See the saliva-mouthed two-tongued snake' (reference to Jā. iii. 347, which should be inserted at MA. i. 118). Therefore they are called eḷamugā. Eḷamūgā is also a reading. Some also read eḷamūkhā. Further, there is also eḷamukhā. Everywhere the meaning is eḷamukhā." It seems that lālā, saliva, is the real synonym. Jā. iii. 347 explains that eḷamūgam is so called because eḷa trickles, or oozes, from the mouth. "To drivell" is given in the OED as "to let saliva or mucus flow from the mouth or nose, as infants and idiots do; to slaver. To flow ineptly from the lips."

<sup>17</sup> The three days originally designated for teaching dhamma, Vin. i. 102.

<sup>18</sup> Park, ārāma, is defined at MA. i. 119 as flower parks and orchards, as at Vin. iii. 49.

<sup>19</sup> Forests where oblations should be taken.

<sup>20</sup> According to MA. i. 119 these are trees to be worshipped at the entrance gates to villages, little towns and so on. On going to all three when afraid, cf. Dhṛp. 188.

<sup>21</sup> MA. i. 120 says that here a peacock signifies all birds.

<sup>22</sup> As at M. i. 83.

<sup>23</sup> jhāna, meditation, mental absorption. As being of the fine-material sphere, rūpajjhāna, they are conditioned by concentration, samādhi, and by the absence of the five hindrances, nīvaraṇāni. This statement of the meditation processes is of frequent occurrence in the Majjhima.

<sup>24</sup> On these three "knowledges" see e.g. Vin. iii. 3-4, and notes at B.D. i. 7-10.

<sup>25</sup> MA. i. 125 says this was the Tusita abode (where the Bodhisatta passes his last "birth" before being born for the final time as a man). Here he was a devaputta called Setaketu, in the same class as those devas, the colour of gold, nourished on beautiful deva-food. He experienced deva-like happiness, but his painful experiences were those connected only with the sāṅkhāras.

<sup>26</sup> MA. i. 126, "here in the womb of the lady Mahāmāya."

<sup>27</sup> At the parallel passage at Vin. iii. 5. the four cankers are mentioned. But only three at A. ii. 211, iv. 179.

<sup>28</sup> nāparam itthattāya. MA. i. 128 (cf. DA. 112, SA. i. 20S) say there is not now again itthambhāvā (being thus) owing to development in the Way or to the destruction of the depravities. Or it means that for me there is no further continuity of the khandhas, for, being thoroughly understood, they are like trees cut down at the roots.

<sup>29</sup> Also at A. i. 60.

<sup>30</sup> MA. i. 128, for the individuality that is present here and now.

<sup>31</sup> In regard to the four postures, MA. i. 128.

<sup>32</sup> pacchimam janatam. See B.D. i. 66, n. MA. i. 129 says: "the young men of family, gone forth from faith, seeing that the Lord dwells in the forest, think that the Lord would not undertake forest lodgings if there were not something to be known, something to be got rid of, something to be developed, something to be realised - so why should not they? And they think that they should dwell there. Thus do they quickly become end-makers of anguish. Thus there comes to be compassion for those who come after (or, the lowest of folk)."

---

ed1 Ms. Horner's abbreviation leave her choice here in doubt.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaññāsa
1. Mūlapariyāya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
1. The Division of the Synopsis of Fundamentals

5. Discourse on No Blemishes

Anaṅgaṇa Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was there the venerable Sāriputta addressed the monks, saying:

"Reverend monks."

"Your reverence," these monks answered the venerable Sāriputta in assent. ||
||

Then the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus:

"Your reverences, these four kinds of persons<sup>2</sup> are found existing in the world.<sup>3</sup>

What are the four?

Your reverences, there is here some person with a blemish<sup>4</sup> who thinks:

'I have a subjective blemish,'

but who does not comprehend it as it really is.

And there is the person with a blemish who, thinking:

'I have a subjective blemish,' comprehends it as it really is.

There is here the person without a blemish who thinks:

'I have no subjective blemish,'

but who does not comprehend it as it really is.

And there is the person without a blemish who, thinking:

'I have no subjective blemish,'

comprehends it as it really is.

Where, your reverences,
there is this person with a subjective blemish who thinks,

'I have a subjective blemish,'

but does not comprehend it as it really is,
this one, of these two persons with a blemish, is shown to be the inferior man.<sup>5</sup>

Where, your reverences,
there is a person with a subjective blemish who thinks,

'I have a subjective blemish,'

and comprehends it as it really is,
this one, of these two persons with a blemish,
is shown to be the best man.

Where, your reverences,
there is a person without a subjective blemish who thinks,

'I have no subjective blemish,'

but does not comprehend it as it really is,
this one, of these two persons without a blemish, is shown to be the inferior man.

Where, your reverences,
there is a person without a subjective blemish who thinks,

'I have no subjective blemish,'

and comprehends it as it really is,
this one, of these two persons without a blemish,
is shown to be the best man."

When this had been said, the venerable Moggallāna the Great spoke thus to the venerable Sāriputta:

"Now, reverend Sāriputta, what is the cause, what the reason why,
of these two persons with a blemish,
one is shown as being the inferior man, while the other is shown as being the best man?"

"Where, your reverence,
there is this person with a blemish who thinks:

'I have a subjective blemish,'

but who does not comprehend it as it really is,
this may be expected for him:
that he will not generate desire,
or strive,
or stir up energy
for getting rid of that blemish;
he will pass away while he has attachment,
aversion,
and confusion,
while he has the blemish,
while his mind is tarnished.

Your reverence, it is like a bronze bowl,
brought back from a shop or smithy
covered with dust and dirt and that the owners would not make use of or clean, but would throw away in the dust.

In consequence, your reverence,
would that bronze bowl
become more tarnished with dirt after a time?"

"Yes, your reverence."

"Even so, your reverence,
for that person with a blemish who thinks:

'I have a subjective blemish,'

but does not comprehend it as it really is,
this is to be expected:
that he will not generate desire,
or strive,
or stir up energy
for getting rid of that blemish;
he will pass away while he has attachment,
aversion,

confusion,
while he has the blemish,
while his mind is tarnished.

Where, your reverence,
there is this person with a blemish who thinks:

'I have a subjective blemish,'

and comprehends it as it really is,
this may be expected for him:
that he will generate desire,
and strive,
and stir up energy
for getting rid of that blemish;
he will pass away without attachment,
without aversion,
without confusion,
without the blemish,
his mind untarnished.

Your reverence, it is like a bronze bowl,
brought back from a shop or smithy
covered with dust and dirt, but which the owners would use and would clean,
and would not throw away in the dust.

In consequence, your reverence,
would that bronze bowl
become more clean after a time with the cleaning?"

"Yes, your reverence."

"Even so, your reverence,
for that person with a blemish who thinks:

'I have a subjective blemish,'

and who comprehends it as it really is,
this is to be expected:
that he will generate desire
and strive,
and stir up energy
for getting rid of that blemish;
he will pass away without attachment,
without aversion,
without confusion,
without the blemish,
his mind untarnished.

Where, your reverence,
there is this person without a blemish who thinks,

'I have no subjective blemish,'

but who does not comprehend it as it really is,
this may be expected for him:
that he will attend to the fair aspect (of things);
because of attention to the fair aspect,
attachment will deprave his mind;
he will pass away while he has attachment,
aversion
and confusion,
while he has a blemish,
while his mind is tarnished.

Your reverence, it is like a bronze bowl,
brought back from a shop or smithy
quite pure,
quite clean,
but which its owners would neither use nor clean,
but would throw away in the dust.

In consequence, your reverence,
would that bronze bowl
become more tarnished with dirt after a time?"

"Yes, your reverence."

"Even so, your reverence, for that person without a blemish who thinks:

'I have no subjective blemish,'

but who does not comprehend it as it really is,
this may be expected for him;
that he will attend to the fair aspect (of things);
because of attention to the fair aspect,
attachment will deprave his mind;
he will pass away while he has attachment,
aversion
and confusion,
while he has a blemish,
while his mind is tarnished.

Where, your reverence,
there is this person without a blemish who thinks,

'I have no subjective blemish'

and comprehends it as it really is,
this may be expected for him:
that he will not attend to the fair aspect (of things);
because there is no attention to the fair aspect,
attachment will not deprave his mind;
he will pass away without attachment,
without aversion,
without confusion,

without a blemish,
his mind untarnished.

Your reverence, it is like a bronze bowl,
brought back from a shop or smithy
quite pure,
quite clean,
but which the owners would use and would clean,
and would not throw away in the dust.

In consequence, your reverence, would that bronze bowl become more clean after a time with the cleaning?"

"Yes, your reverence."

"Even so, your reverence, for this person without a blemish who thinks,

'I have no subjective blemish'

and who comprehends it as it really is,
this may be expected for him:
that he will not attend to the fair aspect (of things);
because there is no attention to the fair aspect,
attachment will not deprave his mind;
he will pass away without attachment,
without aversion,
without confusion,
without blemish,
his mind untarnished.

This, reverend Moggallāna,
is the cause,
this the reason why,
of these two persons with a blemish,

the one is shown to be the inferior man,
while the other is shown to be the best man.

This, reverend Moggallāna,
is the cause,
this the reason why,
of these two persons without a blemish,
the one is shown to be the inferior man,
while the other is shown to be the best man."

---

"'Blemish, blemish,' is it called, your reverence?

Now, of what is this a synonym, your reverence,
that is to say
'blemish'?"

"Your reverence, this - that is to say 'blemish' -
is a synonym for being occupied with evil unskilled wishes.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when a wish such as this
may arise in some monk here:

'Indeed, should I fall into an offence, the monks might not find out about me<sup>6</sup> - that I have fallen into an offence.'

This situation occurs, your reverence, when monks may find out about that monk,
that he has fallen into an offence.

He, thinking that the monks have found out that he has fallen into an offence,
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when a wish such as this may arise in some monk here:

'But if I have fallen into an offence, the monks might reprove me in private,
not in the midst of an Order.'

This situation occurs, your reverence, when monks might reprove him in the midst of an Order, not in private.

He, thinking:

'The monks are reprovng me
in the midst of an Order,
not in private,
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when a wish such as this
may arise in some monk here:

'Should I have fallen into an offence, an equal<sup>7</sup> should reprove me, not one who is not an equal.'

This situation occurs, your reverence, when one who is not an equal might reprove that monk.

He, thinking:

'One who is not an equal is reprovng me, not one who is an equal,'
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when a wish such as this may arise in some monk here:

'O may the Teacher teach dhamma to the monks, having interrogated me only time and again.'

This situation occurs, your reverence, when the Teacher may teach dhamma to the monks having interrogated some other monk time and again, and when the Teacher may teach dhamma to the monks not having interrogated that monk time and again,

He, thinking:

'The Teacher teaches dhamma to the monks having interrogated another monk time and again;
the Teacher teaches dhamma to the monks not having interrogated me time and again,'
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when a wish such as this may arise in some monk here:

'O may the monks enter the village for rice having put me in front;<sup>8</sup> may the monks not enter the village for rice having put another monk in front.'

This situation occurs, your reverence, when the monks may enter the village for rice having put another monk in front, they may enter a village for rice not having put that monk in front.

He, thinking:

'The monks are entering the village for rice having put another monk in front, they are entering the village for rice not having put me in front,'
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when a wish such as this may arise in some monk here:

'O may I receive the best seat,
the best water,
the best almsfood in a refectory,<sup>9</sup> may no other monk receive the best seat,
the best water,
the best almsfood in the refectory.'

This situation occurs, your reverence, when another monk may receive the best seat,
the best water,
the best almsfood in a refectory, when that monk does not receive the best seat
the best water,
the best almsfood in the refectory.

He, thinking:

'Another monk is receiving the best seat
the best water,
the best almsfood in the refectory;
I am not receiving the best seat
the best water,
the best almsfood in the refectory,'
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when a wish such as this may arise in some monk here:

'O may I, when I have eaten in a refectory,
give the thanks,
may no other monk,
when he has eaten in a refectory,
give the thanks.'

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when another monk,
when he has eaten in the refectory,
may give the thanks,
when that monk,
when he has eaten in the refectory,
may not give the thanks.

He, thinking:

'Another monk,
when he has eaten in the refectory,
is giving the thanks;
I, when I have eaten in the refectory, am not giving the thanks,'
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when a wish such as this may arise in some monk here:

'O may I teach dhamma to the monks who are in a monastery, may no other monk teach dhamma to the monks who are in the monastery.'

This situation occurs, your reverence, when another monk may teach dhamma to the monks who are in a monastery,
when that monk may not teach dhamma to the monks who are in a monastery.

He, thinking,

'Another monk is teaching dhamma to the monks who are in a monastery, I am not teaching dhamma to the monks who are in the monastery,'
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when a wish such as this may arise in some monk here:

'O may I teach dhamma to the nuns who are in a monastery may no other monk teach dhamma to the nuns who are in the monastery.'

This situation occurs, your reverence, when another monk may teach dhamma to the nuns who are in a monastery, when that monk may not teach dhamma to the nuns who are in a monastery.

He, thinking,

'Another monk is teaching dhamma to the nuns who are in a monastery, I am not teaching dhamma to the nuns who are in the monastery,'
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when a wish such as this may arise in some monk here:

'O may I teach dhamma to the layfollowers who are in a monastery may no other monk teach dhamma to the layfollowers who are in the monastery.'

This situation occurs, your reverence, when another monk may teach dhamma to the layfollowers who are in a monastery,
when that monk may not teach dhamma to the layfollowers who are in a monastery.

He, thinking,

'Another monk is teaching dhamma to the layfollowers who are in a monastery,
I am not teaching dhamma to the layfollowers who are in the monastery,'
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when a wish such as this may arise in some monk here:

'O may I teach dhamma to women layfollowers who are in a monastery, may no other monk teach dhamma to the women layfollowers who are in a monastery.'

This situation occurs, your reverence, when some other monk may teach dhamma to the women layfollowers who are in a monastery, when that monk does not teach dhamma to the women layfollowers who are in a monastery.

He, thinking:

'Another monk is teaching dhamma to the women layfollowers who are in a monastery,
I am not teaching dhamma to the women layfollowers who are in a monastery,
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence, when a wish such as this may arise in
some monk here:

'O may the monks revere, esteem, venerate, honour me, may the monks revere, esteem, venerate, honour no other monk.

This situation occurs, your reverence, when the monks revere, esteem, venerate, honour some other monk, when the monks do not revere, esteem, venerate, honour that monk.

He, thinking:

'The monks revere, esteem, venerate, honour some other monk,
the monks do not revere, esteem, venerate, honour me,
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence, when a wish such as this may arise in
some monk here:

'O may the nuns revere, esteem, venerate, honour me, may the nuns revere, esteem, venerate, honour no other monk.

This situation occurs, your reverence, when the nuns revere, esteem, venerate, honour some other monk, when the nuns do not revere, esteem, venerate, honour that monk.

He, thinking:

'The nuns revere, esteem, venerate, honour some other monk,
the nuns do not revere, esteem, venerate, honour me,
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence, when a wish such as this may arise in
some monk here:

'O may the layfollowers revere, esteem, venerate, honour me, may the layfollowers revere, esteem, venerate, honour no other monk.

This situation occurs, your reverence, when the layfollowers revere, esteem, venerate, honour some other monk, when the layfollowers do not revere, esteem, venerate, honour that monk.

He, thinking:

'The layfollowers revere, esteem, venerate, honour some other monk, the layfollowers do not revere, esteem, venerate, honour me,
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence, when a wish such as this may arise in
some monk here:

'O may the women layfollowers revere, esteem, venerate, honour me, may the women layfollowers revere, esteem, venerate, honour no other monk.

This situation occurs, your reverence, when the women layfollowers revere, esteem, venerate, honour some other
monk,
when the women layfollowers do not revere, esteem, venerate, honour that monk.

He, thinking:

'The women layfollowers revere, esteem, venerate, honour some other
monk,
the women layfollowers do not revere, esteem, venerate, honour me,
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence, when a wish such as this may arise in some monk here:

'O may I receive fine may no other monk receive fine robe-material.

This situation occurs, your reverence, when another monk may receive fine robe-material, when that monk does not receive fine robe-material.

He, thinking:

'Another monk is receiving fine robe-material,
I am not receiving fine robe-material,
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when a wish such as this may arise in some monk here:

'O may I receive fine fine almsfood, may no other monk receive fine almsfood.

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when another monk may receive fine almsfood, when that monk does not receive fine almsfood.

He, thinking:

'Another monk is receiving fine almsfood,
I am not receiving fine almsfood,
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when a wish such as this may arise in some monk here:

'O may I receive fine fine lodgings, may no other monk receive fine lodgings.

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when another monk may receive fine lodgings, when that monk does not receive fine lodgings.

He, thinking:

'Another monk is receiving fine lodgings,
I am not receiving fine lodgings,
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This situation occurs, your reverence,
when a wish such as this may arise in some monk here:

'O may I receive fine requisites of medicines for the sick, may no other monk receive fine requisites of medicines for the sick.'

This situation occurs, your reverence, when another monk may receive fine requisites of medicines for the sick, when that monk does not receive fine requisites of medicines for the sick.

He, thinking:

'Another monk is receiving fine requisites of medicines for the sick, I am not receiving fine requisites of medicines for the sick,'
becomes angry and discontented.

Whatever is anger, your reverence,
whatever is discontent,
both are a blemish.

■

This, your reverence -
that is to say 'blemish' -
is a synonym for being occupied with evil unskilled wishes.

---

In whatever monk, your reverence, it is seen and also heard that these occupations with evil unskilled wishes
are not destroyed -
even though he be a forest-dweller
whose lodgings are remote,
one who walks for almsfood on continuous almsround,<sup>10</sup> a rag-robe wearer
who wears robes that are worn thin<sup>11</sup> - then his fellow Brahma-farers do not revere, esteem, venerate, honour him.

What is the cause of this?

It is that these see and also hear
of this reverend one that his occupations with evil unskilled wishes are not destroyed.

Your reverence,
it is like a bronze bowl
brought back from a shop or smithy
quite pure,
quite clean;
its owners, having filled it with a dead snake or a dead dog
or a dead human being,
and having enclosed it in another bronze bowl,
might take it back inside the shop.

People, on seeing it, would say:

'Just look,
what is this that has been brought back
like a very lovely thing?'

Having lifted it up and opened it,
they would look at it;
at the sight of it, repugnance would set in and loathing would set in and disgust would set in;
those who had been hungry would have no desire for food, far less those who had eaten already -

even so, your reverence, of whatever monk it is seen and heard that these occupations with evil unskilled wishes

are not destroyed -
even though he be a forest-dweller
whose lodgings are remote,
one who walks for almsfood
on continuous almsround,
a rag-robe wearer
who wears robes that are worn thin - then his fellow Brahma-farers do not revere, esteem, venerate, honour him.

What is the cause of this?

This reverend one's occupations with evil unskilled, wishes are seen as well as heard to be not destroyed.

In whatever monk, your reverence, these occupations with evil unskilled wishes are seen and are heard to be destroyed -
even though he were staying near a village, were one who is invited,<sup>12</sup> were one who wears householder's robe-material<sup>13</sup> - then his fellow Brahma-farers would revere, esteem, venerate, honour him.

What is the cause of this?

It is that these see and also hear of that reverend one that his occupations
with evil unskilled wishes
are destroyed.

Your reverence, it is like a bronze bowl,
brought back from a shop or smithy
quite pure, quite clean.

Its owners,
having filled it with fine rice;
rice-water,
the black grains removed,
with various curries,
various vegetables,
and having enclosed it in another bronze bowl,
might take it back inside the shop.

People, seeing it, would say:

'Just look,
what is this that has been brought back
like a very lovely thing?

Having lifted it up,
having opened it,
they would look at it.

On seeing it,
liking would set in,
and no loathing would set in and no disgust would set in;
even those who had eaten would have a desire for food, how much more those who were hungry? -

even so, your reverence, of whatever monk it is seen and heard that these occupations with evil unskilled wishes
are destroyed -
even though he were staying near a village,
were one who is invited,

were one who wears householder's robe-material - then his fellow Brahma-farers would revere would revere, esteem, venerate, honour him.

What is the cause of this?

It is that these see and also hear
of this reverend one
that his occupations
with evil unskilled wishes
are destroyed."

When this had been said, the venerable Moggallāna the Great spoke thus to the venerable Sāriputta:

"A simile occurs<sup>14</sup> to me, reverend Sāriputta."

"Let it be evident,<sup>15</sup> reverend Moggallāna."

"Once I, your reverence, was staying near Rājagaha in the mountain Cowpen.<sup>16</sup>

Then I, your reverence,
having dressed in the morning,
taking my bowl and robe,
entered Rājagaha for alms-food.

Now at that time Samīti,
the son of a vehicle maker,
was shaping a felloe,
and the Naked Ascetic, Paṇḍu's son,
who had formerly been the son of a vehicle maker,
was standing near him.

Then, your reverence, this reasoning arose in the mind of the Naked Ascetic,<sup>17</sup> Pandu's son, who had formerly been the son of a vehicle maker:

'O that this Samīti,
the son of a vehicle maker,
might shape away this fellow's crookedness, its twist and notch,
so that the fellow,
without crookedness,
without twist,
without notch,
might be clear and placed on the pith.'

Even while there was this reasoning in the mind of the Naked Ascetic, Paṇḍu's son, who had formerly been a vehicle maker, so did Samīti, the son of a vehicle maker, shape away that crookedness and that twist
and that notch from the fellow.

Then, your reverence,
the Naked Ascetic, Paṇḍu's son,
who had formerly been the son of a vehicle maker,
was delighted;
he let forth a cry of delight:

'It seems as if he is shaping it away because with his heart<sup>18</sup> he knows my heart.'

Even so, your reverence,
those persons who are without faith, but who, in want of a way of living,
have gone forth from home into homelessness,
not from faith,
who are crafty,
fraudulent,
deceitful,
who are unbalanced<sup>19</sup> and puffed up,

who are shifty, scurrilous
and of loose talk,
the doors of whose sense-faculties are not guarded, who do not know moderation in eating, who are not intent on vigilance, indifferent to recluse-ship, not of keen respect for the training, ones for abundance,
lax,
taking the lead in backsliding, shirking the burden of seclusion<sup>20</sup> who are indolent, of feeble energy,
of confused mindfulness,
not clearly conscious,
not concentrated
but of wandering minds, who are weak in wisdom, drivellers<sup>21</sup> - it seems that the venerable Sāriputta, because he knows their hearts with his heart, is shaping them
by means of this disquisition on dhamma.

But those young men of respectable families who,
from faith,
have gone forth from home into homelessness,
who are not crafty,
fraudulent
or deceitful,
who are not unbalanced,
not puffed up,
not shifty,
not scurrilous
or of loose talk,
the doors of whose sense-faculties are guarded,

who know moderation in eating,
who are intent on vigilance,
who long for recluseship,
who are of keen respect for the training,
not ones for abundance,
not lax,
shirking back-sliding,
taking the lead in seclusion,
who are of stirred up energy,
self-resolute,
with mindfulness aroused,
clearly conscious,
who are concentrated,
their minds one-pointed,
who have wisdom,
are not drivellers -
these, having heard this disquisition on dhamma from the venerable Sāriputta, seem to drink it,
seem to savour it with speech
as well as with mind.

Indeed it is good that a fellow Brahma-farer, having caused one to rise up from<sup>22</sup> what is unskilled, establishes him in what is skilled.

Your reverence,
it is like<sup>23</sup> a woman or a man, young and of tender years,
fond of adornment,
who, having washed the head, having acquired a garland of lotuses or a garland of jasmine or a garland of acacia creeper, and having taken it in both hands should place it on the top of the head -

even so, your reverence, those young men of respectable families who have gone forth from home into homelessness from faith, who are not crafty,
fraudulent
or deceitful,
who are not unbalanced,
not puffed up,
not shifty,
not scurrilous
or of loose talk,
the doors of whose sense-faculties are guarded,
who know moderation in eating,
who are intent on vigilance,
who long for recluseship,
who are of keen respect for the training,
not ones for abundance,
not lax,
shirking back-sliding,
taking the lead in seclusion,
who are of stirred up energy,
self-resolute,
with mindfulness aroused,
clearly conscious,
who are concentrated,
their minds one-pointed,
who have wisdom,
are not drivellers -
having heard this disquisition on dhamma from the venerable Sāriputta, seem to drink it,
seem to savour it with speech
as well as with mind.

Indeed it is good that a fellow Brahma-farer, having caused one to rise up from what is unskilled,
establishes him in what is skilled."

In this wise did each of these great beings<sup>24</sup>rejoice together in what was well spoken by the other.

Discourse on No Blemishes the Fifth

---

<sup>1</sup> Referred to at MA. ii. 246: Vism. 377. The Anaṅgaṇavatthustta, mentioned at VA. i. 158, probably refers to this Majjhima Sutta.

<sup>2</sup> MA. i. 137 notes that there is both a conventional teaching and a teaching according to ultimate truth (paramatthadesanā). Herein "individual person, being, woman, man, khattiya, brahman, deva, Māra" come under conventional meaning; and "impermanence, anguish, insubstantiality, the khandhas, the elements, the planes, the applications of mindfulness" under ultimate truth. "The four persons are to be understood in the conventional way" (MA. i. 139).

<sup>3</sup> MA. i. 139 calls this sattaloka, the world of beings.

<sup>4</sup> MA. 368: "attachment, hatred and folly are called the three blemishes." MA. i. 139ff. equates them with the defilements, the kilhesa.

<sup>5</sup> hīnapurisa.

<sup>6</sup> See Vin. ii. 32.

<sup>7</sup> sappaṭipuggala. MA. i. 144 says this means "an equal person. 'Equal' means one who has an offence. 'Paṭipuggala' means the reprover. He thinks it possible to say, wishing for reproof from one who has an offence, 'You have fallen into this and that offence. You can reprove me after you have confessed it.' Or, he may wish for reproof from one of his own birth, family, learning, experience, or ascetic practice."

<sup>8</sup> I.e. of the procession walking for almsfood to be put into their bowls.

<sup>9</sup> See Vin. ii. 101, where a list of those monks fit for such an honour is given.

<sup>10</sup> I.e. not picking and choosing between the houses he would visit, but taking them in the order in which they come, according to Sekhiya 33.

<sup>11</sup> MA. i. 149 says that this may be due to three causes: because they are cut with a knife, sewn with a coarse long thread, or stained by dust.

<sup>12</sup> I.e. to go and take his meals at houses (either as a regular diner, or as one specially invited) instead of walking for his almsfood. Cf. A. iii. 391.

<sup>13</sup> I.e. robe-material given by householders - superior to robes made of rags taken from the dust-heap. Cf. M. iii. 126.

<sup>14</sup> paṭibhāti explained by upaṭṭhāti at MA. i. 151.

<sup>15</sup> paṭibhātu. MA. i. 151 says, "let it occur, let it rise up. The meaning is: you speak."

<sup>16</sup> Giribbaje. MA. i. 151 says, "it (Rājagaha) was called Giribbaja because it stood like a cattle pen (vaja) with a circle of mountains ail round." So Giribbaja, which is usually taken as a name for Rājagaha, is the Cowpen in the mountains which surround Rājagaha.

<sup>17</sup> MA. i. 151 explains ājīvika as naggasamaṇa. See A. L. Basham, History and Doctrines of the Ājīvikas, London, 1951.

<sup>18</sup> hadaya.

<sup>19</sup> This word and the next four also occur at M. i. 470, S. i. 01, 203; all at A. iii. 198-199.

<sup>20</sup> As at M. i. 14.

<sup>21</sup> As at M. i. 20.

<sup>22</sup> vuṭṭhāpetvā. Or having caused one to remove himself from.

<sup>23</sup> As at Vin. ii. 255, A. iv. 278, etc.

<sup>24</sup> mahānāga. MA. i. 153 says that this is what the two chief disciples are called; it gives three derivations for nāga, and quotes Sn. 522.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
1. Mūlapariyāya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
1. The Division of the Synopsis of Fundamentals

6. Discourse on What One May Wish

Ākaṅkheyya Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:<sup>2</sup>:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered one," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Fare along, monks, possessed of moral habit,
possessed of the Obligations,
fare along controlled by the control of the Obligations, possessed of right conduct and resort,
seeing danger in the slightest faults;

undertaking them rightly,
train yourselves in the rules of training.<sup>3</sup>

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'May I be agreeable to my fellow Brahma-farers, liked by them,
revered and respected,'

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits, who is intent on mental tranquillity within,<sup>4</sup>
whose meditation is uninterrupted, who is endowed with vision,<sup>5</sup> a cultivator of empty places.<sup>6</sup>

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'May I be one who receives the requisites of robes, almsfood,
lodgings,
and medicines for the sick,'

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,
who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'May these services of those<sup>7</sup> from whom I enjoy the requisites of robes, almsfood, lodgings, requisites for the sick, be of great merit, of great advantage,'

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,

who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'May this be a great fruit, a great [42] advantage to those of my kith and kin who, their minds pleased, recollect the departed who have passed away,<sup>8</sup>

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,
who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'May I be one
who overcomes aversion<sup>9</sup> and liking<sup>10</sup>, and may aversion not overcome me,
may I fare along
constantly conquering any aversion that has arisen,'

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,
who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'May I be one
who overcomes fear and dread, and may fear and dread

not overcome me,
may I fare along constantly conquering any fear and dread that has arisen,'

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,
who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'May I be one
who, at will,<sup>11</sup> without trouble,
without difficulty,
acquires the four meditations which are of the purest mentality, abidings in ease here-now,<sup>12</sup>'

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,
who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'Those incorporeal deliverances<sup>13</sup> which are calmed, transcending forms,
may I fare along
having realised<sup>14</sup> them while in the body,<sup>15</sup>'

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,
who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'By the total destruction
of the three fetters
may I be a stream-attainer,<sup>16</sup> not liable to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for awakening.'

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,
who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'By the total destruction
of the three fetters,
by the reduction of attachment,
aversion,
confusion,
may I be a once-returner;
having come back once only to this [43] world, may I make an end of anguish,'<sup>17</sup>

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,

who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'By the total destruction of the five fetters
that bind one to the lower world,<sup>18</sup> may I be of spontaneous uprising, one who has utterly attained to Nibbāna there,<sup>19</sup> not liable to return from that world,<sup>20</sup>'

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,
who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'May I experience the various forms of psychic power:<sup>21</sup>

Having been one may I be manifold,
having been manifold
may I be one;
manifest or invisible
may I go unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain
as if through air;
may I plunge into the ground and shoot up again
as if in water;
may I walk upon the water without parting it

as if on the ground;
sitting cross-legged
may I travel through the air
like a bird on the wing;
with my hand
may I rub and stroke this moon and sun
although they are of such mighty power and majesty;
and even as far as the Brahma-world may I have power in respect of my body,<sup>22</sup>'

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,
who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'By the purified deva-like hearing which surpasses that of men, may I hear both (kinds of) sounds - deva-like ones
and human ones,
whether they be far or near,'

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,
who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.<sup>23</sup>

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'May I know intuitively by mind the minds of other beings,<sup>24</sup> of other individuals,

so that I may know intuitively of a mind that is full of attachment<sup>25</sup> that it is full of attachment;
or so that I may know intuitively
of a mind that is without attachment,
that it is without attachment;
or so that I may know intuitively
of a mind that is full of aversion,
that it is full of aversion;
or so that I may know intuitively
of a mind that is without aversion,
that it is without [44] aversion;
or so that I may know intuitively
of a mind that is full of confusion,
that it is full of confusion;
or so that I may know intuitively
of a mind that is without confusion, that it is without confusion;
or or so that I may know intuitively of a mind that is contracted
that it is contracted;
or so that I may know intuitively
of a mind that is distracted
that it is distracted;
or so that I may know intuitively
of a mind that has become great
that it has become great;
or so that I may know intuitively
of a mind that has not become great
that it has not become great;
or so that I may know intuitively
of a mind with (some other mental state) superior to it that it has (some other mental state) superior to it;
or so that I may know intuitively of a mind that has no (other mental state) superior to it that it has no (other mental state) superior to it;

or so that I may know intuitively or of a mind that is composed that it is composed;
or so that I may know intuitively or of a mind that is not composed that it is not composed;
or so that I may know intuitively or of a mind that is freed that it is freed;
or so that I may know intuitively
of a mind that is not freed
that it is not freed,'

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,
who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'May I recollect (my) manifold former habitations,<sup>26</sup> that is to say,
one birth,
two births,
three births, four births, five births, ten births, twenty births, forty births, fifty births,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
many an eon of integration,
many an eon of disintegration,
many an eon of integration-disintegration;
such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,

so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I came to be in another state
where such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this I arose here.

Thus may I remember (my) divers former habitations
in all their modes and detail,'

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,
who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'With the purified deva-vision surpassing that of men,<sup>27</sup> may I behold beings
as they pass hence
or come to be -
mean,
excellent,
fair,
foul,
in a good bourn,

in a bad bourn,
according to the consequences of their deeds;
may I comprehend:

Indeed these worthy beings
were possessed of wrong conduct in body, speech
and thought,
they were scoffers at the ariyans,
holding a wrong view,
incurring deeds consequent on a wrong view -
these,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

But these worthy beings
who were possessed of good conduct in body,
speech
and thought,
who were not scoffers at the ariyans,
holding a right view,
incurring deeds consequent on a right view - [45]
these
at the breaking up of the body after dying
have arisen in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

Thus, with the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men
may I behold beings
as they pass hence,
as they arise -
mean,

excellent,
fair,
foul,
in a good bourn,
in a bad bourn,
according to the consequences of their deeds,'

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,
who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

Monks, if a monk should wish:

'By the destruction of the cankers,<sup>28</sup> having realised by my own super-knowledge here and now the freedom of mind,<sup>29</sup> and freedom through wisdom<sup>30</sup>
that are cankerless,
entering thereon,
may I abide therein,'

he should be one who fulfils the moral habits,
who is intent on mental tranquillity within,
whose meditation is uninterrupted,
who is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

That of which I have spoken thus was spoken in relation to this:

Fare along, monks, possessed of moral habit,
possessed of the Obligations,
fare along controlled by the control of the Obligations,
possessed of right conduct and resort,

seeing danger in the slightest faults;
undertaking them rightly,
train yourselves in the rules of training."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse on What one may Wish: the Sixth

---

<sup>1</sup> At MA. i. 15, DA.. i. 50 this Sutta is mentioned as an example of a discourse preached by the Buddha of his own accord, attano ajjhāsayen'eva.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. A. v. 131.

<sup>3</sup> MA. i. 155 says all is given in detail in Vism. (p. 16f.). Cf. D. i. 63; Miln. 375.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. M. i. 213; It. p. 39.

<sup>5</sup> vipassanā. A sevenfold viewing, anupassanā, is mentioned at MA. i. 157, Pts. i. 10.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. Khp. VII.

<sup>7</sup> MA. i. 159 says devas or men.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. Sn. 590.

<sup>9</sup> MA. i. 160, for remote lodgings. Cf. M. iii. 97, A. iv. 291, v, 132 for this whole passage.

<sup>10</sup> MA. i. 160, to the five strands of sense-pleasures.

<sup>11</sup> Cf. M. i. 354; A. ii 23, iii. 114, 133, v. 132, etc.

<sup>12</sup> diṭṭhadhamma is called the present individuality. Here the meaning is "of beings abiding in ease," for which a synonym is the four meditations on the fine-material plane.

<sup>13</sup> Cf. D. ii. 70.

<sup>14</sup> phassitvā. MA. i. 162 says nāmakāyena phusitvā; pāpuṇitvā adhigantvā.

<sup>15</sup> kāyena.

<sup>16</sup> MA. i. 162 says "stream" is a synonym for the Way and quotes S. v. 347, adding that here (i.e. above) the name is given for a fruit of the Way.

<sup>17</sup> MA. i. 163 explains dukkha here as vaṭṭadukkha, the anguish of whirling (on in recurrent birth).

<sup>18</sup> See M. Sutta 64.

<sup>19</sup> This formula therefore is not "peculiar to Samy. and Aug.", as stated at G.S. ii. 243, n. 1.

<sup>20</sup> The Brahma-world, MA. i. 164.

<sup>21</sup> M. i. 494; D. i. 78; A. i. 170, 255, etc.

<sup>22</sup> This is called the marvel of psychic power at A. i. 170. Cf. also S. v. 282, etc.

<sup>23</sup> Cf. A. i. 255.

<sup>24</sup> As at e.g. M. i. 59, 69. See notes at p. 76, below.

<sup>25</sup> Cf. M. i. 59, 69, 495; A. i. 255; D. i. 80, etc.

<sup>26</sup> Cf. M. i. 22; A. i. 255, etc.

<sup>27</sup> Cf. M. i. 22-23; A. i. 256, etc.

<sup>28</sup> Cf. M. i. 22-23, A. i. 256.

<sup>29</sup> MA. i. 164 says this is contemplation that is freed from attachment.

<sup>30</sup> MA. i. 164 says this should be so called because it is freed from ignorance.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
1. Mūlapariyāya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
1. The Division of the Synopsis of Fundamentals

7. Discourse on the Simile of the Cloth

Vatthūpama Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered [46] one," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Monks, as a cloth is a defilement of the mind, that is stained and dirty is a defilement of the mind, and which a dyer might dip into this and that dye - is a defilement of the mind,
be it dark green or yellow or red or crimson - is a defilement of the mind,

would be dyed a bad colour; is a defilement of the mind, it would not be clear in colour.

What is the reason for this?

Monks, it is because the cloth was not clean.

Even so, monks, a bad bourn<sup>2</sup> is to be expected is a defilement of the mind, when the mind is stained.

Monks, as a cloth is a defilement of the mind, that is quite clean, is a defilement of the mind, quite pure, is a defilement of the mind, and which a dyer might dip into this or that dye - is a defilement of the mind,
be it dark green or yellow or red or crimson - is a defilement of the mind, would be dyed a good colour; is a defilement of the mind, it would be clear in colour.

What is the reason for this?

Monks, it is because the cloth was clean.

Even so, monks, a good bourn<sup>3</sup> is to be expected is a defilement of the mind,
when the mind is not stained.

And what, monks, are the defilements of the mind?

Greed and covetousness<sup>4</sup> is a defilement of the mind, malevolence is a defilement of the mind, anger is a defilement of the mind, malice is a defilement of the mind, hypocrisy is a defilement of the mind, spite is a defilement of the mind, envy is a defilement of the mind, stinginess is a defilement of the mind, deceit is a defilement of the mind, treachery is a defilement of the mind, obstinacy is a defilement of the mind, impetuosity is a defilement of the mind, arrogance is a defilement of the mind, pride is a defilement of the mind, conceit is a defilement of the mind, indolence is a defilement of the mind.

---

Monks, a monk thinks that greed and covetousness
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind that is greed and covetousness;

a monk thinks that malevolence
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind
that is malevolence,

a monk thinks that anger
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind
that is anger,

a monk thinks that malice
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind
that is malice,

a monk thinks that hypocrisy
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind
that is hypocrisy,

a monk thinks that spite
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind
that is spite,

a monk thinks that envy
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind
that is envy,

a monk thinks that stinginess
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind
that is stinginess,

a monk thinks that deceit
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind
that is deceit,

a monk thinks that treachery
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind
that is treachery,

a monk thinks that obstinacy
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind
that is obstinacy,

a monk thinks that impetuosity
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind
that is impetuosity,

a monk thinks that arrogance
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind
that is arrogance,

a monk thinks that pride
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind
that is pride,

a monk thinks that conceit
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind
that is conceit,

a monk thinks that indolence
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
he gets rid of the defilement of the mind that is indolence.

---

When, monks, the monk thinks that greed and covetousness is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
the defilement of the mind that is greed and covetousness is got rid of;

thinks that malevolence
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
the defilement of the mind that is malevolence is got rid of,

thinks that anger
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
the defilement of the mind
that is anger is got rid of,

thinks that malice
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
the defilement of the mind
that is malice is got rid of,

thinks that hypocrisy
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
the defilement of the mind that is hypocrisy is got rid of,

thinks that spite
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,

the defilement of the mind
that is spite is got rid of,

thinks that envy
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
the defilement of the mind
that is envy is got rid of,

thinks that stinginess
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
the defilement of the mind that is stinginess is got rid of,

thinks that deceit
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
the defilement of the mind
that is deceit is got rid of,

thinks that treachery
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
the defilement of the mind that is treachery is got rid of,

thinks that obstinacy
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
the defilement of the mind that is obstinacy is got rid of,

thinks that impetuosity
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,

the defilement of the mind that is impetuosity is got rid of,

thinks that arrogance
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
the defilement of the mind that is arrogance is got rid of,

thinks that pride
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
the defilement of the mind
that is pride is got rid of,

thinks that conceit
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
the defilement of the mind
that is conceit is got rid of,

thinks that indolence
is a defilement of the mind,
and having known it thus,
the defilement of the mind that is indolence is got rid of,

he becomes possessed of unwavering confidence in the Awakened One and thinks:

'Thus indeed is he the Lord, perfected,
wholly self-awakened,
endowed with knowledge and right conduct,
well-farer,
knower of the world(s), incomparable charioteer of men to be tamed,

teacher of devas and mankind,
the Awakened One,
the Lord.'

■

He becomes [47] possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma and thinks;

'Dhamma is well taught by the Lord, it is self-realised, it is timeless,<sup>5</sup> it is a come-and-see thing, leading onwards,<sup>6</sup> to be understood individually by the wise.'

■

He becomes possessed of unwavering confidence in the Order and thinks:

'The Lord's Order of disciples is of good conduct,
the Lord's Order of disciples is upright,
the Lord's Order of disciples is of wise conduct,
the Lord's Order of disciples is of dutiful conduct,
that is to say
the four pairs of men,
the eight individuals.<sup>7</sup>

This Order of the Lord's disciples is worthy of alms,
worthy of hospitality,
worthy of offerings,

worthy of reverence, it is a matchless field of merit for the world.'<sup>8</sup>

---

At this stage<sup>9</sup> there is for him giving up, renouncing,
rejecting,
getting rid of,
forsaking.

■

He, thinking:

'Possessed of unwavering confidence in the Awakened One am I,' acquires knowledge of the goal,<sup>10</sup> acquires knowledge of dhamma,<sup>11</sup> acquires the delight

that is connected with dhamma;
rapture is born from that delight,
being rapturous,
his body is impassible,
with the body impassible,
joy<sup>12</sup> is felt,
because of joy
the mind is (well) concentrated.<sup>13</sup>

■

Thinking:

'Possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma am I,'

he acquires knowledge of the goal, acquires knowledge of dhamma,
acquires the delight
that is connected with dhamma;
rapture is born from that delight,
being rapturous,
his body is impassible,
with the body impassible,
joy is felt,
because of joy
the mind is (well) concentrated.

■

Thinking:

'Possessed of unwavering confidence in the Order am I,'

he acquires knowledge of the goal,
acquires knowledge of dhamma,
acquires the delight
that is connected with dhamma;
rapture is born from that delight,
being rapturous,
his body is impassible,
with the body impassible,
joy is felt,
because of joy
the mind is (well) concentrated.

■

Thinking:

'At this stage
there comes to be for me giving up,
renouncing,
rejecting,
getting rid of,
forsaking,'

he acquires knowledge of the goal,
acquires knowledge of dhamma,
acquires the delight
that is connected with dhamma;
rapture is born from that delight,
being rapturous,
his body is impassible,
with the body impassible,
joy is felt,
because of joy
the mind is (well) concentrated.

---

[48] A monk, monks, of such moral habit,<sup>14</sup> of such dhamma,
a of such wisdom -
even if he eat fine almsfood,
the black grains removed,
with various curries,
various vegetables,<sup>15</sup>
that will not be a stumbling-block for him.

■

Monks, even as a stained and dirty cloth, if put in clear water becomes pure and clean, or as gold
put into a smelting-pot
becomes pure and clean,
in like manner, monks,
a monk of such moral habit,
of such dhamma,
of such wisdom,
even if he eat fine almsfood,
the black grains removed,
with various curries,
various vegetables,
that will not be a stumbling-block for him.

---

He dwells, having suffused the first quarter
with a mind of friendliness,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwells having suffused the whole world
everywhere,
in every way,
with a mind of friendliness
that is far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,

without enmity,
without malevolence.

He dwells having suffused the first quarter
with a mind of compassion,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwells having suffused the whole world
everywhere,
in every way,
with a mind of compassion
that is far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

He dwells having suffused the first quarter
with a mind of sympathetic joy,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwells having suffused the whole world
everywhere,
in every way,
with a mind of sympathetic joy
that is far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,

without enmity,
without malevolence.

He dwells having suffused the first quarter
with a mind of equanimity,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwells having suffused the whole world
everywhere,
in every way,
with a mind of equanimity
that is far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

---

He comprehends:

'There is this,<sup>16</sup> there is a low,<sup>17</sup> there is the excellent,<sup>18</sup> there is a further escape from perceptions.'<sup>19</sup>

For one thus knowing,
thus seeing,
the mind is freed

from the canker of sense-pleasures
and the mind is freed
from the canker of becoming
and the mind is freed
from the canker of ignorance.

In freedom
the knowledge comes to be
that he is freed,
and he comprehends:

'Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close is the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of being such or such.'

Monks, this is called a monk who is washed with an inner washing."<sup>20</sup>

§

[49] Now at that time the brahman Sundarika-Bhāradvājai<sup>21</sup> was sitting not far from the Lord.

Then the brahman Sundarika-Bhāradvājai spoke thus to the Lord:

"Does the revered Gotama go down to wash in the river Bāhukā?"<sup>22</sup>

"Brahman, what is there to the river Bāhukā?

Of what use is the river Bāhuka?"

"But, good Gotama, the river Bāhukā is considered by the many-folk as a means of purification,<sup>23</sup> the river Bāhukā is considered by the manyfolk to be for merit.

For in the river Bāhukā the many-folk wash away the evil deeds that have been done."

Then the Lord addressed the brahman Sundarika-Bhāradvājai in verses:

"In the Bāhukā, and at Adhikakkā,<sup>24</sup>
At Gayā,<sup>24</sup> and in the Sundarikā,
In the Sarassatī, and at Payāga,<sup>25</sup>
Then in the river Bāhumatī,<sup>26</sup>
The fool, though entering constantly, Does not cleanse his dark deed.<sup>27</sup>

What can the Sundarikā, do?
What Payāga, what the Bāhukā river?
They do not cleanse that hostile guilty man Intent on evil deeds.
For the pure every day is auspicious, for the pure every day is holy,<sup>28</sup> [50] For the pure of bright deeds<sup>29</sup> there is ever the practice of (good) custom.
Bathe in this only,<sup>30</sup> brahman,
Make all creatures secure,<sup>31</sup>

If you do not speak a lie,<sup>32</sup> if you harm no living thing,<sup>33</sup> If you take not the ungiven,<sup>34</sup> are believing, not stingy —

What can you do by going to Gayā, when Gayā is only a well<sup>35</sup> for you?"

When this had been said, the brahman Sundarika-Bhāradvājai spoke thus to the Lord:

"It is excellent, good Gotama;
it is excellent, good Gotama.

It is as if, good Gotama, one might set upright
what had been upset,
or disclose what had been covered,
or show the way
to one who had gone astray,
or bring an oil lamp into the darkness
so that those with vision might see material shapes;
even so
in many a figure
has dhamma been made clear by the good Gotama, I,
even I,
am going to the revered Gotama for refuge,
and to dhamma,
and to the Order of monks.

May I receive the going forth<sup>36</sup> in the presence of the good Gotama, may I receive ordination."<sup>37</sup>

Then the brahman Sundarika-Bhāradvājai received the going forth in the Lord's presence, he received ordination.

Soon after he had been ordained the venerable Bhāradvājai, abiding alone,<sup>38</sup> aloof,<sup>39</sup>

diligent,
ardent,<sup>40</sup> self-resolute,<sup>41</sup> not long afterwards,
by his own super-knowledge, having precisely here-now<sup>42</sup> realised [51] that matchless culmination of the Brahma-faring<sup>43</sup> for the sake of which young men of family<sup>44</sup> rightly go forth from home
into homelessness,
abided in it.

He comprehended:

Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close is the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of being such or such.

So the venerable Bhāradvājai became one of the perfected ones.

Discourse on the Simile of the Cloth: the Seventh

---

<sup>1</sup> Called at MA. i. 165 Vatthasutta. It states that there are four ways of presenting a similitude or parable in relation to its meaning; here the simile is given first, then the meaning.

<sup>2</sup> Niraya Hell, animal birth or the realm of the departed (petavisaya). These bad bourns are alike for householders and the homeless (recluses) if their conduct is bad in the ways specified at MA. i. 167-168.

<sup>3</sup> A householder arises to greatness as a man and greatness as a deva (manussamahattam pi devamahattam pi). A homeless one, if he has certain qualifications, arises in the three great families in the human world or among the six Kāmāvacara devas, or among the ten Brahma-abodes, or in the five Pure Abodes, or in the four formless (realms), MA. i. 168.

<sup>4</sup> Greed is the passion of delight for one's own possessions, covetousness that for another's possessions, MA. i. 169.

<sup>5</sup> akālika, not belonging to time. The meaning is: of immediate fruit. The fruit is immediately followed by the Way (without any interval of time). On these terms see Vism. 198-221.

<sup>6</sup> I.e. to nibbāna.

<sup>7</sup> Those on the four stages of the Way, and those who have attained the fruits of the four stages of the Way.

<sup>8</sup> For this formula of "confidence" see also D. iii. 227; S. ii. 69, iv. 271; A. i. 222, etc.

<sup>9</sup> yathodi, i.e. he is now a non-returner, MA. i. 172.

<sup>10</sup> atthaveda. MA. i. 173 gives three kinds of veda: (1) (literary) composition, gantha; (2) knowledge, ñāṇa; (3) mental ease or happiness, somanassa; and says here mental ease and the knowledge attached to it is meant. Cf. M. i. 221, 325; A. iii. 285, v. 349.

<sup>11</sup> dhamrnaveda.

<sup>12</sup> Mental joy is meant, MA. i. 174

<sup>13</sup> cittam samādhiyati, the mind is rightly synthesised, it remains unmoving as though fastened. With this passage, cf. Vin. i. 294; D. i. 73; Miln. 84, etc.

<sup>14</sup> MA. i. 174, the body (or mass) of moral habit connected with the way of no-return.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid., the body of concentration also connected, as is the body of wisdom, with the way of non-returners. Sīla samādhi paññā form the three main branches of the Teaching. Here, dhamma takes the place, but only in name, of samādhi, which also is sometimes called citta in this connection.

<sup>16</sup> As at M. i. 31.

<sup>17</sup> MA. i. 176, the attainment of arahantship.

<sup>18</sup> Ibid., anguish and its uprising.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid., the means of ejecting anguish.

<sup>20</sup> saññāgata. According to MA. i. 176 nibbāna is this farther escape for one who has perception of the four brahmavihāras (referred to just above). It is the truth of "stopping," i.e. the third truth. Traditionally the development of the brahmavihāras leads to companionship with Brahmā. Here, MA. takes the result of such development to be nibbāna.

<sup>21</sup> sināta. Cf. Sn. 521, nhātaka. See also S. i. 169; M. i. 280.

<sup>22</sup> Mentioned at S. i. 167; Sn. p. 79 as performing fire-worship on the banks of the river Sundarika.

<sup>23</sup> At Jā. v. 387, 388 bahuka does not seem to be the name of a river. Cf. also Mhvu. ii. 51.

<sup>24</sup> M. text reads mokkhasammata. MA. i. 177 lokhyasammata ti lūkhabhāvasammata. Cokkhabhāvaṃ visuddhibhāvaṃ deti ti. See also M. i. 530 (Trenckner's notes) and MA. i. 177, n. 3, 4.

<sup>25</sup> Both are fords, MA. i. 178.

<sup>26</sup> A ford across the Ganges, MA. i. 178.

<sup>27</sup> MA. i: 178 says that these four are rivers; Bāhukā, Sundarikā, Sarassatī, Bāhumatī.

<sup>28</sup> On kaṇhakamma (and light, or bright, i.e. good deeds) see M. i. 389.

<sup>29</sup> Quoted at DA. i. 139. Phaggu is an auspicious constellation, and so the word has here been translated "auspicious." MA. i. 179 explains by saying that the brahman view is that whoever bathes in the month of Phagguna on the day after the full moon is cleansed of evil done during the year. Uposatha, here translated "holy," has no good English equivalent. Ordinarily there are four uposatha days a month when people observe the higher sīla or fast. But for the pure every day, not necessarily only the four prescribed days, is uposatha, an "observance" day when all the observances and rules of discipline are observed.

<sup>30</sup> sucikamma, pure deeds, cf. Dhp. 24.

<sup>31</sup> In this teaching of mine, MA. i. 179.

<sup>32</sup> security, khemata; MA. i. 179 says abhaya hitabhāva mettā, lack of fear, welfare, friendliness. This is purity by way of mind.

<sup>33</sup> Purity by way of speech.

<sup>34</sup> Purity by way of gesture or body.

<sup>35</sup> udapāna.

<sup>36</sup> pabbajjā, the initial entry or lesser ordination into the Order. [Ed.: See also: Buddhism in Translations § 81]

<sup>37</sup> upasampadā, the subsequent or higher ordination, not necessarily "final," as it was possible to return to "the low life of the layman." On the ordination ceremony and the regulations for carrying it out in the prescribed way, see Vin. Mahavagga I.

<sup>38</sup> MA. i. 179, as to the body.

<sup>39</sup> MA. i. 180, as to mind.

<sup>40</sup> MA. i. 180, with ardour in physical and mental energy.

<sup>41</sup> MA. i. 180 says "by absence of longing as to the body and the life-principle."

<sup>42</sup> In this very individuality, attabhāva, MA. i. 180 and at MA. i. 165.

<sup>43</sup> MA. i. 180 calls this culmination of the Brahma-faring or the Way the "fruit of arahantship." At M. i. 197, 205 freedom of mind is said to be the goal and culmination.

<sup>44</sup> Those by birth and those by habits: both meant here, MA. i, 180 as at MA. i. 111.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
1. Mūlapariyāya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
1. The Division of the Synopsis of Fundamentals

8. Discourse on Expunging

Sallekha Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then the venerable Cunda the Great,<sup>1</sup> emerging towards evening from solitary meditation, approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the venerable Cunda the Great spoke thus to the Lord:

"Those various types of views,<sup>2</sup> Lord, that arise in the world

and are connected with theories of the self
or with theories of the world, does there come to be ejection of these views, does there come to be renunciation of these views for a monk who wisely reflects from the beginning?"

[52] "Those various types of views, Cunda,
that arise in the world
and are connected with theories of the self
or with theories of the world - wherever these views arise and wherever they obsess (the mind) and wherever they are current, it is by seeing them with perfect wisdom
as they really are,
thus:

'This is not mine,<sup>3</sup> this am I not,<sup>4</sup> this is not my self,<sup>5</sup> that there is ejection of these views, that there is renunciation of these views.

---

The situation occurs, Cunda, when a monk here,
aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
may enter on and abide in the first meditation which is accompanied by initial thought and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful.

It may occur to him:

'I fare along<sup>6</sup> by expunging.'

But these,<sup>7</sup> Cunda, are not called expungings
in the discipline for an ariyan;
these are called:
'abidings in ease here-now'
in the discipline for an ariyan.

■

This situation occurs, Cunda,
when some monk here,
by allaying initial thought and discursive thought,
with the mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
may enter on
and abide in
the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration,
and is rapturous and joyful.

It may occur to him:

'I fare along by expunging.'

But these, Cunda, are not called expungings
in the discipline for an ariyan;
these are called
'abidings in ease here-now'
in the discipline for an ariyan.

■

This situation occurs, Cunda,
when some monk here,
by the fading out of rapture,
may abide with equanimity,
attentive,
and clearly conscious,
and may experience in his person
that joy of which the ariyans say:

'Joyful lives he
who has equanimity and is mindful,'

and may enter on
and abide in
the third meditation.

It may occur to him:

'I fare along by expunging.'

But these, Cunda, are not called expungings
in the discipline for an ariyan;
these are called:
'abidings in ease here-now'
in the discipline for an ariyan.

■

This situation occurs, Cunda,
when some monk here,
by getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,
may enter on
and abide in
the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,

and that is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

It may occur to him:

[53] 'I fare along by expunging.'

But these, Cunda, are not called expungings
in the discipline for an ariyan;
these are called:
'abidings in ease here-now'
in the discipline for an ariyan.

■

This situation occurs, Cunda,
when some monk here,
by wholly transcending perceptions of material shapes, by the going down of perceptions due to sensory impressions, by not reflecting on the perceptions of multiformity,
thinking:

'Ether is unending,'

may enter on
and abide in
the plane of infinite ether.<sup>8</sup>

It may occur to him:

'I fare along by expunging.'

But these, Cunda, are not called expungings
in the discipline for an ariyan;
these are called:

'abidings that are peaceful'<sup>9</sup>
in the discipline for an ariyan.

■

This situation occurs, Cunda,
when some monk here,
by wholly transcending the plane of infinite ether,
thinking:

'Consciousness is unending,'

may enter on
and abide in
the plane of infinite consciousness.

It may occur to him:

'I fare along by expunging.'

But these, Cunda, are not called expungings
in the discipline for an ariyan;
these are called:
'abidings that are peaceful'
in the discipline for an ariyan.

■

This situation occurs, Cunda,
when some monk here,
by wholly transcending the plane of infinite consciousness,
thinking:

'There is no-thing,'

may enter on
and abide in

the plane of no-thing.

It may occur to him:

'I fare along by expunging.'

But these, Cunda, are not called expungings
in the discipline for an ariyan;
these are called:
'abidings that are peaceful'
in the discipline for an ariyan.

■

This situation occurs, Cunda,
when some monk here,
by wholly transcending the plane of no-thing,
may enter on
and abide in
the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception.

It may occur to him:

'I fare along by expunging.'

But these, Cunda, are not called expungings
in the discipline for an ariyan;
these are called:
'abidings that are peaceful'
in the discipline for an ariyan.

---

Herein, Cunda,
is expunging to be done by you,
thinking:

[1] 'Others may be harmful;
we, as to this,
will not be harmful' -
so is expunging to be done.

[2] 'Others may be those to make onslaught on creatures;
we, as to this,
will be those who are restrained
from making onslaught on creatures' -
so is expunging to be done.

[3] 'Others may be takers of what is not given;
we, as to this,
will be restrained from taking what is not given' -
so is expunging to be done.

[4] 'Others may be non-Brahma-farers;
we, as to this will be Brahma-farers'<sup>10</sup> -
so is expunging to be done.

[5] 'Others may be [54] speakers of lies;
we, as to this,
will be restrained from lying speech' -
so is expunging to be done.

[6] 'Others may be of harsh speech;
we, as to this,
will be restrained from harsh speech' -
so is expunging to be done.

[7] 'Others may be of rough speech;
we, as to this,

will be restrained from rough speech' -
so is expunging to be done.

[8] 'Others may be of frivolous speech;
we, as to this,
will be restrained from frivolous speech' -
so is expunging to be done.

[9] 'Others may be covetous;
we, as to this,
will be non-covetous' -
so is expunging to be done.

[10] 'Others may be corrupt in mind;
we, as to this,
will be incorrupt in mind.' -
so is expunging to be done.

[11] 'Others may be of wrong view;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect view' -
so is expunging to be done.

[12] 'Others may be of wrong thoughts;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect thoughts' -
so is expunging to be done.

[13] 'Others may be of wrong speech;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect speech' -
so is expunging to be done.

[14] 'Others may be of wrong activity;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect activity' -
so is expunging to be done.

[15] 'Others may be of a wrong way of living;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect way of living' -
so is expunging to be done.

[16] 'Others may be of wrong endeavour;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect endeavour' -
so is expunging to be done.

[17] 'Others may be of wrong mindfulness;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect mindfulness' -
so is expunging to be done.

[18] 'Others may be of wrong concentration;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect concentration' -
so is expunging to be done.

[19] 'Others may be of wrong knowledge;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect knowledge' -
so is expunging to be done.

[20] 'Others may be of wrong freedom;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect freedom' -
so is expunging to be done.

[21] 'Others may be encompassed by sloth and torpor;
we, as to this,
will be without sloth and torpor -
so is expunging to be done.

[22] Others may be puffed up;
we, as to this,

will not be puffed up' -
so is expunging to be done.

[23] Others may be doubtful;
we, as to this,
will be crossed over doubt' -
so is expunging to be done.

[24] Others may be wrathful;
we, as to this,
will be without wrath' -
so is expunging to be done.

[25] Others may be rancorous;
we, as to this,
will not be rancorous -
so is expunging to be done.

[26] Others may be harsh;
we, as to this,
will not be harsh -
so is expunging to be done.

[27] Others may be spiteful;
we, as to this,
will be without spite' -
so is expunging to be done.

[28] Others may be envious;
we, as to this,
will be without envy -
so is expunging to be done.

[29] Others may be grudging;
we, as to this,
will be not grudging' -
so is expunging to be done.

[30] Others may be treacherous;
we, as to this,
will be not treacherous' -
so is expunging to be done.

[31] Others may be deceitful;
we, as to this,
will be not deceitful -
so is expunging to be done.

[32] Others may be stubborn;
we, as to this,
will be not stubborn -
so is expunging to be done.

[33] Others may be proud;
we, as to this,
will be not proud -
so is expunging to be done.

[34] Others may be difficult to speak to;<sup>11</sup>
we, as to this,
will be easy to speak to -
so is expunging to be done.

[35] Others may be friends of those who are evil;<sup>12</sup>
we, as to this,
will be friends of those who are lovely'<sup>13</sup> -
so is expunging to be done.

[36] 'Others may be indolent;
we, as to this,
will be diligent' -
so is expunging to be done.

[37] 'Others may be lacking in faith;<sup>14</sup>
we, as to this,
will be of faith' -
so is expunging to be done.

[38] Others may be shameless;<sup>14</sup>
we, as to this,
will feel shame' -
so is expunging to be done.

[39] Others may be reckless;<sup>14</sup>
[55] we, as to this,
will be cautious' -
so is expunging to be done.

[40] Others may be those who have heard little;
we, as to this,
will have heard much' -
so is expunging to be done.

[41] Others may be lazy;<sup>15</sup>
we, as to this,
will be of stirred up energy' -
so is expunging to be done.

[42] Others may be of muddled mindfulness;
we, as to this,
will be those with mindfulness set up before us.' -
so is expunging to be done.

[43] Others may be weak in wisdom;
we, as to this,
will be endowed with wisdom' -
so is expunging to be done.

[44] Others may seize the temporal,
grasping it tightly,
not letting go of it easily;<sup>16</sup>
we, as to this,
will not seize the temporal,
not grasping it tightly,
letting go of it easily' -
so is expunging to be done.

---

Now I, Cunda, say that the arising of thought is very helpful in regard to skilled states (of mind), not to speak of gesture and speech that are in conformity (with thought).

Therefore, Cunda,
the thought should arise:

[1] 'Others may be harmful;
we, as to this,
will not be harmful.'

The thought should arise:

[2] 'Others may be those to make onslaught on creatures;
we, as to this,
will be those who are restrained
from making onslaught on creatures.'

The thought should arise:

[3] 'Others may be takers of what is not given;
we, as to this,

will be restrained from taking what is not given.'

The thought should arise:

[4] 'Others may be non-Brahma-farers;
we, as to this will be Brahma-farers.'

The thought should arise:

[5] 'Others may be speakers of lies;
we, as to this,
will be restrained from lying speech.'

The thought should arise:

[6] 'Others may be of harsh speech;
we, as to this,
will be restrained from harsh speech.'

The thought should arise:

[7] 'Others may be of rough speech;
we, as to this,
will be restrained from rough speech.'

The thought should arise:

[8] 'Others may be of frivolous speech;
we, as to this,
will be restrained from frivolous speech.'

The thought should arise:

[9] 'Others may be covetous;
we, as to this,
will be non-covetous.'

The thought should arise:

[10] 'Others may be corrupt in mind;
we, as to this,
will be incorrupt in mind.'

The thought should arise:

[11] 'Others may be of wrong view;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect view.'

The thought should arise:

[12] 'Others may be of wrong thoughts;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect thoughts.'

The thought should arise:

[13] 'Others may be of wrong speech;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect speech.'

The thought should arise:

[14] 'Others may be of wrong activity;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect activity.'

The thought should arise:

[15] 'Others may be of a wrong way of living;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect way of living.'

The thought should arise:

[16] 'Others may be of wrong endeavour;
we, as to this,

will be of perfect endeavour.'

The thought should arise:

[17] 'Others may be of wrong mindfulness;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect mindfulness.'

The thought should arise:

[18] 'Others may be of wrong concentration;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect concentration.'

The thought should arise:

[19] 'Others may be of wrong knowledge;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect knowledge.'

The thought should arise:

[20] 'Others may be of wrong freedom;
we, as to this,
will be of perfect freedom.'

The thought should arise:

[21] 'Others may be encompassed by sloth and torpor;
we, as to this,
will be without sloth and torpor.'

The thought should arise:

[22] 'Others may be puffed up;
we, as to this,
will not be puffed up.'

The thought should arise:

[23] 'Others may be doubtful;
we, as to this,
will be crossed over doubt.'

The thought should arise:

[24] 'Others may be wrathful;
we, as to this,
will be without wrath.'

The thought should arise:

[25] 'Others may be rancorous;
we, as to this,
will not be rancorous.'

The thought should arise:

[26] 'Others may be harsh;
we, as to this,
will not be harsh.'

The thought should arise:

[27] 'Others may be spiteful;
we, as to this,
will be without spite.'

The thought should arise:

[28] 'Others may be envious;
we, as to this,
will be without envy.'

The thought should arise:

[29] 'Others may be grudging;
we, as to this,
will be not grudging.'

The thought should arise:

[30] 'Others may be treacherous;
we, as to this,
will be not treacherous.'

The thought should arise:

[31] 'Others may be deceitful;
we, as to this,
will be not deceitful.'

The thought should arise:

[32] 'Others may be stubborn;
we, as to this,
will be not stubborn.'

The thought should arise:

[33] 'Others may be proud;
we, as to this,
will be not proud.'

The thought should arise:

[34] 'Others may be difficult to speak to;
we, as to this,
will be easy to speak to.'

The thought should arise:

[35] 'Others may be friends of those who are evil;
we, as to this,

will be friends of those who are lovely.'

The thought should arise:

[36] 'Others may be indolent;
we, as to this,
will be diligent.'

The thought should arise:

[37] 'Others may be lacking in faith;
we, as to this,
will be of faith.'

The thought should arise:

[38] 'Others may be shameless;
we, as to this,
will feel shame.'

The thought should arise:

[39] 'Others may be reckless; we, as to this,
will be cautious.'

The thought should arise:

[40] 'Others may be those who have heard little;
we, as to this,
will have heard much.'

The thought should arise:

[41] 'Others may be lazy;
we, as to this,
will be of stirred up energy.'

The thought should arise:

[42] 'Others may be of muddled mindfulness;
we, as to this,
will be those with mindfulness set up before us..'

The thought should arise:

[43] 'Others may be weak in wisdom;
we, as to this,
will be endowed with wisdom' .'

The thought should arise:

[44] 'Others may seize the temporal,
grasping it tightly,
not letting go of it easily;
we, as to this,
will not seize the temporal,
not grasping it tightly,
letting go of it easily.'

---

Cunda, like an uneven road although there may be another even road for going by;
and, Cunda, like an uneven ford although there may be another even ford
for going by;
even so, Cunda,

[1] there is non-harming for a harmful individual to go by;

[2] there is restraint from onslaught on creatures for an individual to go by who makes onslaught on creatures;

[3] there is restraint from taking what is not given for an individual to go by who is a taker of what is not given;

[4] there is the Brahma-faring to go by for an individual to go by who is a non-Brahma-farer;

[5] there is restraint from lying speech to go by for an individual to go by who is of lying speech;

[6] there is restraint from harsh speech to go by for an individual to go by who is of harsh speech;

[7] there is restraint from rough speech to go by for an individual to go by who is of rough speech;

[8] there is restraint from frivolous speech to go by for an individual to go by who is of frivolous speech;

[9] there is non-coveting to go by for an individual to go by who is covetous;

[10] there is in-corruption of mind to go by for an individual to go by who is corrupt in mind;

■

[11] there is perfect view to go by for an individual to go by who is of wrong view;

[12] there is perfect thought to go by for an individual to go by who is of wrong thought;

[13] there is perfect speech to go by for an individual to go by who is of wrong speech;

[14] there is perfect activity to go by for an individual to go by who is of wrong activity;

[15] there is perfect way of living to go by for an individual to go by who is of wrong way of living;

[16] there is perfect endeavour to go by for an individual to go by who is of wrong endeavour;

[17] there is perfect mindfulness to go by for an individual to go by who is of wrong mindfulness;

[18] there is perfect concentration to go by for an individual to go by who is of wrong concentration;

[19] there is perfect knowledge to go by for an individual to go by who is of wrong knowledge;

[20] there is perfect freedom to go by for an individual to go by who is wrong freedom;

■

[21] there is being without sloth and torpor to go by for an individual to go by who is encompassed by sloth and torpor;

[22] there is not being puffed up to go by for an individual to go by who is puffed up;

[23] there is being crossed over doubt to go by for an individual to go by who is doubtful;

[24] there is being without wrath to go by for an individual to go by who is wrathful;

[25] there is non-rancour to go by for an individual to go by who is rancorous;

[26] there is non-disparagement<sup>ed1</sup> to go by for an individual to go by who is disparaging;

[27] there is non-spite to go by for an individual to go by who is spiteful;

[28] there is non-jealousy to go by for an individual to go by who is jealous;

[29] there is non-miserliness to go by for an individual to go by who is miserly;

[30] there is non-treachery to go by for an individual to go by who is treacherous;

[31] there is non-deceit to go by for an individual to go by who is deceitful;

[32] there is non-stubbornness to go by for an individual to go by who is stubborn;

[33] there is non-pride to go by for an individual to go by who is proud;

[34] there is ease of being spoken to to go by for an individual to go by who is difficult to speak to;

[35] there is friendship with those who are lovely to go by for an individual to go by who is friends of those who are evil;

[36] there is diligence to go by for an individual to go by who is indolent;

[37] there is faith to go by for an individual to go by who is lacking in faith;

[38] there is shame to go by for an individual to go by who is shameless;

[39] there is caution to go by for an individual to go by who is reckless;

[40] there is having heard much to go by for an individual to go by who has heard little;

[41] there is stirred up [56] energy to go by for an individual to go by who is lazy;

[42] there is setting up mindfulness before one to go by for an individual to go by who is of muddled mindfulness;

[43] there is endowment with wisdom to go by for an individual to go by who is weak in wisdom;

[44] there is there is not seizing the temporal,
not grasping it tightly,
letting it go easily
for the individual to go by who seizes the temporal,
grasps it tightly,
letting go of it with difficulty.

---

Cunda, as every unskilled state (of mind) leads downwards, as every skilled state (of mind) leads upwards,
even so, Cunda,

[1] does non-harming come to be a higher state
for an individual who is harmful;

[2] does restraint from onslaught on creatures come to be a higher state for an individual who makes onslaught on creatures;

[3] does restraint from taking what is not given come to be a higher state for an individual who is a taker of what is not given;

[4] does the Brahma-faring come to be a higher state for an individual who is a non-Brahma-farer;

[5] does restraint from lying speech come to be a higher state for an individual who is of lying speech;

[6] does restraint from harsh speech come to be a higher state for an individual who is of harsh speech;

[7] does restraint from rough speech come to be a higher state for an individual who is of rough speech;

[8] does restraint from frivolous speech come to be a higher state for an individual who is of frivolous speech;

[9] does non-coveting come to be a higher state for an individual who is covetous;

[10] does in-corruption of mind come to be a higher state for an individual who is corrupt in mind;

[11] does perfect view come to be a higher state for an individual who is of wrong view;

[12] does perfect thought come to be a higher state for an individual who is of wrong thought;

[13] does perfect speech come to be a higher state for an individual who is of wrong speech;

[14] does perfect activity come to be a higher state for an individual who is of wrong activity;

[15] does perfect way of living come to be a higher state for an individual who is of wrong way of living;

[16] does perfect endeavour come to be a higher state for an individual who is of wrong endeavour;

[17] does perfect mindfulness come to be a higher state for an individual who is of wrong mindfulness;

[18] does perfect concentration come to be a higher state for an individual who is of wrong concentration;

[19] does perfect knowledge come to be a higher state for an individual who is of wrong knowledge;

[20] does perfect freedom come to be a higher state for an individual who is of wrong freedom;

[21] does being without sloth and torpor come to be a higher state for an individual who is encompassed by sloth and torpor;

[22] does not being puffed up come to be a higher state for an individual who is puffed up;

[23] does being crossed over doubt come to be a higher state for an individual who is doubtful;

[24] does being without wrath come to be a higher state for an individual who is wrathful;

[25] does non-rancour come to be a higher state for an individual who is rancorous;

[26] does non-disparagement come to be a higher state for an individual who is disparaging;

[27] does non-spite come to be a higher state for an individual who is spiteful;

[28] does non-jealousy come to be a higher state for an individual who is jealous;

[29] does non-miserliness come to be a higher state for an individual who is miserly;

[30] does non-treachery come to be a higher state for an individual who is treacherous;

[31] does non-deceit come to be a higher state for an individual who is deceitful;

[32] does non-stubbornness come to be a higher state for an individual who is stubborn;

[33] does non-pride come to be a higher state for an individual who is proud;

[34] does ease of being spoken to come to be a higher state for an individual who is difficult to speak to;

[35] does friendship with those who are lovely come to be a higher state for an individual who is friends of those who are evil;

[36] does diligence come to be a higher state for an individual who is indolent;

[37] does faith come to be a higher state for an individual who is lacking in faith;

[38] does shame come to be a higher state for an individual who is shameless;

[39] does caution come to be a higher state for an individual who is reckless;

[40] does having heard much come to be a higher state for an individual who has heard little;

[41] does stirred up energy come to be a higher state for an individual who is lazy;

[42] does setting up mindfulness before one come to be a higher state for an individual who is of muddled mindfulness;

[43] does endowment with wisdom come to be a higher state for an individual who is weak in wisdom;

[44] does not seizing the temporal,
not grasping it tightly,
letting it go easily
come to be a higher state
for an individual who seizes the temporal,
grasps it tightly,
letting go of it with difficulty.

---

This situation does not occur, Cunda, when one sunk into mud
will by himself
pull out another
who is sunk into mud.

But this situation occurs, Cunda, when one not sunk into mud
will by himself
pull out another
who is sunk into mud.

This situation does not occur, Cunda, when one who is not tamed, not trained,

not utterly quenched,<sup>17</sup> will by himself tame,
train,
make another utterly quenched.

But this situation occurs, Cunda, when one who is tamed,
trained,
utterly quenched,
will by himself
tame,
train,
make another utterly quenched.

■

Even so, Cunda,

[1] there is non-harming by means of utter quenching
for an individual who is harmful;

[2] there is restraint from onslaught on creatures by means of utter quenching
for an individual who makes onslaught on creatures;

[3] there is restraint from taking what is not given by means of utter quenching
for an individual who is a taker of what is not given;

[4] there is the Brahma-faring by means of utter quenching for an individual who is a non-Brahma-farer;

[5] there is restraint from lying speech by means of utter quenching for an individual who is of lying speech;

[6] there is restraint from harsh speech by means of utter quenching for an individual who is of harsh speech;

[7] there is restraint from rough speech by means of utter quenching for an individual who is of rough speech;

[8] there is restraint from frivolous speech by means of utter quenching for an individual who is of frivolous speech;

[9] there is non-coveting by means of utter quenching for an individual who is covetous;

[10] there is in-corruption of mind by means of utter quenching for an individual who is corrupt in mind;

[11] there is perfect view by means of utter quenching for an individual who is of wrong view;

[12] there is perfect thought by means of utter quenching for an individual who is of wrong thought;

[13] there is perfect speech by means of utter quenching for an individual who is of wrong speech;

[14] there is perfect activity by means of utter quenching for an individual who is of wrong activity;

[15] there is perfect way of living by means of utter quenching for an individual who is of wrong way of living;

[16] there is perfect endeavour by means of utter quenching for an individual who is of wrong endeavour;

[17] there is perfect mindfulness by means of utter quenching for an individual who is of wrong mindfulness;

[18] there is perfect concentration by means of utter quenching for an individual who is of wrong concentration;

[19] there is perfect knowledge by means of utter quenching for an individual who is of wrong knowledge;

[20] there is perfect freedom by means of utter quenching for an individual who is of wrong freedom;

[21] there is being without sloth and torpor by means of utter quenching for an individual who is encompassed by sloth and torpor;

[22] there is not being puffed up by means of utter quenching for an individual who is puffed up;

[23] there is being crossed over doubt by means of utter quenching for an individual who is doubtful;

[24] there is being without wrath by means of utter quenching for an individual who is wrathful;

[25] there is non-rancour by means of utter quenching for an individual who is rancorous;

[26] there is non-disparagement by means of utter quenching for an individual who is disparaging;

[27] there is non-spite by means of utter quenching for an individual who is spiteful;

[28] there is non-jealousy by means of utter quenching
for an individual who is jealous;

[29] there is non-miserliness by means of utter quenching
for an individual who is miserly;

[30] there is non-treachery by means of utter quenching
for an individual who is treacherous;

[31] there is non-deceit by means of utter quenching
for an individual who is deceitful;

[32] there is non-stubbornness by means of utter quenching
for an individual who is stubborn;

[33] there is non-pride by means of utter quenching
for an individual who is proud;

[34] there is ease of being spoken to by means of utter quenching for an individual who is difficult to speak to;

[35] there is friendship with those who are lovely by means of utter quenching
for an individual who is friends of those who are evil;

[36] there is diligence by means of utter quenching
for an individual who is indolent;

[37] there is faith by means of utter quenching
for an individual who is lacking in faith;

[38] there is shame by means of utter quenching
for an individual who is shameless;

[39] there is caution by means of utter quenching for an individual who is reckless;

[40] there is having heard much by means of utter quenching for an individual who has heard little;

[41] there is stirred up energy by means of utter quenching
for an individual who is lazy;

[42] there is setting up mindfulness before one by means of utter quenching for an individual who is of muddled mindfulness;

[43] there is endowment with wisdom by means of utter quenching
for an individual who is weak in wisdom;

[44] there is not seizing the temporal,
not grasping it tightly,
letting it go easily

come to be a higher state
for an individual who seizes the temporal,
grasps it tightly,
letting go of it with difficulty.

---

In this manner, Cunda, is taught by me the disquisition on expunging, is taught the disquisition on the uprising of thought, is taught the disquisition on going by,
is taught the disquisition on upwards, is taught the disquisition on utter quenching.

Whatever, Cunda, is to be done from compassion
by a teacher seeking the welfare of his disciples, that has been done by me out of compassion for you.

These, Cunda, are the roots of trees,<sup>18</sup> these are empty [57] places.<sup>19</sup>

Meditate, Cunda;
do not be slothful;
be not remorseful later.

This is our instruction to you."<sup>20</sup>

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, the venerable Cunda rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse on Expunging: the Eighth

---

<sup>1</sup> Mentioned with other great theras at M. iii. 78; A. iii. 299; Ud. 3; Vin. iv. 66. Verses ascribed to him at Thag. 141-142.

<sup>2</sup> Wrong views are meant, MA. i. 182. Wrong views about self (in connection with the khandhas) number twenty (four for each of the five khandhas). See A. ii. 214, S. iii. 16. Wrong views about the world number eight: that the world and the self are eternal, not eternal, both eternal and not, neither eternal nor not eternal; see D. i. 14 ff.

<sup>3</sup> To think etaṃ mama, this is mine, is to be in the grip of craving.

<sup>4</sup> To think eso aham asmi, I am this, is to be in the grip of pride.

<sup>5</sup> To think eso me attā, this is my self, is to be in the grip of wrong view, MA. i. 183.

<sup>6</sup> At MA. i. 244-5, Vbh. 252 (quoted Asl. 167), Nd. ii. 237, viharati is explained by verbs of motion. The idea is that the expunger moves from higher things to higher.

<sup>7</sup> The plural number is used in reference to the properties of the jhānas

<sup>8</sup> See Vism. Ch. X.

<sup>9</sup> santā ete vihārā ... vuccanti. MA. i. 186 explains santa by nibbuta and sukha, quenched and easeful.

<sup>10</sup> abrahmacārī follow a non-brahma, a low inferior dhamma ... the brahmacāri follow along the course to Brahman, the best (or, as this could be translated, they follow along the highest, brahman, the best course). It also means chastity; see MA. i. 188. The Sallekhasutta is, at DA. 178, given as an example of a Discourse where brahmacariya is defined as methunavirati.

<sup>11</sup> See Vin. iii. 178, and B.D. i. 310, n. 1; also M. i. 95.

<sup>12</sup> MA. i. 189 adduces Devadatta as an example.

<sup>13</sup> MA. i. 189 cites Buddhas and those like Sāriputta.

<sup>14</sup> These five terms form a series at Vin. i. 63. See B.D. iv. 82.

<sup>15</sup> These five terms form a series at Vin. i. 63. See B.D. iv. 82.

<sup>16</sup> As at M. i. 96, ii. 246; A. iii. 335, v. 150; Vin. ii. 89; D. iii. 48, 247.

<sup>17</sup> aparinibbuto, not utterly quenched, or burnt out, as to the kilesas, A. i. 194.

<sup>18</sup> MA. i. 196, lodgings at the roots of trees.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid., removed from people.

<sup>20</sup> That is, to meditate and not to be slothful, MA. i. 196. This exhortation is fairly frequent throughout the Piṭakas, e.g. at M. i. 118. Cf.: the "cultivator of empty places" at M. i. 33.

---

<sup>ed1</sup> Ms. Horner changes her translation here which can be misleading.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
1. Mūlapariyāya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
1. The Division of the Synopsis of Fundamentals

9. Discourse on Perfect View

Sammā Diṭṭhi Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattḥī
in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

There the venerable Sāriputta addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Your reverence,"
these monks answered the venerable Sāriputta in assent.

Then the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus:

"Your reverences, it is said:

'Perfect view,<sup>2</sup>
perfect view.'

To what extent indeed, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma, who is come into this true dhamma?"

"From afar, your reverence, would we come into the venerable Sāriputta's presence to learn the meaning of this utterance.

It were good if the meaning of this utterance were to be made clear by<sup>3</sup> the venerable Sāriputta himself; the monks, having heard it from the venerable Sāriputta, will bear it in mind."

[58] "Very well, your reverences,
listen
and attend carefully
and I will speak."

"Yes, your reverence,"
these monks answered the venerable Sāriputta in assent.

The venerable Sāriputta spoke thus:

"When a disciple of the ariyans comprehends unskill
and un-skill's root,
and comprehends skill
and skill's root,
to this extent, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,

one whose view is upright,
who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma.

And what, your reverences, is unskill?

What is unskill's root?

What is skill?

What is skill's root?

Onslaught on creatures, your reverences, is unskill, taking what is not given is unskill, sexual misconduct is unskill, lying speech is unskill, slandorous speech is unskill, harsh speech is unskill, gossip is unskill,
covetise is unskill,
wrath is unskill,
wrong view is unskill.

This, your reverences, is called unskill.

And what, your reverences, is unskill's root?

Greed is unskill's root, hatred is unskill's root, confusion is unskill's root.

This, your reverences, is called unskill's root.

And what, your reverences, is skill?

Restraint from onslaught on creatures is skill, restraint from taking what is not given is skill, restraint from sexual misconduct is skill, restraint from lying speech is skill,

restraint from slanderous speech is skill,
restraint from harsh speech is skill, restraint from gossip is skill, non-covetise is skill,
non-wrath is skill,
perfect view is skill.

This, your reverences, is called skill.

And what, your reverences, is skill's root?

Non-greed is skill's root, non-hatred is skill's root, non-confusion is skill's root.

This, your reverences, is called skill's root.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends unskill thus, comprehends unskill's root thus,
comprehends skill thus,
comprehends skill's root thus, he, having got rid of all addiction to attachment,<sup>4</sup> having dispelled addiction to shunning,<sup>4</sup>
having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,'
having got rid of ignorance,
having made knowledge arise,
is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,

one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

■

[59] Saying:

"Good, your reverence,"
these monks, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said,
having approved of it,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Might there be, your reverence,
also another method
by which a disciple of the ariyans
comes to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma?"

"There might be, your reverences.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends sustenance<sup>5</sup> and comprehends the uprising of sustenance and comprehends the stopping of sustenance and comprehends the course leading to the stopping of sustenance,
to this extent also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma.

And what, your reverences, is sustenance?

What is the uprising of sustenance?

What is the stopping of sustenance?

What is the course leading to the stopping of sustenance?

Your reverences, there are these four<sup>6</sup> (kinds of) sustenance for the stability of creatures who have come to be or for the assistance of those who are seeking to be.

What are the four?

Material food, coarse or fine; (sense-) impingement is the second;
volition is the third;
consciousness<sup>7</sup> is the fourth.

From the uprising of craving is the uprising of sustenance, from the stopping of craving is the stopping of sustenance; the course leading to the stopping of sustenance
is this ariyan eightfold Way itself,
that is to say:
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

When a disciple of the ariyans comprehends sustenance thus, comprehends the uprising of sustenance thus,

comprehends the stopping of sustenance thus, comprehends the course leading to the stopping of sustenance thus,
he, having got rid of all addiction to attachment,
having dispelled addiction to shunning,
having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,'
having got rid of ignorance,
having made knowledge arise,
is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come [60] to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

■

Saying:

"Good, your reverence,"
these monks, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said,
having approved of it,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Might there be, your reverence,
also another method
by which a disciple of the ariyans
comes to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma?"

"There might be, your reverences.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends anguish,

comprehends the uprising of anguish, comprehends the stopping of anguish, comprehends the course leading to the stopping of anguish,
to this extent also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

And what, your reverences, is anguish?<sup>8</sup>

What is the uprising of anguish

What is the stopping of anguish

What is the course leading to the stopping of anguish?

Birth is anguish,
and old age is anguish,
and disease is anguish,
and dying is anguish,
and grief,
lamentation,
suffering,
tribulation
and despair
are anguish;

and if one does not get what one wants,
that too is anguish;

in short,
the five groups of grasping are anguish.

This, your reverences, is called anguish.

And what, your reverences, is the uprising of anguish?

That craving which is connected with again-becoming,
accompanied by delight and attachment,
finding delight in this and that,
namely the craving for sense-pleasures, the craving for becoming,<sup>9</sup> the craving for annihilation<sup>10</sup> - this, your reverences, is called the origin of anguish.

And what, your reverences, is the stopping of anguish?

Whatever is the stopping,
with no attachment remaining,
of that selfsame craving,
the giving up of it,
the renunciation of it,
the release from it,
the doing away with it -
this, your reverences, is called the stopping of anguish.

And what, your reverences, is the course leading to the stopping of
anguish?

The course leading to the stopping of anguish
is this ariyan eightfold Way itself,
that is to say:
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

When, your reverences, the disciple of the ariyans comprehends anguish thus, comprehends its origin thus, comprehends [61] its stopping thus, comprehends the course leading to its stopping thus,
he, having got rid of all addiction to attachment,
having dispelled addiction to shunning,
having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,'
having got rid of ignorance,
having made knowledge arise,
is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

■

Saying:

"Good, your reverence,"
these monks, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said,
having approved of it,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Might there be, your reverence,
also another method
by which a disciple of the ariyans
comes to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma?"

"There might be, your reverences.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends old age and dying comprehends the uprising of old age and dying, comprehends the stopping of old age and dying, comprehends the course leading to the stopping of old age and dying,
to this extent also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

And what, your reverences, is old age and dying?<sup>11</sup>

What is the origin of old age and dying?

What is the stopping of old age and dying?

What is the course leading to the stopping of old age and dying?

Whatever of various beings in various groups of beings is old age,
decrepitude,
broken teeth,
greying hair,
wrinkly skin,
the dwindling of the life-span,
the collapse of the (sense-)organs, this, your reverences, is called old age.

Whatever is the falling away, the passing away,
the breaking up,
the disappearance,
the death and dying,<sup>12</sup>

the action of time,<sup>13</sup> the breaking up of the groups (of grasping), the laying down of the body - this, your reverences, is called dying.

Thus, your reverences, this ageing and this dying
are called ageing-and-dying.

What is the origin of old age and dying?

From the uprising of birth is the uprising of ageing-and-dying.

From the stopping of birth
is the stopping of ageing-and-dying.

The course leading to the stopping of ageing-and-dying
is this ariyan eightfold Way itself,
that is to say:
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends old age and dying thus comprehends the uprising of old age and dying thus, comprehends the stopping of old age and dying thus,
comprehends the [62] course leading to the stopping of old age and dying
thus,
he, having got rid of all addiction to attachment,

having dispelled addiction to shunning,
having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,'
having got rid of ignorance,
having made knowledge arise,
is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

■

Saying:

"Good, your reverence,"
these monks, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said,
having approved of it,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Might there be, your reverence,
also another method
by which a disciple of the ariyans
comes to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma?"

"There might be, your reverences.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends birth, comprehends the uprising of birth, comprehends the stopping of birth, comprehends the the course leading to the stopping of birth,

to this extent also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

And what, your reverences, is birth?

What is the uprising of birth?

What is the stopping of birth?

What is the course leading to the stopping of birth?

Whatever is the conception,<sup>14</sup> the production,<sup>15</sup> the descent,<sup>16</sup> the coming forth<sup>17</sup> of various beings
in various groups of beings,
the appearance of the groups (of grasping), the acquiring of the sense-bases,<sup>18</sup> this, your reverences, is called birth.<sup>19</sup>

From the uprising of becoming<sup>20</sup> is the uprising of birth.

From the stopping of becoming
is the stopping of birth.

The course leading to the stopping of birth
is this ariyan eightfold Way itself,
that is to say:
perfect view,
perfect thought,

perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends birth thus comprehends the uprising of birth thus, comprehends the stopping of birth thus, comprehends the course leading to the stopping of birth thus,
he, [63] having got rid of all addiction to attachment,
having dispelled addiction to shunning,
having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,'
having got rid of ignorance,
having made knowledge arise,
is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

■

Saying:

"Good, your reverence,"
these monks, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said,
having approved of it,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Might there be, your reverence,
also another method

by which a disciple of the ariyans
comes to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma?"

"There might be, your reverences.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends becoming, comprehends the uprising of becoming,
comprehends the stopping of becoming, comprehends the the course leading to the stopping of becoming,
to this extent also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

And what, your reverences, is becoming?

What is the uprising of becoming?

What is the stopping of becoming?

What is the course leading to the stopping of becoming?

Your reverences, there are these three (kinds of) becoming:

Becoming as to sense-pleasures, becoming as to fine-materiality, becoming as to non-materiality.

From the uprising of grasping is the uprising of becoming,
from the stopping of grasping

is the stopping of becoming;
the course leading to the stopping of becoming
is this ariyan eightfold Way itself,
that is to say:
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends becoming thus comprehends the uprising of becoming thus, comprehends the stopping of becoming thus, comprehends the course leading to the stopping of becoming thus,
he, having got rid of all addiction to attachment,
having dispelled addiction to shunning,
having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,'
having got rid of ignorance,
having made knowledge arise,
is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

■

Saying:

"Good, your reverence,"
these monks, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said,
having approved of it,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Might there be, your reverence,
also another method
by which a disciple of the ariyans
comes to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma?"

"There might be, your reverences.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends grasping, comprehends the uprising of grasping, comprehends the stopping of grasping, comprehends the the course leading to the stopping of grasping,
to this extent also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

And what, your reverences, is grasping?

What is the uprising of grasping?

What is the stopping of grasping?

What is the course leading to the stopping of grasping?

There are, your reverences, these four (kinds of) grasping:

Grasping after sense-pleasures,<sup>21</sup> grasping after view,<sup>21</sup> grasping after rites and customs,<sup>21</sup> grasping after the theory of 'self.'<sup>22</sup>

[64] From the uprising of craving is the uprising of grasping,
from the stopping of craving is the stopping of grasping,
the course leading to the stopping of grasping
is this ariyan eightfold Way itself,
that is to say:
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends grasping thus comprehends the uprising of grasping thus, comprehends the stopping of grasping thus, comprehends the course leading to the stopping of grasping thus,
he, having got rid of all addiction to attachment,
having dispelled addiction to shunning,
having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,'
having got rid of ignorance,
having made knowledge arise,
is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,

one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

■

Saying:

"Good, your reverence,"
these monks, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said,
having approved of it,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Might there be, your reverence,
also another method
by which a disciple of the ariyans
comes to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma?"

"There might be, your reverences.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends craving, comprehends the uprising of craving, comprehends the stopping of craving, comprehends the the course leading to the stopping of craving,
to this extent also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

And what, your reverences, is craving?

What is the uprising of craving?

What is the stopping of craving?

What is the course leading to the stopping of craving?

Your reverences, there are these six (kinds of) craving:

Craving for material shapes, craving for sounds,
craving for smells,
craving for flavours,
craving for touches,
craving for mental objects.<sup>23</sup>

From the uprising of feeling is the uprising of craving, from the stopping of feeling is the stopping of craving, the course leading to the stopping of craving
is this ariyan eightfold Way itself,
that is to say:
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends craving thus comprehends the uprising of craving thus, comprehends the stopping of craving thus, comprehends the course leading to the stopping of craving thus,
he, having got rid of all addiction to attachment,
having dispelled addiction to shunning,
having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,'
having got rid of ignorance,

having made knowledge arise,
is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

■

Saying:

"Good, your reverence,"
these monks, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said,
having approved of it,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Might there be, your reverence,
also another method
by which a disciple of the ariyans
comes to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma?"

"There might be, your reverences.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends feeling, comprehends the uprising of feeling, comprehends the [65] stopping of feeling, comprehends the the course leading to the stopping of feeling,
to this extent also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,

one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

And what, your reverences, is feeling?

What is the uprising of feeling?

What is the stopping of feeling?

What is the course leading to the stopping of feeling?

There are, your reverences, these six classes of feeling:

Feeling arising from sensory impingement on the eye feeling arising from sensory impingement on the ear feeling arising from sensory impingement on the nose feeling arising from sensory impingement on the tongue feeling arising from sensory impingement on the body feeling arising from sensory impingement on the mind.<sup>24</sup>

From the uprising of sensory impingement is the uprising of feeling, from the stopping of sensory impingement is the stopping of feeling, the course leading to the stopping of feeling
is this ariyan eightfold Way itself,

that is to say:

perfect view,

perfect thought,

perfect speech,

perfect action,

perfect way of living,

perfect endeavour,

perfect mindfulness,

perfect concentration.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends feeling thus comprehends the uprising of feeling thus, comprehends the stopping of feeling thus, comprehends the course leading to the stopping of feeling thus,

he, having got rid of all addiction to attachment,
having dispelled addiction to shunning,
having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,'
having got rid of ignorance,
having made knowledge arise,
is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

■

Saying:

"Good, your reverence,"
these monks, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said,
having approved of it,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Might there be, your reverence,
also another method
by which a disciple of the ariyans
comes to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma?"

"There might be, your reverences.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends sensory impingement, comprehends the uprising of sensory impingement, comprehends the stopping of sensory impingement, comprehends the the course leading to the stopping of sensory impingement,
to this extent also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

And what, your reverences, is sensory impingement?

What is the uprising of sensory impingement?

What is the stopping of sensory impingement?

What is the course leading to the stopping of sensory impingement?

Your reverences, there are these six classes of sensory impingement:

Sensory impingement on the eye, sensory impingement on the ear, sensory impingement on the nose, sensory impingement on the tongue, sensory impingement on the body, sensory impingement on the mind.<sup>25</sup>

From the uprising of the six bases of sense-impressions is the uprising of sensory impingement,
from the stopping of the six bases of sense-impressions is the stopping of
sensory impingement,
the course leading to the stopping of sensory impingement
is this ariyan eightfold Way itself,
that is to say:

perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends sensory impingement thus comprehends the uprising of sensory impingement thus, comprehends the stopping of sensory impingement thus, comprehends the course leading to the stopping of sensory impingement
thus,
he, having [66] got rid of all addiction to attachment,
having dispelled addiction to shunning,
having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,'
having got rid of ignorance,
having made knowledge arise,
is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

■

Saying:

"Good, your reverence,"
these monks, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said,

having approved of it,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Might there be, your reverence,
also another method
by which a disciple of the ariyans
comes to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma?"

"There might be, your reverences.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends the six bases of sense-impressions, comprehends the uprising of the six bases of sense-impressions, comprehends the stopping of the six bases of sense-impressions, comprehends the the course leading to the stopping of the six bases of sense-impressions,
to this extent also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

And what, your reverences, are the six bases of sense-impression?

What is the uprising of the six bases of sense-impression?

What is the stopping of the six bases of sense-impression?

What is the course leading to the stopping of the six bases of senseimpression?

Your reverences, there are these six bases of sense-impression:

The basis for eye,
the basis for ear,
the basis for nose,
the basis for tongue,
the basis for body,
the basis for mind.

From the uprising of mind-and-matter<sup>26</sup> is the uprising of the six bases of sense-impression, from the stopping of mind-and-material is the stopping of the six bases of sense-impression, the course leading to the stopping of the six bases of sense-impression is this ariyan eightfold Way itself,
that is to say:
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends the six bases of sense-impression thus comprehends the uprising of the six bases of sense-impression thus, comprehends the stopping of the six bases of sense-impression thus, comprehends the course leading to the stopping of the six bases of sense-impression thus,
he, having got rid of all addiction to attachment,
having dispelled addiction to shunning,
having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,'
having got rid of ignorance,
having made knowledge arise,
is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

■

Saying:

"Good, your reverence,"
these monks, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said,
having approved of it,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Might there be, your reverence,
also another method
by which a disciple of the ariyans
comes to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma?"

"There might be, your reverences.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends mind-and-matter, comprehends the uprising of mind-and-matter, comprehends the stopping of mind-and-matter, comprehends the the course leading to the stopping of mind-and-matter,
to this extent also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

And what, your reverences, is mind-and-matter?

What is the uprising of mind-and-matter?

What is the stopping of mind-and-matter?

What is the course leading to the stopping of mind-and-matter?

Feeling,
perception,
volition,
sensory impingement,
reflectiveness,<sup>27</sup> this, [67] your reverences, is called mind.

The four great elements<sup>28</sup> and the material shape derived from the four great elements, this, your reverences, is called matter.

So, your reverences, this that is mind and this that is matter is called mind-and-matter.<sup>29</sup>

From the uprising of consciousness is the uprising of mind-and-matter, from the stopping of consciousness is the stopping of mind-and-matter, the course leading to the stopping of mind-and-matter
is this ariyan eightfold Way itself,
that is to say:
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends mind-and-matter thus comprehends the uprising of mind-and-matter thus, comprehends the stopping of mind-and-matter thus, comprehends the course leading to the stopping of mind-and-matter thus,
he, having got rid of all addiction to attachment,
having dispelled addiction to shunning,
having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,'
having got rid of ignorance,
having made knowledge arise,
is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

■

Saying:

"Good, your reverence,"
these monks, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said,
having approved of it,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Might there be, your reverence,
also another method
by which a disciple of the ariyans
comes to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma?"

"There might be, your reverences.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends consciousness, comprehends the uprising of consciousness, comprehends the stopping of consciousness, comprehends the the course leading to the stopping of consciousness,
to this extent also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

And what, your reverences, is consciousness?

What is the uprising of consciousness?

What is the stopping of consciousness?

What is the course leading to the stopping of consciousness?

Your reverences, there are these six classes of consciousness:

Visual consciousness,
auditory consciousness,
olfactory consciousness, gustatory consciousness, bodily consciousness,
mental consciousness.<sup>30</sup>

From the uprising of formations<sup>31</sup> is the uprising of consciousness, from the stopping of formations is the stopping of consciousness, the course leading to the stopping of consciousness
is this ariyan eightfold Way itself,
that is to say:
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,

perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends consciousness thus comprehends the uprising of consciousness thus, comprehends the stopping of consciousness thus, comprehends the course leading to the stopping of consciousness thus,
he, having got rid of [68] all addiction to attachment,
having dispelled addiction to shunning,
having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,'
having got rid of ignorance,
having made knowledge arise,
is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

■

Saying:

"Good, your reverence,"
these monks, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said,
having approved of it,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Might there be, your reverence,
also another method
by which a disciple of the ariyans

comes to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma?"

"There might be, your reverences.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends formations, comprehends the uprising of formations, comprehends the stopping of formations, comprehends the the course leading to the stopping of formations,
to this extent also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

And what, your reverences, are the formations?

What is the uprising of the formations?

What is the stopping of the formations?

What is the course leading to the stopping of the formations?

Your reverences, there are these three (kinds of) formations:

Activity of the body,
activity of speech,
activity of mind.

From the uprising of ignorance is the uprising of the formations, from the stopping of ignorance is the stopping of the formations, the course leading to the stopping of the formations
is this ariyan eightfold Way itself,

that is to say:
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends the formations thus comprehends the uprising of the formations thus, comprehends the stopping of the formations thus, comprehends the course leading to the stopping of the formations thus,
he, having got rid of all addiction to attachment,
having dispelled addiction to shunning,
having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,'
having got rid of ignorance,
having made knowledge arise,
is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

■

Saying:

"Good, your reverence,"
these monks, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said,

having approved of it,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Might there be, your reverence,
also another method
by which a disciple of the ariyans
comes to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma?"

"There might be, your reverences.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends ignorance, comprehends the uprising of ignorance, comprehends the stopping of ignorance, comprehends the the course leading to the stopping of ignorance,
to this extent also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

And what, your reverences, is ignorance?

What is the uprising of ignorance?

What is the stopping of ignorance?

What is the course leading to the stopping ignorance?

Whatever, your reverences, is not-knowing<sup>32</sup> in regard to anguish, not-knowing in regard to the uprising of anguish, not-knowing in regard to the stopping of anguish, not-knowing in regard to the course [69] leading to the stopping of anguish, this, your reverences, is called ignorance.<sup>33</sup>

From the uprising of the cankers<sup>34</sup> is the uprising of ignorance, from the stopping of the cankers is the stopping of ignorance, the course leading to the stopping of ignorance is this ariyan eightfold Way itself, that is to say:
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends ignorance thus comprehends the uprising of ignorance thus, comprehends the stopping of ignorance thus,
comprehends the course leading to the stopping of ignorance thus, he, having got rid of all addiction to attachment, having dispelled addiction to shunning, having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,' having got rid of ignorance, having made knowledge arise, is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, also, your reverences, does a disciple of the ariyans come to be of perfect view, one whose view is upright, one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma, one who has come into this true dhamma."

■

Saying:

"Good, your reverence,"
these monks, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said,
having approved of it,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Might there be, your reverence,
also another method
by which a disciple of the ariyans
comes to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who has unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma?"

"There might be, your reverences.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends the cankers, comprehends the uprising of the cankers, comprehends the stopping of the cankers, comprehends the the course leading to the stopping of the cankers,
to this extent also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans
come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma,
one who has come into this true dhamma."

And what, your reverences, is a canker?

What is the uprising of a canker?

What is the stopping of a canker?

What is the course leading to the stopping of a canker?

Your reverences, there are these [70] three cankers:

The canker of sense-pleasures, the canker of becoming,
the canker of ignorance.

From the uprising of ignorance is the uprising of the cankers, from the stopping of ignorance is the stopping of the cankers, the course leading to the stopping of the cankers
is this ariyan eightfold Way itself,

that is to say:

perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration.

When, your reverences, a disciple of the ariyans comprehends the cankers thus comprehends the uprising of the cankers thus, comprehends the stopping of the cankers thus, comprehends the course leading to the stopping of the cankers thus,
he, having got rid of all addiction to attachment,
having dispelled addiction to shunning,
having abolished addiction to the latent view 'I am,'
having got rid of ignorance,
having made knowledge arise,
is here-now an end-maker of anguish.

To this extent, also, your reverences,
does a disciple of the ariyans

come to be of perfect view,
one whose view is upright,
one who is possessed of unwavering confidence in dhamma, one who has come into this true dhamma."<sup>35</sup>

Discourse on Perfect View: the Ninth

---

<sup>1</sup> Translated with the Comy. into English by the Bhikkhu Soma: Right Understanding: Discourse and Commentary, Buddha Sahitya Sabha, Colombo, 1946.

<sup>2</sup> Right, or perfect, understanding, or view, is twofold: worldly and ultraworldly. Three kinds of people may have it: the worldling, the learner and the adept. The worldling may be either outside the Buddha's dispensation or within it.

<sup>3</sup> paṭibhātu, let it occur to.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. S. iv. 205.

<sup>5</sup> āhāra, sustenance or nutriment, is a condition, paccaya, that brings, āharati, its own fruit.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. M. i. 261; S. ii. 11; D. iii. 228, 276; Dhs. 71-73 and see notes at K.S. ii. 8.

<sup>7</sup> viññāṇa; MA. i. 209 says "whatever is mind (citta)."

<sup>8</sup> Cf. Vin. i. 10; D. ii. 305; M. iii. 249.

<sup>9</sup> Connected with the view of Eternalism.

<sup>10</sup> vibhava, de-becoming, DA. iii. 800 says it is a synonym for the attachment connected with the view of Annihilationism.

<sup>11</sup> Cf. S. ii. 2; D. ii. 305; M. iii. 249.

<sup>12</sup> maccumaraṇa. MA. i. 216, "the dying called death."

<sup>13</sup> kālakiriya. MA. i. 216 kālo nāma antiko, time is an ender, whose action, kiriya, is the action of time. As far as here "dying" is explained in conventional terms, MA. i. 216-7, DA. iii. 798-9. But now it is to be explained in the real sense, paramattha. According to this it is the khandhas which are broken, not any being named So-and-so who dies.

<sup>14</sup> jāti may be birth or conception. MA. i. 217 says it is called jāti on account of the sense-organs not being complete.

<sup>15</sup> sañjati, so called when the sense-organs are complete, MA. i. 217.

<sup>16</sup> okkanti refers to "birth" from eggs or from a womb. MA. i. 217 says "they take on reinstatement as if entering an egg-shell or a membranous sheath."

<sup>17</sup> abhinibbatti, so caused referring to spontaneous generation and birth from moisture, MA. i. 217. Up to here the explanation has referred to what is vohāra, the common or conventional usage of the terms. But there is an explanation according to the higher sense (or philosophical truth, paramattha); and "of the groups" (khandha) means the taking up of one, four or five of the constituents of being, vokārabhava (see Kvu. 261; Vbh. 137; SnA. 19, 158; KhpA. 245). Cf. DA. iii. 797.

<sup>18</sup> āyatana.

<sup>19</sup> Cf. S. ii. 3; M. iii. 249; D. ii. 305; Vbh. 137.

<sup>20</sup> MA. i. 217 says "here the condition for birth should be known as kammabhava, karmical becoming." This is explained at Vbh. 137.

<sup>21</sup> Cf. Dhs. p. 212.

<sup>22</sup> Cf. M. i. 66; D. ii. 58, iii. 230; S. ii. 3; Dhs. p. 212. In explanation of attavādūpādāna, grasping after the view of "self," MA. i. 219 says they talk about, they grasp (the) self. See also attavada at M. i. 40 (Sutta 8).

<sup>23</sup> Cf. S. ii. 3. There are 108 modes of craving; craving is for sense-pleasures, becoming, annihilation (vibhava). These three, multiplied by the six kinds of sensory data, give eighteen. These eighteen may be of a subjective or an objective nature, so we get to thirty-six. These again may apply to past, future, present, thus we arrive at the 108; see MA. i. 219.

<sup>24</sup> Cf. S. ii. 3.

<sup>25</sup> Cf. S. ii. 3; Vism. 444-6.

<sup>26</sup> nāma-rūpa, psycho-physicality. See Vism. 562-566.

<sup>27</sup> MA. i. 221 says that among the khandhas these last three form the sankhāras.

<sup>28</sup> Extension, cohesion, heat and mobility. See M. Suita 1, and Vism. 443.

<sup>29</sup> Cf. S. ii. 3-4.

<sup>30</sup> Cf. S. ii. 4; Vism. 545-58.

<sup>31</sup> Sankhāra, potential energy, habitual, karmical, innate or reflex tendencies; and here seeming to mean unskilled and skilled (types of) deeds: eight skilled in regard to the body, twelve unskilled = twenty; and twenty in regard to speech, twenty-nine in regard to thought.

<sup>32</sup> aññāṇa, nescience; it is folly or confusion, moha. MA. i. 223.

<sup>33</sup> Cf. S. ii. 4.

<sup>34</sup> MA. i. 223 f. says: "Here the cankers of sense-pleasures and becoming are, through co-nasence, the causes (or conditions) of ignorance." And again, "Ignorance is the cause, through co-nascence, of the cankers of sense-pleasures and becoming ... This exposition of the cankers is spoken of as an explanation of the conditions of that chief ignorance which is among the clauses of 'dependent origination.' Through the exposition made known thus, the fact that the end of samsāric existence is inconceivable is proved. How? From the arising of ignorance is the arising of the cankers; from the arising of the cankers is the arising of ignorance. Having made the cankers the cause of ignorance and ignorance the cause of the cankers, the earliest point of ignorance is not perceptible, therefore the fact that the end of samsāric existence is inconceivable is proved."

<sup>35</sup> MA. i. 224 says that only in this Discourse, even in the whole great fivefold classified collection of the Buddha's words, are the four truths proclaimed thirty-two times and arahantship thirty-two times.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
1. Mūlapariyāya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
1. The Division of the Synopsis of Fundamentals

10. Discourse on the Applications of Mindfulness

Satipaṭṭhāna Sutta

---

[70]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying among the Kuru people in the township of the Kurus called Kammāssadhamma.

While he was there, the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

[71] "Revered one," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"There is this one way,<sup>2</sup> monks, for the purification of beings, [56]for the overcoming of sorrows and griefs, for the going down of sufferings and miseries, for winning the right path,<sup>3</sup> for realising Nibbāna,<sup>4</sup> that is to say, the four applications<sup>5</sup> of mindfulness.

What are the four?

Herein, monks, a monk fares along<sup>6</sup> contemplating the body in the body, ardent, clearly conscious (of it),
mindful (of it)
so as to control the covetousness and dejection in the world;<sup>7</sup> he fares along contemplating the feelings<sup>8</sup> in the feelings, ardent, clearly conscious (of them),
mindful (of them)
so as to control the covetousness and dejection in the world;
he fares along contemplating the mind<sup>9</sup> in the mind,
ardent, clearly conscious (of it),
mindful (of it)
so as to control the covetousness and dejection in the world;
he fares along contemplating the mental objects in the mental objects, ardent, clearly conscious (of them),
mindful (of them)
so as to control the covetousness and dejection in the world.

§

And how, monks, does a monk fare along contemplating the body in the body?

Herein,<sup>10</sup> monks, a monk who is forest-gone or gone to the root of a tree or gone to an empty place,
sits down cross-legged,

holding his back erect,
arousing mindfulness in front of him.
Mindful he breathes in,
mindful he breathes out.

Whether he is breathing in a long (breath) he comprehends,

'I am breathing in [72] a long (breath)';

or whether he is breathing out a long (breath) he comprehends,

'I am breathing out a long (breath)';

or whether he is breathing in a short (breath) he comprehends,

'I am breathing in a short (breath)';

or whether he is breathing out a short (breath) he comprehends,

'I am breathing out a short (breath).'

He trains himself, thinking:

'I shall breathe in experiencing the whole body.'

He trains himself, thinking:

'I shall breathe out experiencing the whole body.'

He trains himself, thinking:

'I shall breathe in tranquillising the activity of the body.'

He trains himself, thinking:

'I shall breathe out tranquillising the activity of the body.'<sup>11</sup>

Monks, it is like a clever turner or turner's apprentice who, making a long (turn), comprehends,

'I am making a long (turn)';

or when making a short (turn) comprehends,

'I am making a short (turn).'

Even so, monks, does a monk who is breathing in a long (breath) comprehend,

'I am breathing in a long (breath)';

or when breathing breathing out a long (breath) he comprehends,

'I am breathing out a long (breath)';

or when breathing breathing in a short (breath) he comprehends,

'I am breathing in a short (breath)';

or when breathing breathing out a short (breath) he comprehends,

'I am breathing out a short (breath).'

He trains himself with the thought:

'I shall breathe in experiencing the whole body.'

He trains himself with the thought:

'I shall breathe out experiencing the whole body.'

He trains himself with the thought:

'I shall breathe in tranquillising the activity of the body.'

He trains himself with the thought:

'I shall breathe out tranquillising the activity of the body.'

In this way, monks, he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally,<sup>12</sup> or he fares along contemplating the body in the body externally,<sup>13</sup> or he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally and externally.<sup>14</sup>

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in the body,

or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in the body, or he fares along contemplating origination-and-dissolution things in the body.<sup>15</sup>

Or, thinking,

'There is the body,'

his mindfulness is established precisely to the extent necessary just for knowledge,

just for remembrance,

and he fares along independently of<sup>16</sup>

and not grasping anything in the world.<sup>17</sup>

It is thus too, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating the body in the body.

■

And again, monks, a monk, when he is walking, comprehends,

'I am walking';

or when he is standing still, comprehends,

'I am [73] standing still';

or when he is sitting down,[57]comprehends,

'I am sitting down';

or when he is lying down, comprehends,

'I am lying down.'

So that however his body is disposed he comprehends that it is like that.

Thus he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally, or he fares along contemplating the body in the body externally, or he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally and
externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in the body,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in the body, or he fares along contemplating origination-and-dissolution things in the body.

Or, thinking,

'There is the body,'

his mindfulness is established precisely to the extent necessary just for knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus too, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating the body in the
body.

■

And again, monks, a monk,
when he is setting out or returning<sup>18</sup>
is one, acting in a clearly conscious way; when he is looking in front or looking around
is one, acting in a clearly conscious way; when he has bent in or stretched out (his arm)
is one, acting in a clearly conscious way; when he is carrying his outer cloak, bowl and robe
is one, acting in a clearly conscious way; when he is eating, drinking, chewing, tasting
is one, acting in a clearly conscious way; when he is obeying the calls of nature
is one, acting in a clearly conscious way;
when he is walking, standing, sitting, asleep, awake, talking, silent, he is one acting in a clearly conscious way.

Thus he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body externally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally and
externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in the body,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in the body, or he fares along contemplating origination-and-dissolution things in the
body.

Or, thinking,

'There is the body,'

his mindfulness is established precisely to the extent necessary just for
knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus too, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating the body in the body.

■

And again, monks,
a monk reflects on precisely this body itself, encased in skin and full of various impurities,
from the soles of the feet up
and from the crown of the head down, that:

'There is connected with this body hair of the head,
hair of the body,
nails,
teeth,
skin,
flesh,
sinews,
bones,
marrow,
kidneys,
heart,
liver, [74] membranes,
spleen,
lungs,
intestines,
mesentery,
stomach,
excrement,
bile,
phlegm,
pus,
blood,
sweat,

fat,
tears,
serum,
saliva,
mucus,
synovial fluid,
urine.<sup>19</sup>

Monks, it is like a double-mouthed provision bag<sup>20</sup> that is full of various kinds of grain such as hill-paddy,
paddy,
kidney beans,
peas,
sesamum,
rice;
and a keen-eyed man,
pouring them out,
were to reflect:

'That's hill-paddy,
that's paddy,
that's kidney beans,
that's peas,
that's sesamum,
that's rice.'

Even so, monks,
does a monk reflect on precisely this body itself,
encased in skin and full of various impurities,
from the soles of the feet up
and from the crown of the head down, that:
'There is connected with this body
hair of the head,
hair of the body,
nails,

teeth,
skin,
flesh,
sinews,
bones,
marrow,
kidneys,
heart,
liver,
membranes,
spleen,
lungs,
intestines,
mesentery,
stomach,
excrement,
bile,
phlegm,
pus,
blood,
sweat,
fat,
tears,
serum,
saliva,
mucus,
synovial fluid,
urine.'

Thus he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body externally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally and
externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in the body,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in the body, or he fares along contemplating origination-and-dissolution things in the body.

Or, thinking,

'There is the body,'

his mindfulness is established precisely to the extent necessary just for knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus too, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating the body in the body.

■

And again, monks,
a monk reflects on this body according to how it is placed or disposed<sup>21</sup> in respect of the elements,<sup>22</sup> thinking:

'In this body there is
the element of extension,
the element of cohesion,
the element of heat,
the element of motion.'

[58] Monks, even as a skilled cattle-butcher, or his apprentice,
having slaughtered a cow,
might sit displaying its carcass at the cross-roads, even so, monks, does a monk reflect on this body itself according to how it is placed or disposed in respect of the elements, thinking:

'In this body there is
the element of extension,
the element of cohesion,
the element of heat,
the element of motion.'

Thus he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body externally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally and
externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in the body,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in the body, or he fares along contemplating origination-and-dissolution things in the
body.

Or, thinking,

'There is the body,'

his mindfulness is established precisely to the extent necessary just for
knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus too, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating the body in the
body.

■

And again, monks,
as a monk might see a body thrown aside in a cemetery, dead for one day or for two days or for three days, swollen, discoloured, decomposing;
he focuses on this body itself,<sup>23</sup> thinking:

'This body, too, is of a similar nature a similar constitution,
it has not got past that (state of things).'

Thus he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body externally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally and
externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in the body,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in the body, or he fares along contemplating origination-and-dissolution things in the
body.

Or, thinking,

'There is the body,'

his mindfulness is established precisely to the extent necessary just for
knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the [75] world.

It is thus too, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating the body in the
body.

■

And again, monks,
a monk might see a body thrown aside in a cemetery,
and being devoured by crows or ravens or vultures or wild dogs or jackals or by various small creatures;
he focuses on this body itself, thinking:

'This body too is of a similar nature a similar constitution,
it has not got past that (state of things).'

Thus he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body externally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally and
externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in the body,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in the body, or he fares along contemplating origination-and-dissolution things in the
body.

Or, thinking,

'There is the body,'

his mindfulness is established precisely to the extent necessary just for
knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus too, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating the body in the
body.

■

And again, monks,
as a monk might see a body thrown aside in a cemetery
a skeleton<sup>24</sup> with (some) flesh and blood, sinew-bound;
he focuses on this body itself, thinking:

'This body too is of a similar nature a similar constitution,
it has not got past that (state of things).'

Thus he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body externally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally and
externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in the body,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in the body, or he fares along contemplating origination-and-dissolution things in the
body.

Or, thinking,

'There is the body,'

his mindfulness is established precisely to the extent necessary just for
knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus too, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating the body in the
body.

■

And again, monks,
as a monk might see a body thrown aside in a cemetery fleshless but blood-bespattered, sinew-bound;
he focuses on this body itself, thinking:

'This body too is of a similar nature a similar constitution,
it has not got past that (state of things).'

Thus he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body externally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally and
externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in the body,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in the body, or he fares along contemplating origination-and-dissolution things in the
body.

Or, thinking,

'There is the body,'

his mindfulness is established precisely to the extent necessary just for knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus too, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating the body in the body.

■

And again, monks,
as a monk might see a body thrown aside in a cemetery without flesh and blood, sinew-bound;
he focuses on this body itself, thinking:

'This body too is of a similar nature a similar constitution,
it has not got past that (state of things).'

Thus he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body externally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally and
externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in the body,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in the body, or he fares along contemplating origination-and-dissolution things in the
body.

Or, thinking,

'There is the body,'

his mindfulness is established precisely to the extent necessary just for knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus too, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating the body in the body.

■

And again, monks,
as a monk might see a body thrown aside in a cemetery
the bones scattered here and there, no longer held together:
here a bone of the hand,
there a foot-bone,
here a leg-bone,
there a rib,
here a hip-bone,
there a back-bone,
here the skull;
he focuses on this body itself, thinking:

'This body too is of a similar nature a similar constitution,
it has not got past that (state of things).'

Thus he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body externally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally and
externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in the body,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in the body, or he fares along contemplating origination-and-dissolution things in the
body.

Or, thinking,

'There is the body,'

his mindfulness is established precisely to the extent necessary just for knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus too, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating the body in the body.

■

And again, monks,
a monk might see a body thrown aside in a cemetery:
the bones white and something like sea-shells a heap of dried up bones more than a year old,
he focuses on this body itself, thinking:

'This body too is of a similar nature a similar constitution,
it has not got past that (state of things).'

Thus he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body externally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally and
externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in the body,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in the body, or he fares along contemplating origination-and-dissolution things in the
body.

Or, thinking,

'There is the body,'

his mindfulness is established precisely to the extent necessary just for knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus too, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating the body in the body.

■

And again, monks,
a monk might see a body thrown aside in a cemetery:
the bones gone rotten and reduced to powder;
[59]he focuses on this body itself, thinking:

'This body, too, is of a similar nature a similar constitution,
it has not got past that (state of things).'

Thus he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body externally,
or he fares along contemplating the body in the body internally and
externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in the body,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in the body, or he fares along contemplating origination-and-dissolution things in the
body.

Or, thinking,

'There is the body,'

his mindfulness is established precisely to the extent necessary just for knowledge,
just for remembrance,

and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus too, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating the body in the
body.

§

And how, monks, does a monk fare along contemplating the feelings in the feelings?

Herein, monks,
while he is experiencing [76] a pleasant feeling he comprehends:

'I am experiencing a pleasant feeling';<sup>25</sup> while he is experiencing a painful feeling he comprehends,

'I am experiencing a painful feeling'; while he is experiencing a feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant he comprehends:

'I am experiencing a feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant.'

■

While he is experiencing a pleasant feeling in regard to material things<sup>26</sup> he comprehends,

'I am experiencing a pleasant feeling in regard to material things;

While he is experiencing a painful feeling in regard to material things he comprehends,

'I am experiencing a painful feeling in regard to material things;

while he is experiencing a feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant in regard to material things he comprehends:

'I am experiencing a feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant in regard to material things;

■

While he is experiencing a pleasant feeling in regard to non-material things he comprehends,

'I am experiencing a pleasant feeling in regard to non-material things;

While he is experiencing a painful feeling in regard to non-material things he comprehends,

'I am experiencing a painful feeling in regard to non-material things;

while he is experiencing a feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant in regard to non-material things he comprehends:

'I am experiencing a feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant in regard to non-material things;

Thus he fares along contemplating the feelings in the feelings internally, or he fares along contemplating the feelings in the feelings externally, or he fares along contemplating the feelings in the feelings internally and externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in the feelings, or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in the feelings, or he fares along contemplating origination-dissolution-things in the feelings.

Or, thinking,

'There is feeling,'

his mindfulness is established
precisely to the extent necessary
just for knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating feelings in the feelings.

§

And how, monks, does a monk fare along contemplating mind in the mind?

Herein, monks, a monk knows intuitively<sup>27</sup> the mind with attachment as a mind with attachment;

he knows intuitively
the mind without attachment as a mind without attachment

he knows intuitively
the mind with hatred as a mind with hatred

he knows intuitively
the mind without hatred as a mind without hatred

he knows intuitively
the mind with confusion as a mind with confusion

he knows intuitively
the mind without confusion as a mind [77] without confusion

he knows intuitively
the mind that is contracted<sup>28</sup> as a mind that is contracted

he knows intuitively
the mind that is distracted<sup>29</sup> as a mind that is distracted

he knows intuitively
the mind that has become great<sup>30</sup> as a mind that has become great

he knows intuitively
as a mind that has not become great<sup>31</sup> as a mind that has not become great

he knows intuitively
the mind with (some other mental state) superior to it<sup>32</sup> as a mind with (some other mental state) superior to it

he knows intuitively
the mind with no (other mental state) superior to it<sup>33</sup> as a mind with no (other mental state) superior to it

he knows intuitively
the mind that is composed<sup>34</sup> as a mind that is composed

he knows intuitively
the mind that is not composed<sup>35</sup> as a mind that is not composed

he knows intuitively
the mind that is freed<sup>36</sup> as a mind that is freed

he knows intuitively
the mind that is not freed<sup>37</sup> as a mind that is not freed.

Thus he fares along contemplating the mind in the mind internally, or he fares along contemplating the mind in the mind externally, or he fares along contemplating the mind in the mind internally and
externally.

[60]Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in the mind, or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in the mind, or he fares along contemplating origination-dissolution-things in the mind.

Or, thinking,

'There is mind,'

his mindfulness is established
precisely to the extent necessary
just for knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating mind in the mind.

---

And how, monks, does a monk fare along contemplating mental objects in mental objects?

Herein, monks, a monk fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects
from the point of view of the five hindrances.

And how, monks, does a monk fare along contemplating mental objects in mental objects
from the point of view of the five hindrances?

Herein, monks,
when a subjective desire for sense-pleasures is present a monk comprehends that he has a subjective desire for sense-pleasures; or when a subjective desire for sense-pleasures is not present

he comprehends [78] that he has no subjective desire for sense-pleasures.

And in so far as there comes to be an uprising of desire for sense-pleasures that had not arisen before,
he comprehends that;

and in so far as there comes to be a getting rid of desire for sense-pleasures
that has arisen,
he comprehends that.

And in so far as there comes to be no future uprising of desire for the sense-pleasures that has been got rid of,
he comprehends that.

■

Or when ill-will is subjectively present
a monk comprehends that he has ill-will subjectively present;

or when ill-will is subjectively not present
he comprehends that he has no subjective ill-will.

And in so far as there comes to be an uprising of ill-will
that had not arisen before,
he comprehends that;

and in so far as there comes to be a getting rid of ill-will that has arisen,
he comprehends that.

And in so far as there comes to be no future uprising of ill-will that has been got rid of,
he comprehends that.

■

Or when sloth and torpor is subjectively present a monk comprehends that he has sloth and torpor subjectively present; or when sloth and torpor is subjectively not present

he comprehends that he has no subjective sloth and torpor.

And in so far as there comes to be an uprising of sloth and torpor
that had not arisen before,
he comprehends that;

and in so far as there comes to be a getting rid of sloth and torpor that has arisen,
he comprehends that.

And in so far as there comes to be no future uprising of sloth and torpor that has been got rid of,
he comprehends that.

■

Or when restlessness and worry is subjectively present
a monk comprehends that he has restlessness and worry subjectively present;

or when restlessness and worry is subjectively not present
he comprehends that he has no subjective restlessness and worry.

And in so far as there comes to be an uprising of restlessness and worry
that had not arisen before,
he comprehends that;

and in so far as there comes to be a getting rid of restlessness and worry that has arisen,
he comprehends that.

And in so far as there comes to be no future uprising of restlessness and worry that has been got rid of,
he comprehends that.

■

Or when restlessness and worry is subjectively present
a monk comprehends that
he has restlessness and worry subjectively present;

or when restlessness and worry is subjectively not present
he comprehends that
he has no subjective restlessness and worry.

And in so far as there comes to be an uprising of restlessness and worry
that had not arisen before,
he comprehends that;

and in so far as there comes to be a getting rid of restlessness and worry that has arisen,
he comprehends that.

And in so far as there comes to be no future uprising of restlessness and worry that has been got rid of,
he comprehends that.

Or when doubt is present subjectively he comprehends that he has subjective doubt;

when doubt is not present subjectively he comprehends that he has no subjective doubt.

And in so far as there is an uprising of doubt that had not arisen before,
he comprehends that;

and in so far as there is a getting rid of doubt that has arisen,
he comprehends that;

and in so far as there is in the future no uprising of the doubt that has been got rid of,
he comprehends that.

It is thus that he fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects internally, or he fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects externally, or he fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects internally and externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in mental objects, or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in mental objects, or he fares along contemplating origination-things and dissolution-things in mental objects.

Or, thinking,

'There are mental objects,'

his mindfulness is established
precisely to the extent necessary
just for knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus; monks, that a monk fares along contemplating mental objects in
mental objects
from the point of view of the five hindrances.

---

And again, monks, a monk fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects[61]from the point of view of the five groups<sup>38</sup> of grasping.

And how, monks, does a monk fare along contemplating mental objects in
mental objects
from the point of view of the five groups of grasping?

Herein, monks, a monk thinks,

'Such is material shape,
such is the arising of material shape, [79] such is the setting of material shape;

such is feeling,
such the arising of feeling,
such the setting of feeling;

such is perception,
such the arising of perception such the setting of perception;

such are the tendencies, such the arising of the tendencies such the setting of the tendencies;

such is consciousness,
such the arising of consciousness, such the setting of consciousness.'

It is thus that he fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects internally, or he fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects externally, or he fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects internally and externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in mental objects,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in mental objects, or he fares along contemplating origination-things and dissolution-things in mental objects.

Or, thinking,

'There are mental objects,'

his mindfulness is established
precisely to the extent necessary
just for knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus; monks, that a monk fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects from the point of view of the the five groups of grasping.

---

And again, monks, a monk fares along contemplating mental objects in
mental objects
from the point of view of the six internal-external sense-bases.

And how, monks, does a monk fare along contemplating mental objects in
mental objects
from the point of view of the six internal-external sense-bases?

Herein, monks,
a monk comprehends the eye and he comprehends material shapes, and he comprehends the fetter<sup>39</sup>
that arises dependent on both,
and he comprehends the uprising of the fetter
not arisen before,
and he comprehends the getting rid of the fetter
that has arisen,
and he comprehends the non-uprising in the future of the fetter that has been got rid of.

■

And he comprehends the ear and he comprehends sounds, and he comprehends the fetter
that arises dependent on both,
and he comprehends the uprising of the fetter
not arisen before,
and he comprehends the getting rid of the fetter
that has arisen,
and he comprehends the non-uprising in the future
of the fetter that has been got rid of.

■

And he comprehends the nose and he comprehends smells,
and he comprehends the fetter
that arises dependent on both,
and he comprehends the uprising of the fetter
not arisen before,
and he comprehends the getting rid of the fetter
that has arisen,
and he comprehends the non-uprising in the future
of the fetter that has been got rid of.

■

And he comprehends the tongue and he comprehends flavours,
and he comprehends the fetter
that arises dependent on both,
and he comprehends the uprising of the fetter
not arisen before,
and he comprehends the getting rid of the fetter
that has arisen,
and he comprehends the non-uprising in the future
of the fetter that has been got rid of.

■

And he comprehends the body and he comprehends tactile objects,
and he comprehends the fetter
that arises dependent on both,
and he comprehends the uprising of the fetter
not arisen before,
and he comprehends the getting rid of the fetter
that has arisen,

and he comprehends the non-uprising in the future
of the fetter that has been got rid of.

■

And he comprehends the mind and he comprehends mental objects,
and he comprehends the fetter
that arises dependent on both,
and he comprehends the uprising of the fetter
not arisen before,
and he comprehends the getting rid of the fetter
that has arisen,
and he comprehends the non-uprising in the future
of the fetter that has been got rid of.

It is thus that he fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects internally,
or he fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects externally, or he fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects internally and externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in mental objects,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in mental objects, or he fares along contemplating origination-things and dissolution-things in mental objects.

Or, thinking,

'There are mental objects,'

his mindfulness is established
precisely to the extent necessary
just for knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects from the point of view of the six internal-external sense bases.

---

And again, monks, a monk fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects from the point of view of the seven links in awakening.

And how, monks, does a monk fare along contemplating mental objects in mental objects from the point of view of the seven links in awakening?

Herein, monks,
when the link in awakening that is mindfulness
is present internally
he comprehends that he has internally
the link in awakening that is mindfulness;
when the link in awakening that is mindfulness
is not internally present
[62]he comprehends that he has not internally
the link in awakening that is mindfulness.

And in so far as there is an uprising of the link in awakening that is mindfulness
that had not arisen before,
he comprehends that;
and in so far as there is completion
by the mental development of the arisen link in awakening that is mindfulness, he comprehends that.

■

When the link in awakening that is investigation of mental objects
is present internally
he comprehends that he has internally
the link in awakening that is investigation of mental objects;
when the link in awakening that is investigation of mental objects
is not internally present
he comprehends that he has not internally
the link in awakening that is investigation of mental objects.

And in so far as there is an uprising of the link in awakening that is investigation of mental objects that had not uprisen before,
he comprehends that;
and in so far as there is completion
by the mental development of the uprisen link in awakening that is investigation of mental objects, he comprehends that.

■

When the link in awakening that is energy
is present internally
he comprehends that he has internally
the link in awakening that is energy;
when the link in awakening that is energy
is not internally present
he comprehends that he has not internally
the link in awakening that is energy.

And in so far as there is an uprising of the link in awakening that is energy that had not uprisen before,
he comprehends that;
and in so far as there is completion
by the mental development of the uprisen link in awakening that is energy, he comprehends that.

■

When the link in awakening that is rapture
is present internally
he comprehends that he has internally
the link in awakening that is rapture;
when the link in awakening that is rapture
is not internally present
he comprehends that he has not internally
the link in awakening that is rapture.

And in so far as there is an uprising of the link in awakening that is rapture
that had not uprisen before,
he comprehends that;
and in so far as there is completion
by the mental development of the uprisen link in awakening that is rapture, he comprehends that.

■

When the link in awakening that is serenity
is present internally
he comprehends that he has internally
the link in awakening that is serenity;
when the link in awakening that is serenity
is not internally present
he comprehends that he has not internally
the link in awakening that is serenity.

And in so far as there is an uprising of the link in awakening that is serenity
that had not uprisen before,

he comprehends that;
and in so far as there is completion
by the mental development of the uprisen link in awakening that is serenity,
he comprehends that.

■

When the link in awakening that is concentration
is present internally
he comprehends that he has internally
the link in awakening that is concentration;
when the link in awakening that is concentration
is not internally present
he comprehends that he has not internally
the link in awakening that is concentration.

And in so far as there is an uprising
of the link in awakening that is concentration
that had not uprisen before,
he comprehends that;
and in so far as there is completion
by the mental development of the uprisen link in awakening that is concentration,
he comprehends that.

■

When the link in awakening that is concentration
is present internally
he comprehends that he has internally
the link in awakening that is concentration;
when the link in awakening that is concentration
is not internally present
he comprehends that he has not internally
the link in awakening that is concentration.

And in so far as there is an uprising
of the link in awakening that is concentration
that had not arisen before,
he comprehends that;
and in so far as there is completion
by the mental development of the arisen link in awakening that is concentration,
he comprehends that.

■

When the link in awakening that is equanimity
is present internally
he comprehends that he has the link in awakening that is equanimity;
when the link in awakening that is equanimity is not present internally,
he comprehends that he has not the link in awakening that is equanimity.

And in so far as there is an uprising of the link in awakening that is equanimity
that had not arisen before,
he comprehends that;
and in so far as there is completion by mental development of the arisen link in awakening that is equanimity,
he comprehends that.

It is thus that he fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects
internally,
or he fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects externally, or he fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects internally
and externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in mental objects,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in mental objects, or he fares along contemplating origination-things and dissolution-things in mental objects.

Or, thinking,

'There are mental objects,'

his mindfulness is established
precisely to the extent necessary
just for knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects from the point of view of the seven links in awakening.<sup>40</sup>

---

And again, monks, a monk fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects
from the point of view of the four Ariyan truths.

And how, monks, does a monk fare along contemplating mental objects in
mental objects
from the point of view of the four Ariyan truths?

Herein, monks, a monk comprehends as it really is,

'This is anguish';

he comprehends as it really is,

'This is the arising of anguish ';

he comprehends as it really is,

'This is the stopping of anguish';

he comprehends as it really is,

'This is the course leading to the stopping of anguish.'

It is thus that he fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects internally,

or he fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects externally, or he fares along contemplating mental objects in mental objects internally
and externally.

Or he fares along contemplating origination-things in mental objects,
or he fares along contemplating dissolution-things in mental objects, or he fares along contemplating origination-things and dissolution-things in mental objects.

Or, thinking,

'There are mental objects,'

his mindfulness is established
precisely to the extent necessary
just for knowledge,
just for remembrance,
and he fares along independently of
and not grasping anything in the world.

It is thus, monks, that a monk fares along contemplating mental objects in
mental objects
from the point of view of the four Ariyan truths.

---

Whoever,<sup>41</sup> monks, should thus develop these four applications of mindfulness for seven years, one of two fruits is to be expected for him:
either profound knowledge<sup>42</sup> here-now, or, if there is any residuum remaining,<sup>43</sup> the state of non-returning.<sup>44</sup>

Monks, let be the seven years.

Whoever, [63] monks, should thus develop these four applications of mindfulness for six years, five years,
four years,
three years,
two years,
for one year,
one of two fruits is to [82] be expected for him:
either profound knowledge here-now,
or, if there is any residuum remaining,
the state of non-returning.

Monks, let be the one year.

Whoever, monks, should thus develop these four applications of mindfulness for seven months,
one of two fruits is to be expected for him:
either profound knowledge here now,
or, if there is any residuum remaining,
the state of non-returning.

Monks, let be the seven months.

Whoever, monks, should thus develop these four applications of mindfulness for six months, five months,
four months,

three months,
two months,
for one month,
for half a month. ...

Monks, let be the half month.

Whoever, monks, should thus develop these four applications of mindfulness for seven days, one of two fruits is to be expected for him: either profound knowledge here-now, or, if there is any residuum remaining, the state of non-returning.

What has been spoken in this way has been spoken in reference to this:

"There is this one way, monks, for the purification of beings, for the overcoming of sorrows and griefs, for the going down of sufferings and miseries, for winning the right path, for realising Nibbāna, that is to say, the four applications of mindfulness."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse on the Applications of Mindfulness: the Tenth

Division of the Synopsis of Fundamentals: the First

---

<sup>1</sup> Translated by the Bhikkhu Soma, The Way of Mindfulness. 2nd edn., Colombo, 1949. Cf. D. Sta. XXII; and Ānāpāna-saṅyutta (S. v. 311 ff.); also

M. iii. 82 f.

<sup>2</sup> Quoted at Kvu. 158.

<sup>3</sup> ñāya is explained at MA. i. 236 as ariyo atthaṅgiko maggo; and it says that when the mundane way of the applications of mindfulness is developed it leads on to reaching the ultramundane way, and gradually effects the realisation of Nibbāna.

<sup>4</sup> MA. i. 236 says that this is deathlessness which has got the name of Nibbāna by reason of the absence in it of the lust (vāna, sewing or weaving) called craving. It further says that it is seen by each for himself (individually).

<sup>5</sup> paṭṭhāna is application or arousing.

<sup>6</sup> MA. i. 243 explains viharati by iriyati. I retain the verb of motion rather than the verb of rest so as to stress the symbolism of the Way and the endeavour needed to travel along it. Cf. Vbh. 252; Nd. II. 237.

<sup>7</sup> MA. i. 243-4 explains loke by kāye, and quotes Vbh. 195 in Support. See also S. iv. 95, 157, where the "world" and the "sea" are taken to stand for the sense-organs.

<sup>8</sup> The three feelings; of pleasure, pain and those that are neutral.

<sup>9</sup> citta is mind or thought or consciousness. Here called lokiya, worldly, of the world, at MA. i. 245, as are also dhammā, mental objects.

<sup>10</sup> Following as at M. i. 425; A. v. 111.

<sup>11</sup> And so the four jhānas arise. Or, he takes up in-breathing and out-breathing after he has developed the jhānas, or factors in the jhānas, MA. i. 249.

<sup>12</sup> His own body.

<sup>13</sup> Someone else's body.

<sup>14</sup> Now internally, now externally, but not both together.

<sup>15</sup> Separately, not together.

<sup>16</sup> anissito — that is, not leaning on, but being independent of craving and view, MA. i. 250.

<sup>17</sup> I.e. not grasping any of the five khandhas, and not holding that "This is my self or belonging to self."

<sup>18</sup> Cf. M. i. 274.

<sup>19</sup> As at A. iii. 323, v. 109; D. ii. 293.

<sup>20</sup> muto'ī, as at M. iii. 90; D. ii. 293. See Dial. ii. 330, "sample-bag." This simile is not found at A. iii. 323.

<sup>21</sup> yathāpaṇihita, controlled or directed.

<sup>22</sup> dhātu, called by the Bhikkhu Soma "modes of materiality."

<sup>23</sup> I.e. on his own body.

<sup>24</sup> As at M. i. 89, A. iii. 324.

<sup>25</sup> MA. i. 278 quotes M. i. 500 [ed: MN 74: Dighanakha Sutta] to show that neither all the three feelings nor any two of them can be experienced simultaneously.

<sup>26</sup> amisā, sometimes put into opposition to dhamma, as at M. i. 12. But here in opposition to nirāmisā. According to MA. i. 279 sāmiā sukha means the worldling's feelings of pleasure connected with the five senses, whereas nirāmisā sukha are the feelings of pleasure connected with renunciation. All is set out at M. iii. 217-19.

- <sup>27</sup> As at, e.g., M. i. 34. 68.
- <sup>28</sup> The mind fallen into sloth and torpor.
- <sup>29</sup> Accompanied by restlessness.
- <sup>30</sup> Connected with the fine-material and the non-material planes.
- <sup>31</sup> Connected with the sensuous plane of existence.
- <sup>32</sup> This state of consciousness is also connected with the sensuous plane.
- <sup>33</sup> This refers to the fine-material or the non-material plane.
- <sup>34</sup> This refers to the person who has full or partial concentration.
- <sup>35</sup> Where neither of these forms of concentration is present.
- <sup>36</sup> See Vism. 410.
- <sup>37</sup> Here (for the beginner) there is no place for the freedoms through extirpation. calming and escape, MA. i. 280.
- <sup>38</sup> upādānakkhandha, or the five aggregates, khandha, of clinging or grasping. and which arise as a result of grasping. See Vism. Ch. XX.
- <sup>39</sup> Tenfold; the fetter of sense-pleasure being based on two conditions, and that of ignorance on eight.
- <sup>40</sup> For the above paragraph MA. i. 289 ff. refers to S. v. 65, 66.
- <sup>41</sup> MA. i. 301: whatever monk. nun, man or woman lay follower.
- <sup>42</sup> aññā, equivalent to arahantship.
- <sup>43</sup> The grasping that leads to again-becoming or recurrent birth, but not necessarily in this world.

44 The third stage in supramundane fulfilment.

---

More Satipaṭṭhāna Resources

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
2. Sīhanāda Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
2. The Division of the Lion's Roar

11. Lesser Discourse on the Lion's Roar

Cūḷa Sīhanāda Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattḥī
in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was there, the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered one," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Monks, thinking:

'Just here<sup>1</sup> is a recluse,
here a second recluse,
here a third recluse,

here a fourth recluse;<sup>2</sup> void of recluses are other (systems teaching) alien views,<sup>3</sup> it is thus, monks, that you may rightly<sup>4</sup> roar a lion's roar.<sup>5</sup>

But this situation occurs, monks, when wanderers belonging to other sects might herein speak thus:

'What confidence have the venerable ones, what authority,
by reason of which the venerable ones speak thus:

"Just here is a recluse,
here a second recluse, here a third recluse,
here a fourth recluse;
void of recluses are other (systems teaching) alien views?"

Monks, if there are wanderers belonging to other sects who speak thus,
they should be spoken to thus:

'It is because we see for ourselves four things made known to us by the Lord who knows,
who sees,
perfected one,
fully self-awakened one,
that we speak thus:

"Just here is a recluse,
here a second recluse,
here a third recluse,
here a fourth recluse;
void of recluses are other (systems teaching) alien views."

What are the four?

Your reverences, we have confidence in the Teacher,<sup>6</sup> we have confidence in dhamma,<sup>6</sup> there is fulfilment of the moral habits, and our fellow dhamma-men,<sup>7</sup> [86] as well as householders
and those who have gone forth,
are dear to us and liked (by us).

It is, your reverences, because of these four matters, made known to us by the Lord who knows,
who sees,
perfected one,
fully self-awakened one,
that we speak thus:

"Just here is a recluse,
here a second recluse,
here a third recluse,
here a fourth recluse;
void of recluses are other (systems teaching) alien views."

But this situation occurs, monks, when wanderers belonging to other sects might speak thus:

'Your reverences, we too have confidence in that teacher of ours<sup>8</sup> who is our teacher,
and we have confidence in that dhamma of ours which is our dhamma, and we fulfil those which are our moral habits,<sup>9</sup> and our fellow dhamma-men,
as well as householders
and those who have gone forth,
are dear to us and liked (by us).

So, your reverences, what is the distinction, what the divergence,
what the difference between you and us?'

Monks, if there are wanderers belonging to other sects who speak thus,
they should be spoken to thus:

'But, your reverences, is the goal<sup>10</sup> one or is the goal manifold?'

Monks, if answering rightly wanderers belonging to other sects would answer thus:

'The goal is one, your reverences, the goal is not manifold.'

'But, your reverences,
is this goal for one with attachment or for one without attachment?'

Monks, if answering rightly
wanderers belonging to other sects would answer:

'This goal is for one without attachment, this goal is not for one with attachment.'

'But, your reverences,
is this goal for someone with aversion or for someone without aversion?'

Monks, if answering rightly
wanderers belonging to other sects would answer:

'This goal is for someone without aversion.'

'But, your reverences,
is this goal for someone with confusion or for someone without confusion?

Monks, if answering rightly
wanderers belonging to other sects would answer:

'This goal is for someone without confusion.

'But, your reverences,
is this goal for someone with craving or for someone without craving?

Monks, if answering rightly
wanderers belonging to other sects would answer:

'This goal is for someone without craving.

'But, your reverences,
is this goal for someone with grasping or for someone without grasping?

Monks, if answering rightly
wanderers belonging to other sects would answer:

'This goal is for someone without grasping.

'But, your reverences,
is this goal for someone who is intelligent or for someone who is unintelligent?

Monks, if answering rightly
wanderers belonging to other sects would answer:

'This goal is for someone who is intelligent.

'But, your reverences,
is this goal for someone who is yielding<sup>11</sup> and hindered<sup>12</sup> or for someone who is unyielding and unhindered?

Monks, if answering rightly
wanderers belonging to other sects would answer:

'This goal is for someone who is unyielding and unhindered.

'But, your reverences,
is this goal for someone [87] with delight in impediments<sup>13</sup> or for someone without delight in impediments?

Monks, if answering rightly wanderers belonging to other sects would answer thus:

'This goal is for someone who is without delight in impediments, not for someone with delight in impediments.'

Monks, there are these two views:
view of becoming,
and view of annihilation.<sup>14</sup>

Monks, whatever recluses and brahmans adhere to the view of becoming, have come under the view of becoming, cleave to the view of becoming,
these are obstructed from the view of annihilation.

Monks, whatever recluses and brahmans adhere to the view of annihilation, have come under the view of annihilation, cleave to the view of annihilation, these are obstructed from the view of becoming.

Monks, whatever recluses or brahmans do not comprehend as they really are
the rise and fall of,
and satisfaction in,

and peril of these two views and the escape<sup>15</sup> from them, these have attachment,
these have aversion,
these have confusion,
these have craving,
these have grasping,
these are unintelligent, these are yielding and hindered,
these delight in impediments, these are not utterly freed from birth, ageing,
dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation,
despair -
these are not utterly freed from anguish,<sup>16</sup>
I say.

But whatever recluses or brahmans comprehend as they really are
the rise and fall of,
and the satisfaction in,
and the peril of these two views and the escape from them, these are without attachment, these are without aversion, these are without confusion, these are without craving, these are without grasping,
these are intelligent,
these are unyielding and unhindered, these do not delight in impediments, these are utterly freed from birth,
ageing

[88] dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation,
despair -
these are utterly freed from anguish,
I say.

Monks, there are these four (kinds of) grasping.

What are the four?

The grasping of sense-pleasures, the grasping of view,
the grasping of rule and custom,
the grasping of the theory of self.

There are some recluses and brahmans who,
although pretending to a comprehension of all the graspings,
do not lay down rightly
a comprehension of all the graspings;
they lay down a comprehension of the grasping of sense-pleasures, but do not lay down a comprehension of the grasping of view, of the grasping of rule and custom, of the grasping of the theory of self.

What is the cause of this?

It is that these worthy recluses and brahmans do not understand three situations
as they really are.

Therefore these worthy recluses and brahmans,
although pretending to a comprehension of all the graspings,
do not lay down rightly
a comprehension of all the graspings;

they lay down a comprehension of the grasping of sense-pleasures,
but do not lay down a comprehension of the grasping of view, do not lay down a comprehension of the grasping of rule and custom, do not lay down a comprehension of the grasping of the theory of self.

Monks, there are some recluses and brahmans who,
although pretending to a comprehension of all the graspings,
do not lay down rightly a comprehension of all the graspings;
they lay down a comprehension of the grasping of sense-pleasures,
they lay down a comprehension of the grasping of view, but they do not lay down a comprehension of the grasping of rule and custom,
they do not lay down a comprehension of the grasping of the theory of self.

What is the cause of this?

It is that these worthy recluses and brahmans do not comprehend two situations as they really are.

Therefore these worthy recluses and brahmans,
although pretending to a comprehension of all the graspings,
do not rightly lay down a comprehension of all the graspings;
they lay down a comprehension of the grasping of sense-pleasure,
they lay down a comprehension of the grasping of view, they do not lay down the comprehension of the grasping of rule and custom, they do not lay down a comprehension of the grasping of the theory of self.

Monks, there are some recluses and brahmans who
although pretending to a comprehension of all the graspings,
do not lay down rightly a comprehension of all the graspings;
they lay down a comprehension of the grasping of sense-pleasures,
they lay down a comprehension of the grasping of view, they lay down a comprehension [89] of the grasping of rule and custom, but they do not lay down a comprehension of the grasping of the theory of self.

What is the cause of this?

It is that these worthy recluses and brahmans do not understand one situation as it really is.

Therefore these worthy recluses and brahmans,
although pretending to a comprehension of all the graspings,
do not rightly lay down a comprehension of all the graspings;
they lay down a comprehension of the grasping of sense-pleasure,
they lay down a comprehension of the grasping of view, they lay down a comprehension of the grasping of rule and custom, but they do not lay down a comprehension of the grasping of the theory of self.

In such a dhamma and discipline as this, monks,
that which is confidence in the Teacher
is shown to be not perfect,
that which is confidence in dhamma
is shown to be not perfect,
that which is fulfilment of the moral habits
is shown to be not perfect, that which is regard and affection for one's fellow dhamma-men
is shown to be not perfect.

What is the cause of this?

It comes to be thus, monks,
in a dhamma and discipline that are wrongly shown, wrongly taught,
not leading onwards,<sup>17</sup> not conducive to allayment,<sup>18</sup> taught by one who is not fully self-awakened.

But the Tathāgata, monks,
perfected one,
fully self-awakened one,
claiming a comprehension of all the graspings, rightly lays down a comprehension of all the graspings;

he lays down a comprehension of the grasping of sense-pleasures, he lays down a comprehension of the grasping of view, he lays down a comprehension of the grasping of rule and custom, he lays down a comprehension of the grasping of the theory of self.

In such a dhamma and discipline as this, monks,
that which is confidence in the Teacher
is shown to be perfect,
that which is confidence in dhamma
is shown to be perfect,
that which is fulfilment of the moral habits
is shown to be perfect,
that which is regard and affection for one's fellow dhamma-men
is shown to be perfect.

What is the cause of this?

It comes to be thus, monks,
in a dhamma and discipline that are rightly shown, rightly taught,
leading onwards,
conducive to allayment, taught by one who is fully self-awakened.

Monks, what is the provenance,
what the origin,
what the birth,
what the source of these four (kinds of) grasping?

Craving, monks, is the provenance, craving is the origin,
craving is the birth,
craving [90] is the source of these four (kinds of) grasping.

And what, monks, is the provenance,
what the origin,

what the birth,
what the source of craving?

Feeling, monks, is the provenance, feeling is the origin,
feeling is the birth,
feeling is the source of craving.

And what, monks, is the provenance,
the origin,
the birth,
the source of feeling?

Sensory impingement is the provenance, sensory impingement is the origin, sensory impingement is the birth, sensory impingement is the source of feeling.

And what, monks, is the provenance,
the origin,
the birth,
the source of sensory impingement?

The six bases of sensory impression, monks, is the provenance,
the six bases of sensory impression is the origin, the six bases of sensory impression is the birth, the six bases of sensory impression is the source of sensory impingement.

And what, monks, is the provenance,
the origin,
the birth,
the source of the six bases of sensory impression?

Name-and-form, monks, is the provenance, name-and-form is the origin, name-and-form is the birth, name-and-form is the source of the six bases of sensory impression.

And what, monks, is the provenance,
the origin,
the birth,
the source of name-and-form?

Consciousness, monks, is the provenance, consciousness is the origin, consciousness is the birth, consciousness is the source of name-and-form.

And what, monks, is the provenance,
the origin,
the birth,
the source of consciousness?

The karma-formations, monks, are the provenance, the karma-formations are the origin, the karma-formations are the birth,
the karma-formations are the source of consciousness.

And what, monks, is the provenance,
the origin,
the birth,
the source of the karma-formations?

Ignorance, monks, is the provenance, ignorance is the origin,
ignorance is the birth,
ignorance is the source of the karma-formations.

When, monks, ignorance is got rid of by a monk and knowledge<sup>19</sup> has arisen, he, by the going down of ignorance, by the uprising of knowledge,<sup>20</sup>

neither grasps after the grasping of sense-pleasures, nor grasps after the grasping of view, nor grasp after the grasping of rule and custom, nor grasps after the theory of self.

Not grasping, he is not troubled;
being untroubled
he himself is individually attained to nibbāna,<sup>21</sup> and he comprehends:

'Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close is the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of being such or such.'

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

---

<sup>1</sup> idh'eva; MA. ii. 4, "in this very teaching."

<sup>2</sup> Cf. D. ii. 151. MA. ii. 4, citing A. ii. 238, states that the first samaṇa is a stream-winner, the second a once-returner, the third a non-returner, the fourth an arahant. Cf. the four kinds of recluses at A. ii. 86-90, and see G.S. ii. 96, n. 1.

<sup>3</sup> As at D. ii. 151, 152; A. ii. 238. MA. ii. 5 mentions the ten groups into which the sixty-two "heretical views" fall, and says that they are all recorded in the Brahmajāla Sūta. [DN 1]

<sup>4</sup> MA. ii. 7 says here sammā means with cause, with reason.

<sup>5</sup> Sīhanāda is the roar of the best, of a fearless one, an unequalled one, MA. ii. 7 = AA. ii. 303.

<sup>6</sup> As stated at e.g. M. i. 37.

<sup>7</sup> sahadhammikā. MA. ii. 8 calls them monks, nuns, probationers, male and female novices, men and women lay followers. All these are sahadhammikā, for which a synonym is ariyasāvaka. They are all under one and the same dhamma.

<sup>8</sup> MA. ii. 9 mentions Pūrana Kassapa and the other six (heretical) teachers.

<sup>9</sup> MA. ii. 9 instances the moral habits of those following the goat, cow, ram and dog practices. For the bovine and canine practices see M. Sta. 57.

<sup>10</sup> niṭṭhā, glossed at MA. ii. 9 as pariyosānabhūta, what has become the consummation or culmination. MA. here gives as examples of "many": the Brahma-world is the fulfilment or goal of brahmans, Ābhassarā of ascetics, Subhakiṇha of wanderers, unending mind of Ājīvakas. But in this teaching arahantship is the goal.

<sup>11</sup> anuruddha, MA. ii. 10 to attachment.

<sup>12</sup> paṭiviruddha, MA. ii. 10 by anger.

<sup>13</sup> papañcārāmassa papañcaratino. See G.S. ii. 168, n. 3. MA. ii. 10 says that here synonyms are craving, views, and pride.

<sup>14</sup> bhavadiṭṭhi ca vibhavadiṭṭhi ca. MA. ii. 10 calls the former the Eternalist view, and the latter the Annihilationist view.

<sup>15</sup> nissaraṇa. MA. ii. 11 here calls it nibbāna.

<sup>16</sup> Anguish is here the whole rolling or whirling on, vaṭṭa (in recurrent birth), MA. ii. 12.

<sup>17</sup> Only round and round in animal births, of which MA. ii. 13-14 gives examples.

<sup>18</sup> Of attachment and so on, MA. ii. 15.

<sup>19</sup> vijjā; here knowledge of the Way to arahantship, MA. ii. 18.

<sup>20</sup> As at M. i. 294; S. ii. 82, iii. 47; A. ii. 196.

<sup>21</sup> paccattam yeva parinibbāyati. Cf. M. i. 251-52; S. iii. 54. MA. ii. 18, 299 say sayam eva kilesaparinibbānena parinibbāyati, himself he is brought to nibbāna through the nibbāna (quenching or burning up) of the defilements.

---

Majjhima Nikāya

I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa

2. Sīhanāda Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings

I. The First Fifty Discourses

2. The Division of the Lion's Roar

12. Greater Discourse on the Lion's Roar

Mahā Sīhanāda Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Vesālī outside the town in a woodland thicket to the west.<sup>1</sup>

Now at that time Sunakkhatta, the son of a Licchavi,<sup>2</sup> having recently left this dhamma and discipline, spoke these words to a group (of people) at Vesālī:

"There are no states of further-men,<sup>3</sup> (no) excellent knowledge and insight<sup>4</sup> befitting the ariyans
in the recluse Gotama;
the recluse Gotama teaches dhamma
on (a system) of his own devising
beaten out by reasoning

and based on investigation;<sup>5</sup>
and says that dhamma, taught for the sake of something specific,<sup>6</sup> leads onwards<sup>7</sup> the doer of it to the complete destruction of anguish."

Then the venerable Sāriputta, having dressed early in the morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
entered Vesālī for almsfood.

Then the venerable Sāriputta heard that speech of Sunakkhatta, the son of a Licchavi,
as it was being spoken to the group (of people) in Vesālī:

"There are no states of further-men,
(no) excellent knowledge and insight befitting the ariyans
in the recluse Gotama;
the recluse Gotama teaches dhamma
on (a system) of his own devising
beaten out by reasoning
and based on investigation;
and says that dhamma,
taught for the sake of something specific,
leads onwards [92] the doer of it
to the complete destruction of anguish."

Then the venerable Sāriputta, having walked in Vesālī for almsfood, after the meal
returning from (his quest for<sup>8</sup>) alms,
approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance,
the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the Lord:

"Lord, Sunakkhatta, the son of a Licchavi,
spoke these words to a group (of people) at Vesālī:

'There are no states of further-men,
(no) excellent knowledge and insight befitting the ariyans
in the recluse Gotama;
the recluse Gotama teaches dhamma
on (a system) of his own devising
beaten out by reasoning
and based on investigation;
and says that dhamma,
taught for the sake of something specific,
leads onwards the doer of it
to the complete destruction of anguish.'

"Sāriputta, Sunakkhatta is a man of wrath and folly, and these words were spoken by him in wrath.

Thinking,

'I will speak dispraise,' he, Sāriputta,

the foolish man Sunakkhatta, really spoke praise of the Tathāgata.

For this, Sāriputta, is praise of a Tathāgata: when someone should speak thus:

'Dhamma, taught for the sake of something specific,
leads onwards the doer of it
to the complete destruction of anguish.'

But, Sāriputta, there will not be for Sunakkhatta, the foolish man,
this inference from dhamma about me:

'This is the Lord,
perfected one,
fully Self-awakened One,
endowed with knowledge and right conduct,
well-farer,
knower of the world(s),
incomparable trainer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and men,
the Awakened one, the Lord.'

§

Nor, Sāriputta, will there be for Sunakkhatta,
the foolish man,
this inference from dhamma about me:

'This is the Lord who enjoys the manifold forms of psychic power:

From having been one he becomes manifold; from having been manifold he becomes one;
manifest or invisible,
he goes unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain
as if through air;
he plunges into the ground and shoots up again
as if in water;

he walks upon the water
without parting it
as if on the ground;
sitting cross-legged
he travels through the air
like a bird on the wing.

Even this moon and sun, although of such mighty power and majesty, he rubs and strokes them with his hand.

Even as far as the Brahma-world he has power in respect of his body.'

§

Nor, Sāriputta, will there be for Sunakkhatta,
the foolish man,
[93] this inference from dhamma about me:

'This is the Lord who,
through the purified deva-condition of hearing,
surpassing that of men,
hears both (kinds of) sounds:
deva-like ones and human ones,
and those which are distant and those which are near.'

§

Nor, Sāriputta, will there be for Sunakkhatta,
the foolish man,
this inference from dhamma about me:

'This is the Lord who knows intuitively by mind
the minds of other beings,
of other individuals;

He knows intuitively
of a mind that is full of attachment
that it is full of attachment;

he knows intuitively
of a mind that is without attachment
that it is without attachment;

he knows intuitively
of a mind that is full of aversion
that it is full of aversion;

he knows intuitively
of a mind that is full of confusion
that it is full of confusion;

he knows intuitively
of a mind that is without aversion
that it is without aversion;

he knows intuitively
of a mind that is contracted
that it is contracted;

he knows intuitively
of a mind that is distracted
that it is distracted;

he knows intuitively
of a mind that has become great
that it has become great;

he knows intuitively
of a mind that has not become great
that it has not become great;

he knows intuitively
of a mind with (some other mental state) superior to it that it is a mind with (some other mental state) superior to it;

he knows intuitively
of a mind with no (other mental state) superior to it that it is a mind with no (other mental state) superior to it;

he knows intuitively
of a mind that is composed
that it is composed;

he knows intuitively
of a mind that is not composed
that it is not composed;

he knows intuitively
of a mind that is freed
that it is freed;

he knows intuitively
of a mind that is not freed
that it is not freed.'

---

Now, Sāriputta, a Tathāgata has these ten powers of a Tathāgata,<sup>9</sup> endowed with which powers a Tathāgata claims the leader's place,<sup>10</sup>
roars his lion's roar in assemblies, and sets rolling the Brahma-wheel.<sup>11</sup>

What are the ten?

Herein, Sāriputta, a Tathāgata comprehends as it really is causal occasion as such and what is not causal occasion as such.<sup>12</sup>

Inasmuch, Sāriputta, as a Tathāgata comprehends as it really is causal occasion as such
and what is not causal occasion as such,
this, Sāriputta, is a Tathāgata's power of a Tathāgata,
having which power
a Tathāgata claims the leader's place,
roars his lion's roar in assemblies,
and sets rolling the Brahma-wheel.

§

And again, Sāriputta, a Tathāgata comprehends as it really is the [94] acquiring of deeds for oneself,
past, future and present,
both in their causal occasion
and their result.

Inasmuch, Sāriputta, as a Tathāgata comprehends as it really is
the acquiring of deeds for oneself,
past, future and present,
both in their causal occasion

and their result,
this, Sāriputta, is a Tathāgata's power of a Tathāgata,
having which power
a Tathāgata claims the leader's place,
roars his lion's roar in assemblies,
and sets rolling the Brahma-wheel.

§

And again, Sāriputta, a Tathāgata comprehends as it really is the course<sup>13</sup> leading to all bourns.<sup>14</sup>

Inasmuch, Sāriputta, as a Tathāgata comprehends as it really is the course leading to all bourns,
this, Sāriputta, is a Tathāgata's power of a Tathāgata,
having which power
a Tathāgata claims the leader's place,
roars his lion's roar in assemblies,
and sets rolling the Brahma-wheel.

§

And again, Sāriputta, a Tathāgata comprehends as it really is the world<sup>15</sup>
with its various and diverse features.

Inasmuch, Sāriputta, as a Tathāgata comprehends as it really is
the world
with its various and diverse features

this, Sāriputta, is a Tathāgata's power of a Tathāgata,
having which power
a Tathāgata claims the leader's place,
roars his lion's roar in assemblies,
and sets rolling the Brahma-wheel.

§

And again, Sāriputta, a Tathāgata comprehends as they really are the divers characters of beings.<sup>16</sup>

Inasmuch, Sāriputta, as a Tathāgata also comprehends as they really are the divers characters of beings,
this, Sāriputta, is a Tathāgata's power of a Tathāgata,
having which power
a Tathāgata claims the leader's place,
roars his lion's roar in assemblies,
and sets rolling the Brahma-wheel.

§

And again, Sāriputta, a Tathāgata comprehends as it really is
the higher or lower state of the faculties<sup>17</sup> of other beings,
of other persons.

Inasmuch, Sāriputta, as a Tathāgata comprehends as it really is
the higher or lower state of the faculties

of other beings,
of other persons,
this, Sāriputta, is a Tathāgata's power of a Tathāgata,
having which power
a Tathāgata claims the leader's place,
roars his lion's roar in assemblies,
and sets rolling the Brahma-wheel.

§

And again, Sāriputta, a Tathāgata comprehends as they really are
the defilement of,
the purification of,
the emergence from
attainments in meditation,
the deliverances
and concentration.

Inasmuch, Sāriputta, as a Tathāgata comprehends as they really are
the defilement of,
the purification of,
the emergence from
attainments in meditation,
the deliverances
and concentration,
this, Sāriputta, is a Tathāgata's power of a Tathāgata,
having which power
a Tathāgata claims the leader's place,
roars his lion's roar in assemblies,
and sets rolling the Brahma-wheel.

§

And again, Sāriputta, a Tathāgata remembers his manifold former habitations,
that is to say:

One birth,
and two births,
three, four, five,
ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty,
a hundred,
a thousand births,
and a hundred thousand births,
and many an eon of integration,
and many an eon of disintegration,
and many an eon of integration-disintegration, thinking:

'Such and such was I by name,
having such a clan,
such a colour,
so was I nourished,
I experienced this and that pleasure and pain,
so did the span of life end.

As that one I,
passing from this,
rose up again elsewhere.

There, too, such a one was I by name,
having such a clan,
such a colour,
so was I nourished,
experienced this or that pleasure and pain,
so did the span of life end.

I, deceasing thence,
rose up here.'

Thus with all their modes and detail, does [95] he remember his manifold former habitations.

Inasmuch, Sāriputta, as a Tathāgata remembers his manifold former habitations,
that is to say:

One birth,
and two births,
three, four, five,
ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty,
a hundred,
a thousand births,
and a hundred thousand births,
and many an eon of integration,
and many an eon of disintegration,
and many an eon of integration-disintegration, thinking:

'Such and such was I by name,
having such a clan,
such a colour,
so was I nourished,
I experienced this and that pleasure and pain,
so did the span of life end.

As that one I,
passing from this,
rose up again elsewhere.

There, too, such a one was I by name,
having such a clan,
such a colour,
so was I nourished,

experienced this or that pleasure and pain,
so did the span of life end.

I, deceasing thence,
rose up here.'

and thus with all their modes and detail, he remember his manifold former habitations,
this, Sāriputta, is a Tathāgata's power of a Tathāgata,
having which power
a Tathāgata claims the leader's place,
roars his lion's roar in assemblies,
and sets rolling the Brahma-wheel.

§

And again, Sāriputta, a Tathāgata,
with his purified deva vision,
surpassing that of men,
sees beings as they are deceasing and uprising -
he comprehends that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going
according to the consequences of their deeds,
and thinks:

'Indeed, these worthy beings
who were possessed of wrong conduct in body,
in speech,
in thought,

scoffers at the ariyans,
of wrong view,
incurring deeds consequent on a wrong view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying, arise in the sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

But, on the other hand,
these worthy beings,
endowed with good conduct in body,
speech,
and thought,
not scoffers at the ariyans,
of right view,
incurring deeds consequent on right view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying
arise in a good bourn,
the heaven world.'

In this way,
with his purified deva vision,
surpassing that of men,
he sees beings as they are deceasing and uprising;
he comprehends that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going according to their deeds.

Inasmuch, Sāriputta, as a Tathāgata,
with his purified deva vision,
surpassing that of men,
sees beings as they are deceasing and uprising -

he comprehends that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going
according to the consequences of their deeds,
and thinks:

'Indeed, these worthy beings
who were possessed of wrong conduct in body,
in speech,
in thought,
scoffers at the ariyans,
of wrong view,
incurring deeds consequent on a wrong view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
arise in the sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

But, on the other hand,
these worthy beings,
endowed with good conduct in body,
speech,
and thought,
not scoffers at the ariyans,
of right view,
incurring deeds consequent on right view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying
arise in a good bourn,
the heaven world.'

In this way,
with his purified deva vision,

surpassing that of men,
he sees beings as they are deceasing and uprising;
he comprehends that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going according to their deeds,
this, Sāriputta, is a Tathāgata's power of a Tathāgata,
having which power
a Tathāgata claims the leader's place,
roars his lion's roar in assemblies,
and sets rolling the Brahma-wheel.

§

And again, Sāriputta, a Tathāgata, by the destruction of the cankers,
enters on
and abides in freedom of mind, freedom through wisdom
that are cankerless,
having realised them here and now through his own super-knowledge.

Inasmuch, Sāriputta, as a Tathāgata,
by the destruction of the cankers,
enters on
and abides in freedom of mind,
freedom through wisdom
that are cankerless,
having realised them here and now

through his own super-knowledge,
this, Sāriputta, is a Tathāgata's power of a Tathāgata,
having which power
a Tathāgata claims the leader's place,
roars his lion's roar in assemblies,
and sets rolling the Brahma-wheel.

These, Sāriputta,
are the Tathāgata's ten powers of a Tathāgata,
endowed with which powers
the Tathāgata claims the leader's place,
roars his lion's roar in assemblies,
and sets rolling the Brahma-wheel.

Whoever, Sāriputta, knowing me thus,
seeing me thus,
should speak thus:

'There are no states of further-men,
(no) excellent knowledge and insight
befitting the ariyans
in the recluse Gotama;
the recluse Gotama teaches dhamma
on (a system of) his own devising
beaten out by reasoning
and based on investigation'
if he does not retract that speech, Sāriputta,
if he does not retract [96] that thought,
if he does not give up that view,
he is consigned to Niraya Hell just as a burden is set aside.<sup>18</sup>

Sāriputta, as a monk, endowed with moral habit,
endowed with concentration,
endowed with intuitive wisdom,

might attain profound knowledge here-now,
so I say that this, Sāriputta, results thus:<sup>19</sup>

Not retracting that speech,
not retracting that thought,
not giving up that view,
he is consigned to Niraya Hell
just as a burden is set aside.

---

Sāriputta, there are these four convictions<sup>20</sup> of a Tathāgata endowed with which convictions
a Tathāgata claims the leader's place,
roars his lion's roar in assemblies,
and sets rolling the Brahma-wheel.

What are the four?

If anyone says:

'These matters are not fully awakened to although you claim to be fully self-awakened'

-as to this, I do not behold the ground, Sāriputta, on which a recluse or a brahman
or a deva or Mara or Brahma
or anyone in the world
can legitimately reprove me.

Because I, Sāriputta,
do not behold this ground,
I fare along attained to security,

attained to fearlessness,
attained to conviction.

If anyone says:

'These cankers are not utterly destroyed, although you claim to be one whose cankers are destroyed,'

-as to this, I do not behold the ground, Sāriputta,
on which a recluse or a brahman
or a deva or Mara or Brahma
or anyone in the world
can legitimately reprove me.

If anyone says:

'In following those things called stumbling-blocks there is no stumbling-block at all,'<sup>21</sup>

-as to this, I do not behold the ground, Sāriputta,
on which a recluse or a brahman
or a deva or Mara or Brahma
or anyone in the world
can legitimately reprove me.

If anyone says:

'Dhamma, taught by you for the sake of something specific, does not lead onward the doer of it
to the complete destruction of anguish,'

-as to this, I do not behold the ground, Sāriputta,
on which a recluse or a brahman
or a deva or Mara or Brahma

or anyone in the world
can legitimately reprove me.

These, Sāriputta,
are the four convictions of a Tathāgata,
endowed [97] with which convictions
the Tathāgata claims the leader's place,
roars his lion's roar in assemblies,
and sets rolling the Brahma-wheel.

Whoever, Sāriputta, knowing me thus,
seeing me thus,
should speak thus:

'There are no states of further-men,
(no) excellent knowledge and insight
befitting the ariyans
in the recluse Gotama;
the recluse Gotama teaches dhamma
on (a system of) his own devising
beaten out by reasoning
and based on investigation'
if he does not retract that speech, Sāriputta,
if he does not retract that thought,
if he does not give up that view,
he is consigned to Niraya Hell
just as a burden is set aside.

Sāriputta, as a monk, endowed with moral habit,
endowed with concentration,
endowed with intuitive wisdom,
might attain profound knowledge here-now,
so I say that this, Sāriputta,
results thus:

Not retracting that speech,
not retracting that thought,
not giving up that view,
he is consigned to Niraya Hell
just as a burden is set aside.

---

These, Sāriputta, are the eight (kinds of) assemblies.<sup>22</sup>

What are the eight?

Assemblies of nobles,
assemblies of brahmans, assemblies of householders, assemblies of recluses, assemblies of the retinue of the Four Great Regents, assemblies of the Thirty-Three, Māra's assemblies,<sup>23</sup> assemblies of Brahmas.

These eight, Sāriputta, are the assemblies.

§

A Tathāgata who is endowed with those four convictions, Sāriputta, approaches these eight assemblies, enters them.

Now I, Sāriputta,
call to mind approaching many hundred assemblies of nobles<sup>24</sup>.

Yet before I sat down there and before I held converse there
and before I fell into conversation there,
I did not behold, Sāriputta,
any ground for thinking that fear or nervousness
would come upon me there.

So I, Sāriputta,
not beholding this ground,
fare along attained to security,
attained to fearlessness,
attained to conviction.

§

Now I, Sāriputta,
call to mind approaching many hundred assemblies of brahmans.

Yet before I sat down there
and before I held converse there
and before I fell into conversation there,
I did not behold, Sāriputta,
any ground for thinking that fear or nervousness
would come upon me there.

So I, Sāriputta,
not beholding this ground,
fare along attained to security,
attained to fearlessness,
attained to conviction.

§

Now I, Sāriputta,
call to mind approaching many hundred assemblies of householders.

Yet before I sat down there
and before I held converse there
and before I fell into conversation there,
I did not behold, Sāriputta,
any ground for thinking that fear or nervousness
would come upon me there.

So I, Sāriputta,
not beholding this ground,
fare along attained to security,
attained to fearlessness,
attained to conviction.

§

Now I, Sāriputta,
call to mind approaching many hundred assemblies of recluses.

Yet before I sat down there
and before I held converse there
and before I fell into conversation there,
I did not behold, Sāriputta,
any ground for thinking that fear or nervousness
would come upon me there.

So I, Sāriputta,
not beholding this ground,
fare along attained to security,
attained to fearlessness,
attained to conviction.

§

Now I, Sāriputta,
call to mind approaching many hundred assemblies of the retinue of the Four Great Regents.

Yet before I sat down there
and before I held converse there
and before I fell into conversation there,
I did not behold, Sāriputta,
any ground for thinking that fear or nervousness
would come upon me there.

So I, Sāriputta,
not beholding this ground,
fare along attained to security,
attained to fearlessness,
attained to conviction.

§

Now I, Sāriputta,
call to mind approaching many hundred assemblies of the Thirty-Three.

Yet before I sat down there
and before I held converse there
and before I fell into conversation there,
I did not behold, Sāriputta,
any ground for thinking that fear or nervousness
would come upon me there.

So I, Sāriputta,
not beholding this ground,
fare along attained to security,
attained to fearlessness,
attained to conviction.

§

Now I, Sāriputta,
call to mind approaching many hundred of Mara's assemblies.

Yet before I sat down there
and before I held converse there
and before I fell into conversation there,
I did not behold, Sāriputta,
any ground for thinking that fear or nervousness
would come upon me there.

So I, Sāriputta,
not beholding this ground,
fare along attained to security,
attained to fearlessness,
attained to conviction.

§

Now I, Sāriputta,
call to mind approaching many hundred assemblies of Brahmas.

Yet before I sat down there
and before I held converse there
and before I fell into conversation there,
I did not behold, Sāriputta,
any ground for thinking that fear or nervousness
would come upon me there.

So I, Sāriputta,
not beholding this ground,
fare along attained to security,
attained to fearlessness,
attained to conviction.

Whoever, Sāriputta, knowing me thus,
seeing me thus,
should speak thus:

'There are no states of further-men,
(no) excellent knowledge and insight
befitting the ariyans
in the recluse Gotama;
the recluse Gotama teaches dhamma
on (a system of) his own devising
beaten out by reasoning
and based on investigation'
if he does not retract that speech, Sāriputta,
if he does not retract that thought,
if he does not give up that view,
he is consigned to Niraya Hell
just as a burden is set aside.

Sāriputta, as a monk, endowed with moral habit,
endowed with concentration,
endowed with intuitive wisdom,
might attain profound knowledge here-now,
so I say that this, Sāriputta,
results thus:

Not retracting that speech,
not retracting that thought,
not giving up that view,
he is consigned to Niraya Hell
just as a burden is set aside.

---

These, Sāriputta, are the four modes of life.<sup>25</sup>

What are the four?

The mode of life born from an egg,
the mode of life born from a womb, the mode of life born from moisture, the mode of life of spontaneous uprising.<sup>26</sup>

§

And what, Sāriputta,
is the mode of life born from an egg?

Whatever beings are produced, Sāriputta, breaking through an egg-shell, this, Sāriputta, is called
the mode of life born from an egg.

§

And what, Sāriputta,
is the mode of life born from a womb?

Whatever beings are produced, Sāriputta, breaking through a membranous sheath, this, Sāriputta,
is called the mode of life born from a womb.

§

And what, Sāriputta,
is the [98] mode of life born of moisture?

Whatever beings are produced, Sāriputta, in rotting fish or in rotting corpses or rotting rice
or in a dirty pool near a village, this, Sāriputta, is called the mode of life born of moisture.

§

And what, Sāriputta, is the mode of life of spontaneous uprising?

Devas,<sup>27</sup> those in Niraya Hell, and some men
and some in the sorrowful state - this is called, Sāriputta, the mode of life of spontaneous uprising.

These, Sāriputta, are the four modes of life.

§ed1

[34.] These, Sāriputta, are the five bourns.<sup>28</sup>

What are the five?

Niraya Hell,
animal birth,
the realm of the departed,<sup>29</sup> men, devas.

§

I, Sāriputta, comprehend Niraya Hell and the way<sup>30</sup> leading to Niraya Hell and the course<sup>30</sup> leading to Niraya Hell, and that according to how one is faring along
one uprises,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell -
that too I comprehend.

§

And I, Sāriputta, comprehend animal birth and the way leading to animal birth and the course leading to animal birth,
and that according to how one is faring along
one uprises,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
in animal birth -
that too I comprehend.

§

And I, Sāriputta, comprehend the realm of the departed and the way leading to the realm of the departed and the course leading to the realm of the departed,
and that according to how one is faring along

one uprises,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
in the realm of the departed -
that too I comprehend.

§

And I, Sāriputta, comprehend men, and the way leading to the world of men and the course leading to the world of men,
and that according to how one is faring along
one uprises,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
among men -
that too I comprehend.

§

And I, Sāriputta, comprehend devas and the way leading to deva-worlds and the course leading to deva-worlds,
and that according to how one is faring along
one uprises,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
in a good [99] bourn, a heaven-world-that too I comprehend.

§

And I, Sāriputta, comprehend nibbāna<sup>31</sup> and the way leading to nibbāna and the course leading to nibbāna,
and that according to how one is faring along,
by the destruction of the cankers one enters on
and abides in
the freedom of mind,
the freedom through intuitive wisdom
which are cankerless,
having realised them here-now by one's own super-knowledge - that too I comprehend.

§

Now I, Sāriputta, with my mind
comprehend the mind of some person thus:

As that person fares along
and as he is going along and has entered that way,
so will he arise
at the breaking up of the body after dying
in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

After a time I see
by purified deva vision,

surpassing that of men
that, at the breaking up of the body after dying, he has arisen in a sorrowful state, va bad bourn, the abyss, Niraya Hell, and is experiencing feelings that are exclusively<sup>32</sup> painful, sharp,
severe.

Sāriputta, it is as if there were a pit of charcoal, deeper than man's height,
full of embers
that are neither flaming nor smoking;<sup>33</sup>
then a man might come along
overcome and overpowered by the hot-weather heat,
exhausted,
parched and thirsty,<sup>34</sup> heading direct for that pit of charcoal itself
by the one sole way.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'As that good man is faring along
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way, so will he come to that pit of charcoal itself.'

After a time he may see him, fallen into that charcoal pit, experiencing feelings that are exclusively painful,
sharp,
severe.

Even so do I, Sāriputta, with my mind
comprehend the mind of some person thus:

As that person fares along
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way,
so will he arise
at the breaking up of the body after dying
in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

After a time I see
by purified deva vision,
surpassing that of men,
that, at the breaking up of the body after dying, he has arisen in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell,
and is experiencing feelings that are exclusively painful,
sharp,
severe.

§

Then I, Sāriputta, with my mind
comprehend the mind of some person thus:

As that person fares along
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way,
so will he arise,

at the breaking up of the body after dying,
in an animal birth.

After a time
I see with [100] purified deva vision,
surpassing that of men,
that, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
he has arisen in an animal birth and is experiencing feelings which are painful,<sup>35</sup>
sharp,
severe.

Sāriputta, it is as if there were a cesspool, deeper than a man's height,
full of filth;
then a man might come along
overcome and overpowered by the hot-weather heat,
exhausted,
parched and thirsty,
heading direct for that cesspool itself
by the one sole way.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'As that good man is faring along,
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way, so will he come to that cesspool itself.'

After a time he may see him, fallen into that cesspool and experiencing feelings that are painful, sharp,
severe.

Even so do I, Sāriputta, with my mind
comprehend the mind of some person thus:

As that person fares along
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way,
so will he arise,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
in an animal birth.

After a time
I see with purified deva vision,
surpassing that of men,
that, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
he has arisen in an animal birth and is experiencing feelings which are painful, sharp,
severe.

§

Then I, Sāriputta, with my mind
comprehend the mind of some person thus:

As that person fares along
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way,
so will he arise,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
in the realm of the departed.

After a time I see
I see with purified deva vision,

surpassing that of men,
that, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
he has arisen in the realm of the departed
and is experiencing feelings that are abundantly painful.<sup>36</sup>

Sāriputta, it is like a tree growing on uneven ground, with sparse leaves and foliage (giving) patchy shade.<sup>37</sup>

Then a man might come along
overcome and overpowered by the hot-weather heat,
exhausted,
parched
and thirsty,
heading direct for that tree itself
by the one sole way.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'As that good man is faring along
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way, so will he come to that tree itself.'

After a time
he may see him sitting down
or lying down
in the shade of that tree, experiencing feelings that are abundantly painful.

Even so do I, Sāriputta, with my mind comprehend the mind of some person thus:

As that person fares along
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way,
so will he arise,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
in the realm of the departed.

After a time I see
I see with purified deva vision,
surpassing that of men,
that, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
he has arisen in the realm of the departed
and is experiencing feelings that are abundantly painful.

§

Then I, Sāriputta, with my mind
comprehend the mind of some person thus:

As that person fares along
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way,
so will he arise,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
among men.

After a time I see
I see with purified deva vision,
surpassing that of men,
that, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
he has arisen among men

and is experiencing feelings that are abundantly pleasant.<sup>38</sup>

Sāriputta, it is like a tree growing [101] on even ground, with dense leaves and foliage (giving) thick shade.

Then a man might come along
overcome and overpowered by the hot-weather heat,
exhausted,
parched,
thirsty,
heading direct for that tree itself
by the one sole way.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might speak thus:

'As that good man is faring along,
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way, so he will come to that tree itself.'

After a time
he may see him sitting down
or lying down
in the shade of that tree, experiencing feelings that are abundantly pleasant.

Even so do I, Sāriputta, with my mind
comprehend the mind of some person thus:

As that person fares along
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way,

so will he arise,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
among men.

After a time I see
I see with purified deva vision,
surpassing that of men,
that, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
he has arisen among men
and is experiencing feelings that are abundantly pleasant.

§

Then I, Sāriputta, with my mind comprehend the mind
of some person thus:

As that person fares along
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way,
so will he arise,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

After a time I see
I see with purified deva vision,
surpassing that of men,
that, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
he has arisen in a good bourn,
a heaven world

and is experiencing feelings
that are exclusively pleasant.

Sāriputta, it is as if there were a long house<sup>39</sup> where there might be a building with a gabled roof, smeared inside and out,<sup>40</sup> protected from the wind, with bolts that are fastened,<sup>41</sup> windows<sup>42</sup> that are closed.<sup>43</sup>

Therein might be a divan<sup>44</sup> spread with a long-haired coverlet,<sup>45</sup> spread with a white coverlet, spread with a wool coverlet bespread with flowers, a splendid sheeting
of the hide of the kadali-deer, with an awning overhead and a scarlet cushion at either end.<sup>46</sup>

Then a man might come along overcome
and overpowered by the hot-weather heat,
exhausted,
parched,
thirsty,
heading direct for that long house itself
by the one sole way.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'As that good [102] man is faring along
and as he is going along

and has entered on that way, so will he come to that long house itself.'

After a time
he may see him sitting down
or lying down
in that long house,
in that building with the gabled roof,
on that divan,
experiencing feelings
that are exclusively pleasant.

Even so do I, Sāriputta, with my mind comprehend of some person thus:

As that person fares along
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way,
so will he arise,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

After a time I see
I see with purified deva vision,
surpassing that of men,
that, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
he has arisen in a good bourn,
a heaven world
and is experiencing feelings
that are exclusively pleasant.

[40.] Then I, Sāriputta, with my mind
comprehend the mind of some person thus:

As that person fares along
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way,
so will he,
by the destruction of the cankers, enter and abide in the freedom of mind,
the freedom through intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
having realised them here-now
by his own super-knowledge.

After a time I see that he,
by the destruction of the cankers, having entered on freedom of mind,
freedom through intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
and having realised them here-now
by his own super-knowledge,
is abiding in them,
experiencing feelings
that are exclusively pleasant.<sup>47</sup>

Sāriputta, it is as if there were a lovely lotus-pool<sup>48</sup> with clear water,
sweet water,
cool water,
limpid,
with beautiful banks,<sup>49</sup> and close to it a dim forest thicket.

Then a man might come along
overcome
and overpowered by the hot-weather heat,
exhausted,
parched
and thirsty,
heading direct for that pond itself
by the one sole way.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'As that good man is faring along
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way, so will he come to that lotus-pool itself.'

After a time he may see that he has plunged into that lotus-pool, has bathed in it
and drunk of it,
and having allayed all distress, exhaustion
and fever,
has got out again<sup>50</sup> and is sitting down
or lying down
in that forest thicket<sup>51</sup> experiencing feelings
that are exclusively pleasant.

Even so do I, Sāriputta, with my mind
comprehend the mind
of some person thus:

As that person is faring along
and as he is going along
and has entered on that way,
so will he,
by the destruction of the cankers, having entered on freedom of mind,
freedom through [103] intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
having realised them here-now
by his own super-knowledge,
abide therein.

After a time I see that he,
by the destruction of the cankers, having entered on freedom of mind,
freedom through intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
having realised them here-now
by his own super-knowledge, is abiding therein,
experiencing feelings
that are exclusively pleasant.

These, Sāriputta, are the five bourns.

Whoever, Sāriputta, knowing me thus,
seeing me thus,
should speak thus:

'There are no states of further-men,
(no) excellent knowledge and insight
befitting the ariyans
in the recluse Gotama;
the recluse Gotama teaches dhamma
on (a system of) his own devising
beaten out by reasoning

and based on investigation'
if he does not retract that speech, Sāriputta,
if he does not retract that thought,
if he does not give up that view,
he is consigned to Niraya Hell
just as a burden is set aside.

Sāriputta, as a monk, endowed with moral habit,
endowed with concentration,
endowed with intuitive wisdom,
might attain profound knowledge here-now,
so I say that this, Sāriputta,
results thus:

Not retracting that speech,
not retracting that thought,
not giving up that view,
he is consigned to Niraya Hell
just as a burden is set aside.

---

Now I, Sāriputta, as one who fares, fully know a Brahma-faring<sup>52</sup> that is endowed with four constituent parts:<sup>53</sup>

I became an ascetic,
the foremost ascetic;
I became loathly,
the foremost loathly one;
I became a detester,<sup>54</sup> the foremost detester;
I became aloof,
the foremost aloof one.

In that,<sup>55</sup> Sāriputta, there was this for me
through asceticism:

I was unclothed,<sup>56</sup> flouting life's decencies,<sup>57</sup> licking my hands (after [104] meals),
not one to come when asked to do so,
not one to stand still when asked to do so.<sup>58</sup>

I did not consent (to accept food) offered to (me) or specially prepared for (me) nor to (accept) an invitation (to a meal).

I did not accept (food) straight from a cooking pot or pan,
nor within the threshold,
nor among the faggots,
nor among the rice-pounders,<sup>59</sup> nor when two people were eating,<sup>60</sup> nor from a pregnant woman, nor from one giving suck,<sup>61</sup> nor from one co-habiting with a man,<sup>62</sup> nor from gleanings,<sup>63</sup> nor near where a dog is standing,
nor where flies are swarming,
nor fish,
nor meat.

I drank neither fermented liquor nor spirits
nor rice-gruel.

I was a one-house-man, a one-piece-man,<sup>64</sup>
or a two-house-man,

a two-piece-man
or a three-house-man,
a three-piece-man
or a four-house-man,
a four-piece-man
or a five-house-man,
a five-piece-man
or a six-house-man,
a six-piece-man
or a seven-house-man,
a seven-piece-man.

I subsisted on one little offering,<sup>65</sup> and I subsisted on two little offerings and I subsisted on three little offerings and I subsisted on four little offerings and I subsisted on five little offerings and I subsisted on six little offerings and I subsisted on seven little offerings.

I took food only once a day,
and once in two days
and once in three days
and once in four days
and once in five days
and once in six days
and once in seven days.

Then I lived intent on the practice of eating rice at regular fort-nightly intervals.

I came to be one feeding on<sup>66</sup> potherbs or feeding on millet
or on wild rice
or on snippets of skin
or on water-plants

or on the red powder of rice husks
or on the discarded scum of rice on the boil or on the flour of oil-seeds or grass
or cowdung.

I was one who subsisted
on forest roots and fruits, eating the fruits that had fallen.

I wore coarse hempen cloths,<sup>67</sup> and I wore mixed cloths,<sup>68</sup> and I wore cerements, and I wore rags taken from the dust heap, and I wore tree-bark fibre, and I wore antelope skins, and I wore strips of antelope skin, and I wore cloths of kusa-grass, and I wore cloths of bark, and I wore cloths of wood shavings, and I wore [105] a blanket of human hair, and I wore a blanket of animal hair, and I wore owls' feathers.

I was one who plucked out
the hair of his head and beard, intent on the practice of plucking out
the hair of head and beard.

I became one who stood upright,
refusing a seat;
I became one who squats on his haunches,
intent on the practice of squatting.

I became one for covered thorns,<sup>69</sup>
I made my bed on covered thorns; and I was intent on the practice of going down to the water to bathe up to three times in an evening.<sup>70</sup>

Thus in many a way did I live intent on the practice of mortifying
and tormenting my body.

This then was for me, Sāriputta,
through asceticism.

§

In that, Sāriputta,
there was this for me through loathliness:

On my body there accumulated the dust and dirt of years, so that it fell off in shreds.

Just as the stump of the tindukā-tree comes to accumulate the dust and dirt of years, so that it falls off in shreds, even so, Sāriputta, on my body there accumulated the dust and dirt of years,
so that it fell off in shreds.

But it did not occur to me, Sāriputta, to think:

'Indeed now, I could rub off this dust and dirt
with my hand,

or others could rub off this dust and dirt for me with their hands.'

It did not occur to me thus, Sāriputta.

This then was for me, Sāriputta, through loathliness.

§

In that, Sāriputta, there was this for me through detesting:

Sāriputta, whether I was going out, whether I was returning, there was set up in me kindness even towards a drop of water, and I thought:

'Do not let me bring small creatures in their various places<sup>71</sup> to destruction.'

This then was for me, Sāriputta, through detesting.

§

In that, Sāriputta, there was this for me through aloofness:

If I had plunged into a certain stretch of forest,<sup>72</sup> and if I saw a cow-herd or a cattle-herd
or a gatherer of grass or sticks or anyone roaming about for bulbs and roots and so on,<sup>73</sup> I fled from grove to grove,
from thicket to thicket,
from low ground to low ground,
from high ground to high ground.

What was the reason for this?

[106] I thought:

'Do not let them see me,
do not let me see them.'<sup>74</sup>

Even as a deer in the forest, Sāriputta, having seen a man, flees from grove to grove,
from thicket to thicket,
from low ground to low ground,
from high ground to high ground,
even so did I, Sāriputta, when I saw a cow-herd
or a cattle-herd
or a gatherer of grass or sticks or anyone roaming about for bulbs and roots and so on, flee from grove to grove,
from thicket to thicket,
from low ground to low ground,
from high ground to high ground.

What was the reason for this?

I thought:

'Do not let them see me,
do not let me see them.'

This then was for me, Sāriputta, through aloofness.

§

Then I, Sāriputta,
having approached on all fours those cow-pens that the cows had quitted, the cow-herds having departed,<sup>75</sup> I subsisted there on the droppings of the young suckling calves.

So long as my own dung and urine held out,
I subsisted on that.

This then was for me, Sāriputta, through partaking of the great filthy things.<sup>76</sup>

§

Then I, Sāriputta,
having plunged into a terrifying forest thicket, stayed there.

It comes to be said
of a terrifying forest thicket, because it is so terrifying;

'Whoever, not rid of attachment, enters that forest thicket, his hair stands on end.'

Then I, Sāriputta,
during the cold winter nights, between the 'eights'
in a time of snowfall,<sup>77</sup> spent such nights as these
in the open air,
the days in the forest thicket.

I spent the days of the last month of the hot weather
in the open air,
the nights
in the forest thicket.<sup>78</sup>

Then, Sāriputta,
this verse,
never heard before,
occurred spontaneously to me:

Now scorched, now cold, alone in terrifying forest, Naked and sitting fireless, the sage is intent on his quest.<sup>79</sup>

Then I, Sāriputta,
lay down to sleep in a cemetery, leaning on a skeleton.<sup>80</sup>

Cowherds' boys,<sup>81</sup> having come up to me,
spat and staled on me,

and showered me with dust and stuck twigs into my [107] ears.

But I, Sāriputta, well know that I was not the creator of a malign heart against them.<sup>82</sup>

This then came to be for me, Sāriputta, through abiding in even-mindedness.<sup>83</sup>

§

There are, Sāriputta,
some recluses and brahmans who speak thus
and are of this view:

'Purity is through food.'

These speak thus:

'We subsist on jujube fruits,' and they eat jujube fruits and they eat crushed jujube fruits and they drink jujube fruit water, and they make use of jujube fruits in a variety of ways.<sup>84</sup>

Now I, Sāriputta, claim to have subsisted on one single jujube fruit.

It may be, Sāriputta, that this occurs to you:

'But at that time
the jujube fruit was large.'

But this must not be regarded in this way, Sāriputta, for the jujube fruit was then as it is now.

While I, Sāriputta, was subsisting on one single jujube fruit, my body became exceedingly emaciated.<sup>85</sup>

Because I ate so little,
all my limbs became like the knotted joints of withered creepers;
because I ate so little,
my buttocks became like a bullock's hoof;
because I ate so little,
my protruding backbone
became like a string of balls;
because I ate so little,
my gaunt ribs
became like the crazy rafters
of a tumble-down shed;
because I ate so little,
the pupils of my eyes
appeared lying low and deep in their sockets
as sparkles of water
in a deep well
appear lying low and deep;
because I ate so little,
my scalp became shrivelled
and shrunk
as a bitter white gourd
cut before it is ripe
becomes shrivelled and shrunk
by a hot wind.

If I, Sāriputta, thought:

'I will touch the skin of my belly,'

it was my backbone
that I took hold of.

If I thought:

'I will touch my backbone,'

it was the skin of my belly
that I took hold of.

For because I ate so little,
the skin on my belly, Sāriputta,
came to be cleaving to my backbone.

If I, Sāriputta, thought:

'I will obey the calls of nature,'

I fell down on my face then and there,
because I ate so little.

If I, Sāriputta,
soothing my body,
stroked my limbs with my hand,
the hairs,
rotted at the roots,
fell away from my body
as I stroked my limbs with my hand,
because I ate so little.

§

There are, Sāriputta,
some recluses and brahmans
who speak thus
and are of this view:

'Purity is through food.'

These speak thus:

'We subsist on beans,' and they eat beans

and they eat crushed beans and they drink bean water, and they make use of beans in a variety of ways.

Now I, Sāriputta, claim to have subsisted on one single bean.

It may be, Sāriputta, that this occurs to you:

'But at that time
the bean was large.'

But this must not be regarded in this way, Sāriputta, for the bean was then as it is now.

While I, Sāriputta, was subsisting on one single bean, my body became exceedingly emaciated.

Because I ate so little,
all my limbs became like the knotted joints of withered creepers;
because I ate so little,
my buttocks became like a bullock's hoof;
because I ate so little,
my protruding backbone

became like a string of balls;
because I ate so little,
my gaunt ribs
became like the crazy rafters
of a tumble-down shed;
because I ate so little,
the pupils of my eyes
appeared lying low and deep in their sockets
as sparkles of water
in a deep well
appear lying low and deep;
because I ate so little,
my scalp became shrivelled
and shrunk
as a bitter white gourd
cut before it is ripe
becomes shrivelled and shrunk
by a hot wind.

If I, Sāriputta, thought:

'I will touch the skin of my belly,'

it was my backbone
that I took hold of.

If I thought:

'I will touch my backbone,'

it was the skin of my belly
that I took hold of.

For because I ate so little,
the skin on my belly, Sāriputta,
came to be cleaving to my backbone.

If I, Sāriputta, thought:

'I will obey the calls of nature,'

I fell down on my face then and there,
because I ate so little.

If I, Sāriputta,
soothing my body,
stroked my limbs with my hand,
the hairs,
rotted at the roots,
fell away from my body
as I stroked my limbs with my hand,
because I ate so little.

§

There are, Sāriputta,
some recluses and brahmans
who speak thus
and are of this view:

'Purity is through food.'

These speak thus:

We subsist on sesamum,' and they eat sesamum and they eat crushed sesamum and they drink sesamum water, and they make use of sesamum

in a variety of ways.

Now I, Sāriputta, claim to have subsisted on one single sesamum.

It may be, Sāriputta, that this occurs to you:

'But at that time
the sesamum was large.'

But this must not be regarded in this way, Sāriputta, for the sesamum was then as it is now.

While I, Sāriputta, was subsisting on one single sesamum,
my body became exceedingly emaciated.

Because I ate so little,
all my limbs became like the knotted joints of withered creepers;
because I ate so little,
my buttocks became like a bullock's hoof;
because I ate so little,
my protruding backbone
became like a string of balls;
because I ate so little,
my gaunt ribs
became like the crazy rafters
of a tumble-down shed;
because I ate so little,
the pupils of my eyes
appeared lying low and deep in their sockets
as sparkles of water
in a deep well
appear lying low and deep;
because I ate so little,
my scalp became shrivelled
and shrunk

as a bitter white gourd
cut before it is ripe
becomes shrivelled and shrunk
by a hot wind.

If I, Sāriputta, thought:

'I will touch the skin of my belly,'

it was my backbone
that I took hold of.

If I thought:

'I will touch my backbone,'

it was the skin of my belly
that I took hold of.

For because I ate so little,
the skin on my belly, Sāriputta,
came to be cleaving to my backbone.

If I, Sāriputta, thought:

'I will obey the calls of nature,'

I fell down on my face then and there,
because I ate so little.

If I, Sāriputta,
soothing my body,
stroked my limbs with my hand,
the hairs,
rotted at the roots,
fell away from my body

as I stroked my limbs with my hand,
because I ate so little.

§

There are, Sāriputta,
some recluses and brahmans
who speak thus
and are of this view:

'Purity is through food.'

These speak thus:

We subsist on rice-grains,' and they eat rice-grains and they eat crushed [108] rice-grains and they drink rice-grain water, and they make use of rice-grains

in a variety of ways.

Now I, Sāriputta, claim to have subsisted on one single rice-grain.

It may be, Sāriputta, that this occurs to you:

'But at that time
the rice-grain was large.'

But this must not be regarded in this way, Sāriputta, for the rice-grain was then as it is now.

While I, Sāriputta, was subsisting on one single rice-grain,
my body became exceedingly emaciated.

Because I ate so little,
all my limbs became like the knotted joints of withered creepers;
because I ate so little,
my buttocks became like a bullock's hoof;
because I ate so little,
my protruding backbone
became like a string of balls;
because I ate so little,
my gaunt ribs
became like the crazy rafters
of a tumble-down shed;
because I ate so little,
the pupils of my eyes
appeared lying low and deep in their sockets
as sparkles of water
in a deep well
appear lying low and deep;
because I ate so little,
my scalp became shrivelled
and shrunk
as a bitter white gourd
cut before it is ripe
becomes shrivelled and shrunk
by a hot wind.

If I, Sāriputta, thought:

'I will touch the skin of my belly,'

it was my backbone
that I took hold of.

If I thought:

'I will touch my backbone,'

it was the skin of my belly
that I took hold of.

For because I ate so little,
the skin on my belly, Sāriputta,
came to be cleaving to my backbone.

If I, Sāriputta, thought:

'I will obey the calls of nature,'

I fell down on my face then and there,
because I ate so little.

If I, Sāriputta,
soothing my body,
stroked my limbs with my hand,
the hairs,
rotted at the roots,
fell away from my body
as I stroked my limbs with my hand,
because I ate so little.

But I, Sāriputta,
even by this procedure,
by this course,
by this mortification,
did not reach states of further-men or the excellent knowledge and insight
befitting the ariyans.

What was the cause of this?

It was that by these there is no reaching the ariyan intuitive wisdom which, when reached,

is ariyan,
leading onwards,
and which leads onwards the doer of it to the complete destruction of anguish.

§

Now, Sāriputta,
there are some recluses and brahmans who speak thus
and are of this view:

'Purity is through faring on.'<sup>86</sup>

But, Sāriputta, it is not easy to find that faring-on that I have not formerly fared-on in during this long past
except among the devas of the Pure Abodes.

For if I, Sāriputta,
were to have fared on
among the devas of the Pure Abodes,
I could not have come back again to this world.

§

Now, Sāriputta,
there are some recluses and brahmans

who speak thus
and are of this view:

'Purity is through uprising.

But, Sāriputta,
it is not easy to find that uprising that has not formerly been uprisen in by me
during this long past,
except among the devas of the Pure Abodes.

For if I, Sāriputta,
were to have uprisen
among the devas of the Pure Abodes,
I could not have come back again to this world.

§

Now, Sāriputta,
there are some recluses and brahmans
who speak thus
and are of this view:

'Purity is through abode.'

But, Sāriputta,
it is not easy to find that abode that I have not abided in
during this long past, except among the devas of the Pure Abodes.<sup>87</sup>

For if I, Sāriputta,
were to have abided among the devas of the Pure Abodes,

I could not have come back again to this world.

§

Now, Sāriputta,
there are some recluses and brahmans
who speak thus
and are of this view:

'Purity is through oblation.'

But, [109] Sāriputta,
it is not easy to find that oblation that has not formerly been offered by me during this long past
when I was a noble, anointed king, or a wealthy brahman.

§

Now, Sāriputta,
there are some recluses and brahmans
who speak thus
and are of this view:

'Purity is through tending the (sacrificial) fire.'

But, Sāriputta,
it is not easy to find that fire that has not formerly been tended by me

during this long past
when I was a noble, anointed king,
or a wealthy brahman.

§

Now, Sāriputta,
there are some recluses and brahmans
who speak thus
and are of this view:

'So long as this good man is young, endowed with the coal-black hair of youth, in his early prime,
so long is he possessed of the utmost lucidity of wisdom.

But when this good man is worn,
old,
stricken in years,
has lived his span,
and is at the close of his life<sup>88</sup> - eighty
or ninety
or a hundred years of age - then he falls from that lucidity of wisdom.'

But this is not to be regarded in this way, Sāriputta.

I, Sāriputta,
am now worn,
old,
stricken in years,
I have lived my span,

and am at the close of my life, being round about eighty.<sup>89</sup>

Sāriputta, I might have four disciples here, each of a hundred years' life-span,
living a hundred years,
and possessed of the utmost mindfulness, and attentiveness,
and resolute energy,<sup>90</sup>
and with the utmost lucidity of wisdom.

As, Sāriputta,
a skilled archer,
trained,
deft,
a marksman,
may with ease
wing a slender shaft across a palm-tree's shadow,<sup>91</sup> so are these of extreme mindfulness, of extreme attentiveness, of extreme resolute energy, so are they possessed of the utmost lucidity of wisdom.

If these were to ask me again and again a question about the four applications of mindfulness,<sup>92</sup> and if I,
questioned again and again,
were to explain to them, and if they,
on being explained to by me, should understand as explained, and if they were not to question me about any secondary and further matter (nor pause), except for feeding, drinking,

eating,
tasting,
except for answering the calls of nature, except for dispelling fatigue by sleep, still unfinished, Sāriputta, would be the Tathāgata's teaching of dhamma, still unfinished would be the Tathāgata's expositions on the phrases of dhamma, still unfinished would be the Tathāgata's ways of [110] putting questions<sup>93</sup> when these four disciples of mine, of life-spans of a hundred years, living for a hundred years, would pass away at the end of a hundred years.

Yet, if you should have to carry me about on a litter, Sāriputta, verily there is no change in the Tathāgata's lucidity of wisdom.

Whoever, Sāriputta, speaking rightly, should say:

'A being not liable to delusion
has arisen in the world
for the welfare of the manyfolk,
for the happiness of the manyfolk,
out of compassion for the world,
for the good,
the welfare,
the happiness of devas and men,'
so, when he is speaking rightly of me,
he would say:

'A being not liable to delusion
has arisen in the world
for the welfare of the manyfolk,
for the happiness of the manyfolk,
out of compassion for the world,
for the good,

the welfare,
the happiness of devas and men."

Now at that time the venerable Nāgasamāla<sup>94</sup> spoke thus to the Lord:

"It is wonderful, Lord, it is marvellous, Lord, that when, Lord,
this disquisition on dhamma had been heard by me, my hair stood on end.

What is the name, Lord, of this disquisition on dhamma?"

"Wherefore do you, Nāgasamāla, remember this disquisition on dhamma as the Hair-raising Disquisition."<sup>95</sup>

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted the venerable Nāgasamāla rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

The Greater Discourse on the Lion's Roar:
The Second

---

<sup>1</sup> Not like Ambapālī's Grove, which was inside the town, but like Jīvaka's Mango Grove, which was outside it, MA. ii. 21. This Sutta should be compared with Jā. No. 94 (Lomahaṃsa Jātaka) in which the Lord was said to be staying in the Pāṭikārāma, depending for alms on Vesālī.

<sup>2</sup> Licchaviputta, MA. ii. 21 saying that he was so called because he was the son of a Licchavi rajah. On the use of °putta, see B.D. ii. p. xlv ff.

<sup>3</sup> See Pārājika IV, Vin. iii. 87-109, and especially p. 92, where uttarimanussadhamma is defined; also B.D. i. xxivf.; and M. i. 246, etc.

<sup>4</sup> ñāṇadassana, or, insight into knowledge. MA. ii. 21 defines it as the deva-like sight and vision (vipassanā) and the Way and the fruit and knowledge due to reflecting on, and omniscience.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. M. i. 520; D. i. 16. Sunakkhatta is saying that dhamma is based by Gotama on empirical knowledge instead of being known and realised intuitively.

<sup>6</sup> yassa ca khvāssa atthāya. MA. ii. 22 says "meditation on the foul for repugnance to attachment, mental development of friendliness for repugnance to hatred, the five things for repugnance to confusion, breathing for cutting off discursive thought."

<sup>7</sup> niyyāti, to lead out or onwards, has the sense (as recognised at MA. ii. 23) of helping the escape from the anguish of vaṭṭa, the whirl of samsāra. Its object is therefore nibbāna.

<sup>8</sup> Supplied by MA. ii. 23.

<sup>9</sup> As at e.g. A. v. 32 ff., Cf. A. iii. 417 (six powers).

<sup>10</sup> āsabhaṭṭhāna, bull's place. MA. ii. 26 says "the best, the highest place. Or, bulls are the previous Buddhas - their place."

<sup>11</sup> Brahmacakka, also at S. ii. 27.

<sup>12</sup> See VbhA. 400; Dhs. 1337.

<sup>13</sup> paṭipadā, called magga at MA. ii. 29.

<sup>14</sup> Both good and bad ones.

<sup>15</sup> The world of the khandhas, āyatanas, and dhātus, MA. ii. 29.

<sup>16</sup> adhimutti, will, intention. Cf. Vbh. 339.

<sup>17</sup> The faculties, indriya, are here the five of faith, saddhā, and so on. It means also their growth or decline. Cf. Vbh. 340.

<sup>18</sup> yathābhatam nilckhitto evam niraye, as at e.g. A. i. 8, 96, 105, 292, It. p. 12. See note on this obscure phrase at G.S. i. 6, n. 2, and Min. Anth. II. 124, n. 2.

<sup>19</sup> evamsampadam-idaṃ vadāmi.

<sup>20</sup> vesārajjāni; as at A. ii. 8; cf. A. iv 83 f. Perhaps self-confidences, self-satisfactions.

<sup>21</sup> Cf. Pācittiya 68, Vin. iv. 133 ff., and see B.D. iii. 21, n. 5. MA. ii. 33 says that there methunadhamma (unchastity) is meant. It is a stumbling-block to the fruits of the ways.

<sup>22</sup> As at A. iv. 307; D. ii. 109.

<sup>23</sup> MA. ii. 34 expressly says "not (assemblies) of Māras, but an occasion when those in Māra's retinue gather together."

<sup>24</sup> MA. ii. 34 says this means a concourse round Bimbisāra, a concourse of relations, a concourse of Licchavis and so forth. See note at Dial. ii. 117.

<sup>25</sup> D. iii. 230.

<sup>26</sup> MA. ii. 36 says that opapātika means that, having arisen, not through these (other) circumstances, they are as though existing (nibbattā, being reborn).

<sup>27</sup> MA. ii. 36 says "beginning with the Four Great Regents, devas who are higher are of spontaneous uprising. But the earth-devas belong to the four modes of life. Some men are of spontaneous uprising, but for the most part they are womb-born."

<sup>28</sup> gati, going, destiny, where one must go according to one's deeds, whether well or ill done. MA. ii. 36 gives five other kinds of gati and says here gatigati is meant; as exemplified at Dh. 420.

<sup>29</sup> MA. ii. 37, peccabhāvampattānam visayo ti.

<sup>30</sup> Way and course here identified, MA. ii. 37.

<sup>31</sup> MA. ii. 37, "I know that nibbāna is the escape from the bourns." Cf. SnA. 368: gativippamokkham parinibbānam.

<sup>32</sup> ekanta. MA. ii. 37 gives nicca, nirantara, constantly, incessantly.

<sup>33</sup> Cf. M. i. 365; S. ii. 99.

<sup>34</sup> As at M. i. 284.

<sup>35</sup> Not "exclusively painful" here, because there is no burning, as in the ember-pit.

<sup>36</sup> In this realm, pain is abundant, pleasure slight, MA. ii. 39.

<sup>37</sup> kabaracchāya. MA. ii. 38 says "not like a thin layer of clouds."

<sup>38</sup> Such feelings can be experienced among khattiya (royal or noble) families, and so on, MA. ii. 39.

<sup>39</sup> pāsādo ti dīghapāsādo, MA. ii. 39 = VA. 654. See B.D. ii. 16, n. 5. This simile occurs at A. i. 137. Cf. also the burning gabled house at A. i. 101 = M. iii. 61.

<sup>40</sup> This word, vllittāvalitta, is used in defining vihāra at Vin. iii. 156, iv, 47, and "hut," kuṭī, at Vin. iii. 149.

<sup>41</sup> phassitaggaḷam, M. iii. 61; A. i. 101, 137; MA. ii, 39 read phussita, which is to be preferred. MA. ii. 30 explains that the door, kavāṭa, [i.e. that by which the aperture is closed) is closed tight against the door-posts.

<sup>42</sup> vātapāna are really shutters, I think. Various ways of ornamenting them are given at Vin. iv. 47; see also Vin. ii. 148.

<sup>43</sup> Cf. M. iii. 61, A. i. 101 for this description.

<sup>44</sup> pallaṅka, see B.D. iii. 271, n. 3.

<sup>45</sup> These words are found in longer lists at Vin. i. 192, ii. 163; D. i. 7; A. i. 181.

<sup>46</sup> MA. ii. 39 says one for the head and one for the feet.

<sup>47</sup> MA. ii. 40 says "exclusively pleasant here and in the deva-worlds are the same in denotation but not in connotation. That of the deva-worlds is not really exclusively pleasant because there is still the fever of passion. But the bliss of nibbāna is exclusively pleasant because in every way all fevers have been allayed."

<sup>48</sup> As at M. i. 283; A. iii. 190; S. i. 91.

<sup>49</sup> M. reads sūpatitthā.

<sup>50</sup> paccuttarivā, possibly meaning: having crossed the pool.

<sup>51</sup> MA. ii 40 says this is like nibbāna.

<sup>52</sup> MA. i. 41 says that the Brahma-faring is generosity, doing services, the rules of training, the brahmavihāras, the teaching of dhamma, abstention from unchastity, satisfaction in one's own wife, the Observance, the ariyan Way, the whole teaching, being intent on, energy ... (MA. ii. 43). But here energy is a synonym for the Brahmacariya, and this Sutta is itself about the Brahma-faring that is energy.

<sup>53</sup> Cf. Jā i. 390-91, where it is said that the Bodhisatta, when dying, realised that this practice was no good, so he took a right view and passed to a deva-world.

<sup>54</sup> MA. ii. 43, of evil.

<sup>55</sup> MA. ii. 43, in that fourfold Brahma-faring.

<sup>56</sup> The following occurs at M. i. 342; A. i. 295, ii. 206; D. i. 166; Pug. 55; cf. M. i. 238.

<sup>57</sup> I borrow this expression from Chalmers. MA. ii. 44 from here = AA. ii. 383 ff. = PugA. 231.

<sup>58</sup> I.e. when receiving food on the begging round.

<sup>59</sup> See G.S. i. 273, n. 6.

<sup>60</sup> MA. ii. 44, AA. ii. 384 not helpful. They say "When it is given by one only of them. Why? There is a stumbling-block (danger) in (only) a mouthful."

<sup>61</sup> Vin. iv. 318, a mother or a foster-mother. MA. ii. 44, and the other Comys., say that this comes to endanger the milk for the child.

<sup>62</sup> purisantaragatā. At Vin. iv. 322 this word is used to define gihigatā; at MA. ii. 209, DA. 78 to define itthi. The Comys. say that this is a danger to (their) pleasure.

<sup>63</sup> According to the Comys., done in times of scarcity by unclothed ascetics.

<sup>64</sup> Visiting only one house or asking for only one piece of food.

<sup>65</sup> MA. ii. 45 says that datti is one small bowlful from which they leave out the main food.

<sup>66</sup> As at M. i. 156; D. i. 166.

<sup>67</sup> On sāṇāni, see B.D. ii. 143, n. 3, 4. Following garments as at A. i. 240.

<sup>68</sup> masāṇāni, perhaps meaning a mixture of coarse hemp and other fibres.

<sup>69</sup> Iron spikes or thorns were placed in the ground, covered with a hide, and then an ascetic stood there, paced up and down and so forth.

<sup>70</sup> To get rid of the day's evil. Cf. M. i. 39.

<sup>71</sup> visamagate. The idea at MA. ii. 46 seems to be lest a drop of water splash the place where any small creature was at that time.

<sup>72</sup> Cf. M. i. 162.

<sup>73</sup> This is how MA. ii. 46 explains vanakammika. It therefore appears not to be "one who works in the forests."

<sup>74</sup> Miln. 396.

<sup>75</sup> paṭṭhitagāvo apagatagopālakā.

<sup>76</sup> As at D. i. 167. Usually four in number, as at Vin. i. 206, applied against snake-bite; and at Vin. iv. 90 where they do not count as "nutriment," so a monk may himself take them even if there is no one to make them "allowable."

<sup>77</sup> As at Vin. i. 31, 288; A. i. 136; Ud. I. 9; Miln. 396. See B.D. iv. 41, n. 3.

<sup>78</sup> Miln. 396 quotes this passage. Cf. also Jā. i. 390.

<sup>79</sup> Verse at Jā. i. 390, whose Comy. is more detailed, than that at MA. ii. 48.

<sup>80</sup> Jā. i. 47; Cp. III. 15. 1 (p. 102).

<sup>81</sup> gomaṇḍala. At Cp. III. 15. 1 gāmaṇḍala. MA. ii. 48-9 explains by gopāladārakā.

<sup>82</sup> MA. ii. 49 explains as "not by me was an evil heart created against them."

<sup>83</sup> upekhā is a pāramī; also a bojjhanga, and a brahmavihāra.

<sup>84</sup> MA. ii. 49, salads, cakes, balls.

<sup>85</sup> Cf. what follows with M. i. 247.

<sup>86</sup> saṃsara.

<sup>87</sup> Quoted at DA. ii. 511.

<sup>88</sup> Stock, as at Vin. ii. 88, iii. 2.

<sup>89</sup> MA. ii 61, "they say the Lord spoke this discourse in the year of the parinibbāna."

<sup>90</sup> dhiti.

<sup>91</sup> As at A. ii. 48, iv. 429; S. i. 62, ii. 266. See G.S. iv. 288, n. 3.

<sup>92</sup> MA. ii. 52-3, about these and then about the rest of the thirty-seven links in awakening.

<sup>93</sup> pañhapaṭibhāna. Word occurs at M. i. 378.

<sup>94</sup> Verses at Thag. 267-70. And see Ud. 90, Jā. iv, 95.

<sup>95</sup> Called by this name, Lomahaṃsanapariyaya, at Miln. 398, and in DA. i; and in Jātaka No. 94 it is called Lomahaṃsa Jātaka.

---

<sup>ed1</sup> The refrain 'Whoever, Sāriputta, knowing me thus...' has been omitted here as this certainly belongs as the prelude to the next section and there is no statement in this group by the Buddha of his having special knowledge in this regard. In this way this and the next sections become his statement about his knowledge of the comings and goings of beings. It does appear in the Pali and (abridged) in Ms. Horner's translation but makes no sense.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
2. Sihanāda Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
2. The Division of the Lion's Roar

13. Greater Discourse on the Stems of Anguish

Mahā Dukkakkhandha Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattḥī
in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then several<sup>1</sup> monks, having dressed in the morning, taking their bowls and [111] robes, entered Sāvattḥī for almsfood.

Then it occurred to these monks;

"It is too early to walk for almsfood in Sāvattḥī.

Suppose we were to approach the park<sup>2</sup> of the wanderers belonging to other sects?"

Then these monks approached the park of the wanderers belonging to other sects;
having approached,

they exchanged greetings with the wanderers belonging to other sects,
and having exchanged greetings of courtesy and friendliness,
they sat down at a respectful distance.

As these monks were sitting down at a respectful distance, these wanderers belonging to other sects spoke thus to them:

"Your reverences, the recluse Gotama lays down the full understanding<sup>3</sup> of sense-pleasures;
we too lay down the full understanding of sense-pleasures.

Your reverences, the recluse Gotama lays down the full understanding of material shapes;<sup>4</sup> we too lay down the full understanding of material shapes.

Your reverences, the recluse Gotama lays down the full understanding of
feelings;
we too lay down the full understanding of feelings.

So, your reverences, herein what is the divergence,
what the discrepancy,
what the difference between the recluse Gotama and us,
that is to say in dhamma-teaching as against dhamma-teaching,
in instruction as against instruction?"

Then those monks neither rejoiced in nor scoffed at what the wanderers belonging to other sects had said.

Rising from their seats they departed,
not rejoicing,
not scoffing,
but thinking:

"We shall learn the meaning of what has been said in the Lord's presence."

■

Then these monks having walked for almsfood in Sāvattḥī, returning from the alms-gathering after the meal, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance.

As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, these monks spoke thus to the Lord:

"Now we, Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking our bowls and robes, entered Sāvattḥī for almsfood.

It occurred to us, Lord:

'It is too early to walk for almsfood in Sāvattḥī.

Suppose [112] we were to approach the park of the wanderers belonging to other sects?'

So we, Lord, approached the park of the wanderers belonging to other sects and exchanged greetings with the wanderers belonging to other sects, and having exchanged greetings of courtesy and friendliness, we sat down at a respectful distance.

As we were sitting down at a respectful distance, these wanderers belonging to other sects spoke thus to us:

"Your reverences, the recluse Gotama lays down the full understanding of sense-pleasures; we too lay down the full understanding of sense-pleasures.

Your reverences, the recluse Gotama lays down the full understanding of material shapes; we too lay down the full understanding of material shapes.

Your reverences, the recluse Gotama lays down the full understanding of feelings;
we too lay down the full understanding of feelings.

So, your reverences, herein what is the divergence,
what the discrepancy,
what the difference between the recluse Gotama and us,
that is to say in dhamma-teaching as against dhamma-teaching,
in instruction as against instruction?"

Then we neither rejoiced in nor scoffed at what the wanderers belonging to other sects had said.

Rising from our seats we departed,
not rejoicing,
not scoffing,
but thinking:

'We shall learn the meaning of what has been said in the Lord's presence.'

---

"Monks, wanderers belonging to other sects who speak thus should be spoken to thus:

'But what, your reverences,
is the satisfaction in pleasures of the senses,
what the peril,
what the escape (from them)?

Monks, when wanderers belonging to other sects are questioned in this way, they will not be able to explain, and moreover they will get into further difficulties.<sup>5</sup>

What is the reason for this?

It is that it is not within their scope.

I, monks, do not see anyone in the world with its devas, Maras and Brahmas,
in creation
with its recluses and brahmans,
its devas and men,
who could win approbation with his answers to these questions except a Tathāgata
or a Tathāgata's disciple
or one who has heard (the teaching) from them.

§

And what, monks, is the satisfaction in pleasures of the senses?<sup>6</sup>

These five, monks, are the strands of sense-pleasures.<sup>7</sup>

What five?

Material shapes cognisable by the eye,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Sounds cognisable by the ear,
agreeable,
pleasant,

liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Smells cognisable by the nose,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Tastes cognisable by the tongue,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Touches cognisable by the body,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

These, monks, are the five strands of sense-pleasures.

■

Whatever pleasure,
whatever happiness arises in consequence of these five strands of sense-
pleasures,
this is the satisfaction in sense-pleasures.

---

And what, monks, is the peril in sense-pleasures?

In this case, monks,
a young man of family earns his living by some craft, such as reckoning on the fingers,<sup>8</sup> such as calculation,<sup>9</sup> such as [113] computing,<sup>10</sup> such as agriculture,<sup>11</sup> such as being in a rajah's service,<sup>12</sup> such as by another craft.<sup>13</sup>

He is afflicted by the cold,<sup>14</sup>
he is afflicted by the heat,
suffering from the touch of gadflies,
mosquitoes,
wind,
sun,
creeping things,
dying of hunger and thirst.

This, monks, is a peril in pleasures of the senses that is present, a stem of ill,<sup>15</sup>
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,
being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

■

If, monks, this young man of family rouses himself, exerts himself,
strives thus,

but if these possessions do not come to his hand,
he grieves,
mourns,
laments,
beating his breast
and wailing,
he falls into disillusionment,<sup>16</sup> and thinks:

'Indeed my exertion is vain,
indeed my striving is fruitless.'

This too, monks, is a peril in the pleasures of the senses that is present,
a stem of ill,
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,
being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

■

If, monks, this young man of family rouses himself,
exerts himself,
strives thus,
and these possessions come to his hand,
he experiences suffering and sorrow in consequence of looking after them,
and thinks:

'Now by what means may neither kings nor thieves take away my possessions,
nor fire burn them,
nor water carry them away, nor heirs whom I do not like take them away?'<sup>17</sup>

Although he looks after these possessions and guards them,
kings do take them away
or thieves take them away,

or fire burns them
or water carries them away,
or heirs whom he does not like take them away.

He grieves,
mourns,
laments,
beating his breast and wailing,
he falls into disillusionment,
and thinks:

'I do not even have that which was mine.'

This too, monks, is a peril in the pleasures of the senses that is present,
a stem of ill,
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,
being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

■

And again, monks, when sense-pleasures are the cause, sense-pleasures the provenance,
sense-pleasures the consequence,
the very [114] cause of sense-pleasures,
kings dispute with kings,
nobles dispute with nobles,
brahmans dispute with brahmans,
householders dispute with householders,
a mother disputes with her son,
a son disputes with his mother,
a father disputes with his son,
a son disputes with his father,
a brother disputes with a brother,
a brother disputes with a sister,

a sister disputes with a brother,
a friend disputes with a friend.

Those who enter into quarrel,
contention,
dispute and attack one another with their hands and with stones<sup>18</sup> and with sticks
and with weapons,<sup>19</sup>
these suffer dying then
and pain like unto dying.

This too, monks, is a peril in the pleasures of the senses that is present,
a stem of ill,
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,
being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

■

And again, monks, when sense-pleasures are the cause,
sense-pleasures the provenance,
sense-pleasures the consequence,
the very cause of sense-pleasures,
having taken sword and shield,
having girded on bow and quiver,
both sides mass for battle
and arrows are hurled
and knives are hurled
and swords are flashing.

These who wound with arrows
and wound with knives
and decapitate with their swords,

these suffer dying then
and pain like unto dying.

■

This too, monks, is a peril in the pleasures of the senses that is present,
a stem of ill,
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,
being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

And again, monks, when sense-pleasures are the cause,
sense-pleasures the provenance,
sense-pleasures the consequence,
the very cause of sense-pleasures,
having taken sword and shield,
having girded on bow and quiver, they leap on to the newly daubed<sup>20</sup> ramparts,
and arrows are hurled
and knives are hurled
and swords are flashing.

Those who wound with arrows
and wound with knives
and pour boiling cow-dung<sup>21</sup> over them and crush them with the (falling) portcullis
and decapitate them with their swords,
these suffer dying then
and pain like unto dying.

This too, monks, is a peril in the pleasures of the senses that is present,
a stem of ill,
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,

being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

■

And again, monks, when sense-pleasures are the cause,
sense-pleasures the provenance,
sense-pleasures the consequence,
the very cause of sense-pleasures,
they break into a house
and carry off the booty
and behave as a thief
and wait in ambush
and go to other [115] men's wives.<sup>22</sup>

Kings, having arrested such a one, deal out various punishments:<sup>23</sup>

They lash him with whips
and they lash him with canes
and they lash him with (birch) rods,
and they cut off his hand,
and they cut off his foot,
and they cut off his hand and foot,
and they cut off his ear,
and they cut off his nose,
and they cut off his ear and nose, and they give him the 'gruel-pot'<sup>24</sup> punishment,
and they give him the 'shell-tonsure' punishment,
and they give him the 'Rahu's mouth,' punishment,
and they give him the 'fire-garland' punishment,
and they give him the 'flaming hand' punishment,
and they give him the 'hay-twist' punishment,
and they give him the 'bark-dress' punishment,
and they give him the 'antelope' punishment,
and they give him the 'flesh-hooking' punishment,

and they give him the 'disc-slice' punishment,
and they give him the 'pickling process' punishment,
and they give him the 'circling the pin,' punishment,
and they give him the 'straw mattress,' punishment,
and they spray him with boiling oil,
give him as food to the dogs,
impale him alive on stakes
and decapitate him with a sword.

This too, monks, is a peril in the pleasures of the senses that is present,
a stem of ill,
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,
being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

■

And again, monks, when sense-pleasures are the cause,
sense-pleasures the provenance,
sense-pleasures the consequence,
the very cause of sense-pleasures,
they behave wrongly in body,
they behave wrongly in speech,
they behave wrongly in thought.

These, having behaved wrongly in body,
in speech,
in thought,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
arise in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

This, monks, is a peril in pleasures of the senses that is of the future,
a stem of ill,
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,
being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

---

And what, monks, is the escape from pleasures of the senses?

Whatever, monks, is the control of desire for and attachment to pleasures of the senses, the getting rid of the desire and attachment, this is the escape from pleasures of the senses.<sup>25</sup>

---

Monks, whatever recluses or brahmins<sup>26</sup> do not thus comprehend the satisfaction in pleasures of the senses as satisfaction,
the peril as peril,
the escape as escape as it really is,
these indeed will neither know their own sense-pleasures accurately, nor will they arouse another to a similar condition<sup>27</sup>
so that, as he fares along,
he will know sense-pleasures accurately -
this situation does not exist.

[116] But, monks, whatever recluses or brahmins comprehend thus the satisfaction in pleasures of the senses as satisfaction,
the peril as peril,

the escape as escape as it really is,
these indeed either know their own sense-pleasures accurately, or they will arouse another to a similar condition,
so that, as he fares along,
he will know sense-pleasures accurately - this situation exists.

§

And what, monks, is the satisfaction in material shapes?

Monks, it is like a girl in a noble's family or a brahman's family or a householder's family who at the age of fifteen or sixteen is not too tall,
not too short,
not too thin,
not too fat,
not too dark,
not too fair -
is she, monks, at the height of her beauty and loveliness at that time?"

"Yes, Lord."

"Monks, whatever happiness and pleasure arise because of beauty and loveliness, this is satisfaction in material shapes. 28

---

And what, monks, is peril in material shapes?

As to this, monks, one might see that same lady<sup>29</sup>
after a time,
eighty
or ninety
or a hundred years old, aged,
crooked as a rafter,
bent,
leaning on a stick,
going along palsied,
miserable,
youth gone,
teeth broken,
hair thinned,
skin wrinkled,
stumbling along,
the limbs discoloured.

What would you think, monks?

That that which was former beauty and loveliness has vanished,
a peril has appeared?"

"Yes, Lord."

"This too, monks, is a peril in material shapes.

■

And again, monks, one might see that same lady diseased,
suffering,
sorely ill,

lying in her own excrement, having to be lifted up by others, having to be laid down by others.<sup>30</sup>

What would you think, monks?

That that which was former beauty and loveliness has vanished,
a peril has appeared?"

"Yes, Lord."

"This too, monks, is a peril in material shapes.

■

And again, monks, one might see that same lady,
her body thrown aside in a cemetery, dead for one,
two or three days,
swollen,
discoloured,
decomposing.

What would you think, monks?

That that which was former beauty and loveliness has vanished,
a peril has appeared?"

"Yes, Lord."

"This too, monks, is a peril in material shapes.

■

And again, monks, one might see this same lady,
her body thrown aside in [117] a cemetery,

being devoured by crows or ravens
or vultures
or wild dogs
or jackals
or by a variety of animals.<sup>31</sup>

What would you think, monks?

That that which was former beauty and loveliness has vanished,
a peril has appeared?"

"Yes, Lord."

"This too, monks, is a peril in material shapes.

■

And again, monks, one might see that same lady,
her body thrown aside in a cemetery,
a skeleton with (some) flesh and blood, sinew-bound.

What would you think, monks?

That that which was former beauty and loveliness has vanished,
a peril has appeared?"

"Yes, Lord."

"This too, monks, is a peril in material shapes.

■

And again, monks, one might see that same lady,
her body thrown aside in a cemetery,
a fleshless skeleton with a smear of blood, sinew-bound.

What would you think, monks?

That that which was former beauty and loveliness has vanished,
a peril has appeared?"

"Yes, Lord."

"This too, monks, is a peril in material shapes.

■

And again, monks, one might see that same lady,
her body thrown aside in a cemetery,
a skeleton without flesh or blood, sinew-bound.

What would you think, monks?

That that which was former beauty and loveliness has vanished,
a peril has appeared?"

"Yes, Lord."

"This too, monks, is a peril in material shapes.

■

And again, monks, one might see that same lady,
her body thrown aside in a cemetery,
the bones no longer held together, scattered in this direction and that:
here a hand-bone,
there a foot-bone,
here a leg-bone,
there a rib,
here a hip-bone,
there a back-bone,
here the skull.<sup>32</sup>

What would you think, monks?

That that which was former beauty and loveliness has vanished,
a peril has appeared?"

"Yes, Lord."

"This too, monks, is a peril in material shapes.

■

And again, monks, one might see that same lady,
her body thrown aside in a cemetery,
the bones white
and something like sea-shells.

What would you think, monks?

That that which was former beauty and loveliness has vanished,
a peril has appeared?"

"Yes, Lord."

"This too, monks, is a peril in material shapes.

■

And again, monks, one might see that same lady,
her body thrown aside in a cemetery,
a heap of dried-up bones more than a year old.

What would you think, monks?

That that which was former beauty and loveliness has vanished,
a peril has appeared?"

"Yes, Lord."

"This too, monks, is a peril in material shapes.

■

And again, monks, one might see that same lady,
her body thrown aside in a cemetery,
the bones gone rotten and reduced to powder.

What would you think, monks?

That that which was former beauty and loveliness has vanished,
a peril has appeared?"

"Yes, Lord."

"This too, monks, is a peril in material shapes.

---

And what, monks, is the escape from material shapes?

Whatever, monks, is the control of desire and attachment,
the getting rid of desire and attachment to material shapes, this is the escape from material shapes.<sup>33</sup>

---

Monks, whatever recluses or brahmans do not thus comprehend the satisfaction in material shapes as satisfaction,
the peril as peril,
the escape as escape as it really is,
these indeed will neither know material shapes accurately themselves

nor will they arouse another to a similar condition,
so that, as he fares along,
he will know material shapes accurately -
this situation does not exist.

But, monks, whatever recluses or brahmans comprehend thus
the satisfaction in material shapes as satisfaction,
the peril as peril,
the escape as escape as it really is,
these indeed either know material shapes [118] accurately themselves or they will arouse another to a similar condition,
so that, as he fares along,
he will know material shapes accurately -
this situation exists.

§

And what, monks, is the satisfaction of feelings?

As to this, monks, a monk
aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
enters into
and abides in
the first meditation
which is accompanied by initial thought and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful.

Monks, at the time in which the monk
aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
enters into

and abides in
the first meditation
which is accompanied by initial thought and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful,
if at that time he does not strive for his own hurt,
if he does not strive for the hurt of others,
if he does not strive for the hurt of both,
at that very time he experiences a feeling that is not hurtful.

I, monks, say that not-hurtfulness is the highest satisfaction among feelings.

■

And again, monks, a monk,
by allaying initial thought and discursive thought,
with the mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters into
and abides in
the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration,
and is rapturous and joyful.

Monks, at the time in which the monk,
by allaying initial thought and discursive thought,
with the mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters into
and abides in
the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration,
and is rapturous and joyful,

if at that time he does not strive for his own hurt,
if he does not strive for the hurt of others,
if he does not strive for the hurt of both,
at that very time he experiences a feeling that is not hurtful.

I, monks, say that not-hurtfulness
is the highest satisfaction among feelings.

■

And again, monks, a monk,
by the fading out of rapture,
abiding with equanimity,
attentive,
and clearly conscious
experiencing in his person that joy
of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,'
enters into
and abides in
the third meditation.

Monks, at the time in which the monk,
by the fading out of rapture,
abiding with equanimity,
attentive,
and clearly conscious
experiencing in his person that joy
of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,'
enters into
and abides in
the third meditation,
if at that time he does not strive for his own hurt,
if he does not strive for the hurt of others,

if he does not strive for the hurt of both,
at that very time he experiences a feeling that is not hurtful.

I, monks, say that not-hurtfulness
is the highest satisfaction among feelings.

■

And again, monks, a monk,
by getting rid of joy
and by getting rid of anguish,
and by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,
enters into
and abides in
the fourth meditation,
which has neither anguish nor joy
and which is entirely purified by equanimity and mindfulness.

Monks, at the time in which the monk,
by getting rid of joy
and by getting rid of anguish,
and by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,
enters into
and abides in
the fourth meditation,
which has neither anguish nor joy
and which is entirely purified by equanimity and mindfulness, if at that time he does not strive for his own hurt,
if he does not strive for the hurt of others,
if he does not strive for the hurt of both,
at that very time he experiences a feeling that is not hurtful.

I, monks, say that not-hurtfulness
is the highest satisfaction among feelings.

---

And what, monks, is the peril of feelings?

Inasmuch, monks, as feelings are impermanent, ill,
liable to change,
this is the peril of feelings.<sup>34</sup>

---

And what, monks, is the escape from feelings?

Whatever, monks, is the control of desire and attachment,
the getting rid of desire and attachment to feelings, this is the escape from feelings.

---

Monks, whatever recluses or brahmans do not thus comprehend the satisfaction in feelings as satisfaction,
the peril as peril,
the escape as escape as it really is,
these indeed will neither know [119] feelings accurately themselves nor will they arouse another to a similar condition,
so that, as he fares along,
he will know feelings accurately -
this situation does not exist.

But, monks, whatever recluses or brahmans comprehend thus the satisfaction in feelings as satisfaction,

the peril as peril,
the escape as escape as it really is,
these indeed know feelings accurately themselves
or they will arouse another to a similar condition,
so that, as he fares along,
he will know feelings accurately -
this situation exists."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

The Greater Discourse on the Stems of Anguish

The Third

---

<sup>1</sup> sambahulā; not a technical term here, as in Vin. where it means a "group." i.e. less than a saṅgha. It is noticed at MA. ii. 64 that in Vin. sambahulā is three people, but in the Suttas three is called just three, and (a number) higher than that is sambahulā.

<sup>2</sup> ārāma. Not here a "monastery" as wanderers were not monastically constituted. MA. ii. 54 says it was not far from the Jeta Grove.

<sup>3</sup> MA. ii. 54, the ejection and transcending of sense-pleasures and of material shapes and feelings.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. S. iv. 16.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. D. i. 26, S. iv. 15.

<sup>6</sup> From here to M. i. 87 = M. i. 92 = 398 = 454.

<sup>7</sup> M. i. 92, 398, 454; A. iii. 411, etc. quoted Kvu. 369.

<sup>8</sup> muddā. See B.D. ii. 176, n. 4 for further references, etc. MA. ii. 56 says, "having established awareness through the joints of the fingers, it is called hatthamuddā (hand-reckoning)." ganana See B.D. ii. 176, n. 5.

<sup>9</sup> ganaṇā See B.D. ii. 176, n. 5.

<sup>10</sup> sankhānaṇi. According to the Comy., computing how much rice there will be, how much fruit, how many birds in the sky, by looking at a field, at a tree, or at the sky respectively.

<sup>11</sup> See B.D. ii. 175.

<sup>12</sup> Perhaps a government official, rājaporisa. As at D. i. 135, A. iv. 281, 286.

<sup>13</sup> MA. ii. 56 instances elephant-craft and horse-craft.

<sup>14</sup> MA. ii. 56, "like an arrow's target, he stands before (purato) the cold." It (i.e. purakkhata) also means 'being oppressed.'

<sup>15</sup> MA. ii. 57 says, a heap, rāsi.

<sup>16</sup> sammoha, or confusion, delusion.

<sup>17</sup> Cf. A. iv. 282.

<sup>18</sup> leḍḍu. See Vin. iii. 46, iv. 40.

<sup>19</sup> This sequence also found at M. i. 123, Ud. 71.

<sup>20</sup> addāvalepana. The word also occurs at S. iv. 187. MA. ii. 58 renders by "hot mud."

<sup>21</sup> pakkaṭṭhī, explained by MA. ii. 58 as kuthita (= kaṭh-) gomaya, while Nd. ii. 199 reads chakaṇṭī.

<sup>22</sup> As at M. ii. 88, and cf. M. i. 404.

<sup>23</sup> As at M. iii. 163 f., A. i. 47, ii. 122, Miln. 197.

<sup>24</sup> These punishments are described in greater detail at G.S. i. 42, 43 in the notes.

<sup>25</sup> At other passages, e.g. A. iii. 245, It. p. 61, D. iii. 239, 275, renunciation of sense-pleasures is called the escape from them. MA. ii. 60 says it is nibbāna.

<sup>26</sup> Cf. S. iii. 191-92.

<sup>27</sup> tathattāya smmāpessanti.

<sup>28</sup> Cf. S. iv. 8.

<sup>29</sup> As at A. i. 139.

<sup>30</sup> tam eva bhaginī (literally, sister).

<sup>31</sup> As at M. i. 58.

<sup>32</sup> As at S. iii. 62.

<sup>33</sup> As at A. iii. 324.

<sup>34</sup> As at S. iii. 63.

---

Majjhima Nikāya

I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa

2. Sihanāda Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings

I. The First Fifty Discourses

2. The Division of the Lion's Roar

14. Lesser Discourse on the Stems of Anguish

Cūḷa Dukkha-kkhandha Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying among the Sakyans at Kapilavatthu in Nigrodha's park.<sup>1</sup>

Then Mahānāma the Sakyana<sup>2</sup> approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As Mahānāma the Sakyana was sitting down at a respectful distance, he spoke thus to the Lord:

"For a long time, Lord,
I have thus understood dhamma taught by the Lord:

'Greed is a depravity of the mind,<sup>3</sup> aversion is a depravity of the mind, confusion is a depravity of the mind.'

It is thus that I, Lord, understand dhamma taught by the Lord:

'Greed is a depravity of the mind,
aversion is a depravity of the mind,
confusion is a depravity of the mind.'

But at times things belonging to greed, taking hold of my mind,
persist,
and things belonging to aversion,
taking hold of my mind,
persist,
and things belonging [120] to confusion,
taking hold of my mind,
persist.

It occurred to me thus, Lord:

'Now what can be the quality in me,
not got rid of subjectively,
on account of which
at times things belonging to greed,
taking hold of my mind,
persist,
and things belonging to aversion,
taking hold of my mind,
persist,
and things belonging to confusion,
taking hold of my mind,
persist?'"

"Indeed there is a quality in you, Mahānāma,
not got rid of subjectively,
on account of which
at times things belonging to greed, taking hold of your mind,
persist,
and things belonging to aversion,
taking hold of your mind,
persist,
and things belonging to confusion,
taking hold of your mind,
persist.

But this quality could be got rid of subjectively by you, Mahānāma, if you would not dwell in a house, if you would not enjoy pleasures of the senses.

But inasmuch as this quality, Mahānāma, is not got rid of by you subjectively, therefore you dwell in a house and enjoy pleasures of the senses.

Pleasures of the senses
are of little satisfaction,
of much ill,
of much tribulation
wherein is more peril.<sup>4</sup>

Yet if this, Mahānāma, comes to be well seen as it really is,
through perfect intuitive wisdom
by an ariyan disciple, but if he does not come to rapture and joy apart from pleasures of the senses,
apart from unskilled states of mind, or to something better than that,<sup>5</sup> then he is not yet one unsexed by pleasures of the senses.

But when, Mahānāma, an ariyan disciple thinks:

'Pleasures of the senses
are of little satisfaction,
of much ill,
of much tribulation
wherein is more peril,'

and if this comes to be well seen,
as it really is,
through perfect intuitive wisdom
by the ariyan disciple, and if he comes to rapture and joy
apart from pleasures of the senses,
apart from unskilled states of mind,
and to something better than that,
then he is one who is not seduced
by pleasures of the senses.

And I too, Mahānāma, before my awakening
while I was still the bodhisatta,
not fully awakened,
thought:

'Pleasures of the senses
are of little satisfaction,
of much ill,
of much tribulation
wherein is more peril,'

and although this came to be well seen thus,
as it really is,
through perfect intuitive wisdom,

I came to no rapture and joy
apart from pleasures of the senses,
apart from unskilled states of mind,
nor to anything better than that.

So I was conscious that I was not yet one unsexed
by pleasures of the senses.

But when, Mahānāma,
I thought:

'Pleasures of the senses
are of little [121] satisfaction,
of much ill,
of much tribulation
wherein is more peril,'

and when this was well seen thus,
as it really is,
through perfect intuitive wisdom,
and I came to rapture and joy apart from the pleasures of the senses,
apart from unskilled states of mind,
and to something better than that,
then was I conscious that I was one not seduced by pleasures of the senses.

---

And what, Mahānāma,
is the satisfaction in pleasures of the senses?

These five, Mahānāma, are the strands of sense-pleasures.<sup>6</sup>

What five?

Material shapes cognisable by the eye,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Sounds cognisable by the ear,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Smells cognisable by the nose,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Tastes cognisable by the tongue,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Touches cognisable by the body,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

These, Mahānāma, are the five strands of sense-pleasures.

■

Whatever pleasure,
whatever happiness arises in consequence of these five strands of sense-pleasures, this is the satisfaction in sense-pleasures.

---

And what, Mahānāma, is the peril in sense-pleasures?

In this case, Mahānāma,
a young man of family earns his living by some craft, such as reckoning on the fingers, such as calculation,
such as computing,
such as agriculture,
such as being in a rajah's service,
such as by another craft.

He is afflicted by the cold,
he is afflicted by the heat,
suffering from the touch of gadflies,
mosquitoes,

wind,
sun,
creeping things,
dying of hunger and thirst.

This, Mahānāma, is a peril in pleasures of the senses that is present,
a stem of ill,
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,
being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

■

If, Mahānāma, this young man of family rouses himself,
exerts himself,
strives thus,
but if these possessions do not come to his hand,
he grieves,
mourns,
laments,
beating his breast
and wailing,
he falls into disillusionment, and thinks:

'Indeed my exertion is vain,
indeed my striving is fruitless.'

This too, Mahānāma, is a peril in the pleasures of the senses that is present,
a stem of ill,
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,
being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

■

If, Mahānāma, this young man of family rouses himself,
exerts himself,
strives thus,
and these possessions come to his hand,
he experiences suffering and sorrow in consequence of looking after them,
and thinks:

'Now by what means may neither kings nor thieves take away my possessions,
nor fire burn them,
nor water carry them away,
nor heirs whom I do not like take them away?'

Although he looks after these possessions and guards them,
kings do take them away
or thieves take them away,
or fire burns them
or water carries them away,
or heirs whom he does not like take them away.

He grieves,
mourns,
laments,
beating his breast and wailing,
he falls into disillusionment,
and thinks:

'I do not even have that which was mine.'

This too, Mahānāma, is a peril in the pleasures of the senses that is present,
a stem of ill,
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,
being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

■

And again, Mahānāma, when sense-pleasures are the cause, sense-pleasures the provenance,
sense-pleasures the consequence,
the very cause of sense-pleasures,
kings dispute with kings,
nobles dispute with nobles,
brahmans dispute with brahmans,
householders dispute with householders,
a mother disputes with her son,
a son disputes with his mother,
a father disputes with his son,
a son disputes with his father,
a brother disputes with a brother,
a brother disputes with a sister,
a sister disputes with a brother,
a friend disputes with a friend.

Those who enter into quarrel,
contention,
dispute and attack one another with their hands and with stones
and with sticks
and with weapons,
these suffer dying then
and pain like unto dying.

This too, Mahānāma, is a peril in the pleasures of the senses that is present,
a stem of ill,
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,
being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

■

And again, Mahānāma, when sense-pleasures are the cause,
sense-pleasures the provenance,
sense-pleasures the consequence,
the very cause of sense-pleasures,
having taken sword and shield,
having girded on bow and quiver,
both sides mass for battle
and arrows are hurled
and knives are hurled
and swords are flashing.

These who wound with arrows
and wound with knives
and decapitate with their swords,
these suffer dying then
and pain like unto dying.

■

This too, Mahānāma, is a peril in the pleasures of the senses that is present,
a stem of ill,
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,
being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

And again, Mahānāma, when sense-pleasures are the cause,
sense-pleasures the provenance,
sense-pleasures the consequence,
the very cause of sense-pleasures,
having taken sword and shield,
having girded on bow and quiver, they leap on to the newly daubed ramparts,
and arrows are hurled
and knives are hurled
and swords are flashing.

Those who wound with arrows
and wound with knives
and pour boiling cow-dung over them
and crush them with the (falling) portcullis
and decapitate them with their swords,
these suffer dying then
and pain like unto dying.

This too, Mahānāma, is a peril in the pleasures of the senses that is present,
a stem of ill,
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,
being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

■

And again, Mahānāma, when sense-pleasures are the cause,
sense-pleasures the provenance,
sense-pleasures the consequence,
the very cause of sense-pleasures,
they break into a house
and carry off the booty
and behave as a thief
and wait in ambush
and go to other men's wives.

Kings, having arrested such a one,
deal out various punishments:ll ll

They lash him with whips
and they lash him with canes
and they lash him with (birch) rods,
and they cut off his hand,
and they cut off his foot,
and they cut off his hand and foot,

and they cut off his ear,
and they cut off his nose,
and they cut off his ear and nose,
and they give him the 'gruel-pot' punishment,
and they give him the 'shell-tonsure' punishment,
and they give him the 'Rahu's mouth,' punishment,
and they give him the 'fire-garland' punishment,
and they give him the 'flaming hand' punishment,
and they give him the 'hay-twist' punishment,
and they give him the 'bark-dress' punishment,
and they give him the 'antelope' punishment,
and they give him the 'flesh-hooking' punishment,
and they give him the 'disc-slice' punishment,
and they give him the 'pickling process' punishment,
and they give him the 'circling the pin,' punishment,
and they give him the 'straw mattress,' punishment,
and they spray him with boiling oil,
give him as food to the dogs,
impale him alive on stakes
and decapitate him with a sword.

This too, Mahānāma, is a peril in the pleasures of the senses that is present,
a stem of ill,
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,
being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

■

And again, Mahānāma, when sense-pleasures are the cause,
sense-pleasures the provenance,
sense-pleasures the consequence,
the very cause of sense-pleasures,
they behave wrongly in body,

they behave wrongly in speech,
they behave wrongly in thought.

These, having behaved wrongly in body,
in speech,
in thought,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
arise in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

This, Mahānāma, is a peril in pleasures of the senses<sup>7</sup> that is of the future,
a stem of ill,
having pleasures of the senses as the cause,
having pleasures of the senses as the provenance,
being a consequence of pleasures of the senses,
the very cause of pleasures of the senses.

---

At one time I, Mahānāma, was staying near Rājagaha on Mount Vulture Peak.

Now at that time several Jains<sup>8</sup> on the Black Rock on the slopes of (Mount) Isigili came to be standing erect and refusing a seat;<sup>9</sup> they were experiencing feelings that were acute, painful,
sharp,
severe.

Then I, Mahānāma,
having emerged from solitary meditation towards evening, approached the slopes of (Mount) Isigili, the Black Rock
and those Jains;
having approached
I spoke thus to those Jains:

'Why do you, reverend Jains, standing erect
and refusing a seat,
experience feelings that are acute,
painful
sharp,
severe?

When I had thus spoken, Mahānāma, those Jains spoke thus to me:

[122] 'Your reverence, Nāthaputta the Jain is all-knowing,<sup>10</sup> all-seeing;
he claims all-embracing knowledge-and-vision,<sup>11</sup> saying:

"Whether I am walking
or standing still or asleep or awake,
knowledge-and-vision is permanently and continuously before me."

He speaks thus:

"If there is, Jains,
an evil deed that was formerly done by you, wear it away by this severe austerity.

That which is the non-doing of an evil deed in the future is from control of body, from control of speech, from control of thought here, now.<sup>12</sup>

Thus by burning up,<sup>13</sup> by making an end
of former deeds,
by the non-doing
of new deeds,
there is no flowing<sup>14</sup> in the future.

From there being no flowing in the future is the destruction of deeds;<sup>15</sup> from the destruction of deeds is the destruction of ill; from the destruction of ill is the destruction of feeling; from the destruction of feeling all ill will become worn away."

And because that is approved of by us as well as being pleasing to us, therefore we are delighted.'

When they had spoken thus, I, Mahānāma, spoke thus to those Jains:

'But do you, reverend Jains, know<sup>16</sup> that you yourselves were in the past, that you were not not?'

'Not this, your reverence.'

'But do you, reverend Jains, know that you yourselves did this evil deed in the past, that you did not not do it?'

'Not this, your reverence.'

'But do you, reverend Jains, know that you did not do an evil deed like this or like that?'

'Not this, your reverence.'

'But do you, reverend Jains, know that so much ill is worn away,
or that so much ill is to be worn away,
or that when so much ill is worn away,
all ill will become worn away?'

'Not this, your reverence.'

'But do you, reverend Jains, know the getting rid of unskilled states of mind here and now, the uprising of skilled states?'

'Not this, your reverence.'

'From what you say, reverend Jains, you do not know then whether you yourselves were in the past, whether you were not not;
you do not know whether in the past you yourselves did this evil deed, whether you did not not do it;
you do not know whether [123] you did an evil deed like this or like that;
you do not know so much ill is worn away,
or that so much ill is to be worn away,
or that when so much ill is worn away
all ill will become worn away;
you do not know the getting rid of unskilled states of mind,
the uprising of skilled states.'

This being so, reverend Jains, do those who are born again among men in the world and are hunters,
bloody-handed,
dealing in cruelty<sup>17</sup> - do these go forth among the Jains?'

'Now, reverend Gotama,
happiness is not to be achieved through happiness,
happiness is to be achieved through pain.

If, reverend Gotama,
happiness were to be achieved through happiness,
King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha
could achieve happiness,
King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha
would be more of a dweller in happiness
than the venerable Gotama.'

'Undoubtedly this speech was made hastily by the reverend Jains, without deliberation:

"Now, reverend Gotama,
happiness is not to be achieved through happiness,
happiness is to be achieved through pain.

If, reverend Gotama,
happiness were to be achieved through happiness,
King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha
could achieve happiness,
King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha
would be more of a dweller in happiness
than the venerable Gotama."

For it is I who should be questioned thus on this subject:

'Which of these venerable ones
is more of a dweller in happiness:
King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha
or the venerable Gotama?'

'Undoubtedly, reverend Gotama, this speech was made by us hastily,
without deliberation:

"Now, reverend Gotama,
happiness is not to be achieved through happiness,
happiness is to be achieved through pain.

If, reverend Gotama,
happiness were to be achieved through happiness,
King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha
could achieve happiness,
King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha
would be more of a dweller in happiness
than the venerable Gotama."

But let that be,
for now we will question the venerable Gotama:

Which of the venerable ones
is more of a dweller in happiness:
King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha
or the venerable Gotama?'

'Well then, reverend Jains,
I will ask you a question in return on that very subject.

As it pleases you,
so reply to it.

What do you think about this, reverend Jains:

Is king Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha,
without moving his body,
without uttering a word,
able to stay experiencing nothing but happiness for seven nights and days?'

'No, your reverence.'

'What do you think about this, reverend Jains:

Is King Seniya [124] Bimbisāra of Magadha,
without moving his body,
without uttering a word,
able to stay experiencing nothing but happiness for six nights and days?'

'No, your reverence.'

Is King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha,
without moving his body,
without uttering a word,
able to stay experiencing nothing but happiness
for five nights and days, for four nights and days,
for three nights and days,
for two nights and days,
for one night and day?'

'No, your reverence.'

'But I, reverend Jains, am able,
without moving my body,
without uttering a word,
to stay experiencing nothing but happiness
for one night and day.

I, reverend Jains, am able,
without moving my body,
without uttering a word,
to stay experiencing nothing but happiness<sup>18</sup>
for two nights and days,
for three nights and days,
four nights and days,
five nights and days,
six nights and days,
for seven<sup>19</sup> nights and days.

What do you think about this, reverend Jains:

This being so,
who is more of a dweller in happiness,
King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha or I?

'This being so, the venerable Gotama himself is more of a dweller in happiness than King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha.'

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, Mahānāma the Sakyan rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

The Lesser Discourse on the Stems of Anguish:

The Fourth

---

<sup>1</sup> MA. ii. 61 says Nigrodha was a Sakyan. He came to Kapilavatthu and made a dwelling-place for the Lord in his own park, ārāma, and gave it to the Lord.

<sup>2</sup> Suddhodana's nephew, son of Sukkodana, and brother of Anuruddha, Gotama's cousin.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. M. i. 36

<sup>4</sup> Vin. iv. 134.

<sup>5</sup> MA. ii. 63 points out that rapture and joy pertain to the first two meditations. Something higher than that will be connected with the third and fourth meditations.

<sup>6</sup> As at M. i. 85; A. iii. 411; D. i. 245.

<sup>7</sup> MA. ii. 63 points out that "escape" is not spoken of here. "This teaching is resolved to speak of it. One dead-end is devotion to pleasures of the senses, the other is devotion to self-mortification. My teaching is freed from these dead-ends." Cf. Vin. i. 10.

<sup>8</sup> nigaṇṭha.

<sup>9</sup> As at M. i. 78, 308, A. i. 296, ii. 206.

<sup>10</sup> Cf. A. i. 220, 221; iv. 428.

<sup>11</sup> M. i. 482, 519, ii. 31.

<sup>12</sup> Not ditṭh'eva dhamma, but ettha etarahi.

<sup>13</sup> tapasā, incandescence.

<sup>14</sup> anavassavo. MA. does not explain. Cf. Vin. ii. 89, M. ii. 246. At A. i. 220-21 the reading is setughātam, bridge-breaking.

<sup>15</sup> Cf. M. ii. 217 as well as A. i. 221.

<sup>16</sup> Cf. M. ii. 214-15.

<sup>17</sup> kurūrakammantā, as at A. iii. 383.

<sup>18</sup> The happiness of attaining the fruits (of the Way).

<sup>19</sup> Quoted Kvu. 459.

---

Majjhima Nikāya

I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa

2. Sihanāda Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings

I. The First Fifty Discourses

2. The Division of the Lion's Roar

15. Discourse on Measuring in Accordance with

Anumāna Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the venerable Moggallāna the Great was staying among the Bhaggas in Sumsumāragira<sup>2</sup> in Bhesakaḷā Grove in the deer-park.

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great addressed the monks, saying:

"Reverend monks".

"Your [125] reverence,"

these monks answered the venerable Moggallāna the Great in assent.

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great spoke thus:

"Now, if, your reverences, a monk invites, saying:

'Let the venerable ones speak<sup>3</sup> to me,
I should be spoken to by the venerable ones,' but if he is one whom it is difficult to speak to,<sup>4</sup> endowed with qualities which make him difficult to speak to, intractable,

incapable of being instructed,<sup>5</sup> then his fellow Brahmafarers judge that he should not be spoken to and that he should not be instructed<sup>6</sup> and that trust should not be placed in that individual.

Now what, your reverences, are the qualities which make him difficult to speak to?

Herein, your reverences,
a monk comes to be of evil desires and in the thrall of evil desires.

Whatever monk, your reverences, comes to be of evil desires
and in the thrall of evil desires, this is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

And again, your reverences, a monk exalts himself and disparages others.<sup>7</sup>

Whatever monk exalts himself and disparages others,
this too is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk comes to be wrathful,
overpowered by wrath.

Whatever monk is wrathful,
overpowered by wrath,
this too is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk comes to be wrathful
and because of his wrath is a fault-finder.<sup>8</sup>

Whatever monk is wrathful
and because of his wrath is a fault-finder,
this too is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk comes to be wrathful
and because of his wrath
is one who takes offence.

Whatever monk is wrathful
and because of his wrath
is one who takes offence,
this too is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk comes to be wrathful
and because of his wrath
utters words bordering on wrath.

Whatever monk is wrathful
and because of his wrath
utters [126] words bordering on wrath,
this too is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk, reproved,<sup>9</sup>
blurts out reproof against the reprover.

Whatever monk, reproved,
blurts out reproof against the reprover,
this too is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk, reproved,
disparages the reprover for the reproof.

Whatever monk, reproved,
disparages the reprover for the reproof,
this too is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk, reproved,
rounds on<sup>10</sup> the reprover for the reproof.

Whatever monk, reproved,
rounds on the reprover for the reproof,
this too is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk, reproved,
shelves the question by (asking) the reprover another,<sup>11</sup> answers off the point,<sup>12</sup> and evinces temper
and ill-will
and sulkiness.

Whatever monk, reproved,
shelves the question by asking the reprover another,
answers off the point,
and evinces temper
and ill-will
and sulkiness,
this too is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk, reproved,
does not succeed in explaining his movements<sup>13</sup> to the reprover.

Whatever monk, reproved,
does not succeed in explaining his movements to the reprover,
this too is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk comes to be harsh, spiteful.<sup>14</sup>

Whatever monk comes to be harsh,
spiteful,
this too is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk comes to be envious,
grudging.

Whatever monk comes to be envious,
grudging,
this too is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk comes to be treacherous,
deceitful.

Whatever monk comes to be treacherous,
deceitful,
this too is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

And again, you reverences, a monk comes to be stubborn,
proud.

Whatever monk comes to be stubborn,
proud,
this too is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk comes to seize the temporal,
grasping it tightly,
not letting go of it easily.

Whatever monk comes to seize the temporal, [127]
grasping it tightly,
not letting go of it easily,<sup>15</sup>
this too is a quality that makes him difficult to speak to.

These, your reverences, are called the qualities which make it difficult to speak to (a monk).

---

But if, your reverences, a monk invites, saying:

'Let the venerable ones speak to me,
I should be spoken to by the venerable ones' and if he is one whom it is easy to speak to, endowed with qualities which make him easy to speak to,

tractable,
capable of being instructed, then his fellow Brahma-farers judge that he should be spoken to and that he should be instructed and that trust should be placed in that individual.

And what, your reverences,
are the qualities which make him easy to speak to?

Herein, your reverences,
a monk does not come to be of evil desires nor in the thrall of evil desires.

Whatever monk comes to be not of evil desires
nor in the thrall of evil desires,
this is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk does not come to exalt himself nor to disparage others.

Whatever monk,
does not come to exalt himself
nor to disparage others
this is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk does not come to be wrathful,
overpowered by wrath.

Whatever monk,
does not come to be wrathful,
overpowered by wrath,
this is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk does not come to be wrathful
and a fault-finder because of his wrath.

Whatever monk,
does not come to be wrathful
and a fault-finder because of his wrath,
this is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk does not come to be wrathful
and because of his wrath takes offence.

Whatever monk,
does not come to be wrathful
and because of his wrath take offence,
this is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk does not come to be wrathful
and because of his wrath utters words bordering on wrath.

Whatever monk does not come to be wrathful and because of his wrath utter words bordering on wrath,
this is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk, reproved,
does not blurt out reproof against the reprover.

Whatever monk, reproved,
does not blurt out reproof against the reprover,
this is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk, reproved,
does not disparage the reprover for the reproof.

Whatever monk, reproved,
does not disparage the reprover for the reproof,
this is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk, reproved,
does not round on the reprover for the reproof.

Whatever monk, reproved,
does not round on the reprover for the reproof,
this is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk, reproved,
does not shelve the question by asking the reprover another,
he does not answer off the point, he does not evince temper
and ill-will
and sulkiness.

Whatever monk, reproved,
does not shelve the question by asking the reprover another, does not answer off the point, does not evince temper,
ill-will
and sulkiness,
this is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk, reproved,
succeeds in [128] explaining his movements to the reprover.

Whatever monk, reproved,
succeeds in explaining his movements to the reprover,
this is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk comes to be not harsh,
not spiteful.

Whatever monk comes to be not harsh,
not spiteful,
this is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk comes to be not envious,
not grudging.

Whatever monk comes to be not envious,
not grudging,
this is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk comes to be not treacherous,
not deceitful.

Whatever monk comes to be not treacherous,
not deceitful,
this is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk comes to be not stubborn,
not proud.

Whatever monk to be not stubborn,
not proud,
this is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

And again, your reverences,
a monk comes not to seize the temporal,
not grasping it tightly,
letting go of it easily.

Whatever monk comes not to seize the temporal,
not grasping it tightly,
letting go of it easily,
this too is a quality that makes him easy to speak to.

These, your reverences, are called the qualities that make it easy to speak to (a monk).

---

There in,<sup>16</sup> your reverences, self ought to be measured against self<sup>17</sup> thus by a monk:

'That person who is of evil desires and who is in the thrall of evil desires,
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;
and, similarly,
if I were of evil desires
and in the thrall of evil desires,
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I will not be of evil desires nor in the thrall of evil desires.'

■

'That person who exalts himself
and disparages others,
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;
and, similarly,
if I were to exalt myself
and disparage others,
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I will not exalt myself and disparage others.'

■

'That person who is wrathful, overcome by wrath,
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;
and, similarly,
if I were wrathful,
overcome by wrath,
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I will not be wrathful, overcome by wrath.'

■

'Whatever person is wrathful
and because of his wrath is a fault-finder,
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;
and, similarly,
if I were wrathful,
and were a fault-finder because of wrath,
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I will not be one who is wrathful nor one who is a fault-finder because of wrath.'

■

'Whatever person is wrathful
and because of his wrath is one who takes offence,
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;
and, similarly,
if I were wrathful,
and were one who takes offence because of wrath,
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I will not be one who is wrathful nor one who takes offence because of wrath.'

■

'Whatever person is wrathful
and because of his wrath utters words bordering on wrath,
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;
and, similarly,
if I were wrathful,
and were one who utters words bordering on wrath because of wrath,
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I will not be one who is wrathful nor one who utters words bordering on wrath because of wrath.'

■

'Whatever person, reproved,
blurts out reproof against the reprover,
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;
and, similarly,
if I were reproved,
and were to blurt out reproof against the reprover,
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I, reproved,
will not blurt out reproof against the reprover.'

■

'Whatever person, reproved, disparages the reprover for the reproof,
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;
and, similarly,
if I were reproved,
and were to disparage the reprover for the reproof,
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I, reproved,
will not disparage the reprover for the reproof.'

■

'Whatever person, reproved,
rounds on the reprover for the reproof,
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;

and, similarly,
if I were reprov'd,
and were to round on the reprover for the reproof,
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I, reprov'd,
will not round on the reprover for the reproof.'

■

'Whatever person, reprov'd,
shelves the question by asking the reprover another,
answers off the point,
and evinces temper,
ill-will
and sulkiness
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;
and, similarly,
if I were reprov'd,
and were to shelve the question by asking the reprover another, answer off the point,
and evince temper,
ill-will
and sulkiness
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I, reprov'd,
will not shelve the question by asking the reprover another answer off the point,

and evince temper,
ill-will
and sulkiness.'

■

'Whatever person, reproved,
does not succeed in explaining his movements to the reprover,
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;
and, similarly,
if I were reproved,
and did not succeed in explaining my movements to the reprover
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I, reproved,
will explain my movements to the reprover.'

■

'Whatever person is harsh,
spiteful,
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;
and, similarly,
if I were harsh,
spiteful,
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I, will be not harsh,
spiteful.'

■

'Whatever person is envious,
grudging,
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;
and, similarly,
if I were envious,
grudging,
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I, will not be envious, grudging.'

■

'Whatever person is treacherous,
deceitful,
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;
and, similarly,
if I were treacherous,
deceitful,
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I, will not be treacherous, deceitful.'

■

'Whatever person is stubborn,
proud,
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;
and, similarly,
if I were stubborn,
proud,
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I, will not be stubborn, proud.'

■

'Whatever person comes to seize the temporal,
grasping it tightly,
not letting go of it easily,
that person is displeasing and disagreeable to me;
and, similarly,
if I were to seize the temporal,
grasping it tightly,
not letting go of it easily,
I would be displeasing and disagreeable to others.'

When a monk, your reverences,
knows this,
he should make up his mind that:

'I, will not seize the temporal,
grasping it tightly,
not letting go of it easily'

---

Therein, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, am I of evil desires,
in the thrall of evil desires?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,
he knows thus:

'I am of evil desires,
in the thrall of evil desires,'
then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I am not of evil desires, not in the thrall of evil desires,'
then, with rapture and delight,
they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

■

And again, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, am I one who exalts himself,
disparages others?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,
he knows thus:

'I am one who exalts himself,
disparages others,'
then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I am not one who exalts himself,
disparages others,'
then, with rapture and delight,
they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

■

And again, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, am I one who is wrathful,
overpowered [130] by wrath?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,
he knows thus:

'I am one who is wrathful,
overpowered by wrath,'
then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I am not one who is wrathful,
overpowered by wrath,'
then, with rapture and delight,
they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

■

And again, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, am I one who is wrathful,
and a fault-finder because of wrath?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,
he knows thus:

'I am one who is wrathful,
and a fault-finder because of wrath,'
then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I am not one who is wrathful,
and a fault-finder because of wrath,'
then, with rapture and delight,
they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

■

And again, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, am I one who is wrathful,
and takes offence because of wrath?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,
he knows thus:

'I am one who is wrathful,
and takes offence because of wrath,'
then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I am not one who is wrathful,
and takes offence because of wrath,'
then, with rapture and delight,
they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

■

And again, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, am I one who is wrathful,
and who because of wrath utters words bordering on wrath?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,
he knows thus:

'I am one who is wrathful,
and who because of wrath utters words bordering on wrath,'
then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I am not one who is wrathful,
and who because of wrath utters words bordering on wrath,'
then, with rapture and delight,
they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

■

And again, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, am I one who, reproved,
blurts out reproof against the reprover?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,
he knows thus:

'I am one who, reproved,
blurts out reproof against the reprover,'
then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I am not one who, reproved,
blurts out reproof against the reprover,'
then, with rapture and delight,
they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

■

And again, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, do I, reproved,
disparage the reprover for the reproof?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,
he knows thus:

'I, reproved,
disparage the reprover for the reproof,'
then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I, reproved, do not
disparage the reprover for the reproof,'
then, with rapture and delight,
they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

■

And again, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, do I, reproved,
round on the reprover for the reproof?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,
he knows thus:

'I, reproved,
round on the reprover for the reproof,'
then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I, reproved, do not
round on the reprover for the reproof,'
then, with rapture and delight,
they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

■

And again, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, do I, reproved,
shelve the question by (asking) the reprover another,
do I speak off the point, do I evince temper,

ill-will
and sulkiness?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,
he knows thus:

'I, reproved,
shelve the question by (asking) the reprover another,
speak off the point,
evince temper,
ill-will
and sulkiness,'
then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I, reproved, do not
shelve the question by (asking) the reprover another,
do not speak off the point,
I do not evince temper,
ill-will
and sulkiness,'
then, with rapture and delight,
they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

■

And again, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, do I, reproved,
succeed in explaining my movements to the reprover?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,
he knows thus:

'I, reproved, do not succeed in explaining my movements to the reprover,'
then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I, reproved, do
succeed in explaining my movements to the reprover,'
then, with rapture and delight,
they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

■

And again, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, am I harsh,
spiteful?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,
he knows thus:

'I, am harsh,
spiteful,'

then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I, am not harsh,
spiteful
then, with rapture and delight,
they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

■

And again, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, am I envious,
grudging?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,
he knows thus:

'I, am envious,
grudging,'
then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I, am not envious,
grudging,
then, with rapture and delight,
they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

■

And again, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, am I treacherous,
deceitful?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,
he knows thus:

'I, am treacherous,
deceitful,'
then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I, am not treacherous,
deceitful,
then, with rapture and delight,
they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

■

And again, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, am I stubborn,
proud?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,
he knows thus:

'I, am stubborn,
proud,'
then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I, am not stubborn,
proud,
then, with rapture and delight,
they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

■

And again, your reverences,
self ought to be reflected upon by self thus by a monk:

'Now, am I one to seize the temporal,
grasping it tightly,
not letting go of it easily?'

If, your reverences,
while the monk is reflecting,

he knows thus:

'I, am one to seize the temporal,
grasping it tightly,
not letting go of it easily,'
then, your reverences,
that monk should strive
to get rid of those evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences, that monk,
while reflecting,
knows thus:

'I, am not one to seize the temporal,
grasping it tightly,
not letting go of it easily,
then, with rapture and delight,
[131] they should be forsaken by that monk,
training day and night in skilled states.

---

If, your reverences,
while reflecting,
a monk beholds that all these evil unskilled states are not got rid of in himself,
then, your reverences,
that monk must strive to get rid of all these evil unskilled states.

But if, your reverences,
while reflecting,
a monk beholds that all these evil unskilled states
are got rid of in himself,

then, your reverences,
with rapture and delight
that monk should forsake them, training day and night in skilled states.<sup>18</sup>

Your reverences,
it is like a woman or a man,
young,
in the prime of life,
and fond of ornaments
who is pondering on his own reflection in a mirror that is quite clear,
quite pure,
or in a bowl of limpid water.<sup>19</sup>

If he sees dust or blemish there, he strives to get rid of that dust or blemish.

But if he does not see dust or blemish there, he is pleased in consequence and thinks:

'Indeed, this is good for me, indeed I am quite clean.'

Even so, your reverences, if a monk, while reflecting, beholds that all these evil unskilled states in the self are not got rid of,
then, your reverences,
he strives to get rid of all these evil, unskilled states.

But if, your reverences,
the monk, while reflecting, beholds that all these evil unskilled states in the self are got rid of,
then, your reverences,
with rapture and delight
that monk should forsake them, training day and night in skilled states." Thus spoke the venerable Moggallāna the Great.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the venerable Moggallāna the Great had said.

Discourse on Measuring in Accordance with:
the Fifth

---

<sup>1</sup> Referred to at MA. ii. 246. MA. ii. 67 says that this Sutta was known to the Ancients as the Bhikkhu-pātimokkha, and should be reflected upon three times daily. It should be compared with Sangh. XII (Vin. iii. 177-79) and see B.D. i. Intr. xxviii f. and pp. 309-13 for notes. Note that the Buddha is not mentioned in this discourse. Anumāna may mean "inference," or "argument."

<sup>2</sup> This is not giri, hill, but gira, a sound, utterance. MA. ii. 65 says Sumsumāragira is the name of a town. When the foundations were being laid, a crocodile, sumsumāra, in a pool nearby made a sound, let forth an utterance, giram nicchāresi, and so they gave the town this name when it had been built. See B.D. ii. 398.

<sup>3</sup> MA. ii. 66, let them exhort and instruct.

<sup>4</sup> dubbaca, see B.D. i. 310, n. 1.

<sup>5</sup> MA. ii. 66: he says, Why do you speak to me? I know for myself what is allowable and what is not, what has error and what has not, what is the goal and what is not.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. A. ii. 113: This is destruction in the discipline for an ariyan: when both a Tathāgata and fellow Brahma-farers deem that a man to be tamed is not to be spoken to, not to be instructed.

<sup>7</sup> Cf. M. i. 19.

<sup>8</sup> Or, grudge-bearer.

<sup>9</sup> cudito, reproved for a fault. Cf. A. iv. 193, and Vin. i. 173, ii. 248 ff.

<sup>10</sup> paccāropeti. He says, But it is you who have fallen into such and such an offence - you confess first. Cf. A. iv. 193.

<sup>11</sup> aññen'aññaṃ paṭicarati; see B.D. ii. 164, n. 4.

<sup>12</sup> bahiddhā kathaṃ apanāmeti, takes the talk outside. M.A. ii. 66 gives as an example, if he is asked whether he has fallen into such and such an offence, he answers that he is going to Pāṭaliputta.

<sup>13</sup> apadāne. MA. ii. 66 attano cariyāya. He is not able to explain where he was staying, on whom or what depending, what he was doing at that time or where he was or what another was doing or where he was. Colloquially "goings on."

<sup>14</sup> As at M. i. 42-3, ii. 245; Vin. ii. 89; A. iii. 335; D. iii. 45, 246-47.

<sup>15</sup> As at M. i. 43.

<sup>16</sup> I.e. in these sixteen qualities, MA. ii. 67.

<sup>17</sup> attanā va attānaṃ anuminitabbam. The last word no doubt helps to give this Sutta its title, anumāna. It means inferring, drawing a deduction, and is explained at MA. ii. 67 by anumetabbo, tuletabbo, tīretabbo, to be measured, weighed, decided upon.

<sup>18</sup> MA. ii. 67 notices the fivefold pahāna, getting rid of. The last one is the getting rid of by "escape," nismraṇa, when one has come to nibbāna. Cf. SnA. 8; Asl. 351 (Expos. ii. 454).

<sup>19</sup> Cf. Vin. ii. 107; D. i. 80; S. iii. 105.

---

Majjhima Nikāya

I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa

2. Sihanāda Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings

I. The First Fifty Discourses

2. The Division of the Lion's Roar

16. Discourse on Mental Barrenness<sup>1</sup>

Cetokhila Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Savatthī in the Jeta Grove in Anathapiṇḍika's monastery.

There the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered One," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Monks, by whatever monk five mental barrennesses<sup>2</sup> are not got rid of, five mental bondages<sup>3</sup> are not rooted out, that he should come to growth, expansion, maturity<sup>4</sup> in this dhamma and discipline - such a situation does not occur.

---

Which are the five mental barrennesses that are not got rid of by him?

Herein, monks, the monk has doubts about the Teacher, is perplexed,
is not convinced,
is not sure.

Monks, whatever monk has doubts about the Teacher,
is perplexed,
is not convinced,
is not sure,
his mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the first mental barrenness that thus comes not to be got rid of
by him whose mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks, the monk has doubts about Dhamma, is perplexed,
is not convinced,

is not sure,
his mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the second mental barrenness
that thus comes not to be got rid of
by him whose mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks, the monk has doubts about the Order,
is perplexed,
is not convinced,
is not sure,
his mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the third mental barrenness
that thus comes not to be got rid of
by him whose mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks, the monk has doubts about the training, is perplexed,
is not convinced,
is not sure,

his mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the fourth mental barrenness
that thus comes not to be got rid of
by him whose mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks, a monk comes to be angry, displeased with his fellow Brahma-farers,
the mind worsened,
barren.<sup>5</sup>

Monks, whatever monk comes to be angry, displeased with his fellow Brahma-farers,
his mind worsened,
barren,
his mind does not incline to [133] ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the fifth mental barrenness
that thus comes not to be got rid of
by him whose mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

These are the five mental barrennesses that are not got rid of.

§

And what are the five mental bondages that are not rooted out in him?

In this case, monks, a monk is not without attachment to sense-pleasures,
not without desire,
not without affection,
not without thirst,
not without fever,
not without craving.

Monks, whatever monk is not without attachment to sense-pleasures,
not without desire,
not without affection,
not without thirst,
not without fever,
not without craving,
his mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the first mental bondage
that thus comes not to be rooted out
by him whose mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks, a monk is not without attachment to body<sup>6</sup>,
not without desire,

not without affection,
not without thirst,
not without fever,
not without craving,
his mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the second mental bondage
that thus comes not to be rooted out
by him whose mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks, a monk is not without attachment to material shapes<sup>7</sup>,
not without desire,
not without affection,
not without thirst,
not without fever,
not without craving,
his mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the the third mental bondage
that thus comes not to be rooted out
by him whose mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks, a monk having eaten as much as his belly will hold,
lives intent on the ease of bed,
on the ease of lying down,
on the ease of slumber.

Whatever monk, having eaten as much as his belly will hold,
lives intent on the ease of bed,
on the ease of lying down,
on the ease of slumber,
his mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the fourth mental bondage that comes to be not rooted out
by him whose mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks, a monk fares the Brahma-faring aspiring after some class of devas, thinking:

'By this moral habit
or custom
or austerity
or Brahma-faring
I will become a deva<sup>8</sup> or one among the devas.<sup>8</sup>

Whatever monk fares the Brahma-faring aspiring after some class of devas, thinking;
'By this moral habit
or custom
or austerity
or Brahma-faring
I will become a deva
or one among the devas',
his mind does not incline to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the fifth mental bondage that comes not to be rooted out
by him whose mind does not incline [134] to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

These are his five mental bondages that are not rooted out.

Monks, by whatever monk these five mental barrennesses are not got rid of, these five mental bondages are not rooted out,
that he should come to growth,
expansion,
maturity in this dhamma and discipline -
such a situation does not occur.

§

Monks, by whatever monk five mental barrennesses are got rid of, five mental bondages are properly rooted out,
that he should come to growth,
expansion,
maturity in this dhamma and discipline -
this situation occurs.

---

Which are the five mental barrennesses that are got rid of by him?

Herein, monks, a monk
has no doubts about the Teacher, is not perplexed,
is convinced,
is sure.

Monks, whatever monk has no doubts about the Teacher,
is not perplexed,
is convinced,
is sure,
his mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the first mental barrenness
that comes to be got rid of
by him whose mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks,
a monk has no doubts about dhamma,
is not perplexed,
is convinced,
is sure.

Monks, whatever monk has no doubts about the dhamma,
is not perplexed,
is convinced,
is sure,
his mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the second mental barrenness
that comes to be got rid of
by him whose mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks, a monk has no doubts about the Order,
is not perplexed,
is convinced,
is sure.

Monks, whatever monk has no doubts about the Order,
is not perplexed,
is convinced,
is sure,
his mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,

to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the third mental barrenness
that comes to be got rid of
by him whose mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks, a monk has no doubts about the training,
is not perplexed,
is convinced,
is sure.

Monks, whatever monk has no doubts about the training,
is not perplexed,
is convinced,
is sure,
his mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the fourth mental barrenness
that comes to be got rid of
by him whose mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks, a monk does not come to be angry,

displeased with his fellow Brahma-farers,
the mind worsened,
barren.

Monks, whatever monk does not come to be angry, displeased with his fellow Brahma-farers,
his mind worsened,
barren,
his mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the fifth mental barrenness that thus comes to be got rid of
by him whose mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

These are the five mental barrennesses that are got rid of by him.

---

And what are the five mental bondages that are properly rooted out by him?

In this case, monks, a monk comes to be without attachment to sense pleasures, without desire,
without affection,
without thirst,

without fever,
without craving.

Whatever monk is without attachment to sense pleasures,
without desire,
without affection,
without thirst,
without fever,
without craving,
his mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the first mental bondage
that comes to be properly rooted out
by him whose mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks, a monk comes to be without attachment to body,
without desire,
without affection,
without thirst,
without fever,
without craving.

Whatever monk is without attachment to body,
without desire,
without affection,
without thirst,
without fever,

without craving,
his mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the second mental bondage
that comes to be properly rooted out
by him whose mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks, a monk comes to be without attachment to material shapes,
without desire,
without affection,
without thirst,
without fever,
without craving.

Whatever monk is without attachment to material shapes,
without desire,
without affection,
without thirst,
without fever,
without craving,
his mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the third mental bondage
that comes to be properly rooted out

by him whose mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks, a monk
not having eaten as much as his belly will hold,
does not live intent on the ease [135] of bed,
on the ease of lying down,
on the ease of slumber.

Whatever monk,
not having eaten as much as his belly will hold,
does not live intent on the ease of bed,
on the ease of lying down,
on the ease of slumber,
his mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the fourth mental bondage
that comes to be properly rooted out
by him whose mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

■

And again, monks, a monk does not fare the Brahma-faring aspiring after some class of devas
and thinking:

'By this moral habit
or custom
or austerity
or Brahma-faring
I will become a deva
or one among the devas.'

Whatever monk does not fare the Brahma-faring aspiring after some class of devas
and thinking:

'By this moral habit
or custom
or austerity
or Brahma-faring
I will become a deva
or one among the devas'
his mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

This is the fifth mental bondage
that comes to be properly rooted out
by him whose mind inclines to ardour,
to continual application,
to perseverance,
to striving.

These are the five forms of mental bondage that are properly rooted out in him.

---

Monks, by whatever monk these five forms of mental barrenness are got rid of, these five forms of mental bondage are properly rooted out,
that he should come to growth,
expansion,
maturity
in this dhamma and discipline - such a situation occurs.

§

He cultivates the basis of psychic power<sup>9</sup> that is possessed of concentration of intention with activities of striving;

he cultivates the basis of psychic power that is possessed of concentration of energy with activities of striving;

he cultivates the basis of psychic power that is possessed of concentration of consciousness with activities of striving;

he cultivates the basis of psychic power that is possessed of concentration of investigation with activities of striving,

with exertion as the fifth.

■

Monks, if a monk is thus possessed of fifteen factors including exertion<sup>10</sup> he becomes one<sup>11</sup> for successful breaking through,<sup>12</sup> he becomes one for awakening,
he becomes one for winning the incomparable security from the bonds.<sup>13</sup>

■

Monks, [136] it is as if<sup>14</sup> there were eight or ten or a dozen hen's eggs
properly sat on,
properly incubated,
properly hatched
by that hen;
such a wish as this would not arise in that hen:

'O may my chicks,
having pierced through the egg-shells
with the point of the claw on their feet
or with their beaks,
break forth safely,
for these chicks were ones who were able to break forth safely having pierced through the egg-shells
with the point of the claw on their feet
or with their beaks.

Even so, monks,
is it that a monk who is thus possessed of the fifteen factors including exertion becomes one for successful breaking through,
he becomes one for awakening,

he becomes one for winning the incomparable security from the bonds."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse on Mental Barrenness:
The Sixth

---

<sup>1</sup> Or "spikes," khila being a post.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. D. iii. 237; A. iii. 248, iv. 460, v. 17.

<sup>3</sup> The same references apply here; and see below, M. i. 103.

<sup>4</sup> MA. ii. 68, in the moral habits, the Way, nibbāna, respectively; or, in moral habit and concentration, insight and the way, the fruits and nibbāna.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Vin. iii. 163, 255, iv. 236, 238; D. iii. 238.

<sup>6</sup> MA. ii. 69, his own body.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid., external ones.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid., a deva of great or little esteem.

<sup>9</sup> Cf. D. iii. 77, 221; A. i. 39; S. v. 263 ff.; Vbh. 216 ff.; Vism. 385.

<sup>10</sup> MA. ii. 69, the five mental barrennesses, the five mental bondages, the four bases of psychic power, with exertion. "Exertion," ussolhi, is rendered at MA. ii. 69 as energy (virīya) in regard to all that should be done. Virīya is virility, manliness, heroism.

<sup>11</sup> bhabho. MA. ii. 09, anurūpo anucchaviko, fit, suitable for.

<sup>12</sup> MA. ii. 69, of the kilesa by knowledge. Cf. M. i. 357.

<sup>13</sup> MA. ii. 69, from the four bonds, yoga (which is equivalent to arahantship).

<sup>14</sup> = M. i. 357 = A. iv. 126 = S. iii. 154; cf. A. iv. 176, Vin. iii. 3.

---

Majjhima Nikāya

I. Mūlapaññāsa

2. Sihanāda Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings

I. The First Fifty Discourses

2. The Division of the Lion's Roar

17. Discourse on the Forest Grove

Vana-Pattha Sutta

<sup>8</sup> nānubandhitabbo. Cf. nānubandheyya at Vin. iv. 326, and see VA. 941.

<sup>9</sup> As at A. iv. 32. MA. ii. 72 says even if the man has a stick (daṇḍa, punishment) brought, and saying, "Do not stay here," has him thrown out; (the monk) having apologised to him, should simply remain as long as life lasts.

---

Majjhima Nikāya

I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa

2. Sihanāda Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings

I. The First Fifty Discourses

2. The Division of the Lion's Roar

18. Discourse of the Honey-Ball

Madhu-Piṇḍika Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying among the Sakyans in Nigrodha's monastery in Kapilavatthu.

Then the Lord,
having dressed in the morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
entered Kapilavatthu for almsfood.

Having walked in Kapilavatthu for almsfood,
returning from (the quest for) alms after the meal, he approached the Great Wood<sup>1</sup>
for the day-sojourn.

Having plunged into the Great Wood, he sat down for the day-sojourn at the root of a young vilva tree.

Then the Sakyan, Stick-in-hand,<sup>2</sup> who was always pacing up and down, always roaming about on foot,<sup>3</sup>
approached the Great Wood;
having plunged into the Great Wood,
he approached the young vilva tree and the Lord;
having approached,
he exchanged greetings with the Lord;
having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy,
he stood at one side
leaning on his stick.

As he was standing at one side
leaning on his stick,
the Sakyan, Stick-in-hand, spoke thus to the Lord:

"What is the teaching<sup>4</sup> of the recluse, of what views<sup>5</sup> is he?"

"According to my teaching, sir,
in the world
with its devas,
Māras and Brahmas,
with its creation
with recluses and brahmans,
with devas and men,
there is no contending with anyone in the world;<sup>6</sup> for which reason perceptions do not obsess that brahman<sup>7</sup> as he [142] fares along
not fettered to sense-pleasures,
without questionings,

remorse<sup>8</sup> cut off,
and who is devoid of craving for becoming and non-becoming.<sup>9</sup>

This, sir, is my teaching,
this my view."

When this had been said,
the Sakyan, Stick-in-hand, shaking his head<sup>10</sup>
and wagging his tongue,
departed leaning on his stick,
his brow furrowed into three wrinkles.<sup>11</sup>

---

Then the Lord, emerging from solitude towards evening, approached Nigrodha's monastery;
having approached,
he sat down on the appointed seat.

As he was sitting down
the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Now I, monks, having dressed in the morning,
taking my bowl and robe,
entered Kapilavatthu for almsfood.

Having walked in Kapilavatthu for almsfood,
returning from the (quest for) alms after the meal,
I approached the Great Wood for the day-sojourn.

Having plunged into the Great Wood,
I sat down for the day-sojourn

at the root of a young vilva tree.

Then the Sakyan, Stick-in-hand,
who was always pacing up and down,
always roaming about on foot,
approached the Great Wood;
having plunged into the Great Wood,
he approached the young vilva tree
and me;
having approached,
he exchanged greetings with me;
having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy,
he stood at one side
leaning on his stick.

As he was standing at one side
leaning on his stick,
the Sakyan, Stick-in-hand, spoke thus to me:

'What is the teaching of the recluse, of what views is he?'

'According to my teaching, sir,
in the world
with its devas,
Māras and Brahmas,
with its creation
with recluses and brahmans,
with devas and men,
there is no contending with anyone in the world;
for which reason perceptions do not obsess that brahman
as he fares along
not fettered to sense-pleasures,
without questionings,
remorse cut off,

and who is devoid of craving
for becoming and non-becoming.

This, sir, is my teaching,
this my view.'

When this had been said,
the Sakyan, Stick-in-hand, shaking his head
and wagging his tongue,
departed leaning on his stick,
his brow furrowed into three wrinkles."

---

When he had spoken thus,
a certain monk spoke thus to the Lord:

"But what is this teaching, Lord, whereby the Lord,
in the world with its devas, Māras and Brahmas,
with its creation
with recluses and brahmans,
would not contend with anyone in the world?

And how is it, Lord,
that perceptions do not obsess the Lord, that brahman,<sup>12</sup> as he is faring along,
not fettered to sense-pleasures,
without [143] questionings,
remorse cut off,
and who is devoid of craving
for becoming and non-becoming?"

"Whatever is the origin, monk, of the number of obsessions and perceptions<sup>13</sup>
which assail a man,
if there is nothing to rejoice at,
to welcome,
to catch hold of,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment,
this is itself an end of a propensity to repugnance,
this is itself an end of a propensity to views,
this is itself an end of a propensity to perplexity,
this is itself an end of a propensity to pride,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment to becoming,
this is itself an end of a propensity to ignorance,
this is itself an end of taking the stick,
of taking a weapon,
of quarrelling,
contending,
disputing,
accusation,
slander,
lying speech.<sup>14</sup>

In these ways,
these evil unskilled states
are stopped without remainder."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Having said this,
the Well-farer,
rising from his seat,
entered a dwelling-place.

---

Soon after the Lord had gone away it occurred to these monks:

"Your reverences,
the Lord, having recited this recital to us in brief,
but not having explained the meaning in full,
rising from his seat,
entered a dwelling-place:

'Whatever is the origin, monk,
of the number of obsessions and perceptions
which assail a man,
if there is nothing to rejoice at,
to welcome,
to catch hold of,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment,
this is itself an end of a propensity to repugnance,
this is itself an end of a propensity to views,
this is itself an end of a propensity to perplexity,
this is itself an end of a propensity to pride,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment to becoming,
this is itself an end of a propensity to ignorance,
this is itself an end of taking the stick,
of taking a weapon,
of quarrelling,
contending,
disputing,
accusation,
slander,
lying speech.

In these ways,
these evil unskilled states
are stopped without remainder.'

Now, who can explain the meaning in full of this recital
recited in brief by the Lord but whose meaning was not explained in full?"

■

Then it occurred to these monks:

"Now the venerable Kaccāna the Great is both praised by the Lord and revered by intelligent fellow Brahma-farers.

The venerable Kaccāna the Great is able to explain in full
the meaning of this recital
recited in brief by the Lord,
but whose meaning was not explained in full.

Suppose we were to approach the venerable Kaccāna the Great and,
having approached,
were to question him on this meaning?"

■

Then these monks approached the venerable Kaccāna the Great;
having approached,
they exchanged greetings with the venerable Kaccāna the Great;
having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy,
they sat down at a respectful distance.

As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, these monks spoke thus to the venerable Kaccāna the Great:

"Reverend Kaccāna,
the Lord having recited this recital to us in brief,
but not having explained the meaning in full,

rising from his seat,
entered a dwelling-place:

'Whatever is the origin, monk,
of the number of obsessions and perceptions
which assail a man,
if there is nothing to rejoice at,
to welcome,
to catch hold of,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment,
this is itself an end of a propensity to repugnance,
this is itself an end of a propensity to views,
this is itself an end of a propensity to perplexity,
this is itself an end of a propensity to pride,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment to becoming,
this is itself an end of a propensity to ignorance,
this is itself an end of taking the stick,
of taking a weapon,
of quarrelling,
contending,
disputing,
accusation,
slander,
lying speech.

In these ways,
these evil unskilled states
are stopped without remainder.'

■

Soon after the Lord had gone [144] away,
it occurred to us:

'This venerable Kaccāna the Great
is both praised by the Lord

and revered by intelligent fellow Brahma-farers;
the venerable Kaccāna the Great is able to explain in full
the meaning of this recital
recited in brief by the Lord
but whose meaning was not explained in full.

Suppose we were to approach the venerable Kaccāna the Great and,
having approached,
were to question him on this meaning.'

May the venerable Kaccāna the Great explain it."

■

"Your reverences,
as a man walking about aiming at the pith,<sup>15</sup> searching for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
passing by the root,
passing by the trunk,
might think that the pith is to be looked for in the branches and foliage -
even so is this performance of the venerable ones, for (although) you had the Teacher face to face,
yet having ignored that Lord,
you judge that it is I who should be questioned on this meaning.

But, your reverences,
the Lord knows what should be known,
sees what should be seen,<sup>16</sup> he has become vision,
become knowledge,
become dhamma,
become Brahma,
he is the propounder,

the expounder,
the bringer to the goal,<sup>17</sup>
the giver of the Deathless,
dhamma-lord,
Tathāgata.

That was the time
when you should have questioned the Lord on this meaning so that you might have understood what the Lord explained to you."

■

"Undoubtedly, Kaccāna,
the Lord knows what should be known,
sees what should be seen,
he has become vision,
become knowledge,
become dhamma,
become Brahma,
he is the propounder,
the expounder,
the bringer to the goal,
the giver of the Deathless,
dhamma-lord,
Tathāgata.

But the venerable Kaccāna the Great
is both praised by the Lord,
and revered by intelligent fellow Brahma-farers,
and the venerable Kaccāna the Great is able to explain in full
the meaning of that recital
recited in brief by the Lord
but whose meaning was not explained in full.

Let the venerable Kaccāna explain, without finding it troublesome."

---

"Well then, your reverences,
listen,
pay careful attention
and I will speak."

"Yes, your reverence,"
these monks answered the venerable Kaccāna the Great in assent.

The venerable Kaccāna the Great spoke thus:

[145] "In regard to that recital, your reverences, which the Lord recited in brief,
but not having explained the meaning in full,
rising from his seat,
entered a dwelling-place:

'Whatever is the origin, monk,
of the number of obsessions and perceptions
which assail a man,
if there is nothing to rejoice at,
to welcome,
to catch hold of,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment,
this is itself an end of a propensity to repugnance,
this is itself an end of a propensity to views,
this is itself an end of a propensity to perplexity,
this is itself an end of a propensity to pride,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment to becoming,
this is itself an end of a propensity to ignorance,

this is itself an end of taking the stick,
of taking a weapon,
of quarrelling,
contending,
disputing,
accusation,
slander,
lying speech.

In these ways,
these evil unskilled states
are stopped without remainder,'
of that recital
recited by the Lord in brief
but whose meaning was not explained in full,
I understand the meaning in full thus:

Visual consciousness,<sup>18</sup> your reverences, arises because of eye and material shapes;
the meeting of the three is sensory impingement;<sup>19</sup> feelings are because of sensory impingement;
what one feels
one perceives;
what one perceives
one reasons about;<sup>20</sup>
what one reasons about
obsesses one;
what obsesses one
is the origin of the number of perceptions and obsessions
which assail a man
in regard to material shapes cognisable by the eye,
past,
future,
present.

■

And, your reverences, auditory consciousness arises because of ear and sounds;
the meeting of the three
is sensory impingement;
feelings are because of sensory impingement;
what one feels
one perceives;
what one perceives
one reasons about;
what one reasons about
obsesses one;
what obsesses one
is the origin of the number of perceptions and obsessions
which assail a man
in regard to sounds cognisable by the ear,
past,
future,
present.

■

And, your reverences, olfactory consciousness arises because of nose and smells;
the meeting of the three
is sensory impingement;
feelings are because of sensory impingement;
what one feels
one perceives;
what one perceives
one reasons about;
what one reasons about
obsesses one;
what obsesses one
is the origin of the number of perceptions and obsessions

which assail a man
in regard to smells cognisable by the nose,
past,
future,
present.

■

And, your reverences, gustatory consciousness arises because of tongue and tastes;
the meeting of the three
is sensory impingement;
feelings are because of sensory impingement;
what one feels
one perceives;
what one perceives
one reasons about;
what one reasons about
obsesses one;
what obsesses one
is the origin of the number of perceptions and obsessions
which assail a man
in regard to tastes cognisable by the tongue,
past,
future,
present.

■

And, your reverences, bodily consciousness arises because of body and touches;
the meeting of the three
is sensory impingement;
feelings are because of sensory impingement;
what one feels
one perceives;

what one perceives
one reasons about;
what one reasons about
obsesses one;
what obsesses one
is the origin of the number of perceptions and obsessions
which assail a man
in regard to touches cognisable by the body,
past,
future,
present.

■

And, your reverences, mental consciousness<sup>21</sup> arises because of mind<sup>22</sup> and mental objects;
the meeting of the three
is sensory impingement;
feelings are because of sensory impingement;
what one feels
one perceives;
what one perceives
one reasons about;
what one reasons about
obsesses one;
what obsesses one
is the origin of the number of perceptions and obsessions
which assail a man
in regard to mental objects cognisable by mind,
past,
future,
present.

---

This situation occurs:
that when there is eye, your reverences,
when there is material shape,
when there is visual consciousness,
one will recognise the manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise the manifestation of feeling.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of feeling,
one will recognise the manifestation of perception.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of perception,
one will recognise the manifestation of reasoning.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of reasoning,
one will recognise [146] the manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation occurs:
that when there is ear, your reverences,
when there is sound,
when there is auditory consciousness,
one will recognise the manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise the manifestation of feeling.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of feeling,
one will recognise the manifestation of perception.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of perception,
one will recognise the manifestation of reasoning.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of reasoning,
one will recognise the manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation occurs:
that when there is nose, your reverences,
when there is smell,
when there is olfactory consciousness,
one will recognise the manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise the manifestation of feeling.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of feeling,
one will recognise the manifestation of perception.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of perception,
one will recognise the manifestation of reasoning.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of reasoning,
one will recognise the manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation occurs:

that when there is tongue, your reverences,
when there is taste,
when there is gustatory consciousness,
one will recognise the manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation occurs:

that when there is the manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise the manifestation of feeling.

This situation occurs:

that when there is the manifestation of feeling,
one will recognise the manifestation of perception.

This situation occurs:

that when there is the manifestation of perception,
one will recognise the manifestation of reasoning.

This situation occurs:

that when there is the manifestation of reasoning,
one will recognise the manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation occurs:

that when there is body, your reverences,
when there is touch,
when there is bodily consciousness,
one will recognise the manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation occurs:

that when there is the manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise the manifestation of feeling.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of feeling,
one will recognise the manifestation of perception.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of perception,
one will recognise the manifestation of reasoning.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of reasoning,
one will recognise the manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation occurs:
that when there is mind, your reverences,
when there is a mental object,
when there is mental consciousness,
one will recognise the manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise the manifestation of feeling.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of feeling,
one will recognise the manifestation of perception.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of perception,
one will recognise the manifestation of reasoning.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of reasoning,
one will recognise the manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

---

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not eye, your reverences,
when there is not material shape,
when there is not visual consciousness,
one will recognise a manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise a manifestation of feeling.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of feeling
one will recognise a manifestation of perception.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of perception
one will recognise a manifestation of reasoning.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of reasoning
one will recognise a manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not ear, your reverences,
when there is not sound,
when there is not auditory consciousness,
one will recognise a manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise a manifestation of feeling.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of feeling
one will recognise a manifestation of perception.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of perception
one will recognise a manifestation of reasoning.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of reasoning
one will recognise a manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not nose, your reverences,
when there is not smell,
when there is not olfactory consciousness,
one will recognise a manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise a manifestation of feeling.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of feeling
one will recognise a manifestation of perception.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of perception
one will recognise a manifestation of reasoning.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of reasoning
one will recognise a manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not tongue, your reverences,
when there is not taste,
when there is not gustatory consciousness,
one will recognise a manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise a manifestation of feeling.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of feeling
one will recognise a manifestation of perception.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of perception
one will recognise a manifestation of reasoning.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of reasoning
one will recognise a manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not body, your reverences,
when there is not touch,
when there is not bodily consciousness,
one will recognise a manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise a manifestation of feeling.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of feeling
one will recognise a manifestation of perception.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of perception
one will recognise a manifestation of reasoning.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of reasoning
one will recognise a manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not mind, your reverences,
when there is not a mental object,
when there is not mental consciousness,
one will recognise a manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise a manifestation of feeling.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of feeling
one will recognise a manifestation of perception.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of perception
one will recognise a manifestation of reasoning.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of reasoning
one will recognise a manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

"In regard to that recital, your reverences,
which the Lord recited in brief,
but not having explained the meaning in full,
rising from his seat,
entered a dwelling-place:

'Whatever is the origin, monk,
of the number of obsessions and perceptions
which assail a man,
if there is nothing to rejoice at,
to welcome,
to catch hold of,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment,
this is itself an end of a propensity to repugnance,
this is itself an end of a propensity to views,
this is itself an end of a propensity to perplexity,
this is itself an end of a propensity to pride,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment to becoming,
this is itself an end of a propensity to ignorance,
this is itself an end of taking the stick,
of taking a weapon,
of quarrelling,
contending,
disputing,
accusation,
slander,
lying speech,'
of that recital
recited by the Lord in brief

but whose meaning was not explained in full,
I understand the meaning in full thus.

But if you, venerable ones, so desire,
having approached the Lord,
you can question him as to this meaning
so that as the Lord explains it to you so may you understand it."

---

Then these monks, delighting and rejoicing in what the venerable Kaccāna the Great had said, rising from their seats,
approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
they sat down at a respectful distance.

As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, these monks spoke thus to the Lord: [147]

"Lord, the Lord having recited this recital to us in brief,
rising from his seat,
entered a dwelling-place:

'Whatever is the origin, monk,
of the number of obsessions and perceptions
which assail a man,
if there is nothing to rejoice at,
to welcome,
to catch hold of,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment,
this is itself an end of a propensity to repugnance,

this is itself an end of a propensity to views,
this is itself an end of a propensity to perplexity,
this is itself an end of a propensity to pride,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment to becoming,
this is itself an end of a propensity to ignorance,
this is itself an end of taking the stick,
of taking a weapon,
of quarrelling,
contending,
disputing,
accusation,
slander,
lying speech.

In these ways,
these evil unskilled states
are stopped without remainder.'

Now, Lord, soon after the Lord had gone away,
it occurred to us:

'The Lord, having recited this recital to us in brief, but without explaining its meaning in full,
rising from his seat,
entered a dwelling-place:

"Whatever is the origin, monk,
of the number of obsessions and perceptions
which assail a man,
if there is nothing to rejoice at,
to welcome,
to catch hold of,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment,
this is itself an end of a propensity to repugnance,
this is itself an end of a propensity to views,
this is itself an end of a propensity to perplexity,

this is itself an end of a propensity to pride,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment to becoming,
this is itself an end of a propensity to ignorance,
this is itself an end of taking the stick,
of taking a weapon,
of quarrelling,
contending,
disputing,
accusation,
slander,
lying speech.

In these ways,
these evil unskilled states
are stopped without remainder."

Now, who can explain in full
the meaning of this recital
recited in brief by the Lord
but whose meaning was not explained in full?'

Then, Lord, it occurred to us:

'Now the venerable Kaccāna the Great is both praised by the Lord and revered by intelligent fellow Brahma-farers.

The venerable Kaccāna the Great is able to explain in full
the meaning of this recital
recited in brief by the Lord,
but whose meaning was not explained in full.

Suppose we were to approach the venerable Kaccāna the Great;
and having approached
were to question the venerable Kaccāna the Great on this meaning?'

Then we, Lord, approached the venerable Kaccāna the Great;
having approached,

we questioned the venerable Kaccāna the Great on this meaning.

The meaning of those (words) was explained to us, Lord, by the venerable Kaccāna the Great by these methods, by these sentences,<sup>23</sup> by these words."<sup>24</sup>ed1

"Your reverences,
as a man walking about aiming at the pith,
searching for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
passing by the root,
passing by the trunk,
might think that the pith is to be looked for
in the branches and foliage -
even so is this performance of the venerable ones,
for (although) you had the Teacher face to face,
yet having ignored that Lord,
you judge that it is I who should be questioned on this meaning.

But, your reverences,
the Lord knows what should be known,
sees what should be seen,
he has become vision,
become knowledge,
become dhamma,
become Brahma,
he is the propounder,
the expounder,
the bringer to the goal,
the giver of the Deathless,
dhamma-lord,
Tathāgata.

That was the time
when you should have questioned the Lord on this meaning
so that you might have understood
what the Lord explained to you."

■

"Undoubtedly, Kaccāna,
the Lord knows what should be known,
sees what should be seen,
he has become vision,
become knowledge,
become dhamma,
become Brahma,
he is the propounder,
the expounder,
the bringer to the goal,
the giver of the Deathless,
dhamma-lord,
Tathāgata.

But the venerable Kaccāna the Great
is both praised by the Lord,
and revered by intelligent fellow Brahma-farers,
and the venerable Kaccāna the Great is able to explain in full
the meaning of that recital
recited in brief by the Lord
but whose meaning was not explained in full.

Let the venerable Kaccāna explain,
without finding it troublesome."

---

"Well then, your reverences,
listen,
pay careful attention
and I will speak."

"Yes, your reverence,"
these monks answered the venerable Kaccāna the Great in assent.

The venerable Kaccāna the Great spoke thus:

"In regard to that recital, your reverences,
which the Lord recited in brief,
but not having explained the meaning in full,
rising from his seat,
entered a dwelling-place:

'Whatever is the origin, monk,
of the number of obsessions and perceptions
which assail a man,
if there is nothing to rejoice at,
to welcome,
to catch hold of,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment,
this is itself an end of a propensity to repugnance,
this is itself an end of a propensity to views,
this is itself an end of a propensity to perplexity,
this is itself an end of a propensity to pride,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment to becoming,
this is itself an end of a propensity to ignorance,
this is itself an end of taking the stick,
of taking a weapon,
of quarrelling,
contending,
disputing,
accusation,

slander,
lying speech.

In these ways,
these evil unskilled states
are stopped without remainder,'
of that recital
recited by the Lord in brief
but whose meaning was not explained in full,
I understand the meaning in full thus:

Visual consciousness, your reverences,
arises because of eye and material shapes;
the meeting of the three
is sensory impingement;
feelings are because of sensory impingement;
what one feels
one perceives;
what one perceives
one reasons about;
what one reasons about
obsesses one;
what obsesses one
is the origin of the number of perceptions and obsessions
which assail a man
in regard to material shapes cognisable by the eye,
past,
future,
present.

■

And, your reverences, auditory consciousness
arises because of ear and sounds;
the meeting of the three
is sensory impingement;

feelings are because of sensory impingement;
what one feels
one perceives;
what one perceives
one reasons about;
what one reasons about
obsesses one;
what obsesses one
is the origin of the number of perceptions and obsessions
which assail a man
in regard to sounds cognisable by the ear,
past,
future,
present.

■

And, your reverences, olfactory consciousness
arises because of nose and smells;
the meeting of the three
is sensory impingement;
feelings are because of sensory impingement;
what one feels
one perceives;
what one perceives
one reasons about;
what one reasons about
obsesses one;
what obsesses one
is the origin of the number of perceptions and obsessions
which assail a man
in regard to smells cognisable by the nose,
past,
future,
present.

■

And, your reverences, gustatory consciousness arises
because of tongue and tastes;
the meeting of the three
is sensory impingement;
feelings are because of sensory impingement;
what one feels
one perceives;
what one perceives
one reasons about;
what one reasons about
obsesses one;
what obsesses one
is the origin of the number of perceptions and obsessions
which assail a man
in regard to tastes cognisable by the tongue,
past,
future,
present.

■

And, your reverences, bodily consciousness arises
because of body and touches;
the meeting of the three
is sensory impingement;
feelings are because of sensory impingement;
what one feels
one perceives;
what one perceives
one reasons about;
what one reasons about
obsesses one;
what obsesses one
is the origin of the number of perceptions and obsessions

which assail a man
in regard to touches cognisable by the body,
past,
future,
present.

■

And, your reverences, mental consciousness arises because of mind and mental objects;
the meeting of the three
is sensory impingement;
feelings are because of sensory impingement;
what one feels
one perceives;
what one perceives
one reasons about;
what one reasons about
obsesses one;
what obsesses one
is the origin of the number of perceptions and obsessions
which assail a man
in regard to mental objects cognisable by mind,
past,
future,
present.

---

This situation occurs:
that when there is eye, your reverences,
when there is material shape,

when there is visual consciousness,
one will recognise the manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise the manifestation of feeling.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of feeling,
one will recognise the manifestation of perception.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of perception,
one will recognise the manifestation of reasoning.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of reasoning,
one will recognise the manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation occurs:
that when there is ear, your reverences,
when there is sound,
when there is auditory consciousness,
one will recognise the manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise the manifestation of feeling.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of feeling,
one will recognise the manifestation of perception.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of perception,
one will recognise the manifestation of reasoning.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of reasoning,
one will recognise the manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation occurs:
that when there is nose, your reverences,
when there is smell,
when there is olfactory consciousness,
one will recognise the manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise the manifestation of feeling.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of feeling,
one will recognise the manifestation of perception.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of perception,
one will recognise the manifestation of reasoning.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of reasoning,
one will recognise the manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation occurs:
that when there is tongue, your reverences,
when there is taste,
when there is gustatory consciousness,
one will recognise the manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise the manifestation of feeling.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of feeling,
one will recognise the manifestation of perception.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of perception,
one will recognise the manifestation of reasoning.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of reasoning,
one will recognise the manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation occurs:
that when there is body, your reverences,
when there is touch,
when there is bodily consciousness,
one will recognise the manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise the manifestation of feeling.

This situation occurs:
that when there is the manifestation of feeling,

one will recognise the manifestation of perception.

This situation occurs:

that when there is the manifestation of perception,
one will recognise the manifestation of reasoning.

This situation occurs:

that when there is the manifestation of reasoning,
one will recognise the manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation occurs:

that when there is mind, your reverences,
when there is a mental object,
when there is mental consciousness,
one will recognise the manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation occurs:

that when there is the manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise the manifestation of feeling.

This situation occurs:

that when there is the manifestation of feeling,
one will recognise the manifestation of perception.

This situation occurs:

that when there is the manifestation of perception,
one will recognise the manifestation of reasoning.

This situation occurs:

that when there is the manifestation of reasoning,
one will recognise the manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

---

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not eye, your reverences,
when there is not material shape,
when there is not visual consciousness,
one will recognise a manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise a manifestation of feeling.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of feeling
one will recognise a manifestation of perception.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of perception
one will recognise a manifestation of reasoning.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of reasoning
one will recognise a manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not ear, your reverences,
when there is not sound,
when there is not auditory consciousness,
one will recognise a manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise a manifestation of feeling.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of feeling
one will recognise a manifestation of perception.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of perception
one will recognise a manifestation of reasoning.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of reasoning
one will recognise a manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not nose, your reverences,
when there is not smell,
when there is not olfactory consciousness,
one will recognise a manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise a manifestation of feeling.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of feeling
one will recognise a manifestation of perception.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of perception
one will recognise a manifestation of reasoning.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of reasoning
one will recognise a manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not tongue, your reverences,
when there is not taste,
when there is not gustatory consciousness,
one will recognise a manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise a manifestation of feeling.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of feeling
one will recognise a manifestation of perception.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of perception
one will recognise a manifestation of reasoning.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of reasoning
one will recognise a manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not body, your reverences,
when there is not touch,
when there is not bodily consciousness,
one will recognise a manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise a manifestation of feeling.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of feeling
one will recognise a manifestation of perception.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of perception
one will recognise a manifestation of reasoning.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of reasoning
one will recognise a manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not mind, your reverences,
when there is not a mental object,
when there is not mental consciousness,
one will recognise a manifestation of sensory impingement.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of sensory impingement,
one will recognise a manifestation of feeling.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of feeling
one will recognise a manifestation of perception.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of perception
one will recognise a manifestation of reasoning.

This situation does not occur:
that when there is not a manifestation of reasoning
one will recognise a manifestation
of the assault of a number of obsessions and perceptions.

■

"In regard to that recital, your reverences,
which the Lord recited in brief,
but not having explained the meaning in full,
rising from his seat,
entered a dwelling-place:

'Whatever is the origin, monk,
of the number of obsessions and perceptions
which assail a man,
if there is nothing to rejoice at,
to welcome,
to catch hold of,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment,
this is itself an end of a propensity to repugnance,
this is itself an end of a propensity to views,
this is itself an end of a propensity to perplexity,
this is itself an end of a propensity to pride,
this is itself an end of a propensity to attachment to becoming,
this is itself an end of a propensity to ignorance,
this is itself an end of taking the stick,
of taking a weapon,
of quarrelling,
contending,
disputing,
accusation,
slander,
lying speech,'
of that recital
recited by the Lord in brief
but whose meaning was not explained in full,
I understand the meaning in full thus.

But if you, venerable ones, so desire,
having approached the Lord,

you can question him as to this meaning
so that as the Lord explains it to you
so may you understand it."

"Learned, monks, is Kaccāna the Great, of great wisdom is Kaccāna the Great.

For if you, monks, had questioned me as to this meaning,
I too would have explained it precisely as it was explained by Kaccāna the Great.

Indeed, this is the exact meaning of that,
and thus should you understand it."ed2

When this had been said, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the [148]
Lord:

"Lord, even as a man overcome by hunger and exhaustion might come upon a honey-ball;25 from each bit that he would taste he would get a sweet delicious26 flavour - even so, Lord, is a monk who is naturally able in mind; from each bit that he would examine with intuitive wisdom as to the meaning of this disquisition on dhamma, he would get delight,
he would get satisfaction for the mind.

What is this disquisition on dhamma called, Lord?"

"Wherefore you, Ānanda, may understand this disquisition on dhamma as 'The Disquisition of the Honey-ball'."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, the venerable Ānanda rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse of the Honey-Ball: the Eighth

---

<sup>1</sup> This Mahāvana near Kapilavatthu was virgin forest, uncultivated, stretching up to the Himalayas. It was not like the Mahāvana at Vesālī which was partly natural, partly cultivated, MA. ii. 73.

<sup>2</sup> Daṇḍapāṇi; so called because he used a golden walking stick although he was not old. He sided with Devadatta; so MA. ii. 73.

<sup>3</sup> Stock phrase, as e.g. at M. i. 227, ii. 118, iii. 128; D. i. 235; Sn. p. 105; A. i. 136, iii. 76. "For the sake of seeing parks, woods, mountains," MA. ii. 73.

<sup>4</sup> kimvādī. MA. ii. 73 kimdiṭṭhiko, of what views? Cf. Vin. i. 40.

<sup>5</sup> kimakkhāyī, what does he point out or show? MA. ii. 73, what does he talk about? Cf. Vin. i. 40.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. S. iii. 138 (quoted MA. ii. 74), "I do not dispute with the world, but the world disputes with me"; and an untraced quotation, "A dhamma-speaker disputes with no one, but a speaker of non-dhamma disputes" on such problems as impermanence, not-self, ill, the unlovely and their opposites.

<sup>7</sup> Who has destroyed the cankers, MA. ii. 74.

<sup>8</sup> chinnakukkucca, MA. ii. 74, gives two meanings for chinnakukkucca: vippaṭisāri, remorse, and hatthapāda, hands and feet.

<sup>9</sup> bhavābhava. MA. ii. 74, again and again becoming, or becoming that is low, or excellent; for an excellent becoming is called abhava, non-becoming, come to growth.

<sup>10</sup> As at M. i. 171.

<sup>11</sup> As at S. i. 118.

<sup>12</sup> Here the Lord is being referred to as "brahman."

<sup>13</sup> papañcasaññāsankhā. MA. ii. 75 explains sankhā by koṭṭhasa, and papañcasaññā as perceptions connected with obsessions, views, craving.

<sup>14</sup> Cf. M. i. 410, from "taking a stick."

<sup>15</sup> As at M. i. 195, iii. 194; A. v. 226 ff., 256 ff., etc.

<sup>16</sup> He knows and sees what is to be known and seen; he knows by knowing, sees by seeing, MA. ii. 76.

<sup>17</sup> attha, or matter, meaning.

<sup>18</sup> As at S. iv. 32.

<sup>19</sup> phassa, contact.

<sup>20</sup> vitakketi. On vitakka see D. ii. 277.

<sup>21</sup> Explained at MA. ii. 77 as "advertence" (āvajjana) and impulsion (javana).

<sup>22</sup> Explained at MA. ii. 77 as bhavangacitta, the unconscious or "sub-consciousness."

<sup>23</sup> MA. ii. 78, by a group of syllables (akkhara). Ibid., by individual syllables. Also M. i. 320.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid., by individual syllables. Also M. i. 320.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid., a large sweet cake; or, sugared meal made into cakes.

<sup>26</sup> asecanaka, to which nothing need be added, e.g. condiments; complete in itself.

---

ed1 Ms. Horner following the Pali abridged thus. I have inserted in the box below the dialogue as it would have occurred and as it is usually repeated elsewhere in the Nikāyas.

ed2 Here the usual case would have been that the Buddha repeated all that which had been said by Kaccāna the Great. This method of abridgement alone speaks to the fact that the Majjhima was compiled later than either the Aṅguttara Nikāya or the Samyutta Nikaya. It represents a lessening (however slight) of the respect for precision in recounting the events and sayings of the Buddha.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
2. Sihanāda Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
2. The Division of the Lion's Roar

19. Discourse on the Twofold Thought

Dvedhā-Vitakka Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anathapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered One," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Monks, before my awakening;
while I was the bodhisatta,
not fully awakened,
this occurred to me:

'Suppose that I should fare along with a twofold thought?'<sup>1</sup>

So, monks, whatever is thought of sense-pleasures and whatever is thought of malevolence and whatever is thought of harming — that I made into one part;
and whatever is thought of renunciation and whatever is thought of non-malevolence and whatever is thought of non-harming, that I made into the other part.

While I, monks, was faring on thus,
diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute,
thought of sense-pleasures arose,
and I comprehended thus:

'This thought of sense-pleasures has arisen in me, but it conduces to self-hurt and it conduces to the hurt of others and it conduces to the hurt of both,
it is destructive of intuitive wisdom,
associated with distress,
not conducive to nibbana.'

But while I was reflecting,

'It conduces to self-hurt,'

it subsided;
and while I was reflecting,

'It conduces to the hurt of others,'

it subsided;
and while I was reflecting,

'It is destructive of intuitive wisdom,
it is associated with distress, it is not conducive to nibbana,'

it subsided.

So I, monks, kept on getting rid of the thought of sense-pleasures as It constantly arose,
I kept on driving it out,
I kept on making an end of it.

While I, monks, was faring on thus,
diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute,
thought of malevolence arose ... thought of harming arose,
and I comprehended thus:

'This thought of malevolence ... of harming has arisen in me,
but it conduces to self-hurt ...
not conducive to nibbana.'

But while I was reflecting,

'It conduces to self-hurt'

... while I was reflecting,

'It is ... not conducive to nibbana,'

it subsided.

So I, monks, kept on getting rid of the thought of harming as it constantly arose,

I kept on driving it out,
I kept on making an end of it.

Monks, according to whatever a monk ponders and reflects on much his mind in consequence gets a bias that way.

Monks, if a monk ponder and reflect much on thought of sense-pleasures he ejects thought of renunciation; if he makes much of the thought of sense-pleasures, his mind inclines to the thought of sense-pleasures.

Monks, if a monk ponder and reflect much on the thought of malevolence ... on the thought of harming, he ejects the thought of non-harming;
if he makes much of the thought of harming, his mind inclines to the thought of harming.

Monks, it is as if in the last month of the rains, in the autumn when the corn is thick, a cowherd might be looking after the cows, and might hit them above and below<sup>2</sup> with a stick, and might restrain and check them.

What is the reason for this?

Monks, that cowherd sees death or imprisonment or degradation<sup>3</sup> from that source.

Even so did I, monks, see the peril in unskilled states of mind,
the vanity,
the defilement,
and the advantage,
allied to cleansing,
in renouncing them for skilled states of mind.<sup>4</sup>

While I, monks, was faring on,
diligent,

ardent,
self-resolute,
thought of renunciation arose
and I comprehended thus:

'This thought of renunciation has arisen in me,
and it conduces neither to self-hurt
nor does it conduce to the hurt of others nor does it conduce to the hurt of both,
it is for growth in intuitive wisdom,
it is not associated with distress,
it is conducive to nibbana.'

If during the night, monks,
I should ponder and reflect upon this,
not from that source do I behold fear;
and if during the day, monks,
I should ponder and reflect upon this,
not from that source do I behold fear;
and if during the night and day, monks,
I should ponder and reflect upon this,
not from that source do I behold fear.

But I thought that after pondering and reflecting too long
my body would be weary;
if the body was weary the mind would be disturbed;<sup>5</sup>
if the mind is disturbed it is a mind far from concentration.

So I monks, subjectively steadied the mind,
I calmed it,
I made it one-pointed,
I concentrated.<sup>6</sup>

What was the reason for this?

I thought,

'Do not let my mind be disturbed.'

While I, monks, was faring on diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute,
thought of non-malevolence ... thought of non-harming arose,
and I comprehended thus:

'This thought of non-malevolence ... or non-harming has arisen in me,
and it conduces neither to self-hurt
nor does it conduce to the hurt of others
nor does it conduce to the hurt of both,
it is for growth in intuitive wisdom,
it is not associated with distress,
it is conducive to nibbana.'

If, during the night. monks, ...
not from that source do I behold fear.

But I thought that after pondering and reflecting too long
my body would be weary;
if the body was weary the mind would be disturbed;
if the mind is disturbed, it is a mind far from concentration.

So I, monks subjectively steadied the mind,
I calmed it,
I made it one-pointed,
I concentrated.

What was the reason for this?

I thought,

'Do not let my mind be disturbed.'

Monks, according to whatever a monk ponders and reflects on much his mind in consequence gets a bias that way.

Monks, if a monk ponder and reflect much on thought of renunciation he ejects thought of sense-pleasures; if he makes much of the thought of renunciation, his mind inclines to the thought of renunciation.

Monks, if a monk ponder and reflect much on the thought of non malevolence ... of non-harming, he ejects thought of harming.

If he makes much of the thought of non-harming his mind inclines to the thought of non-harming.

Monks, it is as if in the last month of the hot weather when all the corn is stored at the confines of a village a cowherd might be looking after the cows; while he is at the root of a tree or in the open he remembers there is something to be done, and thinks:

Those are the cows.<sup>7</sup>

Even so, monks, remembering there is something to be done, did I think:

Those are mental states.<sup>8</sup>

Monks, unsluggish energy<sup>9</sup> was stirred up in me, unmuddled mindfulness was set up, the body was tranquil,

impassible,
the mind composed,
one-pointed.

Then I, monks,
aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind, entered into and abided in the first meditation
which is accompanied by initial thought and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful.

By allaying initial and discursive thought, with the mind subjectively tranquilised and fixed on one point, I entered into and abided in the second meditation which is devoid of initial and discursive thought, is born of concentration, and is rapturous and joyful.

By the fading out of rapture, I dwelt with equanimity, attentive, and clearly conscious; and I experienced in my person that joy of which the ariyans say: 'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,' and I entered into and abided in the third meditation.

By getting rid of joy, by getting rid of anguish, by the going down of my former pleasures and sorrows, I entered into and abided in the fourth meditation which has neither anguish nor joy, and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

Thus with the mind composed, quite purified, quite clarified, without blemish, without defilement, grown soft and workable, fixed, immovable, I directed my mind to the knowledge and recollection of former habitations:

I remembered a variety of former habitations, thus: one birth, two births, three ... four ... five ... ten ... twenty ... thirty ... forty ... fifty ... a hundred ... a thousand ... a hundred thousand births, and many an eon of integration and many an eon of disintegration and many an eon of integrationdisintegration: such a one was I by name, having such and such a clan, such and such a colour, so was I nourished, such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine, so did the span of life end. Passing from this, I came to be in another state where such a one was I by name, having such and such a clan, such and such a colour, so was I nourished, such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine, so did the span of life end.

Passing from this, I arose here. Thus I remember divers former habitations in all their modes and detail.

19. This, Monks, was the first knowledge attained by me in the first watch of the night; ignorance was dispelled, knowledge arose, darkness was dispelled, light arose, even as I abided diligent, ardent, self-resolute.

20. Then with the mind composed, quite purified, quite clarified, without blemish, without defilement, grown soft and workable, fixed, immovable, I directed my mind to the knowledge of the passing hence and the arising of beings.

With the purified deva-vision surpassing that of men I see beings as they pass hence or come to be: I comprehend that beings are mean, excellent, comely, ugly, well-going, ill-going, according to the consequences of their deeds, and I think: Indeed these worthy beings who were possessed of wrong conduct in body, who were possessed of wrong conduct of speech, who were possessed of wrong conduct of thought, scoffers at the ariyans, holding a wrong view, incurring deeds consequent on a wrong view — these, at the breaking up of the body after dying, have arisen in a sorrowful state, a bad bourn, the abyss, Niraya Hell.

But these worthy beings who were possessed of good conduct in body, who were possessed of good conduct in speech, who were possessed of good conduct in thought, who did not scoff at the ariyans, holding a right view, incurring deeds consequent on a right view — these, at the breaking up of the body after dying have arisen in a good bourn, a heaven world.

Thus with the purified deva-vision surpassing that of men do I see beings as they pass hence, as they arise; I comprehend that beings are mean, excellent, comely, ugly, well-going, ill-going according to the consequences of their deeds.

21. This, Monks, was the second knowledge attained by me in the middle watch of the night; ignorance was dispelled, knowledge arose, darkness was dispelled, light arose, even as I abided diligent, ardent, self-resolute.

22. Then with the mind composed, quite purified, quite clarified, without blemish, without defilement, grown soft and workable, fixed, immovable, I directed my mind to the knowledge of the destruction of the cankers.

I understood as it really is: This is anguish, this is the arising of anguish, this is the stopping of anguish, this is the course leading to the stopping of anguish.

I understood as it really is: These are the cankers, this is the arising of the cankers, this is the stopping of the cankers, this is the course leading to the stopping of the cankers.

23. Knowing this thus, seeing thus, my mind was freed from the canker of sense-pleasures, and my mind was freed from the canker of becoming, and my mind was freed from the canker of ignorance.

In freedom the knowledge came to be:

I am freed; and I comprehended: Destroyed is birth, brought to a close is the Brahma-faring, done is what was to be done, there is no more of being such or such.

24. This, Monks, was the third knowledge attained by me in the last watch of the night; ignorance was dispelled, knowledge arose, darkness was dispelled, light arose even as I abided diligent, ardent, self-resolute..

25. Monks, as there might be a large piece of low-lying marshy ground in a forest grove,<sup>10</sup> near which might live a large herd of deer, towards which some man might come along, not desiring their good, not desiring their weal, not desiring their security from bonds; if there were a road that was secure, safe, leading to rapture, he might block that road, might open up a treacherous road, might place a decoy and might tether a female decoy as a lure, even so, monks, after a time that great herd of deer might come to calamity and dwindle away.

But, monks, if some man came along towards that great herd of deer, desiring their good, desiring their weal, desiring their security from bonds, and if there were a road that was secure, safe, leading to rapture, he might open up that road, he might block the treacherous road, he would disturb the male decoy, he would let loose<sup>11</sup> the female lure; thus, monks, after a time that great herd of deer would come to growth, expansion, maturity.

Monks, this parable has been made by me for illustrating the meaning. And this is the meaning here:

'The large piece of low-lying marshy ground,' monks, this is a synonym for sense-pleasures.

'The great herd of deer,' monks, this is a synonym for beings.

'The man not desiring their good, not desiring their weal, not desiring their security from bonds,' monks, this is a synonym for Mara, the Evil One.

'The treacherous way,' monks, this is a synonym for the eightfold wrong way, that is to say, wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong way of living, wrong endeavour, wrong mindfulness, wrong concentration.

'The male decoy,' monks, this is a synonym for the passion of delight.

'The female lure,' monks, this is a synonym for ignorance.

'The man desiring good, desiring weal, desiring security from the bonds,' monks, this is a synonym for the Tathāgata, perfected one, fully self-awakened one.

'The way that is secure, safe, leading to rapture,' monks, this is a synonym for the ariyan eightfold Way, that is to say, right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right way of living, right endeavour, right mindfulness, right concentration.

Thus is the secure, safe way leading to rapture opened by me, monks, the treacherous way blocked, the decoy disturbed, the lure let loose.

Whatever, monks, is to be done from compassion by a Teacher seeking the welfare of his disciples, that has been done by me out of compassion for you.

These, monks, are the roots of trees, these are empty places.

Meditate, monks; do not be slothful, be not remorseful later.

This is our instruction to you."<sup>12</sup>

Thus spoke the Lord. Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

THE DISCOURSE ON THE TWOFOLD THOUGHT: THE NINTH

---

<sup>1</sup> Cf. It. p. 82.

<sup>2</sup> ākoṭeyya patikoṭeyya. MA. ii. 82, he would strike them straight, on their backs, he would strike them across, on the ribs.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. D. i. 135, A. i. 201.

<sup>4</sup> M. i. 403. Cf. M. i. 379, Vin. i. 15

<sup>5</sup> Ūhanati, to shake, to be restless

<sup>6</sup> Cf. M. iii. 111; A. ii. 94.

<sup>7</sup> MA ii. 84 says he need not herd them but must be mindful of them.

<sup>8</sup> Namely samatha (calm) and vipassanā (insight), MA. ii. 84.

<sup>9</sup> = M. i. 21-3 to beginning of next simile.

<sup>10</sup> araññe pavane. MA. ii, 85 says that these two words mean the same; and pavana is vanasaṇḍa, forest grove, or woodland thicket.

<sup>11</sup> nāseti, to expel, with the added sense of spoiling or ruining, here the purpose for which she was tethered.

<sup>12</sup> As at M. i. 46.

---

Majjhima Nikāya

I. Mūlapaññāsa

2. Sihanāda Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings

I. The First Fifty Discourses

2. The Division of the Lion's Roar

20. Discourse on the Forms of Thought

Vitakka-Santhāna Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anathapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered One," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Monks, if a monk is intent on the higher thought,<sup>1</sup> from time to time
he should attend to five characteristics.

What five?

Herein, monks, whatever may be the characteristic which a monk attends to,
if there arise evil unskilled thoughts associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion,
that monk should attend,
instead of to that characteristic,
to another characteristic
which is associated with what is skilled.

By-attending to this other characteristic
which is associated with what is skilled
instead of to that characteristic,
those evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion
are got rid of,
they come to an end.

From getting rid of these,
his mind subjectively steadies,
calms,
is one-pointed,
concentrated.

As, monks, a skilled carpenter<sup>2</sup> or a carpenter's apprentice might knock out,
drive out,
draw out
a large peg with a small peg — even so, monks, whatever may be the characteristic which a monk attends to, if there arise evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire

and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion,
that monk should attend,
instead of to that characteristic,
to another characteristic
which is associated with what is skilled.

By attending to this other characteristic
which is associated with what is skilled
instead of to that characteristic,
those evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion —
these are got rid of,
these come to an end.

From getting rid of these,
his mind subjectively steadies,
calms,
is one-pointed,
concentrated.

Monks, if while the monk is attending,
instead of to that characteristic, to this other characteristic
which is associated with what is skilled,
there still arise evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion, then the peril of these thoughts should be scrutinised by that monk,
thinking:

'Indeed these are unskilled thoughts,
indeed these are thoughts that have errors,

indeed these are thoughts that are of painful results.'

While he is scrutinising the peril of these thoughts, those evil unskilled thoughts that are associated with desire,
associated with aversion,
associated with confusion,
these are got rid of,
these come to an end.

By getting rid of these,
his mind subjectively steadies,
calms,
is one-pointed,
concentrated.

Monks, it is like<sup>3</sup> a woman or a man, young,
in the prime of life,
fond of adornment,
who, if the carcass of a snake or the carcass of a dog or the carcass of a human being were hanging round the neck, would be revolted,
ashamed,
disgusted —
even so, monks, while the monk is attending, instead of to this characteristic, to that other characteristic
which is associated with what is skilled,
there still arise evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion, then the peril of these thoughts should be scrutinised by that monk,
thinking:

'Indeed these are unskilled thoughts,
indeed these are thoughts that have errors,
indeed these are thoughts that are of painful results.'

While he is scrutinising the peril of these thoughts,
those evil unskilled thoughts that are associated with desire,
associated with aversion,
associated with confusion,
these are got rid of,
these come to an end.

By getting rid of these,
his mind subjectively steadies,
calms,
is one-pointed,
concentrated.

Monks, if while the monk is scrutinising the peril of those thoughts,
there still arise evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion,
that monk should bring about forgetfulness of
and lack of attention to those thoughts; having come to forgetfulness<sup>4</sup> of
and lack of attention to these thoughts,
those evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion -
these are got rid of,
these come to an end.

By getting rid of these,
the mind subjectively steadies,
calms,

is one-pointed,
concentrated.

Monks, it is like a man with vision who might not want to see the material shapes that come within his range of vision; he would close his eyes or look another way -
even so, monks,
if while the monk is scrutinising the peril of those thoughts
there still arise evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion,
that monk should bring about forgetfulness of
and lack of attention to those thoughts; having come to forgetfulness of
and lack of attention to these thoughts,
those evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion -
these are got rid of,
these come to an end.

By getting rid of these,
the mind subjectively steadies,
calms,
is one-pointed,
concentrated.

Monks, if when the monk has brought about forgetfulness of
and lack of attention to those thoughts,
there still arise evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion

and associated with confusion, monks,
that monk should attend to the thought function
and form of those thoughts.

While he is attending to the thought function
and form of those thoughts, those that are evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion,
these are got rid of,
these come to an end.

By getting rid of these
the mind subjectively steadies,
calms,
is one-pointed,
concentrated.

Monks, even as it might occur to a man who is walking quickly:

'Now, why do I walk quickly?

Suppose I were to walk slowly?'

It might occur to him
as he was walking slowly:

'Now, why do I walk slowly?

Suppose I were to stand?'

It might occur to him as he was standing:

'Now, why do I stand?

Suppose I were to sit down?'

It might occur to him as he was sitting down:

'Now, why do I sit down?

Suppose I were to lie down?' - even so, monks, the man, having abandoned the very hardest posture, might take to the easiest posture itself.

Even so, monks, if while the monk has brought about forgetfulness of
and lack of attention to those thoughts
there still arise evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion, monks,
that monk should attend to the thought function
and form of those thoughts.

While he is attending to the thought function
and form of those thoughts,
those that are evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion,
these are got rid of,
these come to an end.

By getting rid of these
the mind subjectively steadies,
calms,
is one-pointed,
concentrated.

Monks, if while the monk is attending to the thought function
and form of those thoughts,
there still arise evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion, monks, that monk, his teeth clenched,<sup>5</sup> his tongue pressed against his palate, should by his mind subdue,
restrain
and dominate the mind.

While, with his teeth clenched,
his tongue pressed against his palate,
he is with the mind subduing, restraining and dominating the mind,
those evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion,
these are got rid of,
these come to an end.

By getting rid of these,
the mind subjectively steadies,
calms,
is one-pointed,
concentrated.

Monks, even as a strong man, having taken hold of a weaker man by the head or shoulders, might subdue,
restrain
and dominate him,
even so, monks,
if while that monk is attending to the thought function

and form of those thoughts,
there still arise evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion, then, monks, that monk,
his teeth clenched,
his tongue pressed against his palate,
should by his mind subdue,
restrain and dominate his mind.

While, with his teeth clenched,
his tongue pressed against his palate,
he is by the mind subduing,
restraining and dominating the mind, those evil unskilled thoughts associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion,
are got rid of,
they come to an end.

By getting rid of these,
the mind subjectively steadies,
calms,
is one-pointed,
concentrated.

Monks, if while a monk,
in regard to some characteristic, is attending to that characteristic, there arise evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion, then if he attends,
instead of to that characteristic,

to some other characteristic
which is associated with what is skilled,
those evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion,
these are got rid of,
these come to an end.

By getting rid of these,
the mind subjectively steadies,
calms,
is one-pointed,
concentrated.

And by scrutinising the peril of these thoughts,
those evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion,
these are got rid of,
these come to an end.

By getting rid of these,
the mind subjectively steadies,
calms,
is one-pointed,
concentrated.

If he comes to forgetfulness of and lack of attention to those evil unskilled thoughts that are associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion,
these are got rid of,

these come to an end.
By getting rid of these,
the mind subjectively steadies,
calms,
is one-pointed,
concentrated.

And by attending to the thought function and form of these thoughts, those evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion,
these are got rid of,
these come to an end.

By getting rid of these,
the mind subjectively steadies,
calms,
is one-pointed,
concentrated.

With the teeth clenched,
with the tongue pressed against the palate, if he subdues,
restrains,
dominates the mind by the mind,
those evil unskilled thoughts
associated with desire
and associated with aversion
and associated with confusion,
these are got rid of,
these come to an end.

By getting rid of these,
the mind subjectively steadies,

calms,
is one-pointed,
concentrated.

Monks, this monk is called one who is master in the method and paths of thought; he can think whatever thought he wishes; he will not think any thought that he does not wish;
he has cut off craving,<sup>6</sup> done away with fetter, and,
by fully mastering pride, has made an end of anguish."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse on the Forms of Thought: the Tenth Division of the Lion's Roar: the Second

---

<sup>1</sup> adhicitta. MA. ii. 87 explains: "the thought that arises in relation to the ten skilled ways of acting is just thought; the thought that is higher than that thought — the higher thought — is based on vision, it is thought in respect of the eight attainments." The ways of acting are ten: 3 of body, 4 of speech, 3 of thought. The eight attainments are the four jhānas and the four succeeding planes of the meditative process.

<sup>2</sup> palagaṇḍa, occurring in another simile at S. iii. 154 (phalag-) and A. iv. 127. MA. ii. 90, vaḍḍhakī.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. A. iv. 376; Vin. iii. 68.

<sup>4</sup> asati-amanasikāra. MA. ii. 90 says that they should neither be remembered nor attended to. Cf. A. iii. 186.

<sup>5</sup> As at M. i. 242.

<sup>6</sup> As at M. i. 12; see above, p. 16, for further references.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
3. Tatiya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
3. The Third Division

21. Discourse on the Parable of the Saw

Kakacūpama Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anathapiṇḍika's monastery.

Now at that time the venerable Moliyaphagguna lived too closely<sup>2</sup> associated with the nuns.

While the venerable Moliyaphagguna was living associated thus with the nuns, if any monk face to face with the venerable Moliyaphagguna spoke dispraise of those nuns, then the venerable Moliyaphagguna was angry,
displeased,
and made a legal question.<sup>3</sup>

And if some monk face to face with those nuns spoke dispraise of the venerable Moliyaphagguna, then those nuns were angry,
displeased,
and made a legal question.

It was in this way that the venerable Moliyaphagguna was living associated with nuns.

Then a certain monk approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, this monk spoke thus to the Lord:

"Lord, the venerable Moliyaphagguna lives too closely associated with nuns.

It is thus, Lord, that the venerable Moliyaphagguna lives associated with the nuns:

If any monk face to face with the venerable Moliyaphagguna, speaks in dispraise of the nuns
the venerable Moliyaphagguna is angry,
displeased
and makes a legal question;
or if some monk,
face to face with the nuns,
speaks dispraise of the venerable Moliyaphagguna, these nuns are angry,
displeased
and make a legal question.

It is thus, Lord, that the venerable Moliyaphagguna lives associated with nuns."

Then the Lord addressed this monk, saying:

"Come [123] you, monk,
summon the monk Moliyaphagguna on my behalf, saying:

'The Lord is summoning you, Phagguna.'"

"Very well, Lord,"
and this monk, having answered the Lord in assent, approached the venerable Moliyaphagguna
and having approached,
spoke thus to the venerable Moliyaphagguna:

"The Lord is summoning you, Phagguna."

"Very well, your reverence," and the venerable Moliyaphagguna, [160] having answered this monk in assent,
approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

The Lord spoke thus to the venerable Moliyaphagguna
as he was sitting down at a respectful distance:

"Is it true, as is said,
that you, Phagguna,
are living too closely associated with nuns?

So that if some monk,
face to face with you,
speaks in dispraise of the nuns
you are angry,
displeased
and make a legal question;
or if some monk,

face to face with the nuns,
speaks dispraise of you,
these nuns are angry,
displeased
and make a legal question?

Is it true, as is said,
that you, Phagguna
are living associated with the nuns thus?"

"Yes, Lord."

"But did not you, Phagguna, the son of a respectable family, go forth from home into homelessness out of faith?"

"Yes, Lord."

"But this is not suitable in you, Phagguna, a son of a respectable family who has gone forth from home into homelessness out of faith, that you should live too closely associated with nuns.

Wherefore, Phagguna,
even if anyone face to face with you should speak dispraise of those nuns,
even so should you, Phagguna,
get rid of those which are worldly desires,
those which are worldly thoughts;
and you, Phagguna,
should train yourself thus:

'Neither will my mind become perverted,
nor will I utter an evil speech,
but kindly and compassionate will I dwell
with a mind of friendliness and void of hatred.'

It is thus that you must train yourself, Phagguna.

Wherefore, Phagguna,
even if anyone face to face with you should give a blow with the hand
to these nuns,
should give a blow with a clod of earth,
should give a blow with a stick,
should give a blow with a weapon,
even then, Phagguna,
should you train yourself thus:

'Neither will my mind become perverted,
nor will I utter an evil speech,
but kindly and compassionate will I dwell
with a mind of friendliness and void of hatred.'

It is thus that you must train yourself, Phagguna.

Wherefore, Phagguna,
even if anyone face to face with you
should speak dispraise of those nuns,
even so should you, Phagguna,
get rid of those which are worldly desires,
those which are worldly thoughts;
and you, Phagguna,
should train yourself thus:

'Neither will my mind become perverted,
nor will I utter an evil speech,
but kindly and compassionate will I dwell
with a mind of friendliness and void of hatred.'

It is thus that you must train yourself, Phagguna.

Wherefore, Phagguna,
even if anyone face to face with you should give a blow with the hand

to these nuns,
should give a blow with a clod of earth,
should give a blow with a stick,
should give a blow with a weapon,
even then, Phagguna,
should you train yourself thus:

'Neither will my mind become perverted,
nor will I utter an evil speech,
but kindly and compassionate will I dwell
with a mind of friendliness and void of hatred.'

It is thus that you must train yourself, Phagguna.

---

[161] Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, my monks at one time were indeed accomplished in mind.

Then I, monks, addressed the monks, saying:

'Now I, monks, partake of a meal at one session.<sup>4</sup>

Partaking of a meal at one session,
I, monks, am aware of good health
and of being without illness
and of buoyancy and strength and living in comfort.<sup>5</sup>

Come you too, monks, partake of a meal at one session;

partaking of a meal at one session
you too, monks, will be aware of good health
and of being without illness
and of buoyancy and strength
and living in comfort.'

There was nothing to be done by me, monks, by way of instruction to those monks;
all that was to be done by me, monks,
was the production of mindfulness among those monks.

Monks, even as<sup>6</sup> on level ground at crossroads
a chariot is standing harnessed with thoroughbreds, the goad hanging handy;
and a skilled groom,
a charioteer of horses to be tamed, having mounted it,
having taken the reins in his left hand, having taken the goad in his right, might drive up and down where and how he likes; even so, monks, there was nothing to be done by me
by way of instruction to those monks;
all that was to be done by me, monks,
was the production of mindfulness among those monks.

Wherefore, monks, do you get rid of what is unskilled, make exertion<sup>7</sup> among things that are skilled - so will you too come to growth, development,
maturity in this dhamma and discipline.

Monks, close to some village or little town, a great sal-wood may be overgrown with creepers, but some man might approach it desiring its good,

desiring its welfare,
desiring its security from bonds;<sup>8</sup> he, having cut off those sal-tree sprouts which are bent and crushed by the strength (of the creepers), would carry them out (of the wood) and would thoroughly clear the inside of the wood.

But he would tend properly those sal-tree sprouts which are straight and well grown.

Thus, monks, after a time this sal-tree wood
would come to growth,
development,
maturity.

Even so, do you, monks, get rid of what is unskilled, make exertion among things that are skilled, -
so will you too come to growth,
development,
maturity
in this dhamma and discipline.

Once upon a time, monks,
in this very Sāvattḥī, there was a lady [162] householder named Vedehikā.<sup>9</sup>

Monks, a lovely reputation had gone forth thus about the lady Vedehikā:

"The lady householder Vedehikā is gentle,
she is meek,
she is tranquil."

Now, monks, the lady householder Vedehikā had a slave woman, named Kāḷī, who was clever,<sup>10</sup>
diligent,
a careful worker.<sup>11</sup>

Then, monks, it occurred to the slave woman Kāḷī:

'A lovely reputation has gone forth about my mistress thus:

"The lady householder Vedehikā is gentle,
she is meek,
she is tranquil."

Now does my mistress have an inward ill-temper that she does not show, or does she not have one?

Or is it that my mistress, because I do my work so carefully, whether she has an inward ill-temper or not,
does not show it?

Suppose now that I should test the mistress?'

Then, monks, the slave woman Kāḷī got up late next day.

Then, monks, the lady householder Vedehikā spoke thus to the slave woman Kāḷī:

'Well now,<sup>12</sup> Kāḷī.'

'What is it, mistress?'

'Now why did you get up late today?<sup>13</sup>'

'That's nothing, mistress.'

'That's nothing indeed, bad slave - you got up late today,'<sup>14</sup>, and angry,
displeased,
she frowned.

Then, monks, it occurred to the woman slave Kālī:

'Whether my mistress has an inward ill-temper or not,
she does not show it.

Is it because my work is so careful
that my mistress,
whether she has an inward ill-temper or not,
does not show it?

Suppose that I were to test the mistress even further?

'Then, monks, the woman slave Kālī got up later the next day.

Then, monks, the lady householder Vedehikā
spoke thus to the slave woman Kālī:

'Well now, Kālī.'

'What is it, mistress?

'Now why did you get up late today?'

'That's nothing, mistress.'

'That's nothing indeed, bad slave -
you got up late today,'
and angry,

displeased,
she spoke a word of displeasure.

Then it occurred to the slave woman Kālī:

'Whether my mistress has an inward ill-temper or not,
she does not show it.

Is it because my work is so careful
that my mistress,
whether she has an inward ill-temper or not,
does not show it?

Suppose I were to test the mistress even further?

Then, monks, the slave woman Kālī got [163] up even later the next day.

Then, monks, the lady householder Vedehikā
spoke thus to the slave-woman Kālī:

'Well now, Kālī'

'What is it, mistress?'

'Now why did you get up late today?'

'That's nothing, mistress.'

'That's nothing indeed, bad slave -
you got up late today,
and angry,
displeased,
having seized the pin for securing the bolt (of a door)
she gave her a blow on the head, which cracked her head.'<sup>15</sup>

Then, monks, the slave woman Kāḷī, her head broken and streaming with blood, spread it about among the neighbours, saying:

'See, sirs, the deed of the gentle one;
see, sirs, the deed of the meek one;
see, sire, the deed of the tranquil one.

How can she,
saying to her only slave woman,
'You got up late today,'
angry,
displeased,
having seized the pin for securing the bolt (of a door), give a blow on the head and crack the head?'

And then, monks,
after a time
an evil reputation went forth about this lady householder Vedehikā:

"The lady householder Vedehikā is violent, she is not meek,
she is not tranquil."

Even so, monks, some monk here is very gentle, very meek,
very tranquil
so long as disagreeable ways of speech do not assail him.

But when disagreeable ways of speech assail the monk it is then that he is to be called gentle, is to be called meek,
is to be called tranquil.

I, monks, do not call that monk easy to speak to who is easy to speak to about robe-material, almsfood,
lodgings,
medicines for the sick,
who falls into suavity.

What is the reason for this?

It is, monks, that this monk,
not getting robe-material,
almsfood,
lodgings,
medicines for the sick,
is not easy to speak to,
does not fall into suavity.

Monks, whatever monk, respecting only dhamma, revering dhamma,
honouring dhamma,
comes to be easy to speak to,
falls into suavity - him do I call easy to speak to.

Wherefore, monks, thinking:

Respecting only dhamma, revering dhamma,
honouring dhamma,
we will become easy to speak to,
we will fall into suavity, thus must you train yourselves, monks.

There are, monks,
these five ways of speaking in which others

when speaking to you might speak:

At a right time
or at a wrong time;
according to fact
or not according to fact;
gently
or harshly;
on what is connected with the goal
or on what is not connected with the goal;
with a mind of friendliness
or full of hatred.

Monks, when speaking to others
you might speak at a right time
or at a wrong time;
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak according to fact
or not according to fact
monks, when speaking to [164] others you might speak gently
or harshly;
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak about what is connected with the goal or about what is not connected with the goal;
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak with minds of friendliness
or full of hatred.

Herein, monks, you should train yourselves thus:

'Neither will our minds become perverted
nor will we utter an evil speech,
but kindly and compassionate will we dwell,
with a mind of friendliness,

void of hatred;
and we will dwell having suffused that person
with a mind of friendliness;
and, beginning with him,
we will dwell having suffused the whole world
with a mind of friendliness that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.'

This is how you must train yourselves, monks.

Monks, as a man might come along bringing a shovel and basket, and might speak thus:

'I will make this great earth not earth';
so he digs here and there,
tosses it here and there, spits here and there,
stales here and there, thinking:

'You are becoming not-earth,
you are becoming not-earth.'

What do you think about this, monks?

Could that man
make this great earth not earth?

"No, Lord.

What is the reason for this?

It is that this great earth, Lord, is deep,

it is immeasurable,
it is not easy to make it not-earth before that man would be worn out and defeated."<sup>16</sup>

"Even so, monks, are these five ways of speaking
in which others when speaking to you might speak:

At a right time
or at a wrong time;
according to fact
or not according to fact;
gently
or harshly;
on what is connected with the goal
or on what is not connected with the goal;
with a mind of friendliness
or full of hatred.

Monks, when speaking to others
you might speak at a right time
or at a wrong time;
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak according to fact
or not according to fact
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak gently
or harshly;
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak about what is connected with the goal
or about what is not connected with the goal;
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak with minds of friendliness
or full of hatred.

Herein, monks, you should train yourselves thus:

'Neither will our minds become perverted
nor will we utter an evil speech,
but kindly and compassionate will we dwell,
with a mind of friendliness,
void of hatred;
and we will dwell having suffused that person
with a mind of friendliness;
and, beginning with him,
we will dwell having suffused the whole world
with a mind of friendliness that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.'

This is how you must train yourselves, monks.

Monks, as a man might come along bringing lac or yellow or dark green<sup>17</sup> or crimson, and might speak thus:

'I will delineate<sup>18</sup> material shapes in this space<sup>19</sup>,
I will make material shapes appear.'<sup>20</sup>

What do [165] you think about this, monks?

Could that man delineate a material shape in this space,
could he make material shapes appear?"

"No, Lord.

What is the reason for this?

It is, Lord, that this space is without shape,<sup>21</sup> it is viewless.

It is not easy to delineate a material shape there, to make material shapes appear before that man would be worn out and defeated."

"Even so, monks, are these five ways of speaking
in which others when speaking to you might speak:

At a right time
or at a wrong time;
according to fact
or not according to fact;
gently
or harshly;
on what is connected with the goal
or on what is not connected with the goal;
with a mind of friendliness
or full of hatred.

Monks, when speaking to others
you might speak at a right time
or at a wrong time;
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak according to fact
or not according to fact
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak gently
or harshly;
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak about what is connected with the goal
or about what is not connected with the goal;
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak with minds of friendliness
or full of hatred.

Herein, monks, you should train yourselves thus:

'Neither will our minds become perverted
nor will we utter an evil speech,
but kindly and compassionate will we dwell,
with a mind of friendliness,
void of hatred;
and we will dwell having suffused that person
with a mind of friendliness;
and, beginning with him,
we will dwell having suffused the whole world
with a mind of friendliness that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.'

This is how you must train yourselves, monks.

Monks, as a man might come along bringing a burning grass-torch<sup>22</sup>
and might speak thus:

'I, with this burning grass-torch will set fire to the river Ganges, I will make it scorch up.'

What do you think about this, monks?

Could that man,
with the burning grass-torch set fire to the river Ganges and make it scorch up?"

"No, Lord.

What is the reason for this?

It is, Lord, that the river Ganges is deep,
it is immeasurable.

It is not easy to set fire to it with a burning grass-torch
and make it scorch up
before that man would be worn out and defeated."

"Even so, monks, are these five ways of speaking
in which others when speaking to you might speak:

At a right time
or at a wrong time;
according to fact
or not according to fact;
gently
or harshly;
on what is connected with the goal
or on what is not connected with the goal;
with a mind of friendliness
or full of hatred.

Monks, when speaking to others
you might speak at a right time
or at a wrong time;
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak according to fact
or not according to fact
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak gently
or harshly;
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak about what is connected with the goal
or about what is not connected with the goal;
monks, when speaking to others

you might speak with minds of friendliness
or full of hatred.

Herein, monks, you should train yourselves thus:

'Neither will our minds become perverted
nor will we utter an evil speech,
but kindly and compassionate will we dwell,
with a mind of friendliness,
void of hatred;
and we will dwell having suffused that person
with a mind of friendliness;
and, beginning with him,
we will dwell having suffused the whole world
with a mind of friendliness that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.'

This is how you must train yourselves, monks.

Monks, it is like a catskin bag<sup>23</sup> that is cured,
well cured,
cured all over,
and is supple,
silky,
with no hisses,
no purrs.<sup>24</sup>

Then a man might come along bringing a piece of wood or a potsherd
and might speak thus:

'I, with a piece of wood
or a potsherd
will get a hiss,
will get a purr
out of this catskin bag that is cured,
well cured,
cured all over,
and is supple,
silky,
with no hisses,
no purrs.'

What do you think about this, monks?

Could that man with a piece of wood
or a potsherd
get a hiss,
get a purr
out of that catskin bag
that is cured,
well cured,
cured all over,
and is supple,
silky,
with no hisses,
no purrs?"

[166] "No, Lord.

What is the reason for this?

It is, Lord, that that catskin bag is cured,
well cured,
cured all over,
and is supple,

silky,
with no hisses,
no purrs.

It is not easy,
with a piece of wood
or with a potsherd,
to get a hiss out of it or to get a purr,
before that man would be worn out and defeated."

"Even so, monks, are these five ways of speaking
in which others when speaking to you might speak:

At a right time
or at a wrong time;
according to fact
or not according to fact;
gently
or harshly;
on what is connected with the goal
or on what is not connected with the goal;
with a mind of friendliness
or full of hatred.

Monks, when speaking to others
you might speak at a right time
or at a wrong time;
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak according to fact
or not according to fact
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak gently
or harshly;
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak about what is connected with the goal

or about what is not connected with the goal;
monks, when speaking to others
you might speak with minds of friendliness
or full of hatred.

Herein, monks, you should train yourselves thus:

'Neither will our minds become perverted
nor will we utter an evil speech,
but kindly and compassionate will we dwell,
with a mind of friendliness,
void of hatred;
and we will dwell having suffused that person
with a mind of friendliness;
and, beginning with him,
we will dwell having suffused the whole world
with a mind of friendliness that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.'

This is how you must train yourselves, monks.

Monks, as low-down thieves might carve one limb from limb with a double-handled saw<sup>25</sup>, yet even then whoever<sup>26</sup> sets his mind at enmity,
he, for this reason,
is not a doer of my teaching.

Herein, monks, you should train yourselves thus:

'Neither will our minds become perverted
nor will we utter an evil speech,
but kindly and compassionate will we dwell,

with a mind of friendliness,
void of hatred;
and we will dwell having suffused that person
with a mind of friendliness;
and, beginning with him,
we will dwell having suffused the whole world
with a mind of friendliness that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.'

This is how you must train yourselves, monks.

If you, monks, were to attend repeatedly to this exhortation on the Parable of the Saw, would you, monks,
see any way of speech,
subtle or gross,
that you could not endure?"

"No, Lord."

"Wherefore, monks, consider repeatedly this exhortation on the Parable of the Saw;
for a long time it will be for your welfare and happiness."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse on the Parable of the Saw:
the First

---

<sup>1</sup> Mentioned at DA. 123 as a sutta preached on account of someone's lack of patience.

<sup>2</sup> ativelā. MA. ii. 95 names three velās: kālav-, sīmav-, sīla-. Phagguna infringed all these limits; he exhorted nuns until late in the evening, for too long at a time; and in more than five or six sentences (see Vin. iv. 55, 21); and he spoke in fun of serious offences, duṭṭhullāpattipahonaka. Cf. Vin. iv. 31, 127.

<sup>3</sup> adhikaraṇa, see Vin. ii. 88 ff., 99 ff.

<sup>4</sup> ekāsanabhojanaṃ bhujjāmi. Cf. Vism. 60. MA. ii. 97 says this is a meal in the morning, one of the seven (v. ll. ten, a hundred) times for eating meals between sunrise and noon.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. M. i. 437, 473, ii. 91, 125, 141; D. i. 204, ii. 72.

<sup>6</sup> M. iii. 97; A. iii. 28; S. iv. 176.

<sup>7</sup> āyogaṃ karoṭha. Comy. does not explain.

<sup>8</sup> As at M. i. 117.

<sup>9</sup> MA. ii. 98, "a daughter of a family resident in the kingdom of Videha. Or, veda means wisdom, so Vedehikā is a farer by wisdom. It means she is clever."

<sup>10</sup> MA. ii. 99 among other work in cooking the food, making (lit. spreading) the beds, making the lamps burn.

<sup>11</sup> She did not break or chip things in spite of being diligent, MA. ii. 99.

<sup>12</sup> he je, explained at MA. ii. 99 by are, an exclamation of astonishment.

<sup>13</sup> MA. ii. 99, have you some discomfort?

<sup>14</sup> If you have no discomfort, why did you get up late?

<sup>15</sup> As at M. i. 336. [MN 50 Horner pg399]

<sup>16</sup> kilimathassa vighātassa bhāgī assa, he would be a partaker in exhaustion and slaying.

<sup>17</sup> MA. ii. 100 = Vin. iv. 120, the nīla (green) of bronze, the nīla of foliage. See VA. 863.

<sup>18</sup> likhissāmi, smear, scrape.

<sup>19</sup> ākāsa is not air. It is ether or empty space, what is void.

<sup>20</sup> Cf. Thag. 1155 f.

<sup>21</sup> Cf. Dh. 254, 255.

<sup>22</sup> Cf. M. i. 365.

<sup>23</sup> Cf. Thag. 1138, biḷārabhastā.

<sup>24</sup> chinnasassarā chinnababbharā, and below sarasara bharabhara. See JPTS. 1889, p. 209. Cf. surusuru (kāraka) at Vin. iv. 197.

<sup>25</sup> Referred to and quoted at M. i. 186, 189.

<sup>26</sup> MA. ii. 102, either a monk or a nun.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
3. Tatiya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
3. The Third Division

22. Discourse on the Parable of the Water-Snake

Alagaddūpama Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvathī in the Jeta Grove in Anathapiṇḍika's monastery.

Now at that time
a pernicious view had arisen like this in a monk named Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer:<sup>1</sup>

"In so far as I understand dhamma
taught by the Lord,
it is that in following those things
called stumbling-blocks by the Lord,
there is no stumbling-block at all."

Several monks heard:

"A pernicious view has arisen to the monk named Aritṭha, who was formerly a vulture-trainer,
like this:

'In so far as I understand dhamma
taught by the Lord,
it is that in following those things
called stumbling-blocks by the Lord,
there is no stumbling-block at all.'

Then these monks approached the monk Aritṭha,
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer;
having approached,
they spoke thus to the monk Aritṭha,
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer:

"Is it true, as is said, reverend Aritṭha, that a pernicious view has arisen in you,
like this:

'In so far as I understand dhamma
taught by the Lord,
it is that in following those things
called stumbling-blocks by the Lord,
there is no stumbling-block at all?'

"Undoubtedly, your reverences,
as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord,
it is that in following those things
called stumbling-blocks by the Lord,
there is no stumbling-block at all."

Then these monks,
anxious to dissuade the monk Aritṭha

who had formerly been a vulture-trainer
from that pernicious view,
questioned him,
cross-questioned him,
and pressed for the reasons,<sup>2</sup> [168]
and said:

"Do not speak thus, reverend Aritṭha,
do not misrepresent the Lord;
misrepresentation of the Lord
is not at all seemly,
and the Lord certainly would not speak thus.

For, in many a figure, reverend Aritṭha, are things called stumbling-blocks by the Lord,<sup>3</sup>
and in following these
there is a veritable stumbling-block.

Sense pleasures are said by the Lord
to be of little satisfaction,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord to a skeleton,<sup>4</sup>
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a lump of meat,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a torch of dry grass,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a pit of glowing embers,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a dream,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to something borrowed,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to the fruits of a tree,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a slaughterhouse,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to an impaling stake,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a snake's head,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril."

Yet the monk Ariṭṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer
even while being questioned, cross-questioned
and pressed for his reasons by these monks,
expressed that pernicious view as before,
obstinately holding and adhering to it:

"Undoubtedly, your reverences,
as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord,
it is that in following those things
called stumbling-blocks by the Lord,
there is no stumbling-block at all."

Since these monks were unable to dissuade the monk Ariṭṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer
from that pernicious view, then these monks approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
they sat down at a respectful distance.

While they were sitting down at a respectful distance,
these monks spoke thus to the Lord:

"Lord, a pernicious view like this arose in the monk called Aritṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer:

'In so far as I understand dhamma
taught by the Lord,
it is that in following those things
called stumbling-blocks by the Lord,
there is no stumbling-block at all.'

And we heard, Lord,
that a pernicious view like this had arisen in the monk called Aritṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer:

'In so far as I understand dhamma
taught by the Lord,
it is that in following those things
called stumbling-blocks by the Lord,
there is no stumbling-block at all.'

Then we, Lord,
approached the monk Aritṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer;
having approached,
we spoke thus to the monk Aritṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer:

'Is it true, as is said, reverend Aritṭha, that a pernicious view has arisen in you like this:

"In so far as I under- [169] stand dhamma
taught by the Lord,
it is that in following those things
called stumbling-blocks by the Lord,
there is no stumbling-block at all'?"

'When this had been said, Lord,
the monk Aritṭha,
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer,
spoke thus to us:

"Undoubtedly, your reverences,
as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord,
it is that in following those things
called stumbling-blocks by the Lord,
there is no stumbling-block at all."

Then we, Lord,
anxious to dissuade the monk Aritṭha,
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer,
from that pernicious view,
questioned him,
cross-questioned him,
pressed him for reasons,
and said:

'Do not speak thus, reverend Aritṭha,
do not misrepresent the Lord;
misrepresentation of the Lord
is not at all seemly,
and the Lord certainly would not speak thus.

For in many a figure, reverend Aritṭha,
are things called stumbling-blocks by the Lord,
and in following these
there is a veritable stumbling-block.

Sense pleasures are said by the Lord
to be of little satisfaction,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a skeleton,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a lump of meat,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a torch of dry grass,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a pit of glowing embers,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a dream,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to something borrowed,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to the fruits of a tree,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a slaughterhouse,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to an impaling stake,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a snake's head,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril."

Yet, Lord, the monk Aritṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer,
even while being questioned,
cross-questioned
and pressed for his reasons by us,
expressed that pernicious view as before,
obstinately holding and adhering to it:

"Undoubtedly, your reverences,
as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord,
it is that in following those things

called stumbling-blocks by the Lord,
there is no stumbling-block at all."

Since we, Lord, were unable to dissuade the monk Ariṭṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer
from that pernicious view, we are therefore telling this matter to the Lord."

Then the Lord addressed a certain monk, saying:

"Come you, monk,
summon the monk Ariṭṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer in my name, saying:

"The Lord is summoning you, Ariṭṭha."

"Very well, Lord,"
and this monk, having answered the Lord in assent, approached the monk Ariṭṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer,
and having approached,
spoke thus to the monk Ariṭṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer:

"The Lord is summoning you, reverend Ariṭṭha."

"Very well, your reverence," and the monk Ariṭṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer,
having answered this monk in assent,
approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As the monk Aritṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord spoke thus to him:

"Is it true, as is said, that in you, Aritṭha,
a pernicious view [170] arose like this;

"In so far as I understand dhamma
taught by the Lord,
it is that in following those things
called stumbling-blocks by the Lord,
there is no stumbling-block at all?"

"Undoubtedly, Lord,
as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord,
it is that in following those things
called stumbling-blocks by the Lord,
there is no stumbling-block at all."

"To whom then do you, foolish man, understand that dhamma was taught thus by me?

Have not things that are stumbling-blocks been spoken of by me in many a figure,
and in following these
is there not a veritable stumbling-block?

Sense-pleasures are said by me
to be of little satisfaction,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to a skeleton,

of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to a lump of meat,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to a torch of dry grass,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to a pit of glowing embers,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to a dream,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to something borrowed,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to the fruits of a tree,
of much pain,

of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to a slaughterhouse,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to an impaling stake,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to a snake's head,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril."

And yet you, foolish man,
not only misrepresent me
because of your own wrong grasp, but also injure yourself and give rise to much demerit which will be for a long time, foolish man, for your woe and sorrow."<sup>5</sup>

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"What do you think about this, monks?

Has the monk Aritṭha
who was formerly a vulture-trainer even a glimmering<sup>6</sup> of this dhamma and discipline?"

"How could this be, Lord?

It is not so, Lord."

When this had been said,
the monk Aritṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer
sat down silent,
ashamed,
his shoulders drooped,
his head lowered,
brooding,
speechless.

Then the Lord,
understanding why the monk Aritṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer was silent,
ashamed,
his shoulders drooped,
his head lowered,
brooding,
speechless,
spoke thus to the monk Aritṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer:

"You, foolish man,
will be known through this pernicious view of your own, for I will now interrogate the monks."

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Do you too, monks, understand that dhamma was taught by me thus,
so that the monk Aritṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer
not only misrepresents me

because of his own wrong grasp,
but is also injuring himself and giving rise to much demerit?"

[171] "No, Lord.

For, Lord, in many a figure are things that are stumbling-blocks spoken of to us by the Lord,
and in following these
there is a veritable stumbling-block.

Sense pleasures are said by the Lord
to be of little satisfaction,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a skeleton,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a lump of meat,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a torch of dry grass,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a pit of glowing embers,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a dream,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to something borrowed,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to the fruits of a tree,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a slaughterhouse,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to an impaling stake,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by the Lord
to a snake's head,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril."

"It is good, monks,
it is good that you, monks,
have thus understood dhamma taught by me.

For in many a figure
have things that are stumbling-blocks been spoken of by me to you, monks,
and in following these
there is a veritable stumbling-block.

Sense-pleasures are said by me
to be of little satisfaction,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to a skeleton,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to a lump of meat,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to a torch of dry grass,
of much pain,

of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to a pit of glowing embers,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to a dream,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to something borrowed,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to the fruits of a tree,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to a slaughterhouse,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to an impaling stake,
of much pain,

of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.

Sense pleasures are likened by me
to a snake's head,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril."

But when this monk Aritṭha
who had formerly been a vulture-trainer
not only misrepresents me, but also injures himself and gives rise to much demerit, this will be for a long time for the woe and sorrow of this foolish man.

Indeed, monks, this situation does not occur when one could follow sense-pleasures apart from sense-pleasures themselves, apart from perceptions of sense-pleasures, apart from thoughts of sense-pleasures.

Herein, monks, some foolish men master dhamma:
the Discourses in prose,
in prose and verse,<sup>7</sup> the Expositions,<sup>8</sup> the Verses,<sup>9</sup>
the Uplifting Verses,
the 'As it was Said,'
the Birth Stories,
the Wonders,
the Miscellanies.<sup>10</sup>

These, having mastered that dhamma,
do not test the meaning of these things by intuitive wisdom;
and these things whose meaning is untested by intuitive wisdom
do not become clear;
they master this dhamma simply for the advantage of reproaching others and for the advantage of gossiping,<sup>11</sup> and they do not arrive at that goal for the sake of which they mastered dhamma.

These things,
badly grasped by them
conduce for a long time
to their woe and sorrow.

What is the reason for this?

[172] Monks, it is because of a wrong grasp of things.

Monks, it is like<sup>12</sup> a man walking about aiming after a water-snake,<sup>13</sup> searching for a water-snake, looking about for a water-snake.

He might see a large water-snake, and he might take hold of it by a coil
or by its tail;
the water-snake,
having rounded on him,
might bite him on his hand or arm
or on another part of his body; from this cause
he might come to dying
or to pain like unto dying.

What is the reason for this?

Monks, it is because of his wrong grasp of the water-snake.

Even so, monks,
do some foolish men here master dhamma:
the Discourses in prose,
in prose and verse,
the Expositions,
the Verses,
the Uphfting Verses,
the 'As it was Said,'
the Birth Stories,
the Wonders,
the Miscellanies.

These, having mastered that dhamma,
do not test the meaning of these things by intuitive wisdom;
and these things whose meaning is untested by intuitive wisdom
do not become clear;
they master this dhamma simply for the advantage of reproaching others and for the advantage of gossiping,
and they do not arrive at that goal
for the sake of which they mastered dhamma.

These things,
badly grasped by them
conduce for a long time
to their woe and sorrow.

What is the reason for this?

Monks, it is because of a wrong grasp of things.

In this case, monks,
some young men of family master dhamma;
the discourses in prose,

in prose and verse,
the Expositions,
the Verses,
the Uplifting Verses,
the 'As it was Said,'
the Birth Stories,
the Wonders,
the Miscellanies.

These, having mastered that dhamma,
test the meaning of these things by intuitive wisdom;
and these things whose meaning is tested by intuitive wisdom become clear to them.

They master dhamma
neither for the advantage of reproaching others nor for the advantage of gossiping,
and they arrive at the goal
for the sake of which they mastered dhamma.

These things,
being well grasped by them,
conduce for a long time
to their welfare and happiness.

What is the reason for this?

It is, monks, because of a right grasp of things.

Monks, it is like a man walking about aiming after a water-snake,
searching for a water-snake,
looking about for a water-snake.

He might see a large water-snake, and he might hold it back skilfully<sup>14</sup> with a forked<sup>15</sup> stick; having held it back skilfully with a forked stick, he might grasp it properly by the neck.

However that water-snake, monks, might wind its coils round that man's hand or arm
or round another part of his body, he would not come to dying
or to pain like unto dying.

What is the reason for this?

Monks, it is because of his right grasp of the water-snake.

In this case, monks,
some young men of family master dhamma;
the discourses in prose,
in prose and verse,
the Expositions,
the Verses,
the Uplifting Verses,
the 'As it was Said,'
the Birth Stories,
the Wonders,
the Miscellanies.

These, having mastered that dhamma,
test the meaning of these things by intuitive wisdom;
and these things whose meaning is tested by intuitive wisdom
become clear to them.

They master dhamma
neither for the advantage of reproaching others
nor for the advantage of gossiping,

and they arrive at the goal
for the sake of which they mastered dhamma.

These things,
being well grasped by them,
conduce for a long time
to their welfare and happiness.

What is the reason for this?

It is, monks, because of a right grasp of things.

Wherefore, monks,
understand the meaning of what I have said, then learn it.

But in case you do not understand the meaning of what I have said, I should be questioned about it by you, or else those who are experienced monks.

[173] Monks, I will teach you dhamma - the Parable of the Raft - for crossing over,
not for retaining.<sup>16</sup>

Listen to it,
pay careful attention,
and I will speak."

"Yes, Lord,"
these monks answered the Lord in assent.

"Monks, as a man going along a highway might see a great stretch of water, the hither bank dangerous<sup>17</sup> and frightening,<sup>17</sup> the further bank secure,

not frightening,
but if there were not a boat for crossing by or a bridge across
for going from the not-beyond to the beyond,
this might occur to him:

'This is a great stretch of water, the hither bank dangerous and frightening, the further bank secure and not frightening, but there is not a boat for crossing by
or a bridge across
for going from the not-beyond to the beyond.

Suppose that I,
having collected grass,
sticks,
branches
and foliage,
and having tied a raft,
depending on that raft,
and striving with hands and feet,<sup>18</sup> should cross over safely to the beyond?'

Then, monks, that man,
having collected grass,
sticks,
branches
and foliage,
having tied a raft,
depending on that raft
and striving with his hands and feet, might cross over safely
to the beyond.

To him, crossed over,
gone beyond,
this might occur:

'Now, this raft has been very useful to me.

I, depending on this raft,
and striving with my hands and feet, crossed over safely
to the beyond.

Suppose now that I,
having put this raft on my head, or having lifted it on to my shoulder, should proceed as I desire?'

What do you think about this, monks?

If that man does this,
is he doing what should be done with that raft?"

"No, Lord."

"What should that man do, monks, in order to do
what should be done with that raft?"

In this case, monks,
it might occur to that man who has crossed over,
gone beyond:

'Now, this raft has been very useful to me.

Depending on this raft
and striving with my hands and feet,

I have crossed over safely
to the beyond.

Suppose now that I,
having beached this raft on dry ground or having submerged it under the water, should proceed as I desire?

In doing this, monks,
that man would be doing what should be done with that raft.

Even so, monks,
is the Parable of the Raft dhamma taught by me
for crossing over,
not for retaining.

You, monks, [174]
by understanding the Parable of the Raft, should get rid even of (right) mental objects,<sup>19</sup> all the more of wrong ones.<sup>20</sup>

Monks, there are these six views with causal relations.<sup>21</sup>

What are the six?

In this connection, monks, an uninstructed average person,<sup>22</sup>
taking no count of the pure ones,
unskilled in the dhamma of the pure ones,
untrained in the dhamma of the pure ones,
taking no count of the true men,
unskilled in the dhamma of the true men,

untrained in the dhamma of the true men,
regards material shape as:

'This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self.'<sup>23</sup>

he regards feeling as:

'This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self.'

he regards perception as:

'This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self.'

he regards the habitual tendencies as:

'These are mine,
this am I,
this is my self.'

he regards consciousness as:

'This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self.'

And also he regards whatever is seen,
heard,
sensed,<sup>24</sup>
cognised,
reached,

looked for,
pondered by the mind as:

'This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self.'

Also whatever view with causal relation says:

'This the world
this the self;<sup>25</sup> after dying<sup>26</sup> I<sup>27</sup> will become permanent, lasting,
eternal,
not liable to change,
I will stand fast like unto the eternal,'

he regards this as:

'This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self.'

But, monks,
an instructed disciple of the pure ones,
taking count of the pure ones,
skilled in the dhamma of the pure ones,
well trained in the dhamma of the pure ones,
taking count of the true men,
skilled in the dhamma of the true men,
well trained in the dhamma of the [175] true men,
regards material shape as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,

this is not my self;'

he regards feeling as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self;'

he regards perception as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self;'

he regards the habitual tendencies as:

'These are not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self;'

he regards consciousness as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self;'

And also he regards whatever is seen,
heard,
sensed,
cognised,
reached,
looked for,
pondered by the mind as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self;'

Also whatever view
with causal relation says:

'This the world
this the self,
after dying
I will become permanent,
lasting,
eternal,
not liable to change,
I will stand fast like unto the eternal,'

he regards this as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self;'

He, regarding thus that which does not exist,<sup>28</sup> will not be anxious."<sup>29</sup>

When this had been said,
a certain monk spoke thus to the Lord:

"But Lord, might there not be anxiety about something objective that does not exist?"<sup>30</sup>

"There might be, monk,"
the Lord said.

"In this case, monk,
it occurs to somebody:

'What was certainly mine<sup>31</sup> is certainly not mine (now);<sup>32</sup>

what might certainly be mine, there is certainly no chance of my getting.'

He grieves,
mourns,
laments,
beats his breast,
and falls into disillusionment.

Even so, monks,
does there come to be anxiety
about something objective
that does not exist."

"But might there be, Lord, no anxiety
about something objective
that does not exist?"

"There might be, monk,"
the Lord said.

"In this case, monk,
it does not occur to anybody:

'What was certainly mine is certainly not mine (now);
what might certainly be mine,
there is certainly no chance of my getting.'

He does not grieve,
mourn,
lament,
he does not beat his breast,
he does not fall into disillusionment.

Even so, monk,
does there come to be no anxiety

about something objective
that does not exist."

"But, Lord, might there be anxiety about something subjective
that does not exist?"

"There might be, monk,'
the Lord said.

"In this case, monk,
the view occurs to someone:

'This the world
this the self;
after [176] dying
I will become permanent,
lasting,
eternal,
not liable to change,
I will stand fast like unto the eternal.'

He hears dhamma as it is being taught by the Tathāgata or by a disciple of the Tathāgata for rooting out all resolve for,
bias,
tendency
and addiction to
view and causal relation,
for tranquillising all the activities,
for casting away all attachment,
for the destruction of craving,
for dispassion,
stopping,
nibbāna.

It occurs to him thus:

'I will surely be annihilated,
I will surely be destroyed,
I will surely not be.'<sup>33</sup>

He grieves,
mourns,
laments,
beats his breast,
and falls into disillusionment.

Thus, monk, there comes to be anxiety about something subjective
that does not exist."

"But, Lord, might there be no anxiety about something subjective
that does not exist?"

"There might be, monk,"
the Lord said.

"In this case, monk,
the view does not occur to anyone:

'This the world
this the self,
after dying
I will become permanent,
lasting,
eternal,
not liable to change,
I will stand fast like unto the eternal.'

He hears dhamma as it is being taught by the Tathāgata
or by a disciple of the Tathāgata for rooting out all resolve for,
bias,

tendency
and addiction to
view and causal relation,
for tranquillising all the activities,
for casting away all attachment,
for the destruction of craving,
for dispassion,
stopping,
nibbāna.

But it does not occur to him thus:

'I will surely be annihilated,
I will surely be destroyed,
I will surely not be.'

So he does not grieve,
mourn,
lament,
he does not beat his breast,
he does not fall into disillusionment.

Thus, monk, does there come to be no anxiety
about something subjective
that does not exist.

Monks, could you take hold of some possession, the possession of which would be permanent,
lasting,
eternal,
not liable to change,
that would stand fast
like unto the eternal?

But do you, monks,
see that possession
the possession of which would be permanent,

lasting,
eternal,
not able to change,
that would stand fast
like unto the eternal?"

"No, Lord."

"Good, monks."

Neither do I, monks,
see that possession
the possession of which is permanent,
lasting,
eternal,
not liable to change,
that would stand fast
like unto the eternal.

Could you, monks,
grasp that grasping
of the theory of self,
so that by grasping that theory of self
there would not arise grief,
suffering,
anguish,
[177] lamentation,
despair?

But do you, monks,
see that grasping
of the theory of self,
from the grasping of which theory of self
there would not arise grief,
suffering,
anguish,

lamentation,
despair?"

"No, Lord."

"Good, monks.

Neither do I, monks,
see that grasping
of the theory of self
from the grasping of which there would not arise grief,
suffering,
anguish,
lamentation,
despair.

Could you, monks,
depend on that dependence on view, depending on which dependence on view
there would not arise grief,
suffering,
anguish,
lamentation,
despair?

But do you, monks,
see that dependence on view,
from depending on which dependence on view
there would not arise grief,
suffering,
anguish,
lamentation,
despair?"

"No, Lord."

"Good, monks.

Neither do I, monks,
see that dependence on view by depending on which dependence on view
there would not arise grief,
suffering,
anguish,
lamentation,
despair.

If, monks, there were Self,
could it be said:

'It belongs to my self?'<sup>34</sup>

"Yes, Lord."

"Or, monks,
if there were what belongs to Self,
could it be said:

'It is my self?'<sup>35</sup>

"Yes, Lord."

"But if Self, monks, and what belongs to Self,
although actually existing,
are incomprehensible,<sup>36</sup> is not the view
and the causal relation that:

'This the world
this the self,
after dying
I will become permanent,

lasting,
eternal,
not liable to change,
I will stand fast
like unto the eternal' - is not this, monks,
absolute complete folly?"

"Lord, how could it not be absolute complete folly?"

"What do you think about this, monks:37

Is material shape
permanent or impermanent?"38

"Impermanent, Lord."

"But is what is impermanent painful or pleasant?"

"Painful, Lord."

"But is it fitting
to regard that which is impermanent,
painful,
liable to change, as

"This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self?"

[178] "No, Lord."39

"What do you think about this, monks:

Is feeling
permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, Lord."

"But is what is impermanent
painful or pleasant?"

"Painful, Lord."

"But is it fitting
to regard that which is impermanent,
painful,
liable to change, as

"This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self'?"

"No, Lord."

"What do you think about this, monks:

Is perception
permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, Lord."

"But is what is impermanent
painful or pleasant?"

"Painful, Lord."

"But is it fitting
to regard that which is impermanent,
painful,
liable to change, as

'This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self?'

"No, Lord."

"What do you think about this, monks:

Are the habitual tendencies
permanent or impermanent?

"Impermanent, Lord."

"But is what is impermanent
painful or pleasant?"

"Painful, Lord."

"But is it fitting
to regard that which is impermanent,
painful,
liable to change, as

'This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self?'

"No, Lord."

What do you think about this, monks:

Is consciousness
permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, Lord."

"Is that which is impermanent painful or pleasant?"

"Painful, Lord."

"But is it fitting
to regard that which is impermanent,
painful,
liable to change, as

'This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self?'"

"No, Lord."

"Wherefore, monks,
whatever is material shape,
past, future, present,
subjective or objective,
gross or subtle,
mean or excellent,
whether it is far or near -
all material shape
should be seen thus
by perfect intuitive wisdom
as it really is:

This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.

Whatever is feeling,
past, future, present,
subjective or objective,
gross or subtle,
mean or excellent,
whether it is far or near -
all material shape
should be seen thus

by perfect intuitive wisdom
as it really is:

This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.

Whatever is perception,
past, future, present,
subjective or objective,
gross or subtle,
mean or excellent,
whether it is far or near -
all material shape
should be seen thus
by perfect intuitive wisdom
as it really is:

This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.

Whatever are the habitual tendencies,
past, future, present,
subjective or objective,
gross or subtle,
mean or excellent,
whether it is far or near -
all material shape
should be seen thus
by perfect intuitive wisdom
as it really is:

This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.

Whatever is consciousness,
past, future, present,
subjective or objective,
gross or subtle,
mean or excellent,
whether it is far or near -
all material shape
should be seen thus
by perfect intuitive wisdom
as it really is:

This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.

Monks, the instructed disciple of the pure ones,
seeing thus,
disregards material shape, disregards feeling,
disregards perception, disregards the habitual tendencies, disregards consciousness;
disregarding,
he is dispassionate;
through dispassion
he is freed;
in freedom
the knowledge comes to be that he is freed,<sup>40</sup>
and he comprehends:

Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close is the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more
of being such or such.

Monks, such a monk<sup>41</sup> is said to have lifted the barrier,<sup>42</sup> and he is said to have filled the moat, and he is said to have pulled up the pillar, and he is said to have withdrawn the bolts, and he is said to be a pure one,
the flag laid low,
the burden<sup>43</sup> dropped, without fetters.

And how, monks, has a monk lifted the barrier?

In this connection, monks, ignorance is got rid of by the monk,
cut down to the roots,
made like a palm-tree stump, made so that it can come to no [179] future existence,
not liable to rise again.

In this way, monks,
a monk comes to be
one who has lifted the barrier.

And how, monks,
does a monk come to be one who has filled the moat?

In this connection, monks, again-becoming,
faring on in births
come to be got rid of by a monk,
cut down to the roots,
made like a palm-tree stump,
made so that they can come to no future existence,
not liable to rise again.

In this way, monks,
a monk comes to be
one who has filled the moat.

And how, monks,
does a monk come to be
one who has pulled up the pillar?

In this connection, monks, craving comes to be got rid of by a monk,
cut down to the roots,
made like a palm-tree stump,
made so that they can come to no future existence,
not liable to rise again.

In this way, monks, is a monk
one who has pulled up the pillar.

And how, monks,
does a monk come to be
one who has withdrawn the bolts?

In this connection, monks,
the five fetters binding to the lower (shore)
come to be got rid of by a monk,
cut down to the roots,
made like a palm-tree stump,
made so that they can come to no future existence,
not liable to rise again.

In this way, monks, does a monk come to be one who has withdrawn the bolts.

And how, monks,
does a monk come to be
a pure one,
the flag laid low,

the burden dropped,
without fetters?

In this connection, monks,
the conceit 'I am'
comes to be got rid of by the monk,
cut down to the roots,
made like a palm-tree stump,
made so that they can come to no future existence,
not liable to rise again.

In this way, monks,
a monk comes to be
a pure one,
the flag laid low,
the burden dropped,
without fetters.

Monks, when a monk's mind is freed thus,
the devas -
those with Indra,<sup>44</sup> those with Brahma,<sup>44</sup> those with Pajapati,<sup>44</sup> do not succeed in their search if they think:

'This is the discriminative consciousness attached<sup>45</sup> to a Tathāgata.'<sup>46</sup>

What is the reason for this?

I, monks, say here and now that a Tathāgata is untraceable.<sup>47</sup>

[180] Although I, monks, am one who speaks thus, who points out thus,

there are some recluses and brahmans who misrepresent me untruly, vainly,
falsely,
not in accordance with fact,
saying:

'The recluse Gotama is a nihilist,<sup>48</sup> he lays down the cutting off,
the destruction,
the disappearance<sup>49</sup>
of the existent entity.

But as this, monks, is just what I am not,
as this is just what I do not say,
therefore these worthy recluses and brahmans misrepresent me untruly, vainly,
falsely,
and not in accordance with fact when they say:

'The recluse Gotama is a nihilist,
he lays down the cutting off,
the destruction,
the disappearance
of the existent entity.'

Formerly<sup>50</sup> I, monks, as well as now,
lay down simply anguish and the stopping of anguish.

If, in regard to this, monks, others revile,<sup>51</sup>
abuse,

annoy<sup>52</sup> the Tathāgata, there is in the Tathāgata
no resentment,
no distress,
no dissatisfaction of mind<sup>53</sup> concerning them.

If, in regard to this,<sup>54</sup> monks, others revere,
esteem,
respect
and honour
the Tathāgata,
there is in the Tathāgata
no joy,
no gladness,
no elation of mind<sup>55</sup>
concerning them.

If, in regard to this, monks,
others revere,
esteem,
respect
and honour
the Tathāgata,
it occurs to the Tathāgata, monks, concerning them:

'This that was formerly thoroughly known,<sup>56</sup> such kind of duties are to be done by me to it.'<sup>57</sup>

Wherefore, monks,
even if others should revile,
abuse,
annoy you,
there should be in you no resentment,
distress,

dissatisfaction of mind
concerning them.

And wherefore, monks,
even if others should revere,
esteem,
respect,
honour you,
there should not be in you joy, gladness,
elation of mind
concerning them.

And wherefore, monks,
even if others should revere,
esteem,
respect,
honour you,
it should occur to you:

'This that was formerly thoroughly known, such kind of duties are to be done by us to it.'

[181] Wherefore, monks,
what is not yours,
put it away.<sup>58</sup>

Putting it away
will be for a long time
for your welfare and happiness.

And what, monks, is not yours?

Material shape, monks,
is not yours;
put it away,
putting it away

will be for a long time
for your welfare and happiness.

Feeling, monks,
is not yours;
put it away,
putting it away
will be for a long time
for your welfare and happiness.

Perception, monks,
is not yours;
put it away,
putting it away
will be for a long time
for your welfare and happiness.

The habitual tendencies, monks,
is not yours;
put it away,
putting it away
will be for a long time
for your welfare and happiness.

Consciousness, monks,
is not yours;
put it away,
putting it away
will be for a long time
for your welfare and happiness.

What do you think about this, <sup>59</sup> monks?

If a person were to gather or burn or do as he pleases

with the grass, twigs,
branches
and foliage
in this Jeta Grove,
would it occur to you:

The person is gathering us,
he is burning us,
he is doing as he pleases with us?"

"No, Lord.

What is the reason for this?

It is that this, Lord, is not our self nor what belongs to self."

"Even so, monks,
what is not yours,
put it away;
putting it away
will be for a long time
for your welfare and happiness.

And what, monks, is not yours?

Material shape, monks,
is not yours;
put it away,
putting it away
will be for a long time
for your welfare and happiness.

Feeling, monks,
is not yours;

put it away,
putting it away
will be for a long time
for your welfare and happiness.

Perception, monks,
is not yours;
put it away,
putting it away
will be for a long time
for your welfare and happiness.

The habitual tendencies, monks,
is not yours;
put it away,
putting it away
will be for a long time
for your welfare and happiness.

Consciousness, monks,
is not yours;
put it away,
putting it away
will be for a long time
for your welfare and happiness.

Thus, monks, is dhamma well taught by me,
made manifest,
opened up,
made known,
stripped of its swathings.

Because dhamma has been well taught by me thus,
made manifest,
opened up,
made known,

stripped of its swathings,
those monks who are perfected ones,
the cankers destroyed,
who have lived the life,
done what was to be done,
laid down the burden,
attained their own goal,
the fetter of becoming utterly destroyed,
and who are freed by perfect profound knowledge -
the track of these cannot be discerned.

Thus, monks, is dhamma well taught by me,
made manifest,
opened up,
made known,
stripped of its swathings.

Because dhamma has been well taught by me thus,
made manifest,
opened up,
made known,
stripped of its swathings,
those monks in whom the five fetters binding the lower (shore)
are got rid of - all these<sup>60</sup> are of spontaneous [182] uprising, they are attainers of utter nibbāna there, not liable to return from that world.<sup>61</sup>

Thus, monks, is dhamma well taught by me,
made manifest,
opened up,
made known,
stripped of its swathings.

Because dhamma has been well taught by me thus,
made manifest,
opened up,
made known,
stripped of its swathings,
those monks in whom
the three fetters are got rid of,
in whom attachment,
aversion
and confusion are reduced, all these are once-returners who, having come back to this world once,
will make an end of anguish.

Thus, monks, is dhamma well taught by me,
made manifest,
opened up,
made known,
stripped of its swathings.

Because dhamma has been well taught by me thus,
made manifest,
opened up,
made known,
stripped of its swathings,
those monks in whom
the three fetters are got rid of,
all these are stream-attainers who, not liable to the Downfall, are assured,
bound for awakening.

Thus, monks, is dhamma well taught by me,
made manifest,
opened up,

made known,
stripped of its swathings.

Because dhamma has been well taught by me thus,
made manifest,
opened up,
made known,
stripped of its swathings,
all those monks
who are striving for dhamma, striving for faith<sup>62</sup> are bound for awakening.

Thus, monks, is dhamma well taught by me,
made manifest,
opened up,
made known,
stripped of its swathings.

Because dhamma has been well taught by me thus,
made manifest,
opened up,
made known,
stripped of its swathings,
all those who have enough faith in me, enough affection,
are bound for heaven."<sup>63</sup>

Thus spoke the Lord,
delighted,
these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse on the Parable of the Water-snake:
The Second

---

<sup>1</sup> This episode also at Vin. ii. 25, iv. 133 ff. For notes, etc. see B.D. iii. 21 ff.

<sup>2</sup> As at M. i. 233.

<sup>3</sup> Vin. iv. 134 reads "are things that are stumbling-blocks called stumbling-blocks by the Lord."

<sup>4</sup> Cf. following with M. i. 364 f.

<sup>5</sup> To here = Vin. iv. 133-35, with the difference that in Vin. Gotama does not summon Ariṭṭha to speak to him, but convenes an Order and questions him there.

<sup>6</sup> usmīkata, as at M. i. 258. MA. ii. 104 "has he the least glimmering of knowledge, ñāṇusmā?"

<sup>7</sup> Stock passage. MA. ii. 106 says "in prose and verse" refers to Vinaya and various Suttas in the Suttanipāta.

<sup>8</sup> veyyākaraṇa is explained as Abhidhamma.

<sup>9</sup> MA. ii. 106: Thag-thīg, and Dhp. and part of the Sn.

<sup>10</sup> Cūla- and Mahā-vedalla Suttas, Sammadiṭṭhi, Sakkapañha, Sankhārabhājanīya and Mahāpuṇṇama Suttas.

<sup>11</sup> Cf. A. ii. 26. [? or the next?]

<sup>12</sup> Quoted DA. i. 21. Asl. 23.

<sup>13</sup> alagadda = āsivisa, MA. ii. 107.

<sup>14</sup> Lit.; he might hold it back well held back.

<sup>15</sup> ajapada, cleft like a goat's hoof.

<sup>16</sup> Referred to at MA. i. 260.

<sup>17</sup> MA. ii. 109 defines these words in accordance with definitions given at Vin. iii. 263, iv. 63.

<sup>18</sup> Cf. S. iv. 174 for this symbolism.

<sup>19</sup> MA. ii. 109 says that the Lord makes us get rid of the desire and passion for calm and for insight; and in regard to the former the Comy. quotes M. i. 456, "I speak of getting rid of the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception"; and in regard to the latter it quotes M. i. 260, "Even if this view of yours is purified thus, do not cling to it."

<sup>20</sup> Such as Arittha's; MA. ii 109.

<sup>21</sup> diṭṭhiṭṭhānāni. Cf. A. v. 198. MA. ii. 110 says, "There is view and the (harm of view; both the cause of view and the result of view."

<sup>22</sup> As at M. i. 1, 7, etc.

<sup>23</sup> Through desire, pride, false view respectively.

<sup>24</sup> muta. The fields of sight and hearing are separately mentioned; muta refers to the fields of smell, taste and touch, so MA. ii. 110, with which cf. definition of muta at Vin. iv. 2.

<sup>25</sup> so loko so attā, meaning, I think, that what is the world, that is the self, thus identifying them. The "world" at S. iv. 97 is the world of the senses and as such is impermanent, ill, not the self. See MA. ii. 110 which quotes M. iii. 17: rūpam attato samanupassati, he regards material shapes from the point of view of self. Or so may stand for "I," as below; thus we would get: "I the world, I the self."

<sup>26</sup> Having gone to a world beyond, MA. ii. 110.

<sup>27</sup> so =so aham.

<sup>28</sup> asati = avijjamāne, being inexistent, untrue, MA. ii. 111.

<sup>29</sup> MA. ii. 111, will not be disturbed by fear and craving.

<sup>30</sup> Externally, in the loss of requisites, MA. ii. 111.

<sup>31</sup> Valuables, vehicles, mounts, gold, MA. ii. 111.

<sup>32</sup> MA. ii. 111, it is taken by rajahs or thieves or it is burnt or carried away by water; cf. M. i. 86.

<sup>33</sup> MA. ii. 112 cites S. iii. 55 ff. no c'assam no ca me siyā, "had it not been it were not mine." Cf. Ud. 66.

<sup>34</sup> Cf. S. iii. 127; also S. iii. 67; Vin. i. 13.

<sup>35</sup> MA. ii. 113, "If there is an I, there is a mine; if there is a mine, there is an I. So (the two) would become joined."

<sup>36</sup> anupalabbhamāne, either: not to be known, or, not-existing. Cf. Sn. 858: in him there exists (or is to be found) neither attam nor nirattam.

<sup>37</sup> As at Vin. i. 14. Cf. S. iv. 34, iii. 66, 82-3; also M. iii. 282.

<sup>38</sup> MA. ii. 113, "inasmuch as having been, it is not (now), therefore it is impermanent, and for these four reasons: because of uprising and decaying, temporariness, and being the opposite of permanence."

<sup>39</sup> MA ii. 113, "Not-self for four reasons: because it is empty, has no owner, has no master, and because it is the opposite of Self."

<sup>40</sup> MA. ii. 115, "Here dispassion is the Way ... he is freed by the dispassionate Way."

<sup>41</sup> This passage also at A. iii. 84.

<sup>42</sup> Dhp. 398.

<sup>43</sup> See S. iii. 25 on the burden and its bearer.

<sup>44</sup> Mentioned in different context at D. i. 244. Sa-Indadeve sa-Brahmake at D. ii. 261; sa-Inda-deva sa-Pajāpaṭika at D. ii. 274. Inda at D. iii. 204, Sn. 310, 316, 679. Brahma vā Indo vā pi Sujumpati at Sn. 1024.

<sup>45</sup> nissata, supporting, attached to, dependent on.

<sup>46</sup> MA. ii. 117 says here "Tathāgata means both a being, satta, and the highest person, one who has destroyed the cankers." It then seems to take this back, saying there is nothing called a being in the highest meaning, and the Lord does not speak of Tathāgata, satta, puggala. For the Tathāgata is untraceable. Cf. UdA. 340, which explains Tathāgata by attā. Cf. S. i. 123, where Māra cannot find Godhika's discriminative consciousness, viññāṇa.ananuvejja. Cf. Dhp. 179; Mūn. 73.

<sup>47</sup> ananuvejja. Cf. Dhp. 179; Miln. 73.

<sup>48</sup> venayika, a leader away, a better, diverter. MA. ii. 117 says he removes, he causes destruction.

<sup>49</sup> vibhava, or extirpation, annihilation.

<sup>50</sup> As early as the First Utterance, called the Rolling of the Dhamma-wheel.

<sup>51</sup> MA. ii. 118, with the ten ways of reviling or cursing. These are given at Jā. i. 191, DhA. i. 212, SnA. 342. See B.D. ii. 171, n. 3 and p. 173 for the ten kinds of omamvāda, insulting speech.

<sup>52</sup> MA. ii. 118 reads rosenti vihesanti, annoy, vex.

<sup>53</sup> As at D. i. n. 3; A. i. 79.

<sup>54</sup> I.e. the teaching on anguish.

<sup>55</sup> As at D. i. 3.

<sup>56</sup> MA. ii. 118 refers this to the five khandhas; see Vin. i. 13 f., etc.

<sup>57</sup> tattha me evarūpa kārā karīyanti. MA. ii. 118 says tattha'me ti tasmim khandhapañcake ime. But "me" must be wrong, for just below when the monks are being told how to comport themselves, we get tattha no evarūpā.

<sup>58</sup> This passage also at S. iii. 33 f.

<sup>59</sup> S. iii. 34 reads seyyathā pi.

<sup>60</sup> anāgāmino, non-returners, should, I think, be inserted after sabbe te.

<sup>61</sup> See above, p. 43.

<sup>62</sup> Defined at Pug. 15; quoted at MA. ii. 120. Cf. M. i. 226.

<sup>63</sup> Not literally, but "as though," viya, in heaven. Some say 'assured.'" MA. ii. 120 adds that the Porāṇakatheras call such a monk a lesser stream-attainer, cūḷasotāpanno. "Monk," however, is not mentioned in this clause of the text.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
3. Tatiya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
3. The Third Division

23. Discourse on the Anthill

Vammīka Sutta

---

Thus have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvatti in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Now at that time the venerable Kassapa the Boy<sup>1</sup> was staying in the Blind Men's Grove.

Then, when the night was far spent<sup>2</sup> a certain deva<sup>3</sup> with a glorious skin,<sup>4</sup> having illuminated the whole of the Blind Men's Grove, approached the venerable Kassapa the Boy; and having approached stood at one side.

While standing at one side this deva spoke thus to the venerable Kassapa the Boy:

'Monk, monk,<sup>5</sup> this ant-hill smokes by night, blazes up by day.

A brahman speaks thus:

'Bringing a tool, clever one, dig it up.'

The clever one, digging when he had brought a tool saw a bolt and said:

'A bolt, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:

'Take out the bolt, dig on, clever one, bringing a tool'

The clever one, digging on when he had brought a tool, saw a frog,<sup>6</sup> and said:

'A frog, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:

'Take out the frog, dig on, clever one, bringing a tool.'

The clever one, digging on when he had brought a tool, saw a forked path, and said:

'A forked path, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:

'Take out the forked path, dig on, clever one, bringing a tool.'

The clever one, digging on when he had brought [184] a tool, saw a strainer,<sup>7</sup> and said:

'A strainer, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:

[143] 'Take out the strainer, dig on, clever one, bringing a tool.'

The clever one, digging on when he had brought a tool,
saw a tortoise, and said:

'A tortoise, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:

'Take out the tortoise, dig on, clever one, bringing a tool.'

The clever one, digging on when he had brought a tool, saw a slaughter-house,<sup>8</sup> and said:
'A slaughter-house, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:
'Take out the slaughter-house, dig on, clever one, bringing a tool.'

The clever one, digging on when he had brought a tool, saw a piece of flesh, and said:
'A piece of flesh, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:
'Take out the piece of flesh, dig on, clever one, bringing a tool.'

The clever one, digging on when he had brought a tool, saw a cobra,<sup>9</sup> and said:
'A cobra, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:
'Let the cobra be,
do not touch the cobra, do reverence to the cobra.'

If you, monk, having approached the Lord, were to ask him about these questions, then you could remember as the Lord explains to you.

I, monk, do not see anyone in the world with its devas, with its Māras, with its Brahmās, in creation, with its recluses and brahmans, its devas and men, who could turn his mind to expounding these questions except a Tathāgata or a Tathāgata's disciple or one who has heard (the teaching) from them."

Thus spoke that deva; and vanished then and there, having said this.

Then the venerable Kassapa the Boy approached the Lord towards the end of that night; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Kassapa the Boy spoke thus to the Lord:

"During this night, Lord, when the night was far spent, a certain deva with a glorious skin, having illumined the whole of the Blind Men's Grove, approached me; and having approached, stood at one side.

While standing to one side, Lord, that deva spoke thus to me:

"Monk, monk, this ant-hill smokes by night, blazes up by day.

A brahman speaks thus:

'Bringing a tool, clever one, dig it up.'

The clever one, digging when he had brought a tool saw a bolt and said:

'A bolt, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:

'Take out the bolt, dig on, clever one, bringing a tool'

The clever one, digging on when he had brought a tool, saw a frog, and said:

'A frog, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:

'Take out the frog, dig on, clever one, bringing a tool.'

The clever one, digging on when he had brought a tool, saw a forked path, and said:

'A forked path, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:

'Take out the forked path, dig on, clever one, bringing a tool.'

The clever one, digging on when he had brought a tool, saw a strainer, and said:

'A strainer, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:

'Take out the strainer, dig on, clever one, bringing a tool.'

The clever one, digging on when he had brought a tool,
saw a tortoise, and said:

'A tortoise, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:

'Take out the tortoise, dig on, clever one, bringing a tool.'

The clever one, digging on when he had brought a tool, saw a slaughter-house, and said:

'A slaughter-house, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:

'Take out the slaughter-house, dig on, clever one, bringing a tool.'

The clever one, digging on when he had brought a tool,
saw a piece of flesh, and said:

'A piece of flesh, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:

'Take out the piece of flesh, dig on, clever one, bringing a tool.'

The clever one, digging on when he had brought a tool, saw a cobra, and said:

'A cobra, revered one.'

The brahman spoke thus:

'Let the cobra be,
do not touch the cobra,
do reverence to the cobra.'

If you, monk, having approached the Lord, were to ask him about these questions, then you could remember as the Lord explains to you.

I, monk, do not see anyone in the world with its devas, with its Māras, with its Brahmās, in creation, with its recluses and brahmans, its devas and men, who could turn his mind to expounding these questions except a Tathāgata or a Tathāgata's disciple or one who has heard (the teaching) from them."

This is what the deva said, Lord, and vanished then and there, having said this.

Now what, Lord is the anthill, what is smoking by night, what is blazing up by day,
who is the brahman,
who the clever one,
what is the tool,
what the digging up,
what the bolt,
what the frog,
what the forked path,
what the strainer,
what the tortoise,
what the slaughterhouse,
what the piece of flesh, what the cobra?"

"The anthill, monk, this is a synonym for the body made of the four great elements, originated from mother and father, nourished on gruel and sour milk, of a nature to be constantly rubbed away, pounded away, broken up and scattered.<sup>10</sup>

Whatever, monk, one thinks upon and ponders upon during the night concerning the day's affairs, this is smoking by night.

Whatever affairs, monk, one sets going by day, whether by body, speech or thought, having pondered and reflected upon them during the night, this is blazing up by day.

Brahman<sup>11</sup>, a monk, this is a synonym for the Tathāgata, perfected one, fully self-awakened one.

Clever one, monk, this is a synonym for a monk who is a learner.<sup>12</sup>

The tool, monk, this is a synonym for the Ariyan intuitive wisdom.

Digging, monk, this is a synonym for the output of energy.<sup>13</sup>

The bolt, monk, this is a synonym for ignorance.

Take out the bolt, get rid of ignorance, dig, clever one, bringing a tool. This is the meaning of that.

The frog, monk, this is a synonym for the turbulence of wrath.

Take out the frog, get rid of the turbulence of wrath, dig, clever one, bringing a tool. This is the meaning of that.

The forked path, monk, this is a synonym for perplexity.

Take out the forked path, get rid of perplexity, dig, clever one, bringing a tool. This is the meaning of that.

The strainer, monk, this is a synonym for the five hindrances:

for the hindrance of desire for sense-pleasures, for the hindrance of malevolence, for the hindrance of sloth and torpor, for the hindrance of restlessness and worry, for the hindrance of perplexity.

Take out the strainer, get rid of the five hindrances, dig, clever one, bringing a tool. This is the meaning of that.

The tortoise, monk, this is a synonym for the five grasping groups,<sup>14</sup> that is to say:

for the group of grasping after material shape, for the group of grasping after feeling, for the group of grasping after perception, for the group of grasping after the habitual tendencies, for the group of grasping after consciousness.

Take out the tortoise, get rid of the five grasping groups, dig, clever one, bringing a tool. This is the meaning of that.

The slaughter-house, monk, this is a synonym for the five strands of sense-pleasures:

for material shapes cognisable by the eye, agreeable, pleasant, liked, enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures, alluring;

for sounds cognisable by the ear agreeable, pleasant, liked, enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures, alluring;

for smells cognisable by the nose agreeable, pleasant, liked, enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures, alluring;

for savours cognisable by the tongue agreeable, pleasant, liked, enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures, alluring;

for touches cognisable by the body,
agreeable, pleasant, liked, enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures, [145] alluring.

Take out the slaughter-house, get rid of the five strands of sense-pleasures, dig, clever one, bringing a tool. This is the meaning of that.

The piece of flesh, monk, this is a synonym for the passion of delight.

Take out the piece of flesh, get rid of the passion of delight, dig, clever one, bringing a tool. This is the meaning of that.

The cobra, monk, this is a synonym for a monk whose cankers are destroyed.<sup>15</sup>

Let the cobra be, do not touch the cobra, do reverence to the cobra. This is the meaning of that."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted the venerable Kassapa the Boy rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

The Discourse on the Ant-hill: the Third

---

<sup>1</sup> This is Kumāra-Kassapa, so called even when he was grown up, MA. ii. 120. He lived in Blind Men's Grove fulfilling the course for learners, MA. ii. 124. He took this sutta as the subject of his meditations and so developed insight and won arahantship, MA. ii. 134. He was therefore not an arahant at the time when it was delivered.

<sup>2</sup> This is the meaning attributed to abhikkantāya by MA. ii. 124 — the meaning of "waning" as against its other meaning of "lovely," "beautiful" and "wonderful" (in the sense of assenting).

<sup>3</sup> MA. ii. 124: "devatā" is the common (general or joint) appellation of devas, and daughters of devas. Here it means a deva." Cf. SA. ii. 14, which says here it means devaputta.

<sup>4</sup> abhikkantavaṇṇā. MA. ii. 125 says abhikkanta is here in its sense of "beautiful," abhirūpa; and among seven meanings attributed to vaṇṇa, the first, that of "skin," chavi, is meant.

<sup>5</sup> The deva and Kassapa had been two of five friends in the time of the Buddha Kassapa. Therefore the deva did not greet him, MA. ii. 126.

<sup>6</sup> uddhumāyikā = maṇḍūka, MA. ii. 128.

<sup>7</sup> caṅgavāra, explained at MA. ii. 128 as khāraparissāvanna, strainer for potash? Cf. cangavāraka at Miln. 365, translated as "dyers' straining cloth"; and Jā. v. 186, translated as "sieve." Jā. Comy. says "as water placed in a dyers' khāracāṅgavāra quickly runs out." Neumann's translation. Majjh., I 239, gives Geflecht, basket-work. Chalmers has "strainer."

<sup>8</sup> MA. ii. 128 say a large knife for cutting up meat as well as a block.

<sup>9</sup> nāga.

<sup>10</sup> This description of the body occurs also at M. i. 500, ii. 17; S. iv. 83; D. i. 76.

<sup>11</sup> Cf. definition of brahman at A. iv. 144, quoted at MA. ii. 130.

<sup>12</sup> Cf. definition of sikkhati ... sikkhati ... sekho at A. i. 231, quoted at MA. ii. 131.

<sup>13</sup> MA. ii. 131, of bodily and mental energy.

<sup>14</sup> MA. ii. 133 says that these are comparable to the four legs and the head of a tortoise.

<sup>15</sup> See end of Sta. 5, where the two chief disciples are referred to as mahānāga.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
3. Tatiya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
3. The Third Division

24. Discourse on the Relays of Chariots

Ratha-Vinīta Sutta

---

Thus have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Rāagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place.

Then a number of monks, living in their native district,<sup>2</sup> having kept the rains locally,<sup>2</sup> approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance.

The Lord spoke thus to these monks as they were sitting down at a respectful distance:

"Who, monks, among the monks living in their native district, is esteemed by his local fellow Brahma-farers in this way: both as one desiring little for himself and as being one who talks to the monks on desiring little; both as one who is content for himself and as one who talks to the monks on contentment; both as one who is aloof himself and as one who talks to the monks on aloofness; both as one who is not sociable<sup>3</sup> himself and as one who talks to the monks about not being sociable; both as one of stirred up energy himself and as one who talks to the monks on stirring up energy; both as one who is himself endowed with moral habit and as one who talks to the monks on the attainment of moral habit; both as one who is himself endowed with concentration and as one who talks to the monks on the attainment of concentration; both as one who is himself endowed with intuitive wisdom<sup>4</sup> and as one who talks to monks on the attainment of intuitive wisdom; both as one who is himself endowed with freedom and as one who talks to monks on the attainment of freedom; both as one who is himself endowed with the knowledge and vision of freedom and as one who talks to [188] the monks on the attainment of the knowledge and vision of freedom;<sup>5</sup> an exhorter,<sup>6</sup> instructor, one who can gladden, arouse, incite, delight his fellow Brahma-farers?"

"Lord, the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son<sup>7</sup>, is among the monks living in their native district, is esteemed by his local fellow Brahma-farers in this way: both as one desiring little for himself and as being one who talks to the monks on desiring little; both as one who is content for himself and as one who talks to the monks on contentment; both as one who is aloof himself and as one who talks to the monks on aloofness; both as one who is not sociable himself and as one who talks to the monks about not being sociable; both as one of stirred up energy himself and as one who talks to the monks on stirring up energy; both as one who is himself endowed with moral habit and as one who talks to the monks on the attainment of moral habit; both as one who is himself endowed with concentration and as one who talks to the monks on the attainment of concentration; both as one who is himself endowed with intuitive wisdom and as one who talks to monks on the attainment of intuitive wisdom; both as one who is himself endowed with freedom and as one who talks to monks on the attainment of freedom; both as one who is himself endowed with the knowledge and vision of freedom and as one who talks to the monks on the attainment of the knowledge and vision of freedom; an exhorter, instructor, one who can gladden, arouse, incite, delight his fellow Brahma-farers."

Now at that time the venerable Sāriputta was sitting close to the Lord.

Then it occurred to the venerable Sāriputta: "It is profitable for the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son, it is well gotten for the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son, that his well informed fellow Brahma-farers praise him point by point when they are face-to-face with the Teacher, and that the Teacher approves of him.

Perhaps I might meet the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's, somewhere sometime.

Perhaps there might be some conversation (with him)."

Then the Lord, having stayed near Rājagaha for as long as he found suitable, set out on tour for Sāvattthī; in due courses, walking on tour, he arrived at Sāvattthī.

The Lord stayed here near Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son, heard: "They say the Lord has reached Sāvattthī and is staying near Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery." Then the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son, having packed away his bedding<sup>8</sup> taking his bowl and robe, set out on tour for Sāvattthī; in due course, walking on tour, he approached Sāvattthī, the Jeta Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery, and the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance.

The Lord gladdened, roused, incited, delighted the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son, with talk on Dhamma as he was sitting down at a respectful distance.

Then the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son, gladdened, roused, incited, delighted by the Lord's talk on Dhamma, having rejoiced and being satisfied, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, and keeping [189] his right side towards him, set out for the day-sojourn in the Blind Men's Grove.<sup>9</sup>

Then a certain monk approached the venerable Sāriputta; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Sāriputta: "Inasmuch as you, reverend Sāriputta, are continually extolling the monk called Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son, he gladdened, roused, incited, delighted by the Lord's talk on Dhamma, having rejoiced in what the Lord had said, and being satisfied, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord and keeping his right side towards him, is setting out for the Blind Men's Grove for the day-sojourn."

Then the venerable Sāriputta, hurriedly taking his piece of cloth to sit upon<sup>10</sup>, followed close after the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son, keeping him in sight.

Then the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son, having plunged into the Blind men's grove, sat down at the root of a tree for the day-sojourn.

Then the venerable Sāriputta, having also plunged into the Blind Men's Grove, sat down at the root of a tree for the day-sojourn.

Then the venerable Sāriputta, having emerged from solitary meditation towards evening, approached the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son; having approached, he exchanged greeting with the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son; having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy, he sat down at one side.

As he was sitting down at one side, the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son:

"Your reverence, is the Brahma-faring lived under our Lord?"

"Yes, your reverence."

"Your reverence, is the Brahma-faring lived under the Lord for purity of moral habit?"<sup>11</sup>

"Not for this, your reverence."

"Then, your reverence, is not the Brahman-faring lived under the Lord for purity of mind?"

"Not for this, your reverence."

"Then, your reverence, is the Brahma-faring lived under the Lord for purity of view?"<sup>12</sup>

"Not for this, your reverence."

[190] "Then, your reverence, is not the Brahma-faring lived under the Lord for purity through crossing over doubt?"<sup>13</sup>

"Not for this, your reverence."

"Then, your reverence, is the Brahma-faring lived under the Lord for purity of knowledge and insight into the Way and what is not the Way?"

"Not for this, your reverence."

"Then, your reverence, is not the Brahma-faring lived under the Lord for purity of knowledge and insight into the course?"<sup>14</sup>

"Not for this, your reverence."

"Then, your reverence, is not the Brahma-faring lived under the Lord for purity arising from knowledge and insight?"<sup>15</sup>

"Not for this, your reverence."

But when you, your reverence, are being asked: "Your reverence, is the Brahma-faring lived under the Lord for purity of moral habit?"

You say: "Not for this, your reverence."

And when you, your reverence, are being asked: "Then, your reverence, is not the Brahman-faring lived under the Lord for purity of mind?"

You say: "Not for this, your reverence."

And when you, your reverence, are being asked: "Then, your reverence, is the Brahma-faring lived under the Lord for purity of view?"

You say: "Not for this, your reverence."

And when you, your reverence, are being asked: "Then, your reverence, is not the Brahma-faring lived under the Lord for purity through crossing over doubt?"

You say: "Not for this, your reverence."

And when you, your reverence, are being asked: "Then, your reverence, is the Brahma-faring lived under the Lord for purity of knowledge and insight into the Way and what is not the Way?"

You say: "Not for this, your reverence."

And when you, your reverence, are being asked: "Then, your reverence, is not the Brahma-faring lived under the Lord for purity of knowledge and insight into the course?"

You say: "Not for this, your reverence."

And when you, your reverence, are being asked: "Then, your reverence, is not the Brahma-faring lived under the Lord for purity arising from knowledge and insight?"

You say: "Not for this, your reverence."

What is the reason, then, your reverence, that the Brahma-faring is lived under the Lord?

"The Brahma-faring under the Lord, your reverence, is lived for utter Nibbāna without attachment."<sup>16</sup>

"Your reverence, is purity of moral habit utter Nibbāna without attachment?"

It is not this, your reverence."

"Your reverence, is not purity of mind utter Nibbāna without attachment?"

It is not this, your reverence."

[191] "Then your reverence, is purity of view utter Nibbāna without attachment?"

It is not this, your reverence."

"Then your reverence, is not purity through crossing over doubt utter Nibbāna without attachment?"

It is not this, your reverence."

"Then your reverence, is purity of knowledge and insight into the Way and what is not the Way utter Nibbāna without attachment?"

It is not this, your reverence."

"Then your reverence, is not purity of knowledge and insight into the course utter Nibbāna without attachment?"

It is not this, your reverence."

"Then your reverence, is purity arising from knowledge and insight utter Nibbāna without attachment?"

It is not this, your reverence."

But, your reverence, what is utter Nibbāna without attachment except these states?

It is not this, your reverence."

"But when you, your reverence, are being asked: "Your reverence, is purity of moral habit utter Nibbāna without attachment?"
you say: "It is not this, your reverence."

And when you, your reverence, are being asked: "Your reverence, is not purity of mind utter Nibbāna without attachment?"

you say: "It is not this, your reverence."

And when you, your reverence, are being asked: "Then your reverence, is purity of view utter Nibbāna without attachment?"

you say: "It is not this, your reverence."

And when you, your reverence, are being asked: "Then your reverence, is not purity through crossing over doubt utter Nibbāna without attachment?"

you say: "It is not this, your reverence."

And when you, your reverence, are being asked: "Then your reverence, is purity of knowledge and insight into the Way and what is not the Way utter Nibbāna without attachment?"

you say: "It is not this, your reverence."

And when you, your reverence, are being asked: "Then your reverence, is not purity of knowledge and insight into the course utter Nibbāna without attachment?"

you say: "It is not this, your reverence."

And when you, your reverence, are being asked: "Then your reverence, is purity arising from knowledge and insight utter Nibbāna without attachment?"

you say: "It is not this, your reverence."

And when you, your reverence, are being asked: "But, your reverence, what is utter Nibbāna without attachment except these states?"

you say: "It is not this, your reverence."

But, your reverence, the meaning of what has been said should have been shown as it was spoken."

"If, your reverence, the Lord had laid down that purity of moral habit was utter Nibbāna without attachment, he would have laid down that utter Nibbāna without attachment is the same as that with attachment.

"If, your reverence, the Lord had laid down that purity of mind was utter Nibbāna without attachment, he would have laid down that utter Nibbāna without attachment is the same as that with attachment.

"If, your reverence, the Lord had laid down that purity of view was utter Nibbāna without attachment, he would have laid down that utter Nibbāna without attachment is the same as that with attachment.

"If, your reverence, the Lord had laid down that purity through crossing over doubt was utter Nibbāna without attachment, he would have laid down that utter Nibbāna without attachment is the same as that with attachment.

"If, your reverence, the Lord had laid down that purity of knowledge and insight into the Way and what is not the Way was utter Nibbāna without attachment, he would have laid down that utter Nibbāna without attachment is the same as that with attachment.

"If, your reverence, the Lord had laid down that purity of knowledge and insight into the course was utter Nibbāna without attachment, he would have laid down that utter Nibbāna without attachment is the same as that with attachment.

"If, your reverence, the Lord had laid down that purity arising from knowledge and insight was utter Nibbāna without attachment, he would have laid down that utter Nibbāna without attachment is the same as [192] that with attachment.

And, your reverence, if there were utter Nibbāna without attachment apart from these states, the average person would be (attained to) utter Nibbāna, for the average person, your reverence, is apart from these states.

Well then, your reverence, I will make you a parable, for by a parable well-informed men here understand the meaning of what is said.

Your reverence, it is as though while King Pasenadi of Kosala was staying in Sāvattthī, something to be done urgently should arise in Sāketa, and seven relays of chariots would be arranged for him between Sāvattthī and Sāketa.

Then, your reverence, King Pasenadi of Kosala, having left Sāvattḥī by the palace-gate, might mount the first chariot in the relay, and by means of the first chariot in the relay he would reach the second chariot in the relay.

He would dismiss the first chariot in the relay and would mount the second chariot in the relay he would reach the third chariot in the relay ...

the fourth ...

the fifth ...

the sixth ...

and would mount the seventh chariot in the relay, and by means of the seventh chariot in the relay he would reach the palace-gate in Sāketa.

While he was at the palace gate, the chief ministers and his kith and kin would question him thus:

Have you, sire, reached the palace-gate at Sāketa by means of this relay of chariots from Sāvattḥī?' Answering in what way, your reverence, would King Pasenadi of Kosala when answering answer rightly?

"Answering thus, your reverence, would King Pasenadi of Kosala when answering answer rightly: 'Now, as I was staying in Sāvattḥī something to be done urgently arose in Saketa.

For this they had sevenrelays of chariots arranged for me between Sāvattḥī and Sāketa.

Then I, having left Sāvattḥī by the palace-gate, mounted the first chariot in the relay, and by means of the first chariot in the relay reached the second chariot in the relay.

I dismissed the first chariot in the relay and mounted the second chariot in the relay.

By means of the second chariot in the relay I reached the third chariot in the relay ...

the fourth ...

the fifth ...

the sixth ...

By means of the sixth chariot in the relay I reached the seventh chariot in the relay.

I dismissed the sixth chariot in the relay and mounted the seventh chariot in the relay.

By means of the seventh chariot in the relay I reached the palace-gate in Sāketa.

Answering, thus, your reverence, King Pasenadi of Kosala when answering would answer rightly."

"Even so, your reverence, purity of moral habit is of purpose as [193] far as purity of mind;<sup>17</sup> purity of mind is of purpose as far as purity of view; purity of view is of purpose as far as purity through crossing over doubt; purity through crossing over doubt is of purpose as far as purity of knowledge and insight into the Way and what is not the Way; purity of knowledge and insight into the Way and what is not the Way is of purpose as far as purity of knowledge and insight into the course; purity of knowledge and insight into the course is of purpose as far as purity arising from knowledge and insight; purity arising from knowledge and insight is of purpose as far as utter Nibbāna without attachment.

Your reverence, the Brahma-faring under the Lord is lived for the purpose of utter Nibbāna without attachment."

When this had been said, the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son: "What is the venerable one's name? And how do the fellow Brahma-farers know the venerable one?"

"Puṇṇa is my name, your reverence, and the fellow Brahma-farers know me as Mantāṇī's son."

"It is wonderful, your reverence, it is marvelous, your reverence, that the very deep questions were explained step by step by an instructed disciple who knows the Teacher's instruction properly, namely by the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son.

It is profitable for the fellow Brahma-farers, it is well gotten for the fellow Brahma-farers that they have a chance to see, that they have a chance to visit the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son.

Also, if the fellow Brahma-farers, carrying the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son, on a roll of cloth on their heads,<sup>18</sup> should get a chance to see him, should get a chance to visit him, this would be profitable for them and this would be well gotten for them.

It is profitable for us and it is well gotten for us that we have a chance to see, that we have a chance to visit the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son."

When this had been said, the venerable Puṇṇa, Mantāṇī's son, spoke thus to the venerable Sāriputta:

"What is the venerable one's name? And how do the fellow-Brahma-farers know the venerable one?"

"Upatissa is my name, your reverence, and the fellow-Brahma-farers know me as Sāriputta."

[194] "I have been counselling the worthy disciple whom they liken to the Teacher without knowing that it was the venerable Sāriputta.

If I had known that it was the venerable Sāriputta, I would not have spoken at such length.

"It is wonderful, your reverence, it is marvelous, your reverence, that the very deep questions were asked step by step by an instructed disciple who knows the Teacher's instruction properly, namely by the venerable Sāriputta.

It is profitable for the fellow Brahma-farers, it is well gotten for the fellow Brahma-farers that they have a chance to see, that they have a chance to visit the venerable Sāriputta.

Also, if the fellow Brahma-farers, carrying the venerable Sāriputta, on a roll of cloth on their heads, should get a chance to see him, should get a chance to visit him, this would be profitable for them and this would be well gotten for them.

It is profitable for us and it is well gotten for us that we have a chance to see, that we have a chance to visit the venerable Sāriputta."

In this way these two great beings applauded what the other had so well said.<sup>19</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Referred to at MA. i. 92, ii. 246, iii. 6; Vism. 93, 671; SnA. 446; MT. 553.

<sup>2</sup> jātibhūmaka and jātibhūmiyaṃ. Both words occur at A. iii. 366. MA. ii. 135 says jātaṭṭhāna, and instances Kapilavatthu as the jātaṭṭhāna of the Buddha, and hence his jātibhūmi.

<sup>3</sup> asaṅsaṭṭha. See on saṅsaṭṭha viharati B.D. iii. 207. n. 1. MA. ii. 143 gives five kinds of saṅsagga: association through hearing, seeing, conversation, eating with, body.

<sup>4</sup> paññā; MA. ii. 147 says this is worldly and other-worldly knowledge, ñāṇa.

<sup>5</sup> These five "attainments," sampadā, also at Pug. 54; cf. S. i. 139, A. iii. 12 ff.; and as khandha at S. v. 162

<sup>6</sup> This and the following epithets are at S. v. 162 applied to Sāriputta (who had just died); see also Miln. 373.

<sup>7</sup> At A. i. 23, S. ii. 156 called chief of speakers on Dhamma. Mentioned at S. iii. 105. His verse is at Thag. 4.

<sup>8</sup> See B.D. i. 153, n. 4; and cf. Pāc. 14, 15 (Vin. iv. 39 ff.). Also Vin. ii. 211, quoted MA. ii. 152.

<sup>9</sup> MA. ii. 154, "the Jeta grove was crowded after the meal with nobles, brahmans and so on, and it was impossible to find solitude. But the Blind Men's grove was secluded, like a place for striving."

<sup>10</sup> nisīdana see Vin. iii. 207, 232, and B.D. ii. p. 34, n. 1; p. 87, n. 2.

<sup>11</sup> MA. ii. 155 refers to the fourfold purity in moral habit spoken of at length at Vism. (p. 15 f.).

<sup>12</sup> sīla- and diṭṭhi-visuddhi at D. iii. 214; A. i. 95.

<sup>13</sup> Cf. Ud. 60

<sup>14</sup> paṭipadā Quoted MA. ii. 115.

<sup>15</sup> All these seven acts of purity are found also at D. iii. 288 with two added: purification through wisdom and through freedom. See Dial. iii. 262, n. 3.

<sup>16</sup> Cf. S. iv. 48, v. 29; A. i. 44, iv. 74, v. 65. MA. ii. 156 says that in the view of those who assert that attachment is due to a condition, utter Nibbāna with no attachment means utter Nibbāna due to no condition; if the incomposite realm of deathlessness has not arisen on account of a condition, they speak of it as utter Nibbāna without attachment. This is the end, the peak, the goal (niṭṭhā)

17 Whatever is purity of mind, this is the goal (attha), this the peak, this the culmination of purity of moral habit, MA. ii. 157.

18 MA. ii. 158, so that the crowd should see him and be able to question him and hear Dhamma, instead of running about here and there asking where he was.

19 As at Sutta 5.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
3. Tatiya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
3. The Third Division

25. Discourse on Crops

Nivāpa Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattḥī
in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered One," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Monks, a sower does not sow a crop for herds of deer,
thinking:

'Let the herds of deer, enjoying this crop sown by me, flourish in good condition for many a long day.'

Monks, the sower sows the crop for herds of deer
thinking:

'The herds of deer will eat fodder encroaching entranced
on this crop sown by me;
encroaching entranced
and eating the fodder,
they will get elated;
[195] being elated
they will get careless;
being careless
they will become those
to be done to
as one wills
amid this crop.'

[The First Herd of Deer]

Then, monks,
the first herd of deer ate fodder
encroaching entranced
on this crop sown by the sower; encroaching entranced and eating the fodder these got elated;
being elated they got careless;
being careless
they became those
to be done to

as the sower willed
amid that crop.

Thus, monks, this first herd of deer
did not escape
from the sower's mastery.<sup>1</sup>

[The Second Herd of Deer]

Then, monks, the second herd of deer realised:

'The first herd of deer
has eaten fodder
encroaching entranced on that crop
sown by the sower;
these, eating fodder encroaching entranced there
got elated;
being elated
they got careless;
being careless
they became those
to be done to
as the sower willed
amid that crop.

Thus this first herd of deer
did not escape
from the sower's mastery.

■

Suppose that we should all refrain
from eating the crops;
and refraining from enjoyment
where there is fear,
having plunged into a stretch of forest,
should stay there?'

So all these refrained
from eating the crops;
and refraining from enjoyment
where there was fear,
having plunged into a stretch of forest,
they stayed there.

In the last month of the hot weather
the grass and water gave out,
and their bodies became extremely emaciated
so that their strength and energy diminished,
and with diminished strength and energy they came back again to those crops
sown by the sower;
encroaching entranced
they ate the fodder there;
encroaching entranced
and eating the fodder there,
they got elated;
being elated
they got careless;
being careless,
they became those
to be done to
as the sower willed
amid that crop.

Thus, monks, neither did the second herd of deer escape from the sower's mastery.

[The Third Herd of Deer]

Then, monks, the third herd of deer realised:

'The first herd of deer
has eaten fodder

encroaching entranced on that crop
sown by the sower;
these, eating fodder encroaching entranced there
got elated;
being elated
they got careless;
being careless
they became those
to be done to
as the sower willed
amid that crop.

Thus this first herd of deer
did not escape
from the sower's mastery.

■

Then that second herd of deer realised thus:

"The first herd of deer
has eaten fodder
encroaching entranced on that crop
sown by the sower;
these, eating fodder encroaching entranced there
got elated;
being elated
they got careless;
being careless
they became those
to be done to
as the sower willed
amid that crop.

Thus this first herd of deer
did not escape

from the sower's mastery.

Suppose that we should all refrain
from eating the crops;
and refraining from enjoyment
where there is fear,
having plunged into a stretch of forest,
should stay there?"

So all these refrained
from eating the crops;
and refraining from enjoyment
where there was fear,
having plunged into a stretch of forest,
stayed there.

In the last month of the hot weather
the grass and water gave out,
and their bodies became extremely emaciated
so that their strength and energy diminished,
and with diminished strength and energy they came back again to those crops
sown by the sower;
encroaching entranced
they ate the fodder there;
encroaching entranced
and eating the fodder there,
they got elated;
being elated
they got careless;
being careless,
they became those
to be done to
as the sower willed
amid that crop.'

Suppose that we should make a lair<sup>2</sup> near those crops sown by the sower, so that we can eat fodder
not encroaching entranced
on those crops sown by the sower;
and then, having made the lair
and not encroaching entranced
on the crops sown by the sower,
we will not get elated;
not being elated
we will not get careless;
not being careless,
we will not become those
to be done to
as the sower wills
amid that crop.'

These made a lair
near that crop sown by the sower;
having made the lair,
they ate fodder
not encroaching entranced
on the crops sown by the sower;
these, eating fodder
not encroaching entranced there,
did not get elated;
not being elated,
they did not get careless;
not being careless,
they did not become those
to be done to as the sower willed
amid that crop.

■

Thereupon, monks,
it occurred to the sower and his companions:

'This third herd of deer
must be crafty and wily;
this third herd of deer
must have potency<sup>3</sup> and be demons;<sup>4</sup> they eat this crop that was sown,
but we do not know of their comings or goings.

Suppose that we were to enclose
this crop that was sown
with large stakes and snares on all sides?

Then we might see the lair
of the third herd of deer, where they might go to take it!<sup>5</sup>

So these enclosed
that crop that was sown
with large stakes and snares on all sides.

Then, monks, the sower and his companions saw the lair of the third herd of deer,
where they went to take it.

Thus, monks, neither did this third herd of deer escape from the sower's mastery.

[The Fourth Herd of Deer]

Thereupon, monks, the fourth herd of deer realised thus:

'The first herd of deer
has eaten fodder
encroaching entranced on that crop

sown by the sower;
these, eating fodder encroaching entranced there
got elated;
being elated
they got careless;
being careless
they became those
to be done to
as the sower willed
amid that crop.

Thus this first herd of deer
did not escape
from the sower's mastery.

■

Then that second herd of deer realised thus:

"The first herd of deer
has eaten fodder
encroaching entranced on that crop
sown by the sower;
these, eating fodder encroaching entranced there
got elated;
being elated
they got careless;
being careless
they became those
to be done to
as the sower willed
amid that crop.

Thus this first herd of deer
did not escape
from the sower's mastery.

Suppose that we should all refrain
from eating the crops;
and refraining from enjoyment
where there is fear,
having plunged into a stretch of forest,
should stay there?"

So all these refrained
from eating the crops;
and refraining from enjoyment
where there was fear,
having plunged into a stretch of forest,
they stayed there.

In the last month of the hot weather
the grass and water gave out,
and their bodies became extremely emaciated
so that their strength and energy diminished,
and with diminished strength and energy they came back again to those crops
sown by the sower;
encroaching entranced
they ate the fodder there;
encroaching entranced
and eating the fodder there,
they got elated;
being elated
they got careless;
being careless,
they became those
to be done to
as the sower willed
amid that crop.

Suppose that we should make a lair
near those crops sown by the sower,

so that we can eat fodder
not encroaching entranced
on those crops sown by the sower;
and then, having made the lair
and not encroaching entranced
on the crops sown by the sower,
we will not get elated;
not being elated
we will not get careless;
not being careless,
we will not become those
to be done to
as the sower wills
amid that crop."

These made a lair
near that crop sown by the sower;
having made the lair,
they ate fodder
not encroaching entranced
on the crops sown by the sower;
these, eating fodder
not encroaching entranced there,
did not get elated;
not being elated,
they did not get careless;
not being careless,
they did not become those
to be done to as the sower willed
amid that crop.

Thereupon, it occurred to the sower and his companions:

"This third herd of deer
must be crafty and wily;
this third herd of deer

must have potency
and be demons;
they eat this crop that was sown,
but we do not know of their comings or goings.

Suppose that we were to enclose
this crop that was sown
with large stakes and snares on all sides?

Then we might see the lair
of the third herd of deer,
where they might go to take it."

So these enclosed
that crop that was sown
with large stakes and snares on all sides.

Then the sower and his companions
saw the lair of the third herd of deer,
where they went to take it.

Thus neither did this third herd of deer escape from the sower's mastery.'

■

Suppose that we were to make a lair somewhere where the sower and his companions do not come?

Having made our lair there, we might eat fodder
not encroaching entranced
on that crop sown by the sower;
eating fodder
not encroaching entranced,
we will not get elated;

not being elated,
we will not get careless;
not being careless,
[198] we will not become those to be done to as the sower wills
amid that crop.'

These made a lair
somewhere where the sower and his companions
did not come;
having made a lair there,
they ate fodder
not encroaching entranced
on that crop sown by the sower;
these eating fodder
not encroaching entranced there,
did not get elated;
not being elated,
they did not get careless;
not being careless,
they did not become those
to be done to as the sower willed
amid that crop.

Thereupon, monks, it occurred to the sower and his companions:

'This fourth herd of deer
must be crafty and wily;
this fourth herd of deer
must have potency and be demons;
they eat this crop that was sown,
but we do not know of their comings or goings.

Suppose that we were to enclose
this crop that was sown
with large stakes and snares on all sides?

Then we might see the lair
of the fourth herd of deer,
where they might go to take it.'

So these enclosed that crop that was sown
with large stakes and snares on all sides.

But, monks, neither the sower nor his companions saw the lair of this fourth herd of deer,
where they might go to take it.

Thereupon, monks, it occurred to the sower and his companions:

'If we beat up this fourth herd of deer,
these, beaten up,
will beat up others;
these, beaten up,
will beat up others,
and so all the deer
will neglect this crop that was sown.

Suppose that we were not to interfere with the fourth herd of deer?'

So, monks, neither the sower nor his companions interfered with the fourth herd of deer.

Thus, monks, this fourth herd of deer escaped the sower's mastery.

---

Monks, this parable was made by me to illustrate the meaning.

And just this is the meaning here:

'The crop,' monks,
this is a synonym for the five strands of sense-pleasures.

'The sower,' monks,
this is a name for Māra, the Evil One.

'The sower's companions,' monks, this is a synonym for Māra's companions.

'The herds of deer,' monks, this is a synonym for recluses and brahmans.

[The First Kind of Recluse and Brahman]

Where, monks, the first kind of recluse and brahman ate fodder encroaching entranced
on that crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world -
these, eating the fodder
and encroaching entranced there,
got elated;
being elated,
they got careless;
being careless,
they became those
to be done to by Māra as he willed
amid that crop -
material things of the world.

Thus, monks, the first kind of recluses and brahmans did not escape from Māra's mastery.

[199] I, monks, say that this first kind of recluse and brahman is like that first herd of deer in the parable.

[The Second Kind of Recluse and Brahman]

Then, monks, the second kind of recluse and brahman realised:

'That first kind of recluses and brahmans
ate fodder encroaching entranced
on a crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;
these, eating the fodder
and encroaching entranced there,
got elated;
being elated,
they got careless;
being careless,
they became those
to be done to by Māra as he willed
amid that crop -
material things of the world.'

Suppose that we should all refrain from eating the crop -
material things of the world;
and refraining from enjoyment
where there is fear,
having plunged into a stretch of forest,
should stay there?'

All these refrained from eating the crop -
material things of the world;
refraining from enjoyment
where there was fear,
having plunged into a stretch of forest,
they stayed there.

There these became those feeding<sup>6</sup> on potherbs they became those feeding on millet they became those feeding on rice
they became those feeding on snippets of leather they became those feeding on water-plants they became those feeding on the red powder of rice husks they became those feeding on the discarded scum of rice on the boil they became those feeding on the flour of oil-seeds they became those feeding on grass they became those feeding on cowdung.

they became those who subsisted
on forest roots and fruits,
eating the fruits that had fallen.

In the last month of the hot weather,
when the grass and water dried up,
their bodies became extremely emaciated;
because their bodies were extremely emaciated
their strength and energy diminished;
because their strength and energy diminished,
freedom of mind diminished;
because freedom of mind diminished,
they went back again
to that very crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world.

They ate fodder
encroaching entranced there;
eating fodder encroaching entranced there,
they got elated;
being elated
they got careless;
being careless,
they became those
to be done to by Māra as he willed

amid that crop -
those material things of the world.

Thus, monks, neither did this second kind of recluse and brahman escape from Māra's mastery.

I, monks, say that this second kind of recluse and brahman is like that second herd of deer in that parable.

[The Third Kind of Recluse and Brahman]

Then, monks, the third kind of recluse and brahman realised:

'That first kind of recluses and brahmans
ate fodder encroaching entranced
on a crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;
these, eating the fodder
and encroaching entranced there,
got elated;
being elated,
they got careless;
being careless,
they became those
to be done to by Māra as he willed
amid that crop -
material things of the world.

Then the second kind of recluse and brahman realised:

"That first kind of recluses and brahmans
ate fodder en- [200] croaching entranced
on a crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;
these, eating the fodder
and encroaching entranced there,
got elated;

being elated,
they got careless;
being careless,
they became those
to be done to by Māra as he willed
amid that crop -
material things of the world.'

Suppose that we should all refrain
from eating the crop -
material things of the world;
and refraining from enjoyment
where there is fear,
having plunged into a stretch of forest,
should stay there?"

All these refrained from eating the crop -
material things of the world;
refraining from enjoyment
where there was fear,
having plunged into a stretch of forest,
they stayed there.

There these became those feeding on potherbs
they became those feeding on millet
they became those feeding on rice
they became those feeding on snippets of leather
they became those feeding on water-plants
they became those feeding on the red powder of rice husks
they became those feeding on the discarded scum of rice on the boil
they became those feeding on the flour of oil-seeds
they became those feeding on grass
they became those feeding on cowdung.

they became those who subsisted
on forest roots and fruits,

eating the fruits that had fallen.

In the last month of the hot weather,
when the grass and water dried up,
their bodies became extremely emaciated;
because their bodies were extremely emaciated
their strength and energy diminished;
because their strength and energy diminished,
freedom of mind diminished;
because freedom of mind diminished,
they went back again
to that very crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world.

They ate fodder
encroaching entranced there;
eating fodder encroaching entranced there,
they got elated;
being elated
they got careless;
being careless,
they became those
to be done to by Māra as he willed
amid that crop -
those material things of the world.

Thus neither did this second kind of recluse and brahman escape from Māra's mastery.

■

Suppose that we should make a lair
near that crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;
having made a lair there,
we will eat fodder

not encroaching entranced
on that crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;
eating fodder not encroaching entranced,
we will not get elated;
not being elated,
we will not get careless;
not being careless,
we will not become those
to be done to by Māra as he wills amid that crop-material things of the world.'

These made a lair near that crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;
having made a lair there,
they ate fodder
not encroaching entranced on that crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;
these, eating fodder not encroaching entranced there,
did not get elated;
not being elated,
they did not get careless;
not being careless,
they did not become those
to be done to by Māra as he willed
amid that crop -
material things of the world.

Nevertheless they came to be of views like this:
that the world is eternal,
also that the world is not eternal;
and that the world is an ending thing,
also that the world is not an ending thing;
and that the life principle and the body are the same,
also that the life principle and the body are different;
and that the Tathāgata becomes after dying,

also that the Tathāgata does not become after dying, also that the Tathāgata both becomes and does not become after dying, also that the Tathāgata neither becomes nor does not become after dying.

Thus, monks, neither did this third kind of recluse and brahman
escape from Māra's mastery.

I, monks, say that this third kind of recluse and brahman is like that third herd of deer in the parable.

[The Fourth Kind of Recluse and Brahman]

Then, monks, the fourth kind of recluse and brahman realised thus:

'That first kind of recluses and brahmans
ate fodder encroaching entranced
on a crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;
these, eating the fodder
and encroaching entranced there,
got elated;
being elated,
they got careless;
being careless,
they became those
to be done to by Māra as he willed
amid that crop -
material things of the world.

■

Then the second kind of recluse and brahman realised:

"That first kind of recluses and brahmans
ate fodder encroaching entranced
on a crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;

these, eating the fodder
and encroaching entranced there,
got elated;
being elated,
they got careless;
being careless,
they became those
to be done to by Māra as he willed
amid that crop -
material things of the world.'

Suppose that we should all refrain
from eating the crop -
material things of the world;
and refraining from enjoyment
where there is fear,
having plunged into a stretch of forest,
should stay there?"

All these refrained from eating the crop -
material things of the world;
refraining from enjoyment
where there was fear,
having plunged into a stretch of forest,
they stayed there.

There these became those feeding on potherbs
they became those feeding on millet
they became those feeding on rice
they became those feeding on snippets of leather
they became those feeding on water-plants
they became those feeding on the red powder of rice husks
they became those feeding on the discarded scum of rice on the boil
they became those feeding on the flour of oil-seeds
they became those feeding on grass
they became those feeding on cowdung.

they became those who subsisted
on forest roots and fruits,
eating the fruits that had fallen.

In the last month of the hot weather,
when the grass and water dried up,
their bodies became extremely emaciated;
because their bodies were extremely emaciated
their strength and energy diminished;
because their strength and energy diminished,
freedom of mind diminished;
because freedom of mind diminished,
they went back again
to that very crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world.

They ate fodder
encroaching entranced there;
eating fodder encroaching entranced there,
they got elated;
being elated
they got careless;
being careless,
they became those
to be done to by Māra as he willed
amid that crop -
those material things of the world.

Thus neither did this second kind of recluse and brahman escape from Māra's mastery.

■

Then the third kind of recluse and brahman realised:

'That first kind of recluses and brahmans
ate fodder encroaching entranced

on a crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;
these, eating the fodder
and encroaching entranced there,
got elated;
being elated,
they got careless;
being careless,
they became those
to be done to by Māra as he willed
amid that crop -
material things of the world.

Then the second kind of recluse and brahman realised:

"That first kind of recluses and brahmans
ate fodder encroaching entranced
on a crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;
these, eating the fodder
and encroaching entranced there,
got elated;
being elated,
they got careless;
being careless,
they became those
to be done to by Māra as he willed
amid that crop -
material things of the world.'

Suppose that we should all refrain
from eating the crop -
material things of the world;
and refraining from enjoyment
where there is fear,

having plunged into a stretch of forest,
should stay there?"

All these refrained from eating the crop -
material things of the world;
refraining from enjoyment
where there was fear,
having plunged into a stretch of forest,
they stayed there.

There these became those feeding on potherbs
they became those feeding on millet
they became those feeding on rice
they became those feeding on snippets of leather
they became those feeding on water-plants
they became those feeding on the red powder of rice husks
they became those feeding on the discarded scum of rice on the boil
they became those feeding on the flour of oil-seeds
they became those feeding on grass
they became those feeding on cowdung.

they became those who subsisted
on forest roots and fruits,
eating the fruits that had fallen.

In the last month of the hot weather,
when the grass and water dried up,
their bodies became extremely emaciated;
because their bodies were extremely emaciated
their strength and energy diminished;
because their strength and energy diminished,
freedom of mind diminished;
because freedom of mind diminished,
they went back again
to that very crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world.

They ate fodder
encroaching entranced there;
eating fodder encroaching entranced there,
they got elated;
being elated
they got careless;
being careless,
they became those
to be done to by Māra as he willed
amid that crop -
those material things of the world.

Thus neither did this second kind of recluse and brahman escape from Māra's mastery.

■

Suppose that we should make a lair
near that crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;
having made a lair there,
we will eat fodder
not encroaching entranced
on that crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;
eating fodder not encroaching entranced,
we will not get elated;
not being elated,
we will not get careless;
not being careless,
we will not become those
to be done to by Māra as he wills
amid that crop-material things of the world.'

These made a lair near that crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;

having made a lair there,
they ate fodder
not encroaching entranced on that crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;
these, eating fodder not encroaching entranced there,
did not get elated;
not being elated,
they did not get careless;
not being careless,
they did not become those
to be done to by Māra as he willed
amid that crop -
material things of the world.

Nevertheless they came to be of views like this:
that the world is eternal,
also that the world is not eternal;
and that the world is an ending thing,
also that the world is not an ending thing;
and that the life principle and the body are the same,
also that the life principle and the body are different;
and that the Tathāgata becomes after dying,
also that the Tathāgata does not become after dying,
also that the Tathāgata both becomes and does not become after dying, also that the Tathāgata neither becomes nor does not become after dying.

Thus neither did this third kind of recluse and brahman
escape from Māra's mastery.'

Suppose that we should make a lair where Māra
and Māra's companions
do not come;
having made that lair,
we can eat fodder
not encroaching entranced

on that crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world;
eating fodder not encroaching entranced,
we will not get elated;
not being elated
we will not get careless,
not being careless
we will not become those
to be done to by Māra as he wills
amid that crop -
material things of the world.'

These made a lair where Māra and Māra's companions
did not come;
having made a lair there,
they ate fodder
not encroaching entranced
on that crop sown by Māra -
material things of the world.

These, eating fodder
not encroaching entranced there,
did not get elated;
not being elated,
they did not get careless;
not being careless,
they did not become those
to be done to by Māra as he willed
amid that crop -
material things of the world.

Thus, monks, the fourth kind of recluses and brahmans escaped from Māra's mastery.

I, monks, say that the fourth kind of recluse and brahman is like that fourth herd of deer in the parable.

And how, monks, is there non-entry<sup>7</sup> of Māra and Māra's companions?

Herein, monks, a monk,
aloof from the pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
enters on
and abides in
the first meditation
which is accompanied by initial thought
and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful.

[202] Monks, this kind of monk is called one<sup>8</sup> who has put a darkness round Māra,<sup>9</sup>
and who,
having blotted out Māra's vision
so that it has no range,
goes unseen by the Evil One.

And again, monks, a monk,
by allaying initial and discursive thought,
his mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters on
and abides in
the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration
and is rapturous and joyful.

Monks, this kind of monk is called
one who has put a darkness round Māra,
and who,
having blotted out Māra's vision
so that it has no range,
goes unseen by the Evil One.

And again, monks, a monk,
by the fading out of rapture,
dwells with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious,
and experiences in his person
that joy of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,'
and he enters on
and abides in
the third meditation.

Monks, this kind of monk is called
one who has put a darkness round Māra,
and who,
having blotted out Māra's vision
so that it has no range,
goes unseen by the Evil One.

And again, monks, a monk
by getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,
enters on
and abides in
the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

Monks, this kind of monk is called
one who has put a darkness round Māra,
and who,
having blotted out Māra's vision
so that it has no range,
goes unseen by the Evil One.

And again, monks, a monk
by passing quite beyond perception of material shapes,
by the going down of perception of sensory reactions,
by not attending to perception of variety,
thinking:
'Ether is unending,'
enters on
and abides in the plane of infinite ether.

Monks, this kind of monk is called
one who has put a darkness round Māra,
and who,
having blotted out Māra's vision
so that it has no range,
goes unseen by the Evil One.

And again, monks, a monk
by passing quite beyond the plane of infinite ether,
thinking:
'Consciousness is unending,'
enters on
and abides in
the plane of infinite consciousness.

Monks, this kind of monk is called
one who has put a darkness round Māra,
and who,
having blotted out Māra's vision

so that it has no range,
goes unseen by the Evil One.

And again, monks, a monk,
by passing quite beyond the plane of infinite consciousness,
thinking:
'There is not anything,'
enters on
and abides in
the plane of no-thing.

Monks, this kind of monk is called
one who has put a darkness round Māra,
and who,
having blotted out Māra's vision
so that it has no range,
goes unseen by the Evil One.

And again, monks, a monk,
by passing quite beyond the plane of no-thing,
enters on
and abides in
the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception.

Monks, this kind of monk is called
one who has put a darkness round Māra,
and who,
having blotted out Māra's vision
so that it has no range,
goes unseen by the Evil One.

[203] And again, monks, a monk,
by passing quite beyond the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception,
enters on
and abides in
the stopping of perception and feeling;

and having seen by intuitive wisdom,
his cankers are utterly destroyed.

Monks, this kind of monk is called
one who has put a darkness round Māra,
and who,
having blotted out Māra's vision
so that it has no range,
goes unseen by the Evil One
he has crossed over the entanglement in the world."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse on Crops:
the Fifth

---

<sup>1</sup> iddhānubhāva. MA. ii. 160 says here iddhi and ānvbhāva are just vasībhāva.

<sup>2</sup> Or, should lie down in an abode, āsayam kappeyyāma. MA. ii. 161 says that the deer think the hunter will not be on the watch the whole time, and when he is away they can go and eat among the crops.

<sup>3</sup> iddhimantā.

<sup>4</sup> parajanā; "they are yakkhas, not a herd of deer," MA. ii. 161. Cf. Dīgha parajana yakkha at M. i. 210.

<sup>5</sup> The sower (or hunter = Death) had an idea, according to MA. ii. 161, that the deer did not go far away but lay down near the crops. In yattha te gāham gaccheyyūm the gāha probably refers to the place among the stakes that they go to; they shake it, and the watchers see.

<sup>6</sup> As at M. i. 78, D. i. 166.

<sup>7</sup> agati, translated above "(where, yattha) Māra does not come." It is non-admission, where he does not come in.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. M. i. 174; also at A. iv. 434 but in another connection.

<sup>9</sup> andham akāsi Māraṃ or, "makes Māra blind." Comy. explains na Mārassa akkhīni bhindi ... Māro passituṃ na sakkoti. Cf. G.S. iv. 291, n. 1.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
3. Tatiya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
3. The Third Division

26. Discourse on the Ariyan Quest

Ariya Pariyesana Sutta

Translated from the Pali by I.B. Horner, M.A.
Associate of Newham College, Cambridge
First Published in 1954

Copyright The Pali Text Society
Commercial Rights Reserved

For details see Terms of Use.

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time<sup>2</sup> the Lord was staying near Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then the Lord, having dressed early, taking his bowl and robe, entered Sāvattḥī for almsfood.

Then a number of monks approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, they spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda: "It is long since we, reverend Ānanda, hear a talk on dhamma face-to-face with the Lord. It is good if we, reverend Ānanda, got a chance of hearing a talk on dhamma face-to-face with the Lord."

"Well then, the venerable ones should go to the hermitage of the brahman Rāmaka, and probably you would get a chance of hearing a talk on dhamma face-to-face with the Lord."

"Yes, your reverence," these monks answered the venerable Ānanda in assent.

Then the Lord, having walked for alms in Sāvathī, returning from (the quest for) alms, after the meal, said to the venerable Ānanda:

"We will go along, Ānanda, and approach the Eastern Park, the palace of Migāra's mother, for the day sojourn."

"Very well, Lord," the venerable Ānanda answered the Lord in [204] assent.

[161] Then the Lord together with the venerable Ānanda approached the Eastern Park, the palace of Migāra's mother for the day-sojourn.

Then the Lord, emerging from seclusion towards evening, said to the venerable Ānanda:

"We will go along, Ānanda, and approach the Eastern Porch<sup>3</sup> to bathe our limbs."

"Very well, Lord," the venerable Ānanda answered the Lord in assent.

Then the Lord, together with the venerable Ānanda, approached the Eastern Porch to bathe their limbs.

When he had bathed his limbs at the Eastern Porch and had come out (of the water), he stood in a single robe drying his limbs.<sup>4</sup>

Then the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord:

"Lord, this hermitage of the brahman Rāmaka is not far; the hermitage of the brahman Rāmaka is lovely, Lord; the hermitage of the brahman Rāmaka is beautiful, Lord. It were good, Lord, if out of compassion<sup>5</sup> the Lord were to approach the hermitage of the brahman Rāmaka."

The Lord consented by becoming silent.

Then the Lord approached the hermitage of the brahman Rāmaka. At that time a number of monks came to be sitting down and talking dhamma in the hermitage of the brahman Rāmaka.

Then the Lord stood outside the porch waiting for the talk to finish. Then the Lord, knowing that the talk had finished, coughed and knocked on the bar of the door;<sup>6</sup> those monks opened the door to the Lord.<sup>7</sup> Then the Lord, having entered the hermitage [205] of the brahman Rāmaka, sat down on the appointed seat.<sup>8</sup> As he was sitting down, the Lord said to the monks:

"As you were sitting down just now, what was your talk about, monks? What was your talk that was interrupted?"

"Lord, our talk that was interrupted was about the Lord himself; then he arrived."

"It were good, monks, that when young men of family such as you who have gone forth from home into homelessness out of faith ate gathered together that you talk about dhamma. When you are gathered together, monks, there are two things to be done: either talk about dhamma or the Ariyan silence.<sup>9</sup>

These, monks, are the two quests: the Ariyan quest and the unAriyan quest.

And what, monks, is the unAriyan quest?<sup>10</sup>

As to this, monks, someone, liable to birth because of self, seeks what is likewise liable to birth; being liable to ageing because of self, seeks what is likewise liable to ageing; being liable to decay because of self ...

being liable to dying because of self ...
being liable to sorrow because of self ... being liable to stain because of self, seeks what is likewise liable to stain.

And what, monks, would you say is liable to birth?

Sons and wife, monks, are liable to birth, women-slaves and men-slaves are liable to birth, goats and sheep are liable to birth, cocks and swine are liable to birth, elephants, cows, horses and mares are liable to birth, gold and silver are liable to birth.

These attachments, monks, are liable to birth; yet this (man), enslaved, infatuated, addicted, <sup>11</sup> being liable to birth because of self, seeks what is likewise liable to birth.

And what, monks, would you say is liable to ageing?

Sons and wife, monks, are liable to ageing,
women-slaves and men-slaves ...
[206] goats and sheep ...
cocks and swine ...
elephants, cows, horses and mares ...
gold and silver are liable to ageing.

These attachments, monks, are liable to ageing;
yet this (man), enslaved, infatuated, addicted, being liable to ageing because of self, seeks what is likewise liable to ageing.

And what, monks, would you say is liable to disease?

Sons and wife, monks, are liable to disease,
women-slaves and men-slaves ...

goats and sheep ...
cocks and swine ...
elephants, cows, horses and mares are liable to disease.<sup>12</sup>

These attachments, monks, are liable to disease ... seeks what is likewise liable to disease.

And, what, monks, would you say is liable to dying?

Sons and wife, monks, are liable to dying,
women-slaves and men-slaves ...
goats and sheep ...
cocks and swine ...
elephants, cows, horses and mares are liable to dying.

These attachments, monks, are liable to dying ... seeks what is likewise liable to dying.

And what, monks, would you say is liable to sorrow?

Sons and wife, monks, are liable to sorrow,
women-slaves and men-slaves ...
goats and sheep ...
cocks and swine ...
elephants, cows, horses and mares are liable to sorrow.

These attachments, monks, are liable to sorrow ... seeks what is likewise liable to sorrow.

And what, monks, do you say is liable to stain?

Sons and wife, monks, are liable to stain,
women-slaves and men-slaves ...
goats and sheep ...
cocks and swine ...
elephants, cows, horses and mares ...
gold and silver are liable to stain.

These attachments, monks, are liable to stain; yet this (man), enslaved, infatuated, addicted, being liable to stain because of self, seeks what is likewise liable to stain.

This, monks, is the unAriyan quest.

And what, monks, is the Ariyan quest?

As to this, monks, someone, being liable to birth because of self, having known the peril in what is likewise liable to birth, seeks the unborn, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna; being liable to ageing because of self, having known the peril in what is likewise liable to ageing, seeks the unageing, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna; being liable to decay because of self, having known the peril in what is likewise liable to decay, seeks the undecaying, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna; being liable to dying because of self, having known the peril in what is likewise liable to dying, seeks the undying, the uttermost security from the bonds, [207] Nibbāna; being liable to sorrow because of self, having known the peril in what is likewise liable to sorrow, seeks the unsorrowing, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna;
being liable to stain because of self, having known the peril in what is likewise liable to stain, seeks the stainless, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna.

This, monks, is the Ariyan quest.

And I too, monks, before awakening, while I was still the bodhisatta, not fully awakened, being liable to birth because of self, sought what was likewise liable to birth; being liable to ageing because of self, sought what was likewise liable to ageing; being liable to disease because of self ...
being liable to dying because of self ...

being liable to sorrow because of self ...

being liable to stain because of self, sought what was likewise liable to stain.

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'Why do I, liable to birth because of self, seek what is likewise liable to birth; being liable to ageing ...

being liable to stain because of self, seek what is likewise liable to stain?

Suppose that I, (although) being liable to birth because of self, having known the peril in what is likewise liable to birth, should seek the unborn, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna?

Being liable to ageing because of self should seek the unageing. ...

Being liable decay because of self should seek the undecaying. ...

Being liable to dying because of self ...

should seek the undying. ...

Being liable to sorrow because of self ... should seek the unsorrowing. ...

Being liable to stain because of self, having known the peril in what is likewise liable to stain, should seek the stainless, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna?

Then I, monks, after a time,<sup>13</sup> being young, my hair coal-black, possessed of radiant<sup>14</sup> youth, in the prime of my life — although my unwilling parents wept and wailed — having cut off my hair and beard, having put on yellow robes, went forth from home into homelessness.

I, being gone forth thus, a quester for whatever is good, searching for the incomparable, matchless path to peace, approached Āḷāra the Kālāma; having approached, I spoke thus to Āḷāra the Kālāma:

'I, reverend Kālāma, want to fare the Brahmā-faring in this dhamma and discipline.'

This said, monks, Āḷāra the Kālāma spoke thus to me:

'Let the venerable one proceed;<sup>15</sup> this dhamma is such that an intelligent man, having soon realised super- [208] knowledge for himself (as learnt from) his own teacher, may enter on and abide in it.'

So I, monks, very soon, very quickly, mastered that dhamma.

I, monks, as far as mere lip service, mere repetition were concerned, spoke the doctrine of knowledge,<sup>16</sup> and the doctrine of the elders,<sup>17</sup> and I claimed — I as well as others — that 'I know, I see.'

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'But Āḷāra the Kālāma does not merely proclaim this dhamma simply out of faith: Having realised super-knowledge for myself, entering on it, I am abiding therein.

For surely Āḷāra the Kālāma proceeds knowing, seeing this dhamma.'

Then did I, monks, approach Āḷāra the Kālāma; having approached, I spoke thus to Āḷāra the Kālāma:

'To what extent do you, reverend Kālāma, having realised super-knowledge for yourself, entering thereon, proclaim this dhamma?'

When this had been said, monks, Āḷāra the Kālāma proclaimed the plane of no-thing.

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'It is not only Āḷāra the Kālāma who has faith, I too have faith.

It is not only Āḷāra the Kālāma who has energy, I too have energy.

It is not only Āḷāra the Kālāma who has mindfulness, I too have mindfulness.

It is not only Āḷāra the Kālāma who has concentration, I too have concentration.

It is not only Āḷāra the Kālāma who has intuitive wisdom, I too have intuitive wisdom.

Suppose now that I should strive for the realisation of that dhamma which Āḷāra the Kālāma proclaims:

'Having realised super-knowledge for myself, entering on it I am abiding therein?'

So I, monks, very soon, very quickly, having realised super-knowledge for myself, entering on that dhamma, abided therein.

Then I, monks, approached Āḷāra the Kālāma; having approached, I spoke thus to Āḷāra the Kālāma:

'Is it to this extent that you, reverend Kalama, proclaim this dhamma, entering on it, having realised it by your own super-knowledge?'

'It is to this extent that I, your reverence, proclaim this dhamma, entering on it, having realised it by my own super-knowledge.'

'I too, your reverence, having realised this dhamma by my own super-knowledge, entering on it am abiding in it.'

'It is profitable for us, it is well gotten for us, your reverence, that we see a fellow Brahmā-farer such as the venerable one.

This dhamma that I, entering on, proclaim, having realised it by my own super-knowledge, is the dhamma that you, entering on, are abiding in, [209] having realised it by your own super-knowledge;

the dhamma that you, entering on, are abiding in, having realised it by your own super-knowledge, is the dhamma that I, entering on, proclaim, having realised it by my own super-knowledge.

The dhamma that I know, this is the dhamma that you know.

The dhamma that you know, this is the dhamma that I know.

As I am, so are you;

as you are, so am I.

Come now, your reverence,

being just the two of us,

let us look after this group.'

In this way, monks, did Āḷāra the Kālāma, being my teacher, set me — the pupil — on the same level as himself and honoured me with the highest honour.

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'This dhamma does not conduce to disregard nor to dispassion nor to stopping nor to tranquillity nor to super-knowledge nor to awakening nor to Nibbāna, but only as far as reaching the plane of no-thing.'

So I, monks, not getting enough from this dhamma, disregarded and turned away from this dhamma.

Then I, monks, a quester for whatever is good, searching for the incomparable, matchless path to peace, approached Uddaka, Rāma's son; having approached, I spoke thus to Uddaka, Rāma's son:

'I, your reverence, want to fare the Brahmā-faring in this dhamma and discipline.'

This said, monks, Uddaka, Rāma's son, spoke thus to me:

'Let the venerable one proceed; this dhamma is such that an intelligent man, having soon realised super-knowledge for himself, (as learnt from) his own teacher, may enter on and abide in it.'

So I, monks, very soon, very quickly, mastered that dhamma. I, monks, as far as mere lip service, mere repetition were concerned, spoke the doctrine of knowledge and the doctrine of the elders, and I claimed — I as well as others — that 'I know, I see.'

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'But Uddahka, Rāma's son, does not merely proclaim this dhamma simply out of faith: Having realised super-knowledge for myself, entering on it, I am abiding in it.

For surely Uddaka, Rāma's son, proceeds knowing and seeing this dhamma.'

Then did I, monks, approach Uddaka, Rāma's; having approached, I spoke thus to Uddaka, Rāma's son:

'To what extent do you, reverend Rāma, having realised super-knowledge for yourself, entering thereon proclaim this dhamma?'

When this had been said, monks, Uddaka, Rāma's son, proclaimed the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception.

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'It is not only Rāma who has faith, I too have faith.

It is not only Rāma who has energy, I too have energy.

It is not only Rāma who has mindfulness, I too have mindfulness.

It is not only Rāma who has concentration, I too have concentration.

It is not [210] only Rāma who has intuitive wisdom, I too have intuitive wisdom.

Suppose now that I should strive for the realisation of that dhamma which Rāma proclaims:

'Having realised super-knowledge for myself, entering on it I am abiding in it?'

So I, monks, very soon, very quickly, having realised super-knowledge for myself, entering on that dhamma, abided therein.

Then I, monks, approached Uddaka, Rāma's son; having approached, I spoke thus to Uddaka, Rāma's son:

'Is it to this extent that you, reverend Rāma, proclaim this dhamma, entering on it, having realised it by your own super-knowledge?'

'It is to this extent that I, your reverence, proclaim this dhamma, entering on it, having realised it by my own super-knowledge.'

'I too, your reverence, having realised this dhamma by my own super-knowledge, entering on it am abiding in it.'

'It is profitable for us, it is well gotten by us, your reverence, that we see a fellow-Brahmā-farer such as the venerable one.

This dhamma that I, entering on, proclaim, having realised it by my own super-knowledge, is the dhamma that you, entering on, are abiding in, having realised it by your own super-knowledge;
the dhamma that you, entering on, are abiding in, having realised it by your own super-knowledge, is the dhamma that I, entering on, proclaim, having realised it by my own super-knowledge.

The dhamma that I know, this is the dhamma that you know.

That dhamma that you know, this is the dhamma that I know.

As I am, so are you;

as you are, so am I.

Come now, your reverence,

being just the two of us,

let us look after this group.

In this way, monks, did Uddaka, Rāma's son, being my teacher, set me — the pupil — on the same level as himself and honoured me with the highest honour.

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'This dhamma does not conduce to disregard nor to dispassion nor to stopping nor to tranquillity nor to super-knowledge nor to awakening nor to Nibbāna, but only as far as reaching the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception.'

So I, monks, not getting enough from this dhamma, disregarded and turned away from this dhamma.

Then I, monks, a quester for whatever is good, searching for the incomparable, matchless path to peace, walking on tour through Magadha in due course arrived at Uruvela, the camp township.

There I saw a delightful stretch of land and a lovely woodland grove, and a clear flowing river<sup>18</sup> with a delightful ford, and a village for support nearby.

It occurred to me, monks:

'Indeed it is a delightful stretch of land, and the woodland grove is lovely, and the river flows clear with a delightful ford, and there is a village for support nearby.

Indeed this does well for the striving of a young man set on striving.'

So I, monks, sat down just there, thinking:

'Indeed this does well for striving.'

"I, monks, being liable to birth because of self, having known the peril in what is liable to birth, seeking the unborn, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna — won the unborn, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna;

being liable to ageing because of self, having known the peril in what is liable to ageing, seeking the unageing, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna — won the unageing, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna;

being liable to decay because of self, having known the peril in what is liable to decay, seeking the undecaying, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna — won the undecaying, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna;

being liable to dying because of self, having known the peril in what is liable to dying, seeking the undying, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna — won the undying, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna;

being liable to sorrow because of self, having known the peril in what is liable to sorrow, seeking the unsorrowing, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna — won the unsorrowing, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna;

being liable to stain because of self, having known the peril in what is liable to stain, seeking the stainless, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna — won the stainless, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna.

Knowledge and vision arose in me:
unshakable is freedom for me,
this is the last birth,
there is not now again-becoming.

It occurred to me, monks:

'This dhamma,<sup>19</sup> won to by me is deep, difficult to see, difficult to understand, tranquil, excellent, beyond dialectic, subtle, intelligible to the learned.

But this is a creation delighting in sensual pleasure, delighted by sensual pleasure, rejoicing in sensual pleasure.

So that for a creation delighting in sensual pleasure, delighted by sensual pleasure, rejoicing in sensual pleasure, this were a matter difficult to see, that is to say causal uprising by way of condition.

This too were a matter difficult to see, that is to say the tranquillising of all the activities, the renunciation of all attachment,
the destruction of [212] craving, dispassion,
stopping,
Nibbāna.

But if I were to teach dhamma and others were not to understand me, that would be a weariness to me, that would be a vexation to me.

Moreover, monks, these verses not heard before in the past spontaneously occurred to me:

This that through many toils I've won — Enough! why should I make it known?
By folk with lust and hate consumed
This dhamma is not understood.

Leading on against the stream,
Deep, subtle, difficult to see, delicate,

Unseen 'twill be by passion's slaves Cloaked in the murk of ignorance.

In such wise, as I was pondering, monks, my mind inclined to little effort and not teaching dhamma.

Then, monks, it occurred to Brahmā Sahampati who knew with his mind the reasoning in my mind:

'Alas, the world is lost, alas, the world is destroyed, inasmuch as the mind of the Tathāgata, the perfected one, the fully awakened one, inclines to little effort and not to teaching dhamma.'

Then, monks, as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm, or might bend back his outstretched arm, even so did Brahmā Sahampati, vanishing from the Brahmā-world, become manifest before me.

Then, monks, Brahmā Sahampati, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having saluted me with joined palms, spoke thus to me:

'Lord, let the Lord teach dhamma, let the well-farer teach dhamma; there are beings with little dust in their eyes who;
not hearing dhamma, are decaying, (but if) they are learners of dhamma they will grow.'

Thus spoke Brahmā Sahampati to me, monks; having said this, he further spoke thus:

'There has appeared in Magadha before thee
An unclean dhamma by (minds) with stains devised.
Open this door of deathlessness; let them hear Dhamma awakened to by the stainless one.

As on a crag on crest of mountain standing
A man might watch the people all around,
E'en so do thou, O Wisdom fair, ascending, O Seer of all, the terraced heights of truth, Look down, from grief released, upon the peoples Sunken in grief, oppressed with birth and age.

[213] Arise, thou hero! Conqueror in the battle!
Thou leader of the caravan, without a debt!
Walk in the world. Let the Blessed One Teach dhamma; they who learn will grow.'

And then I, monks, having understood Brahmā's entreaty, out of compassion surveyed the world with the eye of an Awakened One.
As I, monks, was surveying the world with the eye of an Awakened One,
I saw beings with little dust in their eyes,
with much dust in their eyes,
with acute faculties
with dull faculties,
of good dispositions,
of bad dispositions,
docile,
indocile,
few seeing from fear
sins and the world beyond.

Even as in a pond of blue lotuses or in a pond of red lotuses or in a pond of white lotuses, a few red and blue and white lotuses are born in the water,
grow in the water,
do not rise above the water but thrive while altogether immersed;
a few blue or red or white lotuses
are born in the water,

grow in the water
and reach the surface of the water;
a few blue or red or white lotuses
are born in the water,
grow in the water
and stand rising out of the water, undefiled by the water;
even so did I, monks, surveying the world with the eye of an Awakened One, see beings with little dust in their eyes,
with much dust in their eyes,
with acute faculties,
with dull faculties,
of good dispositions,
of bad dispositions,
docile,
indocile,
few seeing from fear
sins and the world beyond.

Then I, monks, addressed Brahmā Sahampati in verses:

Opened for those who hear are the doors of the Deathless, Brahmā, Let them give forth their faith;
Thinking of useless fatigue, Brahmā, I have not preached dhamma Sublime and excellent for men.

Then, monks, Brahmā Sahampati, thinking:
'The opportunity was made by me for the Lord to teach dhamma,' having greeted me, keeping his right side towards me, vanished then and there.

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'Now, to whom should I first teach this dhamma?
Who will understand this dhamma quickly?'

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'Indeed this Āḷāra the Kālāma is learned, experienced, wise, and for a long time has had little dust in his eyes.

Suppose that I were to teach dhamma first to Āḷāra the Kālāma he will understand this dhamma quickly.

Then devatās having approached me, spoke thus:

Lord, Āḷāra the Kālāma passed away seven days ago.'

So knowledge and vision arose in me that Āḷāra the Kālāma had passed away seven days ago.

[214] Then it occurred to me, monks:

'Āḷāra the Kālāma has suffered a great loss.<sup>20</sup>

For if he had heard this dhamma, he would have understood it quickly.'

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'Now, to whom could I first teach this dhamma?

Who will understand this dhamma quickly?

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'This Uddaka, Rāma's son, is learned, experienced, wise, and for a long time has had little dust in his eyes.

Suppose that I were to teach dhamma first to Uddaka, Rāma's son?

He will understand this dhamma quickly.'

Then, monks, devatas, having approached me, spoke thus:

'Lord, Uddaka, Rāma's son, passed away last night.'

So knowledge and vision arose in me that Uddaka, Rāma's son, had passed away last night.

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'Uddaka, Rāma's son, has suffered a great loss.
For if he had heard this dhamma, he would have understood it quickly.

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'Now to whom could I first teach this dhamma?
Who will understand this dhamma quickly?

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'This group of five monks who waited on me when I was self-resolute in striving, were very helpful.
Suppose that I were to teach dhamma first to this group of five monks?

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'But where is the group of five monks staying at present? Then, monks I saw with deva-vision, purified and surpassing that of men, the group of five monks staying near Benares at Isipatana in the deer-park.
Then I, monks, having stayed at Uruvelā for as long as I found suiting, set out on tour for Benares.

Then, monks, Upaka, the Naked Ascetic,<sup>21</sup> saw me as I was going along the high road between Gayā and the (Tree of) Awakening; having seen me, he spoke thus:

'Your reverence, your faculties are quite pure, your complexion is very bright, very clear.

On account of whom have you, your reverence, gone forth, or who is your teacher, or whose dhamma do you profess?'

When this had been said, I, monks, addressed Upaka, the Naked Ascetic, in verses:

'Victorious over all, omniscient am I,
Among all things undefiled,
Leaving all, through death of craving freed,
By knowing for myself, whom should I point to?<sup>22</sup>

For me there is no teacher,
One like me does not exist,
In the world with its devas
No one equals me.

For I am perfected in the world,
A teacher supreme am I,
I alone am all-awakened, Become cool am I, Nibbāna-attained.

To turn the dhamma-wheel
I go to Kasi's city,
Beating the drum of deathlessness
In a world that's blind become.'

'According to what you claim, your reverence, you ought to be victor of the unending.'

'Like me, they are victors indeed
Who have won destruction of the cankers;
Vanquished by me are evil things, Therefore am I, Upaka, a victor.'

When this had been said, monks, Upaka the Naked Ascetic, having said:
'May it be (so), your reverence" having shaken his head, went off having taken a different road.

Then I, monks, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Benares, Isipatana, the deer-park and the group of five monks.

Monks, the group of five monks saw me coming in the distance, and seeing me they agreed among themselves, saying:

'Your reverences, this recluse Gotama is coming, he lives in abundance, he is wavering in his striving, he has reverted to a life of abundance. He should be neither greeted, nor stood up for, nor should his bowl and robe be received; all the same a seat may be put out, he can sit down if he wants to.'

But as I, monks, gradually approached this group of five monks, so this group of five monks were not able to adhere to their own agreement; having approached me some received my bowl and robe, some made a seat ready, some brought water for washing the feet, and they addressed me by my name and with the epithet 'your reverence.'

When this had been said, I, monks, spoke thus to the group of five monks:

'Do not, monks, address a Tathāgata by his name or by the epithet 'your reverence.'

Monks, the Tathāgata is one perfected, a fully Self-awakened One.

Give ear, monks, the deathless is found,

I instruct, I teach dhamma.

Going along [216] in accordance with what is enjoined,

having soon realised here and now by your own super-knowledge that supreme goal of the Brahmā-faring for the sake of which young men of family rightly go forth from home into homelessness, you will abide in it.'

When this had been said, monks, the group of five monks addressed me thus:

'But you, reverend Gotama, did not come to a state of further-men, to knowledge and vision befitting the Ariyans by this conduct, by this course, by this practice of austerities.

So how can you now come to a state of further-men, to knowledge and vision befitting the Ariyans when you live in abundance and, wavering in your striving, revert to a life of abundance?'

When this had been said, monks, I spoke to the group of five monks thus:

'A Tathāgata, monks, does not live in abundance nor, wavering in striving, does he revert to a life of abundance.

The Tathāgata, monks, is one perfected, a fully Self-awakened One.

Give ear, monks, the deathless is found,

I instruct, I teach dhamma.

Going along in accordance with what is enjoined,

having soon realised here and now by your own super-knowledge that supreme goal of the Brahmā-faring for the sake of which young men of family rightly go forth from home into homelessness, you will abide in it.'

And a second time, monks, the group of five monks spoke to me thus:

'But you, reverend Gotama ... ' ... ' ... you will abide in it.'

And a third time, monks, the group of five monks spoke to me thus:

'But you, reverend Gotama ... revert to a life of abundance?'

When this had been said, I, monks, spoke thus to the group of five monks:

'Do you allow, monks, that I have ever spoken<sup>23</sup> to you like this before?'

'You have not, Lord.'

'A Tathāgata, a monks, is a perfected one, a fully Self-awakened One.

Give ear, monks, the deathless is found,

I instruct, I teach dhamma.

Going along in accordance with what is enjoined,

having soon realised here and now by your own super-knowledge that supreme goal of the Brahmā-faring for the sake of which young men of family rightly go forth from home into homelessness, you will abide in it.'

And I, monks, was able to convince the group of five monks.

Monks, I now exhorted two monks; three monks walked for almsfood.<sup>24</sup>

Whatever the three monks who had walked for alms- [217] food brought back,
that the group of six<sup>25</sup> lived on.

And then, monks, I exhorted three monks;
two monks walked for almsfood.
Whatever the two monks who had walked for almsfood brought back, that the group of six lived on.

Then, monks, the group of five monks, being thus exhorted, thus instructed by me,
being liable to birth because of self, having known the peril in what is liable to birth, seeking the unborn, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna — won the unborn, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna; being liable to ageing because of self ... won the unageing ... being liable to decay because of self ... won the undecaying ... being liable to dying because of self ... won the undying ... being liable to sorrow because of self ... won the unsorrowing ... being liable to stain because of self, having known the peril in what is liable to stain, seeking the stainless, the uttermost security from the bonds — Nibbāna — won the stainless, the uttermost security from the bonds —
Nibbāna.

Knowledge and vision arose in them:
Unshakable is freedom for us,
this is the last birth,
there is not now again-becoming.

Monks, there are these five strands of sense-pleasures.<sup>26</sup>

What are the five?

Material shapes cognisable by the eye,
alluring, agreeable, pleasant, liked,
connected with sense-pleasures, enticing;
sounds cognisable by the ear ...
smells cognisable by the nose ...
tastes cognisable by the tongue ...
touchables cognisable by the body,
alluring, agreeable, pleasant, liked,
connected with sense-pleasures, enticing.

These, monks, are the five strands of sense-pleasures.

Monks, those recluses or brahmans who enjoy these five strands of sense-pleasures enslaved and infatuated by them, addicted to them, not seeing the peril in them, not aware of the escape from them — these should be told: 'You have come to calamity, you have come to misfortune and are ones to be done to by the Evil One as he wills.

Monks, it is like a deer living in a forest who might be lying caught on a heap of snares — this may be said of it:
It has come to calamity, it has come to misfortune, it is one to be done to by the trapper as he wills, for when the trapper comes it will not be able to go away as it wishes.

Even so, monks, those recluses or brahmans ... are ones to be done to by the Evil One as he wills.

Monks, those recluses or brahmans who enjoy these five strands of sense-pleasures, not enslaved, not infatuated by them, not [218] addicted to them, seeing the peril in them, aware of the escape from them
— these should be told:
You have not come to calamity, you have not come to misfortune, you are not ones to be done to by the Evil One as he wills.

Monks, it is like a deer living in a forest who might lie down on a heap of snares but is not caught by it — this may be said of it:
It has not come to calamity, it has not come to misfortune, it is not one to be done to by the trapper as he wills, for when the trapper comes it will be able to go away as it wishes.

Even so, monks, those recluses or brahmans ... are not ones to be done to by the Evil One as he wills.

Monks, it is like a deer living in a forest, roaming the forest slopes, who walks confidently, stands confidently, sits down confidently, goes to sleep confidently.

What is the reason for this?

Monks, it is out of the trapper's reach.

Even so, monks, a monk,
aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
enters on and abides in the first meditation
which is accompanied by initial thought and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful.

Monks, this monk is called one<sup>27</sup> who has put a darkness round Mara, and having blotted out Mara's vision so that it has no range,
goes unseen by the Evil One.

And again, monks, a monk,
by allaying initial and discursive thought,
his mind subjectively tranquillised and fixed on one point, enters on and abides in the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,

is born of concentration
and is rapturous and joyful.

Monks, this monk is called one ... by the Evil One.

And again, monks, a monk,
by the fading out of rapture,
dwells with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious,
and experiences in his person that joy of which the Ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has 'equanimity and is mindful';
and he enters on and abides in the third meditation.

Monks, this monk is called one ... by the Evil One.

And again, monks, a monk,
by getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows, enters on and abides in the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified by equanimity and mindfulness.

Monks, this monk is called one ... by the Evil One.

And again, monks, a monk,
by passing quite beyond perception of material shapes,
by the going down of perception of sensory reactions,
by not attending to perceptions of variety,
thinking:
'Ether is unending,'
enters on and abides in the plane of infinite ether.

Monks, this monk is called one ... by the Evil One.

And again, monks, a monk,
by passing quite beyond the plane of infinite ether,

thinking:

'Consciousness is unending,'

enters on and abides in the plane of infinite consciousness.

Monks, this monk is called one ... by the Evil One.

And again, monks, a monk,

by passing quite beyond the plane of infinite consciousness,

thinking:

'There is not anything,'

enters on and abides in the plane of no-thing.

Monks, this monk is called one ... by the Evil One.

And again, monks, a monk,

by passing quite beyond the plane of no-thing, enters on and abides in the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception.

Monks, this monk is called one who has put a darkness round Māra, and
who,

having blotted out Māra's vision so that it has no range,

goes unseen by the Evil One.

And again, monks, a monk,

by passing quite beyond the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception, enters on and abides in the stopping of perception and feeling;

and having seen by intuitive wisdom,

his cankers are utterly destroyed.

Monks, this monk is called one who has put a darkness round Māra, and
who,

having blotted out Māra's vision so that it has no range,

goes unseen by the Evil One;

he has crossed over the entanglement in the world.

He walks confidently,

stands confidently,

sits down confidently,
goes to sleep confidently.

What is the reason for this?

Monks, he is out of reach of the Evil One."

Thus spoke the Lord. Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse on the Ariyan Quest:
The Sixth.

---

More
First Sutta Resources

---

<sup>1</sup> Called Pāsarāsi Sutta in the Comy.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. A. iii. 344.

<sup>3</sup> MA. ii. 166: When Kassapa was the Buddha there was a gate to the East, now known as the Eastern Porch, the river Aciravatī surrounded the town and made a great tank at the Eastern Porch. There were different fords (or bathing places): one for the king, one for the townspeople, one for the Order of monks, one for the Buddhas. Pubbakotṭhaka mentioned also at S. v. 220; A. iii. 345. See notes at K.S. v. 195. G.S. iii. 243.

<sup>4</sup> Besides A. iii. 345, cf. A. iii. 402, S. i. 8. MA. ii. 167 says the Lord went into the water in a bathing cloth, and when he came out the Elder handed him a dyed double cloth, which he put on, fastening it with his waistband; and having folded his large robe (mahācīvara; perhaps a reference to the sugatacīvara of Vin. iv. 173) end to end, making it like the heart of a lotus. he stood holding it at the comers. For if one puts on a robe while the limbs are still wet, the comers of the robe turn up. and the requisite is spoiled.

<sup>5</sup> MA. ii. 168, for the five hundred monks who wished to hear the Lord, and who had gone to the hermitage.

<sup>6</sup> As at Vin. i. 248; A. iv. 358 f. MA. ii. 168 says that agga'am ākoṭesi means: with the tip of his nail he gave a sign on the door.

<sup>7</sup> The moment they heard the sound, MA. ii. 168.

<sup>8</sup> MA. ii. 168 says that in the time of a Buddha, everywhere where even one monk is staying a Buddha-seat comes to be appointed. For the Buddha may know that the monk is not thinking in the right way; and the monks think he will come and stand near them, showing himself. It is difficult to look about for a seat that moment, so the monks keep one ready. If there is a chair they appoint that. If not, they use a couch or a board of some wood or a stone on a heap of sand. Failing all this, having collected some dry leaves, they arrange a seat having spread rags from a dust-heap over them.

<sup>9</sup> Cf. Ud. 31; also Sn. 722. Here the Ariyan silence is the second jhāna, MA. ii. 169.

<sup>10</sup> MA. ii. 169 says the Lord spoke about this first path as a man skilled in the way, when showing the way to go, would first exclude one path and say: Leaving the left-hand one alone, take the right-hand one (as at S. iii. 108).

<sup>11</sup> Stock, as at D. i. 245, iii. 43; S. ii. 270; A. v. 178, etc.

<sup>12</sup> MA. ii. 170 points out that gold and silver are not liable to dying or sorrow; but iron. etc. becomes stained with stains, and ages because it takes up dust and dirt.

<sup>13</sup> "The following passage occurs at M. i. 240, ii. 93, 212.

<sup>14</sup> bhadra. Bhaddaka at A. iv. 255 is one of the ingredients of the moon and sun.

<sup>15</sup> viharatu.

<sup>16</sup> ñāṇavada; cf. A. v. 42 ff.; D. iii. 13. MA. ii. 171, jānāmī ti vādaṃ the doctrine (or theory) that "I know."

<sup>17</sup> theravāda. MA. ii. 171 says, thirabhāvavādaṃ; thero aham atthā ti etaṃ vacanaṃ, a profession of strength.

<sup>18</sup> The Nerañjarā.

<sup>19</sup> As at Vin. i.4 ff. See B.D. iv. 6 ff. for notes, etc.

<sup>20</sup> mahājāniyo. I am indebted to the Ven. A. P. Buddhadatta for this interpretation of jāni = hāri, loss.

<sup>21</sup> ājīvika

<sup>22</sup> I.e. as my teacher.

<sup>23</sup> vabbhācitaṃ.

<sup>24</sup> As at Vin. i. 13.

<sup>25</sup> I.e. Gotama and the group of five monks

<sup>26</sup> According to M.A.. ii. 193 this is part of the unAriyan quest.

<sup>27</sup> As at M. i. 159, where, in the Nivāpasutta, the four herds of deer may be compared with the four deer above.

---

Majjhima Nikāya

I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa

3. Tatiya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings

I. The First Fifty Discourses

3. The Third Division

27. Lesser Discourse on the Simile of the Elephant's Footprint

Cūḷa Hatthi-Padopama Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattḥī
in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Now at that time the brahman Jāṇussoṇi was leaving Sāvattḥī early in the day
in an all-white chariot (drawn by) mares.<sup>2</sup>

The brahman Jāṇussoṇi saw the wanderer Pilotika coming in the distance;
seeing him,
he spoke thus to the wanderer Pilotika:

"Now, where is the revered Vacchāyana<sup>3</sup> coming from so early in the day?"

"I, sir, am coming from the presence of the recluse Gotama."

"What do you think about this, Vacchāyana?"

Has the recluse Gotama lucidity of wisdom?<sup>4</sup>

Do you think him clever?"

"But who am I, sir,
that I would know whether the recluse Gotama has lucidity of wisdom?"

Surely only one like him could know whether the recluse Gotama has lucidity of wisdom."

"Undoubtedly it is with lofty praise that the revered Vacchāyana praises the recluse Gotama."

"But who am I, sir,
that I should praise the recluse Gotama?"

Praised by the praised<sup>5</sup> is the revered Gotama, chief among devas and men."

"But what good thing does the revered Vacchāyana see that he has this high confidence
in the recluse Gotama?"

"Sir, as a skilled elephant-tracker might enter an elephant-forest, and might see in the elephant-forest
a great footprint,
long and broad;
he might come to the conclusion:

'Indeed it is a [221] great elephant.'

Even so did I, sir, when I had seen the four footprints of the recluse Gotama, come to this conclusion:

The fully Self-awakened One is the Lord;
well taught is dhamma by the Lord;
the Order is faring along well.

What are the four?

Here, sir, I see some clever nobles, subtle,<sup>6</sup>
practised in disputing with others,
skilled in hair-splitting,
who go about, methinks,
breaking to pieces in their wisdom
the views (of others).

These hear:

'Undoubtedly the recluse Gotama
will visit a certain village
or little town.

They construct a question,
thinking:

'Having approached the recluse Gotama,
we will ask him this question of ours.

If, on being asked by us thus,
he answers thus,
we will refute him thus;
and if, on being asked by us thus,
he answers thus,
we will refute him thus.'

These heard:

'It is certain that the recluse Gotama is visiting such and such a village
or little town.'

So they approached the recluse Gotama.

The recluse Gotama gladdened,
roused,
incited,
delighted them
with talk on dhamma.

These,
gladdened,
roused,
incited,
delighted by the recluse Gotama
with talk on dhamma,
did not ask the recluse Gotama the question at all - whence could they refute him?

On the contrary
they became disciples of the recluse Gotama.

When I, sir,
saw this first footprint of the recluse Gotama,
then I came to the conclusion:

'The fully Self-awakened One is the Lord;
well taught is dhamma by the Lord;
the Order fares along well.

■

And again I, sir, see here some clever brahmans,
subtle,
practised in disputing with others,
skilled in hair-splitting,
who go about, methinks,
breaking to pieces in their wisdom
the views (of others).

'Undoubtedly the recluse Gotama
will visit a certain village
or little town.

They construct a question,
thinking:

'Having approached the recluse Gotama,
we will ask him this question of ours.

If, on being asked by us thus,
he answers thus,
we will refute him thus;
and if, on being asked by us thus,
he answers thus,
we will refute him thus.'

These heard:

'It is certain that the recluse Gotama
is visiting such and such a village
or little town.'

So they approached the recluse Gotama.

The recluse Gotama gladdened,
roused,
incited,
delighted them
with talk on dhamma.

These,
gladdened,
roused,
incited,
delighted by the recluse Gotama
with talk on dhamma,
did not ask the recluse Gotama the question at all - whence could they refute him?

On the contrary
they became disciples of the recluse Gotama.

When I, sir,
saw this second footprint of the recluse Gotama,
then I came to the conclusion:

'The fully Self-awakened One is the Lord;
well taught is dhamma by the Lord;
the Order fares along well.

■

And again I, sir, see here some clever householders,
subtle,

practised in disputing with others,
skilled in hair-splitting,
who go about, methinks,
breaking to pieces in their wisdom
the views (of others).

'Undoubtedly the recluse Gotama
will visit a certain village
or little town.

They construct a question,
thinking:

'Having approached the recluse Gotama,
we will ask him this question of ours.

If, on being asked by us thus,
he answers thus,
we will refute him thus;
and if, on being asked by us thus,
he answers thus,
we will refute him thus.'

These heard:

'It is certain that the recluse Gotama
is visiting such and such a village
or little town.'

So they approached the recluse Gotama.

The recluse Gotama gladdened,
roused,
incited,
delighted them
with talk on dhamma.

These,
gladdened,
roused,
incited,
delighted by the recluse Gotama
with talk on dhamma,
did not ask the recluse Gotama the question at all - whence could they refute him?

On the contrary
they became disciples of the recluse Gotama.

When I, sir,
saw this third footprint of the recluse Gotama,
then I came to the conclusion:

'The fully Self-awakened One is the Lord;
well taught is dhamma by the Lord;
the Order fares along well.

■

And again I, sir, see here some clever recluses,
subtle,
practised in disputing with others,
skilled in hair-splitting,
who go about, methinks,
breaking to pieces in their wisdom
the views (of others).

'Undoubtedly the recluse Gotama
will visit a certain village
or little town.

They construct a question,
thinking:

'Having approached the recluse Gotama,
we will ask him this question of ours.

If, on being asked by us thus,
he answers thus,
we will refute him thus;
and if, [222] on being asked by us thus,
he answers thus,
we will refute him thus.'

These heard:

'It is certain that the recluse Gotama
is visiting such and such a village
or little town.'

So they approached the recluse Gotama.

The recluse Gotama gladdened,
roused,
incited,
delighted them
with talk on dhamma.

These,
gladdened,
roused,
incited,
delighted by the recluse Gotama
with talk on dhamma,
did not ask the recluse Gotama the question at all - whence could they refute him?

On the contrary,
they asked leave of the recluse Gotama himself for the going forth
from home into homelessness.

The recluse Gotama let them go forth.

These, gone forth like this,
living alone,
aloof,
diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute,
having by their own super-knowledge soon realised here and now that goal of the Brahma-faring for the sake of which young men of family
rightly go forth from home into homelessness,
entering on it,
abided in it.

These speak thus:

'Indeed we were nearly lost, indeed we nearly perished, for while formerly we were not (true) recluses, we claimed that we were,
saying:

"We are recluses";

not being (true) brahmans,
we claimed that we were,
saying:

"We are brahmans";

not being (true) perfected ones,
we claimed that we were,
saying:

"We are perfected ones".

But now we really are recluses, now we really are brahmans, now we really are perfected ones.'

When I, sir,
saw this fourth footprint of the recluse Gotama,
then I came to the conclusion:

'The fully Self-awakened One is the Lord;
well taught is dhamma by the Lord;
the Order fares along well.'

When this had been said,
Jāṇussoṇi the brahman got down from his all-white chariot (drawn by) mares,
and having arranged his outer cloak over one shoulder, having saluted the Lord three times with joined palms, he uttered this utterance:

"Reverence to this Lord,
perfected one,
fully Self-awakened One;

Reverence to this Lord,
perfected one,
fully Self-awakened One;

Reverence to this Lord,
perfected one,
fully Self-awakened One.

Perhaps we,
somewhere,
sometime
will meet the honoured Gotama; perhaps there may be some conversation."

---

Then Jāṇussoṇi the brahman approached the Lord;
having approached,
he exchanged greetings with the Lord;
having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Jāṇussoṇi the brahman related to the Lord
all the conversation he had had up till now with the wanderer Pilotika.

When he had spoken thus,
the Lord spoke thus to Jāṇussoṇi the brahman:

"Brahman, to a (certain) extent the simile of the elephant's [223] footprints is not complete in all its detail.

But, brahman,
to the extent to which the simile of the elephant's footprints is complete in all its detail,
listen,
pay careful attention
and I will speak."

"Yes, revered one,"
Jāṇussoṇi the brahman answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Brahman, an elephant tracker
might enter an elephant forest,
and might see in the elephant forest
a large footprint,
long and broad.

But a skilled elephant tracker does not at once
come to the conclusion:

Indeed it is a great bull-elephant.

What is the reason for this?

There are, brahman,
in an elephant forest
stunted she-elephants
who have large footprints,
and he thinks
this might be a footprint of theirs.

He follows them
and following them
he sees in the elephant forest
a great footprint,
long and broad,
and a grazing off of the high things.<sup>7</sup>

A skilled elephant tracker
does not at once come to the conclusion:

Indeed it is a great bull-elephant.

What is the reason for this?

There are, brahman,
in an elephant forest

she-elephants who have tusks and who have large footprints,
and he thinks
this might be a footprint of theirs.

He follows them
and following them
he sees in the elephant forest
a great footprint,
long and broad,
and a grazing off of the high things
and the high things slashed by tusks.

A skilled elephant tracker
does not at once come to the conclusion:

Indeed it is a great bull-elephant.

What is the reason for this?

There are, brahman,
in an elephant forest
she-elephants with stumpy tusks
who have large footprints,
and he thinks
this might be a footprint of theirs.

He follows them
and following them
he sees in the elephant forest
a great footprint,
long and broad,
and a grazing off of the high things
and the high things slashed by tusks and the high things broken off at the boughs.

And he sees that bull-elephant at the root of a tree
or in the open,
walking
or standing
or sitting
or lying down.

He comes to the conclusion:

This is that bull-elephant himself.

In the same way, brahman, a Tathāgata arises in the world,
a perfected one,
a fully Self-awakened One,
endowed with right knowledge and conduct,
well-farer,
knower of the worlds,<sup>8</sup>
the matchless charioteer of men to be tamed,
the Awakened One,
the Lord.

He makes known this world
with the devas,
with Māra,
with Brahmā,
[224] creation
with its recluses and brahmins,
its devas and men,
having realised them by his own super-knowledge.

He teaches dhamma which is lovely at the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely at the ending,
with the spirit and the letter;

he proclaims the Brahma-faring
wholly fulfilled,
quite purified.

A householder
or a householder's son
or one born in another family
hears that dhamma.

Having heard that dhamma,
he gains faith in the Tathāgata.

Endowed with this faith
that he has acquired,
he reflects in this way:

'The household life is confined and dusty;<sup>9</sup> going forth is of the open;
it is not easy for one who lives in a house
to fare the Brahma-faring
wholly fulfilled,
wholly pure,
polished like a conch-shell.

Suppose now that I,
having cut off hair and beard,
having put on saffron robes,
should go forth from home
into homelessness?'

After a time,
getting rid of his wealth,<sup>10</sup>
be it small or great,
getting rid of his circle of relations,
be it small or great,
having cut off his hair and beard,

having put on saffron robes,
he goes forth from home
into homelessness.

He, being thus one who has gone forth
and who is endowed with the training and the way of living of monks, abandoning onslaught on creatures,<sup>11</sup>
is one who abstains from onslaught on creatures;
the stick laid aside,
the knife laid aside,
he lives kindly,
scrupulous,
friendly
and compassionate
towards all breathing things and creatures.

Abandoning the taking of what is not given,
he is one who abstains from taking what is not given;
being one who takes (only) what is given,
who waits for what is given,
not by stealing he lives with a self become pure.

Abandoning unchastity,
he is one who is chaste,
keeping remote (from unchastity), abstaining from dealings with women.<sup>12</sup>

Abandoning lying speech,
he is one who abstains from lying speech,
a truth-speaker,
a bondsman to truth,<sup>13</sup> trustworthy,
dependable,
no deceiver of the world.<sup>14</sup>

[225] Abandoning slanderous speech,<sup>15</sup>
he is one who abstains from slanderous speech;
having heard something here
he is not one for repeating it elsewhere
for (causing) variance among these (people), or having heard something elsewhere
he is not one to repeat it there
for (causing) variance among these (people).

In this way
he is a reconciler of those who are at variance,
and one who combines those who are friends.

Concord is his pleasure,
concord his delight,
concord his joy,
concord is the motive of his speech.

Abandoning harsh speech,
he is one who abstains from harsh speech.

Whatever speech is gentle,
pleasing to the ear,
affectionate,
going to the heart,
urbane,
pleasant to the manyfolk,
agreeable to the manyfolk -
he comes to be one who utters speech like this.

Abandoning frivolous chatter,
he is one who abstains from frivolous chatter.

He is a speaker at a right time,
a speaker of fact,
a speaker on the goal,<sup>16</sup> a speaker on dhamma,<sup>17</sup> a speaker on discipline,<sup>18</sup> he speaks words that are worth treasuring,

with similes at a right time
that are discriminating,
connected with the goal.

He comes to be one who abstains
from what involves destruction to seed-growth, to vegetable growth.<sup>19</sup>

He comes to be one who eats one meal a day,
refraining at night,
abstaining from eating at a wrong time.<sup>20</sup>

He comes to be one who abstains from watching shows of dancing,
singing,
music.<sup>21</sup>

He comes to be one who abstains
from using garlands,
scents,
unguents,
adornments,
finery.<sup>22</sup>

He comes to be one who abstains
from using high beds,
large beds.<sup>23</sup>

He comes to be one who abstains from accepting gold and silver.<sup>24</sup>

He comes [226] to be one who abstains
from accepting raw grain.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting raw meat.<sup>25</sup>

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting women and girls.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting women slaves and men slaves.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting goats and sheep.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting fowl and swine.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting elephants, cows, horses, mares.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting fields and sites.

He comes to be one who abstains from accepting messages or going on such.<sup>26</sup>

He comes to be one who abstains from buying and selling.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting from cheating with weights.

He comes to be one who abstains from accepting from cheating with bronzes.<sup>27</sup>

He comes to be one who abstains from cheating with measures.<sup>28</sup>

He comes to be one who abstains
from the crooked ways of bribery, fraud and deceit.

He comes to be one who abstains from maiming, murdering, manacling, highway robbery.<sup>29</sup>

He comes to be contented with the robes for protecting his body,<sup>30</sup>
with the almsfood for sustaining his stomach.

Wherever he goes
he takes these things<sup>31</sup> with him as he goes.

As a bird on the wing
wherever it flies
takes its' wings with it as it flies,
so a monk,
contented with the robes for protecting his body,
with the almsfood for sustaining his stomach,
wherever he goes
takes these things with him as he goes.

He, possessed of the ariyan body of moral habit, subjectively experiences the bliss of blamelessness.<sup>32</sup>

Having seen a material shape with the eye,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwells with this organ of sight uncontrolled,<sup>33</sup>
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of sight,
he comes to control over the organ of sight.

Having heard a sound with the ear,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwells with this organ of hearing uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of hearing,
he comes to control over the organ of hearing.

Having smelt a smell with the nose,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwells with this organ of smell uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of smell,
he comes to control over the organ of smell.

Having savoured a taste with the tongue,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwells with this organ of taste uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of taste,

he comes to control over the organ of taste.

Having felt a touch with the body,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwells with this organ of touch uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of touch,
he comes to control over the organ of touch.

Having cognised a mental object with the mind,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he lives with this organ of mind uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled [227] states of mind
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of mind,
he comes to control over the organ of mind.

If he is possessed of this ariyan control of the (sense-) organs,
he subjectively experiences unsullied well-being.

Whether he is setting out or returning,<sup>34</sup>
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is looking down
or looking round,
he is one who comports himself properly;

whether he is bending back
or stretching out (his arm),
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is carrying his outer cloak,
his bowl,
his robe,
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is munching,
drinking,
eating,
savouring,
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is obeying the calls of nature,
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is walking,
standing,
asleep,
awake,
talking,
silent,
he is one who comports himself properly.

Possessed of<sup>35</sup> this ariyan body of moral habit and possessed of this ariyan control of the (sense-) organs and possessed of this ariyan mindfulness
and clear consciousness, he chooses<sup>36</sup> a remote lodging in a forest,
at the root of a tree,
on a mountain slope,
in a wilderness,
in a hill-cave,
in a cemetery,
in a forest haunt,
in the open
or on a heap of straw.

He, returning from alms-gathering
after his meal,
sits down cross-legged
holding the back erect,
having made mindfulness
rise up in front of him.

He, having got rid of covetousness for the world,
lives with a mind devoid of coveting,
he purifies the mind of coveting.

By getting rid of the taint of ill-will,
he lives benevolent in mind;
and compassionate for the welfare
of all creatures and beings,
he purifies the mind of the taint of ill-will.

By getting rid of sloth and torpor,
he lives devoid of sloth and torpor;
perceiving the light,
mindful and clearly conscious,
he purifies the mind of sloth and torpor.

By getting rid of restlessness and worry,
he lives calmly,
the mind subjectively tranquillised,
he purifies the mind of restlessness and worry.

By getting rid of doubt,
he lives doubt-crossed;
unperplexed as to the states that are skilled,
he purifies his mind of doubt.

He, by getting rid Of these five hindrances<sup>37</sup> - defilements of a mind and weakening to intuitive wisdom - aloof from pleasure of the senses,

aloof from unskilled states of mind,
enters and abides in the first meditation,
which is accompanied by initial thought and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness
and is rapturous and joyful.

This, brahman, is called the Tathāgata's footprint, and [228] what is grazed against by the Tathāgata and what is slashed by the Tathāgata.

But not yet does the ariyan disciple come to fulfilment<sup>38</sup> thinking:

'The Fully Self-awakened One is the Lord;
well taught is dhamma by the Lord;
the Order fares along well.

And again, brahman, a monk,
by allaying initial and discursive thought,
the mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters and abides in the second meditation,
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration
and is rapturous and joyful.

This too, brahman, is called the Tathāgata's footprint, and what is grazed against by the Tathāgata and what is slashed by the Tathāgata.

But not yet does the ariyan disciple come to fulfilment thinking:

'The Fully Self-awakened One is the Lord;
well taught is dhamma by the Lord;
the Order fares along well.

And again, brahman, a monk,
by the fading out of rapture,

dwells with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious,
and experiences in his person
that joy of which the ariyans say:

'Joyful lives he
who has equanimity and is mindful',

and he enters and abides in the third meditation.

This too, brahman, is called the Tathāgata's footprint, and what is grazed against by the Tathāgata and what is slashed by the Tathāgata.

But not yet does the ariyan disciple come to fulfilment thinking:

'The Fully Self-awakened One is the Lord;
well taught is dhamma by the Lord;
the Order fares along well.

And again, brahman, a monk,
by getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows, enters and abides in the fourth meditation,
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

This too, brahman, is called the Tathāgata's footprint, and what is grazed against by the Tathāgata and what is slashed by the Tathāgata.

But not yet does the ariyan disciple come to fulfilment thinking:

'The Fully Self-awakened One is the Lord;
well taught is dhamma by the Lord;

the Order fares along well.

Thus with the mind composed,<sup>39</sup>
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable, [229] fixed,
immovable,
he directs his mind to the knowledge
and recollection of former habitations,
that is to say:

One birth,
two births,
three births,
four births,
five births,
ten births,
twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,
fifty births,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
and many an eon of integration
and many an eon of disintegration
and many an eon of integration-disintegration;
such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I came to be in another state
where such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I arose here
and could recollect thus in all their mode and detail a variety of former habitations.

This too, brahman, is called the Tathāgata's footprint,
and what is grazed against by the Tathāgata and what is slashed by the Tathāgata.

But not yet does the ariyan disciple come to fulfilment thinking:

'The Fully Self-awakened One is the Lord;
well taught is dhamma by the Lord;
the Order fares along well.

Thus with the mind composed,
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable,
fixed,
immovable,
he directs his mind to the knowledge of the passing hence and coming to be of beings.

With the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men
he beholds beings as they are passing hence and coming to be,
mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going
according to the consequences of their deeds,
thinking:

Indeed these worthy beings
who were possessed of wrong conduct in body,
who were possessed of wrong conduct of speech,
who were possessed of wrong conduct of thought,
scoffers at the ariyans,
holding a wrong view,
incurring deeds consequent on a wrong view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

But these worthy beings
who were possessed of good conduct in body,
who were possessed of good conduct in speech,
who were possessed of good conduct in thought,
who did not scoff at the ariyans,
holding a right view,
incurring deeds consequent on a right view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

And thus with the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men
he sees beings as they pass hence,
as they arise;
and he comprehends that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going
according to the consequences of deeds.

This too, brahman, is called the Tathāgata's footprint, and what is grazed against by the Tathāgata and what is slashed by the Tathāgata.

But not yet does the ariyan disciple come to fulfilment thinking:

'The Fully Self-awakened One is the Lord;
well taught is dhamma by the Lord;
the Order fares along well.

Thus with the mind composed,
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable,
fixed,
immovable,
he directs his mind to the knowledge of the destruction of the cankers.

He comprehends as it really is:

This is anguish,
this the arising of anguish,

this the stopping of anguish, this the course leading to the stopping of anguish.

He comprehends as it really is:

These are the cankers,
this the arising of the cankers, this the stopping of the cankers, this the course leading to the stopping of the cankers.

This too, brahman, is called the Tathāgata's footprint, and what is grazed against by the Tathāgata and what is slashed by the Tathāgata.

But not yet does the ariyan disciple come to fulfilment thinking:

'The Fully Self-awakened One is the Lord;
well taught is dhamma by the Lord;
the Order fares along well.

When he has known thus,
when he has seen thus,
the mind is freed from the canker of sense-pleasures and his mind is freed from the canker of becoming and his mind is freed from the canker of ignorance.

In freedom
the knowledge comes to be
that he is freed
and he comprehends:

'Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more
of being such or such.

This too, brahman, is called the Tathāgata's footprint,
and what is grazed against by the Tathāgata and what is slashed by the Tathāgata.

It is at this point, brah- [230] man, that the ariyan disciple comes to fulfilment, thinking:

'The Fully Self-awakened One is the Lord;
well taught is dhamma by the Lord;
the Order fares along well.

When this had been said,
Jāṇussoṇi the brahman spoke thus to the Lord:

"It is wonderful, revered sir,
wonderful, revered sir.

It is as if, good Gotama,
one might set upright what had been upset,
or might disclose what was covered,
or point out the way
to one who had gone astray,
or might bring an oil-lamp into the darkness
so that those with vision might see material shapes - even so is dhamma made clear
in many a figure by the good Gotama.

I am going to the revered Gotama for refuge,
and to dhamma
and to the Order of monks.

May the good Gotama accept me
as a lay-follower,
one gone for refuge from today forth
for as long as life lasts."

Lesser Discourse on the Simile of the Elephant's Footprint: the Seventh

---

<sup>1</sup> At Mhvs. XIV. 22 this was the Sutta that Mahinda preached first of all to Devānaṃpiyatissa on his arrival in Ceylon.

<sup>2</sup> MA. ii. 194 quotes S. v. 4 to indicate all the respects in which the chariot was white. It adds that it was harnessed to four white mares. Although the number of mares is not given in the text, Chalmers gives it as four in his translation.

<sup>3</sup> The name of his clan, MA. ii. 195. Cf. M. ii. 208, A. iii. 236 f., as far as the simile.

<sup>4</sup> paññāveyyattiyam, as at M. i. 82.

<sup>5</sup> MA. ii. 196 instances, among others, Pasenadi, Bimbisāra, Visakha, Uppalavanna, Sāriputta, Sakka, Mahābrahmā. All are praised by their retinues, and all praise the Dasabala.

<sup>6</sup> This sequence also at D. i. 26, 162; and cf. whole passage with M. ii. 122.

<sup>7</sup> uccā ca nisevitam. He sees where her shoulders have knocked against the trees, MA. ii. 198.

<sup>8</sup> MA. ii. 200 mentions the three worlds - that of space, that of beings, that of the habitual tendencies or activities - and says here the world of beings, and, more precisely, the world of men, is meant. Cf. DA. i, 173 f.

<sup>9</sup> rajāpatha. MA. ii. 204 = DA. i. 180 take this to mean, in accordance with the Mahā-aṭṭhakathā, the dust of passion, but say it is also āgamanapatha, full of comings and goings (?).

<sup>10</sup> Cf. D. ii. 85, 86.

<sup>11</sup> Cf. the following passage with D. i. 4-5; M. i. 287, iii. 33; A. ii. 208; Pug. 56; also A. iv. 249; Kvu. II.

<sup>12</sup> gāmadhammā. Explained at MA. ii. 206 = DA. i. 72 as things (or states of mind, dhamma) of village dwellers. But this does not fit the context very well. Cf. mātugāma, women.

<sup>13</sup> saccasandha. MA. i. 206 = DA. i. 73, saccena saccam sandahati, he joins truth to truth.

<sup>14</sup> Cf. D. iii. 170.

<sup>15</sup> Cf. M. i. 286, iii. 49 for following passage.

<sup>16</sup> MA. ii. 208, DA. i. 76, he speaks about what is connected with the goal attha, of the here and now and of the beyond.

<sup>17</sup> MA. ii. 208 = DA. i. 76, he speaks about what is connected with the nine other-worldly things; see Dhs. 1094.

<sup>18</sup> MA. ii. 208 = DA. i. 76, the discipline of giving up and that of restraint.

<sup>19</sup> bījagāmahūtagāma. Cf. Pāc. XI. (Vin. iv. 34), and see D. i. 5; also MA. ii, 208.

<sup>20</sup> Defined at Vin. iv. 86 as "after noon has passed until sunrise." Cf. S. v. 470; A. i. 212; Kvu. II. 6.

<sup>21</sup> Made into a dukkata offence for monks at Vin. ii. 108, and into a pācittiya for nuns at Vin. iv. 267. Cf. D. i. 6; Kvu. II. 7.

<sup>22</sup> Cf. Kvu. II. 8.

<sup>23</sup> Cf. Pāc. 87; D. i. 7; A. i. 181; Vin. i. 192, ii. 163. MA. ii. 209 says that "high beds" are those that exceed the (prescribed) measure, while "large beds" are those that are not allowable.

<sup>24</sup> Cf. Vin. iii. 236 ff. (Nissag. 18); Kvu. II. 10.

<sup>25</sup> Cf. Vin. iii. 208, where the nun Uppalavaṇṇa prepared (or roasted) meat before offering it to the Lord.

<sup>26</sup> Cf. D. i. 8; S. iii. 239.

<sup>27</sup> kaṁsa, see Nuns' Nissag. XI, XII and note at B.D. iii. 239. But MA. ii. 210 = DA. i. 79 says a kaṁsa is called a golden bowl with reference to a method of cheating with copper bowls that have been made of a golden colour.

<sup>28</sup> MA. ii. 210 = DA. i. 79 mention three methods: "heart-break," hadaya-bheda, used in measuring ghee, oil, etc.; "pyramid-break," sikhā-bheda, used in measuring sesamum, husked rice, etc.; "cord-break," rajju-bheda, used in measuring fields and sites.

<sup>29</sup> DA. i. 80, this is twofold: hidden in the snow, hidden in a thicket, they kidnap people.

<sup>30</sup> As at D. i. 71.

<sup>31</sup> The eight requisites, MA. ii. 213 = DA. i. 207.

<sup>32</sup> [Ed. corrected as per M.L.S. 51 n.25] Cf. D. i. 70.

<sup>33</sup> Cf. M. i. 221.

<sup>34</sup> As at D. i. 70, etc.

<sup>35</sup> As at D. i. 71.

<sup>36</sup> Cf. M. i. 273, iii. 3, etc.

<sup>37</sup> Given also at M. i. 60, 274-76.

<sup>38</sup> niṭṭham gacchati can also mean "come to the conclusion" (in thought), as above. But MA. ii. 217 appears here to take it in the sense of fulfilment, saying tīsu ratanesu niṭṭham gacchati, he goes to fulfilment, or the goal, in the Three Jewels. Cf. A. ii. 175, iii. 450, v. 119 ff.

<sup>39</sup> Stock, as at M. i. 22, etc.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
3. Tatiya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
3. The Third Division

28. Greater Discourse on the Simile of the Elephant's Footprint

Mahā Hatthi-Padopama Sutta

Translated from the Pali by I.B. Horner, M.A.
Associate of Newham College, Cambridge
First Published in 1954

Copyright The Pali Text Society
Commercial Rights Reserved

For details see Terms of Use.

---

[230]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

There the venerable Sāriputta addressed the monks, saying:

"Reverend monks."

"Your reverence," these monks answered the venerable Sāriputta in assent.

The venerable Sāriputta spoke thus:

"As, your reverences, among all creatures that can walk<sup>1</sup> all pedal qualities are combined in an elephant's foot,<sup>2</sup> and as the elephant's foot is chief among these in point of size,
so, your reverences,
all skilled states of mind are included among the four ariyan truths.

Among what four?

Among the ariyan truth of anguish, among the ariyan truth of the uprising of anguish, among the ariyan truth of the stopping of anguish, among the ariyan truth of the course leading to the stopping of anguish.

---

[231] And what, your reverences, is the ariyan truth of anguish?<sup>3</sup>

Birth is anguish
and ageing is anguish
and dying is anguish;
and grief,
lamentation,
sorrow,

tribulation
and despair are anguish, and not getting what one wants,
that too is anguish.

In brief
the five groups of grasping are anguish.

---

And what, your reverences, are the five groups of grasping?

Just these;
the group of grasping after material shape,
the group of grasping after feeling,
the group of grasping after perception,
the group of grasping after the habitual tendencies, the group of grasping after consciousness.<sup>4</sup>

---

And what, your reverences, is the group of grasping after material shapes?

The four great elements, and the material shape that is derived from the four great elements.

---

And what, your reverences, are the four great elements?

The element of extension,
the liquid element,
the element of heat,
the element of motion.<sup>5</sup>

---

And what, your reverences,
is the element of extension?

The element of extension may be internal,
it may be external.

And what,<sup>6</sup> your reverences, is the internal element of extension?

Whatever is<sup>7</sup> hard,
solid,
is internal,<sup>8</sup> referable to an individual<sup>88</sup>
and derived therefrom,
that is to say:

the hair of the head,
the hair of the body,
nails,
teeth,
skin,
flesh,

sinews,
bones,
marrow of the bones,
kidney,
heart,
liver,
pleura,
spleen,
lungs,
intestines,
mesentery,
stomach,
excrement,
or whatever other thing is hard,
solid,
is internal,
referable to an individual or derived therefrom -

this, your reverences,
is called the internal element of extension.

Whatever<sup>9</sup> is an internal element of extension and whatever is an external element of extension,<sup>10</sup> just these are the element of extension.

By means of perfect intuitive wisdom
it should be seen of this
as it really is, thus:

This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.

Having seen this thus
as it really is

by means of perfect intuitive wisdom,
he disregards the element of extension,
he cleanses his mind
of the element of extension.

[232] There comes to be a time, your reverences, when the element of extension<sup>11</sup> that is external
is agitated;
at that time the external element of extension disappears.

The impermanence of this ancient external element of extension can be shown, your reverences,
its liability to destruction can be shown,
its liability to decay can be shown,
its liability to change can be shown.

So what of this short-lived body
derived from craving?

There is not anything here for saying,
'I
or 'mine'
or 'I am.'

Your reverences,
if others abuse,
revile,
annoy,<sup>12</sup>
vex this monk,
he comprehends:

'This painful feeling that has arisen in me
is born of sensory impingement on the ear,

it has a cause,
not no cause.

What is the cause?

Sensory impingement is the cause.'

He sees that sensory impingement<sup>13</sup> is impermanent,
he sees that feeling is impermanent,
he sees that perception is impermanent,
he sees that the habitual tendencies are impermanent,
he sees that consciousness is impermanent.

His mind rejoices,
is pleased,
composed
and is set on<sup>14</sup> the objects of the element.

If, your reverences,
others comport themselves in undesirable,
disagreeable,
unpleasant ways
towards that monk,
and he receives blows from their hands
and from clods of earth
and from sticks
and weapons,
he comprehends thus:

'This body is such
that blows from hands affect it
and blows from clods of earth affect it
and blows from sticks affect it
and blows from weapons affect it.

But this was said by the Lord in the Parable of the Saw:<sup>15</sup>

"If, monks,
low-down thieves should carve you limb from limb
with a two-handled saw,
whoever sets his heart at enmity,
he, for this reason,
is not a doer of my teaching."

Unsluggish energy shall come to be stirred up by me,
unmuddled mindfulness set up,
the body tranquillised,
impassible,
the mind composed and one-pointed.

Now, willingly,
let blows from hands affect this body,
let blows from clods of earth this body,
let blows from sticks this body,
let blows from weapons affect it,
for this teaching of the Awakened Ones is being done.'

If, your reverences,
this monk recollects the Awakened One thus,
if he recollects dhamma thus,
if he recollects the Order thus,<sup>16</sup>
but there is not established (in him) the equanimity that depends on [233] skill;<sup>17</sup> he is strongly moved<sup>18</sup> because of this,
he comes to a strongly moved condition, and thinks:

'It is unprofitable for me,
it is not profitable for me,
it is ill gotten by me,
it is not well gotten by me

that, although I recollect the Awakened One thus,
although I recollect dhamma thus,
although I recollect the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in me).!

Your reverences, as a daughter-in-law,
having seen her father-in-law,
is strongly moved
and comes to a strongly moved condition,
so, your reverences,
if while this monk is recollecting the Awakened One,
if while this monk is recollecting the dhamma,
if while this monk is recollecting the Order,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in him);
he is strongly moved because of this,
he comes to a strongly moved condition,
and thinks:

'It is unprofitable for me,
it is not profitable for me,
it is ill gotten by me,
it is not well gotten by me
that, although I recollect the Awakened One thus,
although I recollect dhamma thus,
although I recollect the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in me).!

But if, your reverences,
while this monk is recollecting the Awakened One thus
while this monk is recollecting the dhamma thus
while this monk is recollecting the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill

is established (in him),
he, because of this is pleased.

Up to this point, your reverences,
much has been done by the monk.

---

And what, your reverences, is the liquid element?

The liquid element<sup>19</sup> may be internal,
it may be external.

And what, your reverences,
is the internal liquid element?

Whatever is liquid,
fluid,
is internal,
referable to an individual
or derived therefrom,
that is to say:

bile,
phlegm,
pus,
blood,
sweat,
fat,
tears,
serum,
saliva,
mucus,
synovial fluid,

urine
or whatever other thing is liquid, fluid,
is internal,
referable to an individual
or derived therefrom -
this, your reverences,
is called the internal liquid element.

Whatever is an internal liquid element and whatever is an external liquid element, just these are the liquid element.

By means of perfect intuitive wisdom
it should be seen of this
as it really is, thus:

This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.

Having seen this thus
as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom, he disregards the liquid element,
he cleanses his mind
of the liquid element.

There comes to be a time, your reverences,
when the liquid element that is external is agitated;
it carries away villages and it carries away little towns
and it carries away towns
and it carries away districts
and it carries away districts and regions.

There [234] comes to be a time, your reverences, when the waters in the great ocean<sup>20</sup> go down<sup>21</sup> a hundred yojanas, and when they go down two hundred yojanas, and when they go down three hundred yojanas, and when they go down four hundred yojanas, and when they go down five hundred yojanas, and when they go down six hundred yojanas and when they go down seven hundred yojanas.

There comes to be a time, your reverences,
when the water in the great ocean stands at (the height of) seven palm trees (in depth), when the water stands at (the height of) six palm trees (in depth), when the water stands at (the height of) five palm trees (in depth), when the water stands at (the height of) four palm trees (in depth), when the water stands at (the height of) three palm trees (in depth), when the water stands at (the height of) two palm trees (in depth) and when the water stands at (the height of) one palm tree (in depth).

There comes to be a time, your reverences, when the water in the great ocean stands at (the depth of) seven men's stature,
when the water in the great ocean stands at (the depth of) six men's stature, when the water in the great ocean stands at (the depth of) five men's stature, when the water in the great ocean stands at (the depth of) four men's stature, when the water in the great ocean stands at (the depth of) three men's stature,
when the water in the great ocean stands at (the depth of) two men's stature and when the water stands at (the depth of) merely one man's stature.

There comes to be a time, your reverences, when the water in the great ocean stands at (the depth of) half a man's stature,
and when the water stands merely up to his hip, and when the water stands merely up to his knee, and when the water stands merely up to his ankle.

There comes to be a time, your reverences,
when the water in the great ocean does not wet even a toe-joint.

The impermanence of this ancient liquid element that is external
can be shown, your reverences,

its liability to destruction can be shown,
its liability to decay can be shown,
its liability to change can be shown.

So what of this short-lived body
derived from craving?

There is not anything here for saying,
'I'
or 'mine'
or 'I am.'

Your reverences,
if others abuse,
revile,
annoy,
vex this monk,
he comprehends:

'This painful feeling that has arisen in me
is born of sensory impingement on the ear,
it has a cause,
not no cause.

What is the cause?

Sensory impingement is the cause.'

He sees that sensory impingement is impermanent,
he sees that feeling is impermanent,
he sees that perception is impermanent,
he sees that the habitual tendencies are impermanent,
he sees that consciousness is impermanent.

His mind rejoices,
is pleased,
composed
and is set on the objects of the element.

If, your reverences,
others comport themselves in undesirable,
disagreeable,
unpleasant ways
towards that monk,
and he receives blows from their hands
and from clods of earth
and from sticks
and weapons,
he comprehends thus:

'This body is such
that blows from hands affect it
and blows from clods of earth affect it
and blows from sticks affect it
and blows from weapons affect it.

But this was said by the Lord
in the Parable of the Saw:

"If, monks,
low-down thieves should carve you limb from limb
with a two-handled saw,
whoever sets his heart at enmity,

he, for this reason,
is not a doer of my teaching."

Unsluggish energy shall come to be stirred up by me,
unmuddled mindfulness set up,
the body tranquillised,
impassible,
the mind composed and one-pointed.

Now, willingly,
let blows from hands affect this body,
let blows from clods of earth this body,
let blows from sticks this body,
let blows from weapons affect it,
for this teaching of the Awakened Ones is being done.'

If, your reverences,
this monk recollects the Awakened One thus,
if he recollects dhamma thus,
if he recollects the Order thus,
but there is not established (in him)
the equanimity that depends on skill;
he is strongly moved because of this,
he comes to a strongly moved condition, and thinks:

'It is unprofitable for me,
it is not profitable for me,
it is ill gotten by me,
it is not well gotten by me
that, although I recollect the Awakened One thus,
although I recollect dhamma thus,
although I recollect the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in me).'

Your reverences, as a daughter-in-law,
having seen her father-in-law,
is strongly moved
and comes to a strongly moved condition,
so, your reverences,
if while this monk is recollecting the Awakened One,
if while this monk is recollecting the dhamma,
if while this monk is recollecting the Order,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in him);
he is strongly moved because of this,
he comes to a strongly moved condition,
and thinks:

'It is unprofitable for me,
it is not profitable for me,
it is ill gotten by me,
it is not well gotten by me
that, although I recollect the Awakened One thus,
although I recollect dhamma thus,
although I recollect the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in me).'

But if, your reverences,
while this monk is recollecting the Awakened One thus
while this monk is recollecting the dhamma thus
while this monk is recollecting the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is established (in him),
he, because of this is pleased.

Up to this point, your reverences,
much has been done by the monk.

Your reverences,
if others abuse,
revile,
annoy,
vex this monk,
he comprehends:

'This painful feeling that has arisen in me
is born of sensory impingement on the ear,
it has a cause,
not no cause.

What is the cause?

Sensory impingement is the cause.'

He sees that sensory impingement is impermanent,
he sees that feeling is impermanent,
he sees that perception is impermanent,
he sees that the habitual tendencies are impermanent,
he sees that consciousness is impermanent.

His mind rejoices,
is pleased,
composed
and is set on the objects of the element.

If, your reverences,
others comport themselves in undesirable,
disagreeable,
unpleasant ways
towards that monk,
and he receives blows from their hands
and from clods of earth
and from sticks
and weapons,
he comprehends thus:

'This body is such
that blows from hands affect it
and blows from clods of earth affect it
and blows from sticks affect it
and blows from weapons affect it.

But this was said by the Lord
in the Parable of the Saw:

"If, monks,
low-down thieves should carve you limb from limb
with a two-handed saw,
whoever sets his heart at enmity,
he, for this reason,
is not a doer of my teaching."

Unsluggish energy shall come to be stirred up by me,
unmuddled mindfulness set up,
the body tranquillised,
impassible,
the mind composed and one-pointed.

Now, willingly,
let blows from hands affect this body,
let blows from clods of earth this body,
let blows from sticks this body,
let blows from weapons affect it,
for this teaching of the Awakened Ones is being done.'

If, your reverences,
this monk recollects the Awakened One thus,
if he recollects dhamma thus,
if he recollects the Order thus,
but there is not established (in him)
the equanimity that depends on skill;

he is strongly moved because of this,
he comes to a strongly moved condition, and thinks:

'It is unprofitable for me,
it is not profitable for me,
it is ill gotten by me,
it is not well gotten by me
that, although I recollect the Awakened One thus,
although I recollect dhamma thus,
although I recollect the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in me).'

Your reverences, as a daughter-in-law,
having seen her father-in-law,
is strongly moved
and comes to a strongly moved condition,
so, your reverences,
if while this monk is recollecting the Awakened One,
if while this monk is recollecting the dhamma,
if while this monk is recollecting the Order,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in him);
he is strongly moved because of this,
he comes to a strongly moved condition,
and thinks:

'It is unprofitable for me,
it is not profitable for me,
it is ill gotten by me,
it is not well gotten by me
that, although I recollect the Awakened One thus,
although I recollect dhamma thus,
although I recollect the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in me).'

But if, your reverences,
while this monk is recollecting the Awakened One thus
while this monk is recollecting the dhamma thus
while this monk is recollecting the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is established (in him),
he, because of this is pleased.

Up to this point, your reverences,
much has been done by the monk.

---

And what, your reverences, is the element of heat?<sup>22</sup>

The heat element may be internal,
it may be external.

And what, your reverences,
is the internal heat element?

Whatever is heat,
warmth,
is internal,
referable to an individual
and derived therefrom,
such as by whatever one is vitalised, by whatever one is consumed, by whatever one is burnt up, and by whatever one has munched, drunk,
eaten
and tasted
that is properly transmuted (in digestion), or whatever other thing is heat,

warmth,
is internal,
referable to an individual or derived therefrom-this, your reverences, is called the internal heat element.

Whatever is an internal element of heat and whatever is an external element of heat, just these are the element of heat.

By means of perfect intuitive [235] wisdom it should be seen of this as it really is, thus:

This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not myself.

Having seen this thus
as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom,
he disregards the heat element, he cleanses his mind of the heat element.

There comes a time, your reverences, when the element of heat that is external is agitated, and it burns up villages and it burns up little towns and it burns up towns and it burns up districts and it burns up districts and regions.

When it has come to the end of the crops or to the end of a highway or to the end of a mountain or to the end of water or to a lovely stretch of level ground, it is extinguished<sup>23</sup> through lack of fuel.

There comes to be a time, your reverences, when people seek to light a fire with a cock's feather or with snippets of gristle.<sup>24</sup>

The impermanence of this ancient external element of heat can be shown,
your reverences,
its liability to destruction can be shown,
its liability to decay can be shown,
its liability to change can be shown.

So what of this short-lived body
derived from craving?

There is not anything here for saying,
'I'
or 'mine'
or 'I am.'

Your reverences,
if others abuse,
revile,
annoy,
vex this monk,
he comprehends:

'This painful feeling that has arisen in me
is born of sensory impingement on the ear,
it has a cause,
not no cause.

What is the cause?

Sensory impingement is the cause.'

He sees that sensory impingement is impermanent,
he sees that feeling is impermanent,
he sees that perception is impermanent,
he sees that the habitual tendencies are impermanent,
he sees that consciousness is impermanent.

His mind rejoices,
is pleased,
composed
and is set on the objects of the element.

If, your reverences,
others comport themselves in undesirable,
disagreeable,
unpleasant ways
towards that monk,
and he receives blows from their hands
and from clods of earth
and from sticks
and weapons,
he comprehends thus:

'This body is such
that blows from hands affect it
and blows from clods of earth affect it
and blows from sticks affect it
and blows from weapons affect it.

But this was said by the Lord
in the Parable of the Saw:

"If, monks,
low-down thieves should carve you limb from limb
with a two-handled saw,
whoever sets his heart at enmity,

he, for this reason,
is not a doer of my teaching."

Unsluggish energy shall come to be stirred up by me,
unmuddled mindfulness set up,
the body tranquillised,
impassible,
the mind composed and one-pointed.

Now, willingly,
let blows from hands affect this body,
let blows from clods of earth this body,
let blows from sticks this body,
let blows from weapons affect it,
for this teaching of the Awakened Ones is being done.'

If, your reverences,
this monk recollects the Awakened One thus,
if he recollects dhamma thus,
if he recollects the Order thus,
but there is not established (in him)
the equanimity that depends on skill;
he is strongly moved because of this,
he comes to a strongly moved condition, and thinks:

'It is unprofitable for me,
it is not profitable for me,
it is ill gotten by me,
it is not well gotten by me
that, although I recollect the Awakened One thus,
although I recollect dhamma thus,
although I recollect the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in me).'

Your reverences, as a daughter-in-law,
having seen her father-in-law,
is strongly moved
and comes to a strongly moved condition,
so, your reverences,
if while this monk is recollecting the Awakened One,
if while this monk is recollecting the dhamma,
if while this monk is recollecting the Order,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in him);
he is strongly moved because of this,
he comes to a strongly moved condition,
and thinks:

'It is unprofitable for me,
it is not profitable for me,
it is ill gotten by me,
it is not well gotten by me
that, although I recollect the Awakened One thus,
although I recollect dhamma thus,
although I recollect the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in me).'

But if, your reverences,
while this monk is recollecting the Awakened One thus
while this monk is recollecting the dhamma thus
while this monk is recollecting the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is established (in him),
he, because of this is pleased.

Up to this point, your reverences,
much has been done by the monk.

Your reverences,
if others abuse,
revile,
annoy,
vex this monk,
he comprehends:

'This painful feeling that has arisen in me
is born of sensory impingement on the ear,
it has a cause,
not no cause.

What is the cause?

Sensory impingement is the cause.'

He sees that sensory impingement is impermanent,
he sees that feeling is impermanent,
he sees that perception is impermanent,
he sees that the habitual tendencies are impermanent,
he sees that consciousness is impermanent.

His mind rejoices,
is pleased,
composed
and is set on the objects of the element.

If, your reverences,
others comport themselves in undesirable,
disagreeable,
unpleasant ways
towards that monk,
and he receives blows from their hands
and from clods of earth
and from sticks
and weapons,
he comprehends thus:

'This body is such
that blows from hands affect it
and blows from clods of earth affect it
and blows from sticks affect it
and blows from weapons affect it.

But this was said by the Lord
in the Parable of the Saw:

"If, monks,
low-down thieves should carve you limb from limb
with a two-handed saw,
whoever sets his heart at enmity,
he, for this reason,
is not a doer of my teaching."

Unsluggish energy shall come to be stirred up by me,
unmuddled mindfulness set up,
the body tranquillised,
impassible,
the mind composed and one-pointed.

Now, willingly,
let blows from hands affect this body,
let blows from clods of earth this body,
let blows from sticks this body,
let blows from weapons affect it,
for this teaching of the Awakened Ones is being done.'

If, your reverences,
this monk recollects the Awakened One thus,
if he recollects dhamma thus,
if he recollects the Order thus,
but there is not established (in him)
the equanimity that depends on skill;

he is strongly moved because of this,
he comes to a strongly moved condition, and thinks:

'It is unprofitable for me,
it is not profitable for me,
it is ill gotten by me,
it is not well gotten by me
that, although I recollect the Awakened One thus,
although I recollect dhamma thus,
although I recollect the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in me).'

Your reverences, as a daughter-in-law,
having seen her father-in-law,
is strongly moved
and comes to a strongly moved condition,
so, your reverences,
if while this monk is recollecting the Awakened One,
if while this monk is recollecting the dhamma,
if while this monk is recollecting the Order,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in him);
he is strongly moved because of this,
he comes to a strongly moved condition,
and thinks:

'It is unprofitable for me,
it is not profitable for me,
it is ill gotten by me,
it is not well gotten by me
that, although I recollect the Awakened One thus,
although I recollect dhamma thus,
although I recollect the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in me).'

But if, your reverences,
while this monk is recollecting the Awakened One thus
while this monk is recollecting the dhamma thus
while this monk is recollecting the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is established (in him),
he, because of this is pleased.

Up to this point, your reverences,
much has been done by the monk.

---

And what, your reverences, is the element of motion?<sup>25</sup>

The element of motion may be internal,
it may be external.

And what, your reverences,
is the internal element of motion?

Whatever is motion,
wind,
is internal,
referable to an individual
and derived therefrom,
such as winds going upwards, winds going downwards,
winds in the abdomen,
winds in the belly,
winds that shoot across the several limbs, in-breathing,
out-breathing,
or whatever other thing is motion,

wind,
is internal,
referable to an individual
and derived therefrom -
this, your reverences,
is called the internal element of motion.

Whatever is an internal element of motion and whatever is an external element of motion, just these are the element of motion.

By means of perfect intuitive wisdom
it should be seen of this
as it really is, thus:

This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not myself.

Having seen this thus as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom,
he disregards the element of motion,
he cleanses his mind of the element of motion.

There comes a time, your reverences, when the element of motion that is external is agitated, and it carries away villages
and it carries away little towns
and it carries away towns
and it carries away districts
and it carries away districts and regions.

There comes to be a time, your reverences, when in the last month of the hot weather people are looking about for wind by means [236] of a palm (leaf) fan<sup>26</sup> and a fan for fanning the fire,<sup>26</sup> and they do not expect grasses in the top of the thatch.<sup>27</sup>

The impermanence of this ancient external element of motion can be shown, your reverences, its liability to destruction can be shown,
its liability to decay can be shown,
its liability to change can be shown.

So what of this short-lived body
derived from craving?

There is not anything here for saying,
'I'
or 'mine'
or 'I am.'

Your reverences,
if others abuse,
revile,
annoy,
vex this monk,
he comprehends:

'This painful feeling that has arisen in me
is born of sensory impingement on the ear,
it has a cause,
not no cause.

What is the cause?

Sensory impingement is the cause.'

He sees that sensory impingement is impermanent,
he sees that feeling is impermanent,
he sees that perception is impermanent,

he sees that the habitual tendencies are impermanent,
he sees that consciousness is impermanent.

His mind rejoices,
is pleased,
composed
and is set on the objects of the element.

If, your reverences,
others comport themselves in undesirable,
disagreeable,
unpleasant ways
towards that monk,
and he receives blows from their hands
and from clods of earth
and from sticks
and weapons,
he comprehends thus:

"This body is such
that blows from hands affect it
and blows from clods of earth affect it
and blows from sticks affect it
and blows from weapons affect it.

But this was said by the Lord
in the Parable of the Saw:

"If, monks,
low-down thieves should carve you limb from limb
with a two-handled saw,
whoever sets his heart at enmity,
he, for this reason,
is not a doer of my teaching."

Unsluggish energy shall come to be stirred up by me,
unmuddled mindfulness set up,

the body tranquillised,
impassible,
the mind composed and one-pointed.

Now, willingly,
let blows from hands affect this body,
let blows from clods of earth this body,
let blows from sticks this body,
let blows from weapons affect it,
for this teaching of the Awakened Ones is being done.'

If, your reverences,
this monk recollects the Awakened One thus,
if he recollects dhamma thus,
if he recollects the Order thus,
but there is not established (in him)
the equanimity that depends on skill;
he is strongly moved because of this,
he comes to a strongly moved condition, and thinks:

'It is unprofitable for me,
it is not profitable for me,
it is ill gotten by me,
it is not well gotten by me
that, although I recollect the Awakened One thus,
although I recollect dhamma thus,
although I recollect the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in me).'

Your reverences, as a daughter-in-law,
having seen her father-in-law,
is strongly moved
and comes to a strongly moved condition,
so, your reverences,
if while this monk is recollecting the Awakened One,

if while this monk is recollecting the dhamma,
if while this monk is recollecting the Order,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in him);
he is strongly moved because of this,
he comes to a strongly moved condition,
and thinks:

'It is unprofitable for me,
it is not profitable for me,
it is ill gotten by me,
it is not well gotten by me
that, although I recollect the Awakened One thus,
although I recollect dhamma thus,
although I recollect the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in me).'

But if, your reverences,
while this monk is recollecting the Awakened One thus
while this monk is recollecting the dhamma thus
while this monk is recollecting the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is established (in him),
he, because of this is pleased.

Up to this point, your reverences,
much has been done by the monk.

Your reverences,
if others abuse,
revile,
annoy,
vex this monk,
he comprehends:

'This painful feeling that has arisen in me
is born of sensory impingement on the ear,
it has a cause,
not no cause.

What is the cause?

Sensory impingement is the cause.'

He sees that sensory impingement is impermanent,
he sees that feeling is impermanent,
he sees that perception is impermanent,
he sees that the habitual tendencies are impermanent,
he sees that consciousness is impermanent.

His mind rejoices,
is pleased,
composed
and is set on the objects of the element.

If, your reverences,
others comport themselves in undesirable,
disagreeable,
unpleasant ways
towards that monk,
and he receives blows from their hands
and from clods of earth
and from sticks
and weapons,
he comprehends thus:

'This body is such
that blows from hands affect it
and blows from clods of earth affect it
and blows from sticks affect it
and blows from weapons affect it.

But this was said by the Lord
in the Parable of the Saw:

"If, monks,
low-down thieves should carve you limb from limb
with a two-handled saw,
whoever sets his heart at enmity,
he, for this reason,
is not a doer of my teaching."

Unsluggish energy shall come to be stirred up by me,
unmuddled mindfulness set up,
the body tranquillised,
impassible,
the mind composed and one-pointed.

Now, willingly,
let blows from hands affect this body,
let blows from clods of earth this body,
let blows from sticks this body,
let blows from weapons affect it,
for this teaching of the Awakened Ones is being done.'

If, your reverences,
this monk recollects the Awakened One thus,
if he recollects dhamma thus,
if he recollects the Order thus,
but there is not established (in him)
the equanimity that depends on skill;
he is strongly moved because of this,
he comes to a strongly moved condition, and thinks:

'It is unprofitable for me,
it is not profitable for me,
it is ill gotten by me,
it is not well gotten by me

that, although I recollect the Awakened One thus,
although I recollect dhamma thus,
although I recollect the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in me).!

Your reverences, as a daughter-in-law,
having seen her father-in-law,
is strongly moved
and comes to a strongly moved condition,
so, your reverences,
if while this monk is recollecting the Awakened One,
if while this monk is recollecting the dhamma,
if while this monk is recollecting the Order,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in him);
he is strongly moved because of this,
he comes to a strongly moved condition,
and thinks:

'It is unprofitable for me,
it is not profitable for me,
it is ill gotten by me,
it is not well gotten by me
that, although I recollect the Awakened One thus,
although I recollect dhamma thus,
although I recollect the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill
is not established (in me).!

But if, your reverences,
while this monk is recollecting the Awakened One thus
while this monk is recollecting the dhamma thus
while this monk is recollecting the Order thus,
the equanimity that depends on skill

is established (in him),
he, because of this is pleased.

Up to this point, your reverences,
much has been done by the monk.

---

Your reverences, just as a space that is enclosed by stakes
and creepers
and grass and clay
is known as a dwelling, so a space that is enclosed by bones
and sinews
and flesh
and skin
is known as a material shape.

---

If, your reverences,
the eye that is internal is intact<sup>28</sup> but external material shapes
do not come within its range
and there is no appropriate impact,
then there is no appearance of the appropriate section<sup>29</sup> of consciousness.

If, your reverences,
the eye that is internal is intact
and external material shapes
come within its range
but without an appropriate impact,
then there is no appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

But when, your reverences,
the eye that is internal is intact
and external material shapes
come within its range
and there is the appropriate impact,
then there is thus an appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

Whatever is material shape
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group
of grasping after material shape.

Whatever is feeling
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after feeling.

Whatever is perception
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after perception.

Whatever are the habitual tendencies
in what has thus come to be,
they are included in the group of grasping after the habitual tendencies.

Whatever is consciousness
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after consciousness.

He comprehends thus:

'Thus there is,
so it is said,
the including,
the collecting together,
the coming together
of these five groups of grasping.'

This was said by the Lord:

'Whoever sees conditioned genesis sees [237] dhamma, whoever sees dhamma sees conditioned genesis.'<sup>30</sup>

These are generated by conditions:
that is to say the five groups of grasping.

Whatever among these five groups of grasping
is desire,
sensual pleasure,
affection,
catching at,
that is the uprising of anguish.

Whatever among these five groups of grasping is the control of desire and attachment,<sup>31</sup> the ejection of desire and attachment,<sup>31</sup>
that is the stopping of anguish.

Up to this point, your reverences,
much has been done by the monk.

---

If, your reverences,
the ear that is internal is intact but external sounds
do not come within its range
and there is no appropriate impact,
then there is no appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

If, your reverences,
the ear that is internal is intact
and external sounds
come within its range
but without an appropriate impact,
then there is no appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

But when, your reverences,
the ear that is internal is intact
and external sounds
come within its range
and there is the appropriate impact,
then there is thus an appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

Whatever is material shape
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group
of grasping after material shape.

Whatever is feeling
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after feeling.

Whatever is perception
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after perception.

Whatever are the habitual tendencies
in what has thus come to be,
they are included in the group of grasping after the habitual tendencies.

Whatever is consciousness
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after consciousness.

He comprehends thus:

'Thus there is,
so it is said,
the including,
the collecting together,
the coming together
of these five groups of grasping.'

This was said by the Lord:

'Whoever sees conditioned genesis sees dhamma, whoever sees dhamma sees conditioned genesis.'

These are generated by conditions:
that is to say the five groups of grasping.

Whatever among these five groups of grasping
is desire,
sensual pleasure,
affection,
catching at,
that is the uprising of anguish.

Whatever among these five groups of grasping
is the control of desire and attachment,
the ejection of desire and attachment,
that is the stopping of anguish.

Up to this point, your reverences,
much has been done by the monk.

---

If, your reverences,
the nose that is internal is intact but external scents
do not come within its range
and there is no appropriate impact,
then there is no appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

If, your reverences,
the nose that is internal is intact
and external scents
come within its range
but without an appropriate impact,
then there is no appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

But when, your reverences,
the nose that is internal is intact
and external scents
come within its range
and there is the appropriate impact,
then there is thus an appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

Whatever is material shape
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group
of grasping after material shape.

Whatever is feeling
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after feeling.

Whatever is perception
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after perception.

Whatever are the habitual tendencies
in what has thus come to be,
they are included in the group of grasping after the habitual tendencies.

Whatever is consciousness
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after consciousness.

He comprehends thus:

'Thus there is,
so it is said,
the including,
the collecting together,
the coming together
of these five groups of grasping.'

This was said by the Lord:

'Whoever sees conditioned genesis sees dhamma,
whoever sees dhamma sees conditioned genesis.'

These are generated by conditions:
that is to say the five groups of grasping.

Whatever among these five groups of grasping
is desire,
sensual pleasure,
affection,

catching at,
that is the uprising of anguish.

Whatever among these five groups of grasping
is the control of desire and attachment,
the ejection of desire and attachment,
that is the stopping of anguish.

Up to this point, your reverences,
much has been done by the monk.

---

If, your reverences,
the tongue that is internal is intact but external tastes
do not come within its range
and there is no appropriate impact,
then there is no appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

If, your reverences,
the tongue that is internal is intact
and external tastes
come within its range
but without an appropriate impact,
then there is no appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

But when, your reverences,
the tongue that is internal is intact
and external tastes
come within its range
and there is the appropriate impact,

then there is thus an appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

Whatever is material shape
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group
of grasping after material shape.

Whatever is feeling
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after feeling.

Whatever is perception
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after perception.

Whatever are the habitual tendencies
in what has thus come to be,
they are included in the group of grasping after the habitual tendencies.

Whatever is consciousness
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after consciousness.

He comprehends thus:

'Thus there is,
so it is said,
the including,
the collecting together,
the coming together
of these five groups of grasping.'

This was said by the Lord:

'Whoever sees conditioned genesis sees dhamma,
whoever sees dhamma sees conditioned genesis.'

These are generated by conditions:
that is to say the five groups of grasping.

Whatever among these five groups of grasping
is desire,
sensual pleasure,
affection,
catching at,
that is the uprising of anguish.

Whatever among these five groups of grasping
is the control of desire and attachment,
the ejection of desire and attachment,
that is the stopping of anguish.

Up to this point, your reverences,
much has been done by the monk.

---

If, your reverences,
the body that is internal is intact but external contact
do not come within its range
and there is no appropriate impact,
then there is no appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

If, your reverences,
the body that is internal is intact
and external contact
come within its range
but without an appropriate impact,

then there is no appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

But when, your reverences,
the body that is internal is intact
and external contact
come within its range
and there is the appropriate impact,
then there is thus an appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

Whatever is material shape
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group
of grasping after material shape.

Whatever is feeling
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after feeling.

Whatever is perception
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after perception.

Whatever are the habitual tendencies
in what has thus come to be,
they are included in the group of grasping after the habitual tendencies.

Whatever is consciousness
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after consciousness.

He comprehends thus:

'Thus there is,
so it is said,
the including,

the collecting together,
the coming together
of these five groups of grasping,'

This was said by the Lord:

'Whoever sees conditioned genesis sees dhamma,
whoever sees dhamma sees conditioned genesis.'

These are generated by conditions:
that is to say the five groups of grasping.

Whatever among these five groups of grasping
is desire,
sensual pleasure,
affection,
catching at,
that is the uprising of anguish.

Whatever among these five groups of grasping
is the control of desire and attachment,
the ejection of desire and attachment,
that is the stopping of anguish.

Up to this point, your reverences,
much has been done by the monk.

---

If, your reverences,
the mind that is internal is intact but external mental objects
do not come within its range
and there is no appropriate impact,

then there is no appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

If, your reverences,
the mind that is internal is intact
and external mental objects
come within its range
but without an appropriate impact,
then there is no appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

But when, your reverences,
the mind that is internal is intact
and external mental objects
come within its range
and there is the appropriate impact,
then there is thus an appearance
of the appropriate section of consciousness.

Whatever is material shape
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group
of grasping after material shape.

Whatever is feeling
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after feeling.

Whatever is perception
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after perception.

Whatever are the habitual tendencies
in what has thus come to be,
they are included in the group of grasping after the habitual tendencies.

Whatever is consciousness
in what has thus come to be,
it is included in the group of grasping after consciousness.

He comprehends thus:

'Thus there is,
so it is said,
the including,
the collecting together,
the coming together
of these five groups of grasping.'

This was said by the Lord:

'Whoever sees conditioned genesis sees dhamma,
whoever sees dhamma sees conditioned genesis.'

These are generated by conditions:
that is to say the five groups of grasping.

Whatever among these five groups of grasping
is desire,
sensual pleasure,
affection,
catching at,
that is the uprising of anguish.

Whatever among these five groups of grasping
is the control of [238] desire and attachment,
the ejection of desire and attachment,
that is the stopping of anguish.

Up to this point, your reverences,
much has been done by the monk.

Thus spoke the venerable Sāriputta.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said.

The Greater Discourse on the Simile of the Elephant's Footprint
the Eighth

---

<sup>1</sup> Simile as at S. i. 86.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. A. iii. 364.

<sup>3</sup> MA. ii. 218 says the teaching on the whole of anguish is meant here, but it has been set out in the Vism. (p. 494 ff.).

<sup>4</sup> As at S. iii. 58-59.

<sup>5</sup> See M. Sta. 1 for these elements.

<sup>6</sup> Quoted at MA. i. 25.

<sup>7</sup> As at M. i. 421, iii. 240 (six elements given). Vism. 348 says the four elements are treated briefly in the Mahā Satipaṭṭhāna, and at length in the Mahā-Hatthipadopama, the Rāhulovāda (M. i. 421) and the Dhātu Vibhaṅga (M. iii. 237).

<sup>8</sup> MA. ii. 222 says both these are synonyms for "one's own," niyaka.

<sup>9</sup> As at A. ii. 164.

<sup>10</sup> MA. ii. 223 refers to Vbh., ayo loham tipu sīsam (Vbh. 82), with which passage compare above.

<sup>11</sup> Text wrongly reads āpodhātu here instead of paṭhavīdhatu.

<sup>12</sup> As at M. i. 140.

<sup>13</sup> Here phassa. instead of, as is more usual in this sequence, rūpa. Just below, the word translated as "blows" is also phassa. It means a contact, something that impinges.

<sup>14</sup> Cf. M. i. 435, where instead of adhimuccati, is set on, the reading is vimuccati, is freed.

<sup>15</sup> M. i. 129.

<sup>16</sup> As in the formulae, see e.g. D. ii. 93; S. i. 219 f.

<sup>17</sup> upekhā kusalanissitā here means the equanimity or indifference due to vipassanā, insight or vision.

<sup>18</sup> saṁvijjati.

<sup>19</sup> As at M. i. 422. Cf. Vism. 360.

<sup>20</sup> Cf. A. iv. 101-2 [AN 7.62] as far as "ankle," and where all this is said to happen to the waters when a fifth sun appears.

<sup>21</sup> ogacchanti. G.S. iv. 66 "recede"; MA. ii. 227 gives heṭṭhā gacchanti.

<sup>22</sup> As at M. i. 422.

<sup>23</sup> nibbāyati.

<sup>24</sup> As at A. iv. 47.

<sup>25</sup> As at M. i. 422.

<sup>26</sup> tālavantaṇṇena pi vidhūpanena pi. On vidhūpana see B.D. iii. 253, n. 3. MA. ii. 229 calls this aggivījanakena.

<sup>27</sup> ossavne. MA. ii. 229, reading ossāvane, explains by chadanagge, and says "because the water flows out therefrom it is called ossāvana." This means an outflow, running water, making the growth of grass possible.

<sup>28</sup> This passage is quoted at Kvu. 620.

<sup>29</sup> bhāga, but Kvu. reads bhāva. Cf. Miln. 56 ff.

<sup>30</sup> Untraced. "Conditioned genesis" is paṭiccasamuppāda.

<sup>31</sup> Synonyms for nibbāna, MA. ii. 230.v

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
3. Tatiya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
3. The Third Division

29. Greater Discourse on the Simile of the Pith

Mahā Sāropama Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Rājagaha on Mount Vulture Peak not long after Devadatta had left (the Order).<sup>1</sup>

There the Lord addressed the monks concerning Devadatta:

"Here, monks,<sup>2</sup> some young man of family has gone forth from home into homelessness
through faith
and thinks:

'I am beset by birth,
ageing
and dying,
by grief,
sorrow,

suffering,
lamentation
and despair.

I am beset by anguish,
overwhelmed by anguish.

Maybe the annihilation
of this whole mass of anguish
can be shown.'

He, gone forth thus,
receives gains,
honours,
fame.<sup>3</sup>

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he becomes satisfied,
his purpose is fulfilled.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he exalts himself
and disparages others,
saying:

'It is I who am a recipient,
being famous,
but those other monks<sup>4</sup>
are little known,
of little esteem.'<sup>5</sup>

He, because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
is exultant,
indolent,
and falls into sloth;
being indolent,
he dwells ill.

Monks, it is like a man walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking [239] about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,<sup>6</sup> who passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
passes by the bark,
passes by the young shoots,
and who,
having cut down the branches and foliage,
might go away taking them with him
thinking they were the pith.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'Indeed this good man
does not know the pith,
he does not know the softwood,
he does not know the bark,
he does not know the young shoots,
he does not know the branches and foliage,
inasmuch as this good man,
walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith

of a great, stable and pithy tree,
passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
passes by the bark,
passes by the young shoots,
and having cut down the branches and foliage,
is going away taking them with him
thinking they are the pith.

So will he not get the good
that could be done by the pith
because it is the pith.'

Even so, monks,
some young man of family here, having gone forth from home into homelessness
through faith,
thinks:

'I am beset by birth,
ageing
and dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
I am beset by anguish,
overwhelmed by anguish.

Maybe the annihilation
of this whole mass of anguish
can be shown.'

He, gone forth thus,
receives gains,

honours,
fame.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he becomes satisfied,
his purpose is fulfilled.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he exalts himself
and disparages others,
saying:

'It is I who am a recipient,
being famous,
but those other monks
are little known,
of little esteem.'

He, because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
is exultant,
indolent,
and falls into sloth;
being indolent,
he dwells ill.

Monks, this is called a monk who takes hold of the branches and foliage of the Brahma-faring,
and because of this
he fails of (full) accomplishment.<sup>7</sup>

---

But, monks, some young man of family here
comes to have gone forth from home into homelessness
through faith,
and thinks:

'I am beset by birth,
ageing
and dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
I am beset by anguish,
overwhelmed by anguish.

Maybe the annihilation
of this whole mass of anguish
can be shown.'

He, gone forth thus,
receives gains,
honours,
fame.

But because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not become satisfied,
his purpose is not fulfilled.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not exalt himself,
he does not [240] disparage others.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he is not exultant,
he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he attains success in moral habit.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
becomes satisfied,
his purpose is fulfilled.

Because of this success in moral habit,
he exalts himself,
disparages others,
thinking:

'It is I who am of (good) moral habit,
lovely in character,
but these other monks
are of wrong moral habit,
evil in character.'

Because of this success in moral habit,
he is exultant,
he is indolent,
he falls into sloth.

Being indolent,
he dwells ill.

Monks, it is like a man walking about
aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
who passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
passes by the bark,
and who,
having cut off the young shoots,
might go away
taking them with him
thinking they were the pith.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'Indeed this good man
does not know the pith,
he does not know the softwood,
he does not know the bark,
he does not know the young shoots,
he does not know the branches and foliage,
inasmuch as this good man,
walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
passes by the bark,
and having cut down the young shoots,

is going away taking them with him
thinking they are the pith.

So will he not get the good
that could be done by the pith
because it is the pith.'

Even so, monks,
some young man of family,
having gone forth from home into homelessness,
thinks:

'I am beset by birth,
ageing
and dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
I am beset by anguish,
overwhelmed by anguish.

Maybe the annihilation
of this whole mass of anguish
can be shown.'

He, gone forth thus,
receives gains,
honours,
fame.

But because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not become satisfied,
his purpose is not fulfilled.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not exalt himself,
he does not disparage others.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he is not exultant,
he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he attains success in moral habit.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
becomes satisfied,
his purpose is fulfilled.

Because of this success in moral habit,
he exalts himself,
disparages others,
thinking:

'It is I who am of (good) moral habit,
lovely in character,
but these other monks
are of wrong moral habit,
evil in character.'

Because of this success in moral habit,
he is exultant,
he is indolent,
he falls into sloth.

Being indolent,
he dwells ill.

Monks, this is called a monk who takes hold of the young shoots of the Brahma-faring,
and because of this
he fails of (full) accomplishment.

---

But, monks, some young man of family here
comes to have gone forth from home into homelessness
through faith,
and thinks:

'I am beset by birth,
ageing
and dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
I am beset by anguish,
overwhelmed by anguish.

Maybe the annihilation
of this whole mass of anguish
can be shown.'

He, gone forth thus,
receives gains,
honours,
fame.

But because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not become satisfied,
his purpose is not fulfilled.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not exalt himself,
he does not disparage others.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he is not exultant,
he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he attains success in moral habit.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

He, because [241] of this success in moral habit,
does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
is not exultant,
he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he gains success in concentration.

He, because of this success in concentration,
becomes satisfied,
his purpose is fulfilled.

He, because of this success in concentration,
exalts himself,
disparages others,
saying:

'It is I who am concentrated,
their minds are wandering.'

He, because of this success in concentration,
is exultant,
indolent,
he falls into sloth.

Being indolent,
he dwells ill.

Monks, it is like a man walking about
aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
who passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
and who,
having cut off the bark,
might go away taking it with him
thinking it was the pith.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'Indeed this good man
does not know the pith,
he does not know the softwood,
he does not know the bark,
he does not know the young shoots,
he does not know the branches and foliage,
inasmuch as this good man,
walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
and having cut off the bark,
is going away taking it with him
thinking it is the pith.

So will he not get the good
that could be done by the pith
because it is the pith.'

Even so, monks, some young man of family here
comes to have gone forth from home into homelessness
through faith,
and thinks:

'I am beset by birth,
ageing
and dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
I am beset by anguish,
overwhelmed by anguish.

Maybe the annihilation
of this whole mass of anguish
can be shown.'

He, gone forth thus,
receives gains,
honours,
fame.

But because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not become satisfied,
his purpose is not fulfilled.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not exalt himself,
he does not disparage others.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he is not exultant,
he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he attains success in moral habit.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
does not exalt himself,

does not disparage others.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
is not exultant,
he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he gains success in concentration.

He, because of this success in concentration,
becomes satisfied,
his purpose is fulfilled.

He, because of this success in concentration,
exalts himself,
disparages others,
saying:

'It is I who am concentrated,
their minds are wandering.'

He, because of this success in concentration,
is exultant,
indolent,
he falls into sloth.

Being indolent,
he dwells ill.

Monks, this is called a monk who takes hold of the bark of the Brahma-faring,
and because of this
he fails of (full) accomplishment.

---

But, monks, some young man of family here
comes to have gone forth from home into homelessness
through faith,
and thinks:

'I am beset by birth,
ageing
and dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
I am beset by anguish,
overwhelmed by anguish.

Maybe the annihilation
of this whole mass of anguish
can be shown.'

He, gone forth thus,
receives gains,
honours,
fame.

But because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not become satisfied,
his purpose is not fulfilled.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,

he does not exalt himself,
he does not disparage others.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he is not exultant,
he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he attains success in moral habit.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

He, [242] because of this success in moral habit,
does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
is not exultant,
he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he gains success in concentration.

He, because of this success in concentration,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

He, because of this success in concentration,
does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others.

He, because of this success in concentration,
is not exultant,
not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he gains knowledge and insight.

He, because of this knowledge and insight,
becomes satisfied,
his purpose is fulfilled.

Because of this knowledge and insight,
he exalts himself,
disparages others,
saying:

'It is I who dwell knowing,
seeing,
but these other monks
dwell not knowing,
not seeing.'

Because of this knowledge and insight
he is exultant,
indolent,
he falls into sloth.

Being indolent,
he lives ill.

Monks, it is like a man walking about
aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
who passes by the pith itself,

having cut out the softwood
might go away taking it with him
thinking it was the pith.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'Indeed this good man
does not know the pith,
he does not know the softwood,
he does not know the bark,
he does not know the young shoots,
he does not know the branches and foliage,
inasmuch as this good man,
walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
passes by the pith itself,
and having cut out of the softwood,
goes away taking it with him
thinking it is the pith.

So will he not get the good
that could be done by the pith
because it is the pith.'

Even so, monks some young man of family here
comes to have gone forth from home into homelessness
through faith,
and thinks:

'I am beset by birth,
ageing
and dying,

by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
I am beset by anguish,
overwhelmed by anguish.

Maybe the annihilation
of this whole mass of anguish
can be shown.'

He, gone forth thus,
receives gains,
honours,
fame.

But because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not become satisfied,
his purpose is not fulfilled.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not exalt himself,
he does not disparage others.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he is not exultant,
he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he attains success in moral habit.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
is not exultant,
he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he gains success in concentration.

He, because of this success in concentration,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

He, because of this success in concentration,
does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others.

He, because of this success in concentration,
is not exultant,
not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he gains knowledge and insight.

He, because of this knowledge and insight,
becomes satisfied,

his purpose is fulfilled.

Because of this knowledge and insight,
he exalts himself,
disparages others,
saying:

'It is I who dwell knowing,
seeing,
but these other monks
dwell not knowing,
not seeing.'

Because of this knowledge and insight
he is exultant,
indolent,
he falls into sloth.

Being indolent,
he lives ill.

Monks, this is called a monk who takes hold of the softwood of the Brahma-faring,
and because of this
he fails of (full) accomplishment.

---

But, monks, some young man of family here
comes to have gone forth from home into homelessness
through faith,
and thinks:

'I am beset by birth,
ageing
and dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
I am beset by anguish,
overwhelmed by anguish.

Maybe the annihilation
of this whole mass of anguish
can be shown.'

He, gone forth thus,
receives gains,
honours,
fame.

But because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not become satisfied,
his purpose is not fulfilled.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not exalt himself,
he does not disparage others.

Because of the gains,
[243] honours,
fame,
he is not exultant,

he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he attains success in moral habit.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
is not exultant,
he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he gains success in concentration.

He, because of this success in concentration,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

He, because of this success in concentration,
does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others.

He, because of this success in concentration,
is not exultant,
not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he gains knowledge and insight.

He, because of this knowledge and insight,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

Because of this knowledge and vision
he does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others.

Because of this knowledge and vision,
he is not exultant,
he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he obtains release as to things of time.<sup>8</sup>

The situation occurs, monks, when that monk falls away from freedom as to things of time.<sup>9</sup>

Monks, it is like a man walking about
aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
and who,
having cut out the pith itself,
might go away taking it with him,
knowing it to be the pith.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'Indeed this good man knows the pith,
he knows the softwood,
he knows the bark,
he knows the young [244] shoots,

he knows the branches and foliage,
inasmuch as this good man
walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
having cut out the pith itself,
is going away taking it with him,
knowing it to be the pith.

So will he get the good
that could be done by the pith
because it is the pith.'

Even so, monks, some young man of family here
comes to have gone forth from home into homelessness
through faith,
and thinks:

'I am beset by birth,
ageing
and dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
I am beset by anguish,
overwhelmed by anguish.

Maybe the annihilation
of this whole mass of anguish
can be shown.'

He, gone forth thus,
receives gains,

honours,
fame.

But because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not become satisfied,
his purpose is not fulfilled.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not exalt himself,
he does not disparage others.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he is not exultant,
he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he attains success in moral habit.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
is not exultant,
he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he gains success in concentration.

He, because of this success in concentration,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

He, because of this success in concentration,
does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others.

He, because of this success in concentration,
is not exultant,
not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he gains knowledge and insight.

He, because of this knowledge and insight,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

Because of this knowledge and vision
he does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others.

Because of this knowledge and vision,
he is not exultant,
he is not indolent,
he does not fall into sloth.

Being diligent,
he obtains release as to things that are timeless.

This is impossible, monks, it cannot come to pass,

that a monk should fall away from freedom as to things that are timeless.

---

So it is, monks,
that this Brahma-faring<sup>10</sup> is not for advantage in gains,
honours,
fame;
it is not for advantage in moral habit,
it is not for advantage in concentration,
it is not for advantage in knowledge and vision.

That, monks, which is unshakable freedom of [245] mind,<sup>11</sup> this is the goal,<sup>11</sup> monks,
of this Brahma-faring,
this the pith,<sup>11</sup> this the culmination."<sup>11</sup>

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Greater Discourse on the Simile of the Pith:
The Ninth

---

<sup>1</sup> As at S. i. 153; and cf. Vin. ii. 199, where it is said that Devadatta, having created a schism in the Order, went to Gayāsīsa with five hundred monks. See also Miln. 160.

<sup>2</sup> As at M. i. 200, 460 = A. ii. 123.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. S. ii. 226 ff.; A. ii. 73, ii. [sic iii] 343.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. M. iii. 38.

<sup>5</sup> See under appesakkha in CPD. MA. ii. 231 not only says appaparivārā (seldom "invited"), but "going before or after (the meal) they do not receive (anything)."

<sup>6</sup> See S. v. 163 f.

<sup>7</sup> MA. ii. 231, he thinks that it is enough that he has attained the essence up to this point.

<sup>8</sup> samayavimokkha. This is probably a release both as to things that are worldly, mundane and temporal, and as to what is passing or temporary in its nature. As such it is of a less high order than asamayavimokkha, below, from which there is no falling away, for it is "unshakable." MA. ii. 232, quoting Pts. ii. 40 says this is the four ways, the four fruits and nibbāna; while samayavimokkha is the four meditations and the four attainments in immateriality. Vimokkha may have an objective reference to the things one is freed from; while vimutti may be the subjective experience of (mental) freedom. It is curious that the preliminaries to attaining samayavimokkha and asamayavimokkha appear to be identical. This may be due either to some error on the part of a scribe or transcriber, or to some lacuna in the text. For this passage, speaking of ever greater and greater powers won by a monk, may have intended to show that asamayavimokkha was a higher achievement than samayavimokkha.

<sup>9</sup> samayavimutti. Word occurs also at Sn. 54; A. iii. 349. And for samayavimutta see A. iii. 173; Kvu. 91; Pug. 4, 11.

<sup>10</sup> As at M. i. 204-5.

<sup>11</sup> MA. ii 232 explains all these terms by the fruit of arahantship.

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
3. Tatiya Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
3. The Third Division

30. Lesser Discourse on the Simile of the Pith

Cūḷa Sāropama Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattḥī
in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then the brahman Piṅgalakoccha<sup>1</sup> approached the Lord;
having approached,
he exchanged greetings with the Lord;
having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the brahman Piṅgalakoccha spoke thus to the Lord:

"Good Gotama, those who are leaders in religious life,<sup>2</sup> heads of companies,
heads of groups,

teachers of groups,
well known,
famous,
founders of sects,<sup>3</sup> much honoured<sup>4</sup> by the many folk,
that is to say,
Pūraṇa Kassapa,<sup>5</sup>
Makkhali of the Cowpen, Ajita of the Hair-blanket,
Pakudha Kaccāyana,
Sañjaya Belaṭṭha's son,<sup>6</sup> the Jain [246] (Nigaṇṭha) Nātha's son - did all these,
according to their own assertion,
understand<sup>1</sup>
or did they not all understand,
or did some understand,
and did some not understand?"

"Enough, brahman, let this be:

'Did all these,
according to their own assertion,
understand
or did they not all understand,
or did some understand,
and did some not understand?

I will teach you dhamma, brahman,
listen to it,
attend carefully,
and I will speak."

"Yes, Lord," the brahman Piṅgalakoccha answered the Lord in assent.

"Brahman, it is like a man walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,

looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
who passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
passes by the bark,
passes by the young shoots,
and who,
having cut down the branches and foliage,
might go away taking them with him
thinking they were the pith.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'Indeed this good man
does not know the pith,
he does not know the softwood,
he does not know the bark,
he does not know the young shoots,
he does not know the branches and foliage,
inasmuch as this good man,
walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
passes by the bark,
passes by the young shoots,
and having cut down the branches and foliage,
is going away taking them with him
thinking they are the pith.

So will he not get the good
that could be done by the pith

because it is the pith.'

■

Or, Brahman, it is like a man walking about
aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
who passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
passes by the bark,
and who,
having cut off the young shoots,
might go away
taking them with him
thinking they were the pith.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'Indeed this good man
does not know the pith,
he does not know the softwood,
he does not know the bark,
he does not know the young shoots,
he does not know the branches and foliage,
inasmuch as this good man,
walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
passes by the bark,

and having cut down the young shoots,
is going away taking them with him
thinking they are the pith.

So will he not get the good
that could be done by the pith
because it is the pith.'

■

[247] Or, Brahman, it is like a man walking about
aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
who passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
and who,
having cut off the bark,
might go away taking it with him
thinking it was the pith.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'Indeed this good man
does not know the pith,
he does not know the softwood,
he does not know the bark,
he does not know the young shoots,
he does not know the branches and foliage,
inasmuch as this good man,
walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith

of a great, stable and pithy tree,
passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
and having cut off the bark,
is going away taking it with him
thinking it is the pith.

So will he not get the good
that could be done by the pith
because it is the pith.'

■

Or, Brahman, it is like a man walking about
aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
who passes by the pith itself,
having cut out the softwood
might go away taking it with him
thinking it was the pith.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'Indeed this good man
does not know the pith,
he does not know the softwood,
he does not know the bark,
he does not know the young shoots,
he does not know the branches and foliage,
inasmuch as this good man,
walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,

looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
passes by the pith itself,
and having cut out of the softwood,
goes away taking it with him
thinking it is the pith.

So will he not get the good
that could be done by the pith
because it is the pith.'

■

Or, Brahman, it is like a man walking about
aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
and who,
having cut out the pith itself,
might go away taking it with him,
knowing it to be the pith.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'Indeed this good man knows the pith,
he knows the softwood,
he knows the bark,
he knows the young shoots,
he knows the branches and foliage,
inasmuch as this good man
walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith

of a great, stable and pithy tree,
having cut out the pith itself,
is going away taking it with him,
knowing it to be the pith.

So will he get the good
that could be done by the pith
because it is the pith.'

---

"Even so, brahman, some person here has gone forth from home into homelessness
through faith
and thinks:

'I am beset by birth,
ageing
and dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair.

I am beset by anguish,
overwhelmed by anguish.

[248] But perhaps the annihilation
of this whole mass of anguish
can be shown.'

He, gone forth thus,
receives gains,

honours,
fame.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he is satisfied,
his purpose is fulfilled.

Because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he exalts himself
disparages others,
saying:

'It is I who am a recipient,
being famous,
but those other monks
are little known,
of little esteem.'

And he does not develop the desire for nor does he strive for realising those other things which are higher and more excellent than gains
honours,
fame.

He becomes remiss and lax.

Brahman, it is like a man walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
who passes by the pith itself,

passes by the softwood,
passes by the bark,
passes by the young shoots,
and who,
having cut down the branches and foliage,
might go away taking them with him
thinking they were the pith.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'Indeed this good man
does not know the pith,
he does not know the softwood,
he does not know the bark,
he does not know the young shoots,
he does not know the branches and foliage,
inasmuch as this good man,
walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
passes by the bark,
passes by the young shoots,
and having cut down the branches and foliage,
is going away taking them with him
thinking they are the pith.

So will he not get the good
that could be done by the pith
because it is the pith.'

In accordance with this simile, brahman do I call this person.

---

But, brahman, some person here
comes to have gone forth from home into homelessness
through faith,
and thinks:

'I am beset by birth,
ageing
and dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
I am beset by anguish,
overwhelmed by anguish.

But perhaps the annihilation
of this whole mass of anguish
can be shown.'

He, gone forth thus,
receives gains,
honours,
fame.

He because of the gains,
honours,
fame,

he does not become satisfied,
his purpose is not fulfilled.

He because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not exalt himself,
he does not disparage others.

And he develops a desire for
and strives
for realising those other things which are higher and more excellent than gains,
honours,
fame.

He does not become remiss or lax.

He attains success in moral habit.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
becomes satisfied,
his purpose is fulfilled.

Because of this success in moral habit,
he exalts himself,
disparages others,
thinking:

'It is I who am of (good) moral habit,
lovely in character,
but these other monks
are of wrong moral habit,
evil in character.'

And he does not develop the desire for
nor does he strive for

realising those other things
which are higher and more excellent than success in moral habit.

He becomes remiss and lax.

Brahman, it is like a man walking about
aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
who passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
passes by the bark,
and who,
having cut off the young shoots,
might go away
taking them with him
thinking they were the pith.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'Indeed this good man
does not know the pith,
he does not know the softwood,
he does not know the bark,
he does not know the young shoots,
he does not know the branches and foliage,
inasmuch as this good man,
walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
passes by the pith itself,

passes by the softwood,
passes by the bark,
and having cut down the young shoots,
is going away taking them with him
thinking they are the pith.

So will he not get the good
that could be done by the pith
because it is the pith.'

In accordance with this simile, brahman
do I call this person.

---

But, brahman, some person here
comes to have gone forth from home into homelessness
through faith,
and thinks:

'I am beset by birth,
ageing
and dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
I am beset by anguish,
overwhelmed by anguish.

But perhaps the annihilation
of this whole mass of anguish
can be shown.'

He, gone forth thus,
receives gains,
honours,
fame.

He because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not become satisfied,
his purpose is not fulfilled.

He because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not exalt himself,
he does not disparage others.

And he develops a desire for
and strives
for realising those other things which are higher and more excellent than gains,
honours,
fame.

He does not become remiss or lax.

He attains success in moral habit.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others
and he develops a desire for
and strives

for realising those other things which are higher and more excellent than
success in moral habit.

He does not become remiss or lax.

He attains success in concentration.

He, because of this success in concentration,
becomes satisfied,
his purpose is fulfilled.

He, because of this success in concentration,
exalts himself,
disparages others,
saying:

'It is I who am concentrated,
their minds are wandering.'

And he does not develop a desire for
and strive
for realising those other things which are higher and more excellent than success in concentration.

He becomes remiss and lax.

Brahman, it is like a man walking about
aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
who passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
and who,
having cut off the bark,

might go away taking it with him
thinking it was the pith.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'Indeed this good man
does not know the pith,
he does not know the softwood,
he does not know the bark,
he does not know the young shoots,
he does not know the branches and foliage,
inasmuch as this good man,
walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
passes by the pith itself,
passes by the softwood,
and having cut off the bark,
is going away taking it with him
thinking it is the pith.

So will he not get the good
that could be done by the pith
because it is the pith.'

In accordance with this simile, brahman
do I call this person.

---

But, brahman, some person here
comes to have gone forth from home into homelessness
through faith,
and thinks:

'I am beset by birth,
ageing
and dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
I am beset by anguish,
overwhelmed by anguish.

But perhaps the annihilation
of this whole mass of anguish
can be shown.'

He, gone forth thus,
receives gains,
honours,
fame.

He because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not become satisfied,
his purpose is not fulfilled.

He because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not exalt himself,
he does not disparage others.

And he develops a desire for
and strives
for realising those other things which are higher and more excellent than gains,
honours,
fame.

He does not become remiss or lax.

He attains success in moral habit.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others
and he develops a desire for
and strives
for realising those other things which are higher and more excellent than
success in moral habit.

He does not become remiss or lax.

He attains success in concentration.

He, because of this success in concentration,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

He, because of this success in concentration,
does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others.

And he develops a desire for
and strives
for realising those other things
which are higher and more excellent than success in concentration.

He does not become remiss or lax.

He attains knowledge and vision.

He, because of this knowledge and vision,
becomes satisfied,
his purpose is fulfilled.

Because of this knowledge and vision,
he exalts himself,
disparages others,
saying:

'It is I who dwell knowing,
seeing,
but these other monks
dwell not knowing,
not seeing.'

And he does not develop a desire for
and strive
for realising those other things which are higher and more excellent than knowledge and vision.

He becomes remiss and lax.

Brahman, it is like a man walking about
aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
who passes by the pith itself,

having cut out the softwood
might go away taking it with him
thinking it was the pith.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'Indeed this good man
does not know the pith,
he does not know the softwood,
he does not know the bark,
he does not know the young shoots,
he does not know the branches and foliage,
inasmuch as this good man,
walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
passes by the pith itself,
and having cut out of the softwood,
goes away taking it with him
thinking it is the pith.

So will he not get the good
that could be done by the pith
because it is the pith.'

In accordance with this simile, brahman
do I call this person.

---

But, brahman, some person here
comes to have gone forth from home into homelessness
through faith,
and thinks:

'I am beset by birth,
ageing
and dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
I am beset by anguish,
overwhelmed by anguish.

But perhaps the annihilation
of this whole mass of anguish
can be shown.'

He, gone forth thus,
receives gains,
honours,
fame.

He because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not become satisfied,
his purpose is not fulfilled.

He because of the gains,
honours,
fame,
he does not exalt himself,
he does not disparage others.

And he develops a desire for
and strives
for realising those other things which are higher and more excellent than gains,
honours,
fame.

He does not become remiss or lax.

He attains success in moral habit.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

He, because of this success in moral habit,
does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others
and he develops a desire for
and strives
for realising those other things which are higher and more excellent than
success in moral habit.

He does not become remiss or lax.

He attains success in concentration.

He, because of this success in concentration,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

He, because of this success in concentration,
does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others.

And he develops a desire for
and strives
for realising those other things
which are higher and more excellent than success in concentration.

He does not become remiss or lax.

He attains knowledge and vision.

He, because of this knowledge and vision,
becomes satisfied,
but not yet is his purpose fulfilled.

Because of this knowledge and vision
he does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others.

And he develops a desire for
and strives
for realising those other things
which are higher and more excellent than knowledge and vision.

He does not become remiss or lax.

And what, brahman, are the things that are higher
and more excellent
than knowledge and vision?

Brahman, some monk here,
aloof from the pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
entering into the first meditation
which is accompanied by initial thought
and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,

and is rapturous and joyful,
abides in it.

This, brahman, is a state
that is higher
and more excellent
than knowledge and vision.

And again, brahman, the monk,
by allaying initial and discursive thought,
with the mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters into
and abides in
the second meditation,
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration,
and is rapturous and joyful.

This, brahman, is a state
that is higher
and more excellent
than knowledge and vision.

And again, brahman, the monk,
by the fading out of rapture,
dwells with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious;
and he experiences in his person
that joy of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful';
and entering into the third meditation, he abides in it.

This, brahman, is a state
that is higher

and more excellent
than knowledge and vision.

And [252] again, brahman, the monk
by getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
and by the going down
of his former pleasures and sorrows, entering into the fourth meditation,
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness,
abides in it.

This, brahman, is a state
that is higher
and more excellent
than knowledge and vision.

And again, brahman, a monk,
by passing quite beyond all perception of material shapes,
by the going down of perception of sensory reactions,
by not attending to perceptions of variety,
thinking:
'Ether is unending,' entering on the plane of infinite ether,
abides in it.

This, brahman, is a state
that is higher
and more excellent
than knowledge and vision.

And again, brahman, a monk,
by passing quite beyond the plane of infinite ether,

thinking:

'Consciousness is unending,' entering on the plane of infinite consciousness,
abides in it.

This, brahman, is a state
that is higher
and more excellent
than knowledge and vision.

And again, brahman, a monk,
by passing quite beyond the plane of infinite consciousness,
thinking,
'There is not anything,' entering on the plane of no-thing,
abides in it.

This, brahman, is a state
that is higher
and more excellent
than knowledge and vision.

And again, brahman, a monk,
by passing quite beyond the plane of no-thing, entering on the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception,
abides in it.

This, brahman, is a state
that is higher
and more excellent
than knowledge and vision.

And again, brahman, a monk,
by passing quite beyond the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception, entering on the stopping of perception and feeling,
abides in it.

And having seen by intuitive wisdom
his cankers are utterly destroyed.

This too, brahman, is a state
that is higher
and more excellent
than knowledge and vision.

These, brahman, are the states that are higher and more excellent
than knowledge and vision.

Brahman, it is like a man walking about
aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,
and who,
having cut out the pith itself,
might go away taking it with him,
knowing it to be the pith.

A man with vision,
having seen him,
might say:

'Indeed this good man knows the pith,
he knows the softwood,
he knows the bark,
he knows the young shoots,
he knows the branches and foliage,
inasmuch as this good man
walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith
of a great, stable and pithy tree,

having cut out the pith itself,
is going away taking it with him,
knowing it to be the pith.

So will he get the good
that could be done by the pith
because it is the pith.'

In accordance with this simile, brahman,
do I call this person.

So it is, brahman, that this Brahma-faring is not for advantage in gains, honours, fame,
it is not for advantage in moral habit,
it is not for advantage in concentration,
it is not for advantage in knowledge and vision.

That, brahman, which is unshakable [253] freedom of mind, this is the goal, brahman,
of this Brahma-faring,
this the pith,
this the culmination."

When this had been said, Piṅgalakoccha the brahman spoke thus to the Lord:

"It is wonderful, good Gotama, good Gotama it is wonderful.

It is as if, good Gotama,
one might set upright what had been upset,
or might disclose what was covered,
or point out the way
to one who had gone astray,
or might bring an oil-lamp into the darkness
so that those with vision might see material shapes -

even so is dhamma made clear
in many a figure by the good Gotama.

I am going to the revered Gotama for refuge,
and to dhamma
and to the Order of monks.

May the good Gotama accept me
as a lay-follower,
one gone for refuge from today forth
for as long as life lasts."

Lesser Discourse on the Simile of the Pith:
the Tenth

---

<sup>1</sup> MA. ii. 232 says Koccha was his name, and he was called piṅgala because he was tawny. A similar meeting with the following conversation with the Lord is ascribed to the wanderer Subhadda at D. ii. 150-51.

<sup>2</sup> samaṇabrāhmaṇā, but see reasons given at Dial. ii. 165 n. for translating here as above; also see M. i. 227.

<sup>3</sup> titthakarā, see Fur. Dial. i. 143, n.

<sup>4</sup> sādhu, MA. ii. 233 sādhu, sundarā, sappurisa.

<sup>5</sup> The doctrines of these six "heretical" teachers are set forth at D. i. 58-64. Their names occur also at M. i. 250. MA. ii. 233-34, in explaining them, resembles DA. 142-44. On Pūraṇa Kassapa and Makkhali Gosālā, see A.L. Basham, History and Doctrines of the Ājīvikas, 1950.

<sup>6</sup> MA. ii. 234 = DA. i. 144 says Belatṭhassa putto. So "the son of the Belatṭhi slave-girl" of Dial. ii. 166 is not corroborated by these two commentarial passages. But there is also the reading Belatṭhiputto as at M. i. 547.

<sup>7</sup> According to MA. ii. 234, if their assertion was one that led onwards, then they understood.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
4. Mahā Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
4. The Greater Division of the Pairs

31. Lesser Discourse in Gosīṅga

Cūḷa Gosīṅga Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Nādikā in the brick hall.

Now at that time<sup>1</sup> the venerable Anuruddha
and the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila were staying in a grove<sup>2</sup> in the Gosīṅga sāl-wood.

Then the Lord,
emerging from solitary meditation towards evening, approached that grove in the Gosīṅga sāl-wood.

The keeper of the grove saw the Lord coming from a distance;

and seeing him,
he spoke thus to the Lord:

"Do not, recluse,
enter this grove;
there are three young men of family staying here desiring Self;<sup>3</sup> do not cause them discomfort."

The venerable Anuruddha heard the keeper of the grove conferring with the Lord;
having heard,
he spoke thus to the keeper of the grove:

"Do not, good grove-keeper, impede the Lord.

It is our teacher,
the Lord,
who is arriving."

Then the venerable Anuruddha approached the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila;
having approached,
he spoke thus to the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila:

"Go forward, venerable ones,
go forward, venerable ones;
our teacher,
the Lord
is arriving."

Then the venerable Anuruddha
and the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila, having gone out to meet the Lord, one received his bowl and robe, one made ready a seat,

one set out water for (washing) the feet.

Then the Lord sat down on the seat made ready;
as he was sitting down
the Lord bathed his feet.

Then these venerable ones,
having greeted the Lord,
sat down at a respectful distance.

As the venerable Anuruddha was sitting down at a respectful distance,
the Lord spoke thus to him:

"I hope that things are going well with you, Anuruddhas,<sup>4</sup>
I hope you are keeping going,
I hope you are not short of almsfood?"

[258] "Things are going well, Lord, we are keeping going, Lord, and, Lord,
we are not short of almsfood."

---

"I hope that you, Anuruddhas, are living all together on friendly terms
and harmonious,
as milk and water blend,
regarding one another with the eye of affection?"<sup>5</sup>

"Yes, certainly, Lord,
we are living all together on friendly terms
and harmonious,
as milk and water blend,
regarding one another with the eye of affection."

"And how is it that you, Anuruddhas,
are living all together on friendly terms
and harmonious,
as milk and water blend,
regarding one another with the eye of affection?"

"As to this, Lord, it occurred to me:<sup>6</sup>

'Indeed it is a gain for me,
indeed it is well gotten by me,
that I am living with such fellow Brahma-farers.'

On account of this, Lord,
for these venerable ones
friendliness<sup>7</sup> as to acts of body, whether openly or in private,
has risen up in me,
friendliness as to acts of speech,
whether openly or in private,
has risen up in me,
friendliness as to acts of thought,
whether openly or in private,
has risen up in me.

Because of this, Lord,
it occurred to me:

Now, suppose that I,
having surrendered my own mind,

should live only according to the mind
of these venerable ones?

So I, Lord,
having surrendered my own mind,
am living only according to the mind
of these venerable ones.

Lord, we have divers bodies,<sup>8</sup> but assuredly only one mind."

■

And the venerable Nandiya too spoke thus to the Lord:

"As to this, Lord, it occurred to me:

'Indeed it is a gain for me,
indeed it is well gotten by me,
that I am living with such fellow Brahma-farers.'

On account of this, Lord,
for these venerable ones
friendliness as to acts of body,
whether openly or in private,
has risen up in me,
friendliness as to acts of speech,
whether openly or in private,
has risen up in me,
friendliness as to acts of thought,
whether openly or in private,
has risen up in me.

Because of this, Lord,
it occurred to me:

Now, suppose that I,
having surrendered my own mind,
should live only according to the mind
of these venerable ones?

So I, Lord,
having surrendered my own mind,
am living only according to the mind
of these venerable ones.

Lord, we have divers bodies,
but assuredly only one mind."

■

And the venerable Kimbila too spoke thus to the Lord:

"As to this, Lord, it occurred to me:

'Indeed it is a gain for me,
indeed it is well gotten by me,
that I am living with such fellow Brahma-farers.'

On account of this, Lord,
for these venerable ones
friendliness as to acts of body,
whether openly or in private,
has risen up in me,
friendliness as to acts of speech,
whether openly or in private,
has risen up in me,
friendliness as to acts of thought,
whether openly or in private,
has risen up in me.

Because of this, Lord,
it occurred to me:

Now, suppose that I,
having surrendered my own mind,
should live only according to the mind
of these venerable ones?

So I, Lord,
having surrendered my own mind,
am living only according to the mind
of these venerable ones.

Lord, we have divers bodies,
but assuredly only one mind."

"Thus it is that we, Lord, are living all together on friendly [259] terms
and harmonious,
as milk and water blend,
regarding one another with the eye of affection."

"It is good, Anuruddhas,
it is good.

---

And I hope that you, Anuruddhas, are living diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute?"

"Yes, certainly, Lord,
we are living diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute."

"And how is it that you, Anuruddhas,
are living diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute?"

"As to this, Lord, whichever of us returns first<sup>9</sup>
from (going to) a village for almsfood, he makes ready a seat,
he sets out water for drinking and water for washing (the feet), he sets out a refuse-bowl.

Whoever returns last
from (going to) a village for almsfood, if there are the remains of a meal and if he so desires,
he eats them;
if he does not desire to do so,
he throws them out where there are no crops or drops them into water where there are no living creatures;
he puts up the seat,
he puts away the water for drinking and the water for washing, he puts away the refuse-bowl, he sweeps the refectory.

Whoever sees a vessel for drinking water or a vessel for washing water or a vessel (for water) for rinsing after evacuation, void and empty,
he sets out (water).

If it is impossible for him (to do this) by a movement of his hand, having invited a companion to help us by signalling (to him) with the hand, we set out (the water);
but we do not, Lord,
for such a reason,
break into speech.

And then we, Lord,
once in every five nights sit down together for talk on dhamma.

It is thus, Lord,
that we are dwelling diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute." 10

"It is good, Anuruddhas,
it is good.

---

But have you, Anuruddhas, thus living diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute,
attained states of further-men, the excellent knowledge and insight
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort?" 11

"How could that not be, Lord?

For here we, Lord,
for as long as we like,
aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind, entering on the first meditation<sup>12</sup>
which is accompanied by initial thought and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful,
abide therein,

This, Lord, is for us
a state of further-men, an excellent knowledge and insight
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort
reached while we are dwelling diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute."

[260] "It is good, Anuruddhas,
it is good.

■

But did you, Anuruddhas,
by passing quite beyond this abiding,
by allaying this abiding,
reach another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort?"

"How could that not be, Lord?

Here we, Lord, for as long as we like,
by allaying initial thought and discursive thought,

with the mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point, enter into
and abide
in the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration,
and is rapturous and joyful.

By passing quite beyond that abiding, Lord,
by allaying that abiding,
another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort,
is reached."

"It is good, Anuruddhas,
it is good.

■

But did you, Anuruddhas,
by passing quite beyond this abiding,
by allaying this abiding,
reach another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort?"

"How could that not be, Lord?

Here we, Lord, for as long as we like,
by the fading out of rapture,
dwell with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious;
and experience in our persons

that joy of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,' and we enter into
and abide
in the third meditation.

By passing quite beyond that abiding, Lord,
by allaying that abiding,
another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort,
is reached."

"It is good, Anuruddhas,
it is good.

■

But did you, Anuruddhas,
by passing quite beyond this abiding,
by allaying this abiding,
reach another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort?"

"How could that not be, Lord?

Here we, Lord, for as long as we like,
by getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of our former pleasures and sorrows,
enter into
and abide
in the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,

and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

By passing quite beyond that abiding, Lord,
by allaying that abiding,
another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort,
is reached."

"It is good, Anuruddhas,
it is good.

■

But did you, Anuruddhas,
by passing quite beyond this abiding,
by allaying this abiding,
reach another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort?"

[261] "How could that not be, Lord?

Here we, Lord, for as long as we like,
by passing quite beyond all perception of material shapes,
by the going down of perception of sensory reactions,
by not attending to perception of variety,
thinking,
'Ether is unending,'
entering on the plane of infinite ether,
abide in it.

By passing quite beyond that abiding, Lord,
by allaying that abiding,

another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort,
is reached."

"It is good, Anuruddhas,
it is good.

■

But did you, Anuruddhas,
by passing quite beyond this abiding,
by allaying this abiding,
reach another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort?"

"How could that not be, Lord?

Here we, Lord, for as long as we like,
by passing quite beyond the plane of infinite ether,
thinking,
'Consciousness is unending,' entering on the plane of infinite consciousness,
abide in it.

By passing quite beyond that abiding, Lord,
by allaying that abiding,
another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort,
is reached."

"It is good, Anuruddhas,
it is good.

■

But did you, Anuruddhas,
by passing quite beyond this abiding,
by allaying this abiding,
reach another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort?"

"How could that not be, Lord?

Here we, Lord, for as long as we like,
by passing quite beyond the plane of infinite consciousness,
thinking,
'There is not anything,' entering on the plane of no-thing,
abide in it.

By passing quite beyond that abiding, Lord,
by allaying that abiding,
another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort,
is reached."

"It is good, Anuruddhas,
it is good.

■

But did you, Anuruddhas,
by passing quite beyond this abiding,

by allaying this abiding,
reach another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort?"

"How could that not be, Lord?

Here we, Lord, for as long as we like,
by passing quite beyond the plane of no-thing,
entering on the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception, we abide in it.

By passing quite beyond that abiding, Lord,
by allaying that abiding,
another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort,
is reached."

"It is good, Anuruddhas,
it is good.

■

But did you, Anuruddhas,
by passing quite beyond this abiding,
by allaying this abiding,
reach another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort?"

"How could that not be, Lord?

Here we, Lord, for as long as we like,
by passing quite beyond the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception,
entering on the stopping of perception and feeling,
abide in it,
and having seen through intuitive wisdom, our cankers come to be utterly destroyed.

By passing quite beyond that abiding, Lord, by allaying that abiding,
another state of further-men,
an excellent knowledge and vision befitting the ariyans,
an abiding in comfort,
is reached.

But we, Lord, do not behold another abiding in comfort
that is higher
or more excellent than this abiding in comfort,"

"It is good, Anuruddhas,
it is good.

There is no other abiding in comfort
that is higher
or more excellent than this abiding in comfort."

Then the Lord,
having gladdened,
roused,
incited,
delighted the [262] venerable Anuruddha
and the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila
with talk on dhamma,
rising from his seat,
departed.

Then when the venerable Anuruddha
and the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila, having escorted the Lord, had turned back again from there,
the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila
spoke thus to the venerable Anuruddha:

"Now, did we ever speak thus to the venerable Anuruddha:

'We are acquirers of this or that attainment in abiding,'<sup>13</sup> in virtue of which the venerable Anuruddha when face to face with the Lord, made this known of us up to the destruction of the cankers?"

"The venerable ones have not said to me:

We are acquirers of this and that attainment in abiding.'

But by my mind
the minds of the venerable ones are known to me, to the effect that the venerable ones are acquirers of this and that attainment in abiding.

And devatās also told me this matter:

'These venerable ones are acquirers of this and that attainment in abiding.'

It is in this way that the questions put by the Lord were answered."

Then Dīgha Parajana,<sup>14</sup> a yakkha,<sup>15</sup> approached the Lord;
having approached,

having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance,
Dīgha Parajana, the yakkha, spoke thus to the Lord:

"Indeed, it is profitable, Lord, for the Vajjis, it is well-gotten and profitable for the Vajji people<sup>16</sup>
that the Tathāgata is staying (here),
the perfected one,
the fully Self-awakened One,
and these three young men of family:
the venerable Anuruddha
and the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila."

The earth-devas, having heard the sound of Dīgha Parajana, the yakkha,
made this sound heard:

"Indeed, it is profitable, Lord, for the Vajjis,
it is well-gotten and profitable for the Vajji people
that the Tathāgata is staying (here),
the perfected one,
the fully Self-awakened One,
and these three young men of family:
the venerable Anuruddha
and the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila."

The four great Regent devas<sup>17</sup> having heard the sound of the earth-devas,
made this sound heard:

"Indeed, it is profitable, Lord, for the Vajjis,
it is well-gotten and profitable for the Vajji people

that the Tathāgata is staying (here),
the perfected one,
the fully Self-awakened One,
and these three young men of family:
the venerable Anuruddha
and the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila."

The devas of the Thirty-three,
having heard the sound of the four great Regent devas,
made this sound heard:

"Indeed, it is profitable, Lord, for the Vajjis,
it is well-gotten and profitable for the Vajji people
that the Tathāgata is staying (here),
the perfected one,
the fully Self-awakened One,
and these three young men of family:
the venerable Anuruddha
and the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila."

The Yama devas,
having heard the sound of the four great Regent devas,
made this sound heard:

"Indeed, it is profitable, Lord, for the Vajjis,
it is well-gotten and profitable for the Vajji people
that the Tathāgata is staying (here),
the perfected one,
the fully Self-awakened One,
and these three young men of family:
the venerable Anuruddha
and the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila."

The Happy devas,
having heard the sound of the Yama devas,
made this sound heard:

"Indeed, it is profitable, Lord, for the Vajjis,
it is well-gotten and profitable for the Vajji people
that the Tathāgata is staying (here),
the perfected one,
the fully Self-awakened One,
and these three young men of family:
the venerable Anuruddha
and the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila."

The devas who delight in creation, having heard the sound of the Happy devas,
made this sound heard:

"Indeed, it is profitable, Lord, for the Vajjis,
it is well-gotten and profitable for the Vajji people
that the Tathāgata is staying (here),
the perfected one,
the fully Self-awakened One,
and these three young men of family:
the venerable Anuruddha
and the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila."

The devas who have power over the creation of others, having heard the sound of the devas who delight in creation,
made this sound heard:

"Indeed, it is profitable, Lord, for the Vajjis,
it is well-gotten and profitable for the Vajji people
that the Tathāgata is staying (here),
the perfected one,

the fully Self-awakened One,
and these three young men of family:
the venerable Anuruddha
and the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila."

The devas in the retinue of Brahmā, having heard the sound of the devas who have power over the creations of others,
made this sound heard:

"Indeed, it is profitable, Lord, for the Vajjis,
it is well-gotten and profitable for the Vajji people
that the Tathāgata is staying (here),
the perfected one,
[263] the fully Self-awakened One,
and these three young men of family:
the venerable Anuruddha
and the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila."

Thus in this moment, in this second,
these venerable ones became known as far as the Brahma-world.

"That is so, Dīgha,
that is so, Dīgha,."

If, Dīgha,
that family
from which these three young men of family
have gone forth from home into homelessness
were to remember these three young men of family
with a believing mind,

then for a long time
would there be welfare and happiness for that family.

If, Dīgha,
that group of families
from which these three young men of family
have gone forth from home into homelessness
were to remember these three young men of family
with a believing mind,
then for a long time
would there be welfare and happiness for that family.

If, Dīgha,
that village
from which these three young men of family
have gone forth from home into homelessness
were to remember these three young men of family
with a believing mind,
then for a long time
would there be welfare and happiness for that family.

If, Dīgha,
that little town
from which these three young men of family
have gone forth from home into homelessness
were to remember these three young men of family
with a believing mind,
then for a long time
would there be welfare and happiness for that family.

If, Dīgha,
that town
from which these three young men of family
have gone forth from home into homelessness
were to remember these three young men of family
with a believing mind,

then for a long time
would there be welfare and happiness for that family.

If, Dīgha,
that district
from which these three young men of family
have gone forth from home into homelessness
were to remember these three young men of family
with a believing mind,
then for a long time
would there be welfare and happiness for that family.

If, Dīgha,
all nobles
were to remember these three young men of family
with a believing mind,
then for a long time
would there be welfare and happiness for that family.

If, Dīgha,
all brahmans
were to remember these three young men of family
with a believing mind,
then for a long time
would there be welfare and happiness for that family.

If, Dīgha,
all merchants
were to remember these three young men of family
with a believing mind,
then for a long time
would there be welfare and happiness for that family.

If, Dīgha,
all workers,
were to remember these three young men of family

with a believing mind,
then for a long time
would there be welfare and happiness for that family.

And if, Dīgha,
the world
with its devas,
with its Māras,
with its Brahmās,
if creation
with recluses and brahmans,
with devas and men,
were to remember these three young men of family
with a believing mind,
then for a long time
would there be welfare and happiness for the world
with its devas,
with its Māras,
with its Brahmās,
if creation
with recluses and brahmans,
with devas and men.

See, Dīgha,
how these three young men of family are faring along for the welfare of the manyfolk,
for the happiness of the manyfolk,
out of compassion for the world,
for the good,
the welfare,
the happiness of devas and men."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, Dīgha, Parajana the yakkha Dīgha, rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Lesser Discourse in Gosīṅga:
The First

---

<sup>1</sup> This Sutta, as far as p. 259, is the same as M. iii. 155-57, except for a few variations, which include the locations given for the events. Cf. also Vin. i. 350-52 (and see B.D. iv. 501 ff. for notes); and also M. i. 462 and Vin. ii. 182.

<sup>2</sup> MA. ii. 235-36 speaks of dāya as arañña, jungle or forest.

<sup>3</sup> attakāmarūpā.

<sup>4</sup> The plural Anuruddhā is here used for the three names of the three separate monks.

<sup>5</sup> Stock, as at M. i. 206, 398, iii. 156: A. i. 70, iii. 67, 104; S. iv. 225.

<sup>6</sup> Anuruddha himself is here supposed to be speaking.

<sup>7</sup> As at M. i. 222.

<sup>8</sup> kāyā.

<sup>9</sup> Cf. also Vin. i. 157.

<sup>10</sup> Vin. i. 352 goes on differently from here.

<sup>11</sup> M. iii. 157 goes on differently from here.

<sup>12</sup> At Vin. iii. 92, iv. 24 the jhānas form part of the definition of uttari-manussa-dhamma.

<sup>13</sup> Worldly and transcendental, beginning with the first jhāna, MA. ii. 244.

<sup>14</sup> Mentioned at D. iii. 205 among the yakkhas to whom Gotama's followers may appeal for protection. MA. ii. 244 says Dīgha was a devarājā, and Parajana was his name.

<sup>15</sup> There being no exact English equivalent for words denoting non-human beings, they are best left untranslated.

<sup>16</sup> MA. ii. 244 says it is profitable for them to see the Lord and the three disciples, to honour them, to give them gifts of faith, and to hear dhamma.

<sup>17</sup> As at Vin. i. 12, iii. 18-19.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
4. Mahā Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
4. The Greater Division of the Pairs

32. Greater Discourse in Gosīṅga

Mahā Gosīṅga Sutta

---

[263]

Thus have I heard:

Thus have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying in a grove in the Gosīṅga sāl-wood together with MA.y famous disciples who were elders:
with the venerable Sāriputta and the venerable Moggallāna the Great and the venerable Kassapa the Great and [264] the venerable Anuruddha and the venerable Revata<sup>1</sup>
and the venerable Ānanda
and with other famous disciples who were elders.

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great,
emerging from solitary meditation towards the evening, approached the venerable Kassapa the Great;

having approached,
he spoke thus to the venerable Kassapa the Great:

"Let us go, reverend Kassapa, we will approach the venerable Sāriputta
so as to hear dhamma."

"Yes, your reverence,"
the venerable Kassapa the Great answered the venerable Moggallāna the Great in assent.

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great
and the venerable Kassapa the Great
and the venerable Anuruddha
approached the venerable Sāriputta
so as to hear dhamma.

The venerable Ānanda saw the venerable Moggallāna the Great and the venerable Kassapa the Great
and the venerable Anuruddha approaching the venerable Sāriputta
so as to hear dhamma;
having seen them,
he approached the venerable Revata;
having approached,
he spoke thus to the venerable Revata:
"Reverend Revata, some who are true men are approaching the venerable Sāriputta
so as to hear dhamma;
let us go, reverend Revata,
we will approach the venerable Sāriputta
so as to hear dhamma."

"Yes, your reverence,"
the venerable Revata answered the venerable Ānanda in assent.

Then the venerable Revata
and the venerable Ānanda
approached the venerable Sāriputta
so as to hear dhamma.

The venerable Sāriputta saw the venerable Revata
and the venerable Ānanda
coming in the distance;
having seen them,
he spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda:

"Let the venerable Ānanda come;
good is the coming of the venerable Ānanda
who is the Lord's attendant,
the Lord's companion.

Delightful,<sup>2</sup> reverend Ānanda,
is the Gosīṅga sāl-wood,
it is a clear moonlight night,
the sāl-trees are in full blossom,
methinks deva-like scents are being wafted around.

By what type of monk, reverend Ānanda,
would the Gosīṅga sāl-wood be illumined?"

"In this case, reverend Sāriputta, a monk comes to be one who has heard much,
who masters what he has heard,
who stores [265] what he has heard;
those teachings which are lovely at the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely at the end,
which with the spirit and the letter
declare the Brahma-faring which is completely fulfilled, utterly pure -

such teachings come to be much heard by him,
borne in mind,
repeated out loud,
pondered over in the mind,
well comprehended by view;
he teaches dhamma to the four assemblies
with correct and fluent lines and sentences for the rooting out of (latent) propensities.<sup>3</sup>

By a monk of such a type, reverend Sāriputta, would the Gosiṅga sāl-wood be illumined."

■

When this had been said,
the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the venerable Revata:

"It has been explained, reverend Revata, by the venerable Ānanda
according to his own capacity.

On this point we are now asking the venerable Revata, saying:

Delightful, reverend Revata,
is the Gosiṅga sāl-wood,
it is a clear moonlight night,
the sāl-trees are in full blossom,
methinks deva-like scents are being wafted around.

By what type of monk, reverend Revata,
would the Gosiṅga sāl-wood be illumined?"

"In this connection, reverend Sāriputta,
a monk delights in solitary meditation,
he is delighted by solitary meditation,
he is intent on mental tranquillity within,
his meditation is uninterrupted,

he is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.<sup>4</sup>

By a monk of such a type, reverend Sāriputta, would the Gosiṅga sāl-wood be illumined."

■

When this had been said,
the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the venerable Anuruddha:

"It has been explained, reverend Anuruddha, by the venerable Revata according to his own capacity.

On this point we are now asking the venerable Anuruddha:

Delightful, reverend Anuruddha,
is the Gosiṅga sāl-wood,
it is a clear moonlight night,
the sāl-trees are in full blossom,
methinks deva-like scents are being wafted around.

By what type of monk, reverend Anuruddha,
would the Gosiṅga sāl-wood be illumined?"

"In this connection, reverend Sāriputta, a monk surveys the thousand worlds<sup>5</sup> with purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men.

Reverend Sāriputta, as a MA. with vision might survey a thousand concentric circles
from the top of a long house, so, reverend Sāriputta, does a monk survey the thousand worlds
with purified deva-vision,
surpassing that of men.

By a monk of such a type, reverend Sāriputta,
would the Gosīṅga sāl-wood be illumined."

■

[266] When this had been said,
the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the venerable Kassapa the Great:

"It has been explained, reverend Kassapa, by the reverend Anuruddha according to his own capacity.

On this point we are asking the venerable Kassapa the Great:

Delightful, reverend Kassapa,
is the Gosīṅga sāl-wood,
it is a clear moonlight night,
the sāl-trees are in full blossom,
methinks deva-like scents are being wafted around.

By what type of monk, reverend Kassapa,
[214] would the Gosīṅga sāl-wood be illumined?"

"In this connection, reverend Sāriputta, a monk is both a forest-dweller himself
and one who praises forest-dwelling;
he is an almsman himself
and one who praises being an almsman;
he is a rag-robe wearer himself
and one who praises the wearing of rag-robles;
he wears three robes himself
and is one who praises the wearing of three robes;
he is of few wishes himself
and is one who praises being of few wishes;
he is contented himself
and is one who praises contentment;
he is aloof himself
and is one who praises aloofness;

he is ungregarious himself
and is one who praises ungregariousness;
he is of stirred up energy himself
and is one who praises stirring up energy;
he is possessed of moral habit himself
and is one who praises success in moral habit;
he is possessed of concentration himself
and is one who praises success in concentration;
he is possessed of intuitive wisdom himself
and is one who praises success in intuitive wisdom;
he is possessed of freedom himself
and is one who praises success in freedom;
he is possessed of the knowledge and vision of freedom himself and is one who praises success in the knowledge and vision of freedom.<sup>6</sup>

By a monk of such a type, reverend Sāriputta,
would the Gosiṅga sāl-wood be illumined."

■

When this had been said, the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the venerable Moggallāna the Great:

"It has been explained, reverend Moggallāna, by the venerable Kassapa the Great according to his own capacity.

On this point we are now asking the venerable Moggallāna the Great:

Delightful, reverend Moggallāna,
is the Gosiṅga sāl-wood,
it is a clear moonlight night,
the sāl-trees are in full blossom,
methinks deva-like scents are being wafted around.

By what type of monk, reverend Moggallāna,
would the Gosiṅga sāl-wood be illumined?"

"In this connection, reverend Sāriputta, two monks are talking on Further dhamma;<sup>7</sup> they ask one another questions;
in answering [267] one another's questions
they respond and do not fail,
and their talk on dhamma goes forward.

By a monk of such a type, reverend Sāriputta,
would the Gosiṅga sāl-wood be illumined."

■

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great
spoke thus to the venerable Sāriputta:

"It has been answered by all of us, reverend Sāriputta,
each one according to his own capacity.

On this point we are now asking the venerable Sāriputta:

Delightful, reverend Sāriputta,
is the Gosiṅga sāl-wood,
it is a clear moonlight night,
the sāl-trees are in full blossom,
methinks deva-like scents are being wafted around.

By what type of monk, reverend Sāriputta,
would the Gosiṅga sāl-wood be illumined?"

"In this connection, reverend Moggallāna,
a monk has rule over mind,
he is not under mind's rule;
whatever attainment of abiding<sup>8</sup> he wishes to abide in in the morning, in that attainment of abiding he abides in the morning;
whatever attainment of abiding he wishes to abide in at midday,
in that attainment of abiding he abides at midday;

whatever attainment of abiding he wishes to abide in in the evening, in that attainment of abiding he abides in the evening.

Reverend Moggallāna,
as a king<sup>9</sup> or a king's chief minister might have a chest for clothes filled with differently dyed cloths, so that no matter which pair of cloths he wished to put on in the morning, he could put on that self-same pair of cloths in the morning;
no matter which pair of cloths he wished to put on at midday,
he could put on that self-same pair of cloths at midday;
no matter which pair of cloths he wished to put on in the evening, he could put on that self-same pair of cloths in the evening - even so, reverend Moggallāna,
a monk rules over mind,
is not under mind's rule;
whatever attainment of abiding he wishes to abide in in the morning,
in that attainment of abiding he abides in the morning;
whatever attainment of abiding he wishes to abide in at midday,
in that attainment of abiding he abides at midday;
whatever attainment of abiding he wishes to abide in in the evening,
in that attainment of abiding he abides in the evening.

By a monk of such a type, reverend Moggallāna,
would the Gosīṅga sāl-wood be illumined."

■

Then the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to these venerable ones:

"It has been explained by all of us, your reverences,
each one according to his own capacity.

Let us go, your reverences, we [268] will approach the Lord;
having approached,

we will tell this matter to the Lord; as the Lord explains it to us so we will remember it."

"Very well, your reverence," these venerable ones answered the venerable Sāriputta in assent.

---

Then these venerable ones approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
they sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance,
the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the Lord:

"Now, Lord, the venerable Revata
and the venerable Ānanda
approached me in order to hear dhamma.

And I, Lord, saw the venerable Revata and the venerable Ānanda coming in the distance,
and on seeing the venerable Ānanda, I spoke thus:

'Let the venerable Ānanda come;
good is the coming of the venerable Ānanda
who is the Lord's attendant,
the Lord's companion.

Delightful, reverend Ānanda,
is the Gosiṅga sāl-wood,
it is a clear moonlight night,

the sāl-trees are in full blossom,
methinks deva-like scents are being wafted around.

By what type of monk, reverend Ānanda
would the Gosīṅga sāl-wood be illumined?'

When I had spoken thus, Lord the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to me:

'In this connection, reverend Sāriputta, a monk comes to be one who has heard much,
who masters what he has heard,
who stores what he has heard;
those teachings which are lovely at the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely at the end,
which with the spirit and the letter
declare the Brahma-faring
which is completely fulfilled, utterly pure -
such teachings come to be much heard by him,
borne in mind,
repeated out loud,
pondered over in the mind,
well comprehended by view;
he teaches dhamma to the four assemblies
with correct and fluent lines and sentences
for the rooting out of (latent) propensities.

By a monk of such a type, reverend Sāriputta,
would the Gosīṅga sāl-wood be illumined."

"It is good, Sāriputta,
it is good. || ||

It is so that Ānanda,
in answering you properly,

should answer.

For Sāriputta, Ānanda is one who has heard much,
who masters what he has heard,
who stores what he has heard;
those teachings which are lovely at the beginning,
lovely in the middle and lovely at the end,
which with the spirit and the letter
declare the Brahma-faring
which is completely fulfilled, utterly pure -
such teachings come to be much heard by him,
borne in mind,
repeated out loud,
pondered over in the mind,
well comprehended by view;
he teaches dhamma to the four assemblies
with correct and fluent lines and sentences
for the rooting out of (latent) propensities."

■

"When this had been said, Lord,
I spoke thus to the venerable Revata:

'It has been answered, reverend Revata,
by the venerable Ānanda
according to his own capacity.

On this point we are now asking the venerable Revata, saying:

Delightful, reverend Revata,
is the Gosīṅga sāl-wood,
it is a clear moonlight night,
the sāl-trees are in full blossom,
methinks deva-like scents are being wafted around.

By what type of monk, reverend Revata,
would the Gosīṅga sāl-wood be illumined?"

"In this connection, reverend Sāriputta,
a monk delights in solitary meditation, [269] he is delighted by solitary meditation,
he is intent on mental tranquillity within,
his meditation is uninterrupted,
he is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places.

By a monk of such a type, reverend Sāriputta,
would the Gosīṅga sāl-wood be illumined."

"It is good, Sāriputta,
it is good.

It is so that Revata,
in answering you properly,
should answer.

For, Sāriputta, Revata is one who delights in solitary meditation, who is delighted by solitary meditation,
he is intent on mental tranquillity within,
his meditation is uninterrupted,
he is endowed with vision,
a cultivator of empty places."

■

"When this had been said, Lord, I spoke thus to the venerable Anuruddha:

'It has been answered, reverend Anuruddha,
by the venerable Revata according to his own capacity.

On this point we are now asking the venerable Anuruddha:

Delightful, reverend Anuruddha,
is the Gosīṅga sāl-wood,
it is a clear moonlight night,
the sāl-trees are in full blossom,
methinks deva-like scents are being wafted around.

By what type of monk, reverend Anuruddha,
would the Gosīṅga sāl-wood be illumined?"

"In this connection, reverend Sāriputta, a monk surveys the thousand worlds with purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men.

Reverend Sāriputta, as a MA. with vision
might survey a thousand concentric circles
from the top of a long house,
so, reverend Sāriputta, does a monk survey the thousand worlds
with purified deva-vision,
surpassing that of men.

By a monk of such a type, reverend Sāriputta,
would the Gosīṅga sāl-wood be illumined."

"It is good, Sāriputta, it is good.

It is so that Anuruddha,
in answering you properly,
should answer.

For, Sāriputta, Anuruddha surveys the thousand worlds with purified deva-vision,
surpassing that of men."

■

"When this had been said, Lord, I spoke thus to the venerable Kassapa the Great:"It has been explained, reverend Kassapa, by the reverend Anuruddha according to his own capacity.

On this point we are asking the venerable Kassapa the Great:

Delightful, reverend Kassapa,
is the Gosiṅga sāl-wood,
it is a clear moonlight night,
the sāl-trees are in full blossom,
methinks deva-like scents are being wafted around.

By what type of monk, reverend Kassapa,
would the Gosiṅga sāl-wood be illumined?"

"In this connection, reverend Sāriputta,
a monk is both a forest-dweller himself
and one who praises forest-dwelling;
he is an almsman himself
and one who praises being an almsman;
he is a rag-robe wearer himself
and one who praises the wearing of rag-robles;
he wears three robes himself
and is one who praises the wearing of three robes;
he is of few wishes himself
and is one who praises being of few wishes;
he is contented himself
and is one who praises contentment;
he is aloof himself
and is one who praises aloofness;
he is ungregarious himself
and is one who praises ungregariousness;
he is of stirred up energy himself
and is one who praises stirring up energy;
he is possessed of moral habit himself
and is one who praises success in moral habit;

he is possessed of concentration himself
and is one who praises success in concentration;
he is possessed of intuitive wisdom himself
and is one who praises success in intuitive wisdom;
he is possessed of freedom himself
and is one who praises success in freedom;
he is possessed of the knowledge and vision of freedom himself and is one who praises success in the knowledge and vision of freedom.

By a monk of such a type, reverend Sāriputta,
would the Gosīṅga sāl-wood be illumined."

"It is good, Sāriputta,
it is good.

It is so that Kassapa,
in answering you properly,
should answer.

For Sāriputta,
Kassapa is a forest-dweller himself and is one who praises forest-dwelling;
he is an almsman himself
and one who praises being an almsman;
he is a rag-robe wearer himself
and one who praises the wearing of rag-robles;
he wears three robes himself
and is one who praises the wearing of three robes;
he is of few wishes himself
and is one who praises being of few wishes;
he is contented himself
and is one who praises contentment;
he is aloof himself
and is one who praises aloofness;
he is ungregarious himself
and is one who praises ungregariousness;

he is of stirred up energy himself
and is one who praises stirring up energy;
he is possessed of moral habit himself
and is one who praises success in moral habit;
he is possessed of concentration himself
and is one who praises success in concentration;
he is possessed of intuitive wisdom himself
and is one who praises success in intuitive wisdom;
he is possessed of freedom himself
and is one who praises success in freedom;
he is possessed of the knowledge and vision of freedom himself and is one who praises success in the knowledge and vision of freedom.

■

"When this had been said, Lord, I spoke thus to the venerable [270] Moggallāna the Great:

"It has been explained, reverend Moggallāna,
by the venerable Kassapa the Great according to his own capacity.

On this point we are now asking the venerable Moggallāna the Great:

Delightful, reverend Moggallāna,
is the Gosīṅga sāl-wood,
it is a clear moonlight night,
the sāl-trees are in full blossom,
methinks deva-like scents are being wafted around.

By what type of monk, reverend Moggallāna,
would the Gosīṅga sāl-wood be illumined?"

"In this connection, reverend Sāriputta, two monks are talking on Further dhamma;
they ask one another questions;
in answering one another's questions

they respond and do not fail,
and their talk on dhamma goes forward.

By a monk of such a type, reverend Sāriputta,
would the Gosiṅga sāl-wood be illumined."

"It is good, Sāriputta,
it is good.

It is so that Moggallāna,
in answering you properly,
should answer.

For, Sāriputta, Moggallāna is a talker on dhamma."<sup>10</sup>

■

When this had been said, the venerable Moggallāna the Great spoke thus to
the Lord:

"Then I Lord, spoke thus to the venerable Sāriputta:

"It has been answered by all of us, reverend Sāriputta,
each one according to his own capacity.

On this point we are now asking the venerable Sāriputta:

Delightful, reverend Sāriputta,
is the Gosiṅga sāl-wood,
it is a clear moonlight night,
the sāl-trees are in full blossom,
methinks deva-like scents are being wafted around.

By what type of monk, reverend Sāriputta,
would the Gosiṅga sāl-wood be illumined?"

"In this connection, reverend Moggallāna,
a monk has rule over mind,
he is not under mind's rule;
whatever attainment of abiding he wishes to abide in in the morning,
in that attainment of abiding he abides in the morning;
whatever attainment of abiding he wishes to abide in at midday,
in that attainment of abiding he abides at midday;
whatever attainment of abiding he wishes to abide in in the evening,
in that attainment of abiding he abides in the evening.

Reverend Moggallāna,
as a king or a king's chief minister
might have a chest for clothes
filled with differently dyed cloths,
so that no matter which pair of cloths he wished to put on in the morning,
he could put on that self-same pair of cloths in the morning;
no matter which pair of cloths he wished to put on at midday,
he could put on that self-same pair of cloths at midday;
no matter which pair of cloths he wished to put on in the evening,
he could put on that self-same pair of cloths in the evening -
even so, reverend Moggallāna,
a monk rules over mind,
is not under mind's rule;
whatever attainment of abiding he wishes to abide in in the morning,
in that attainment of abiding he abides in the morning;
whatever attainment of abiding he wishes to abide in at midday,
in that attainment of abiding he abides at midday;
whatever attainment of abiding he wishes to abide in in the evening,
in that attainment of abiding he abides in the evening.

By a monk of such a type, reverend Moggallāna,
would the Gosīṅga sāl-wood be illumined."

"It is good, Moggallāna,
it is good.

It is so that Sāriputta,
in answering you properly,
should answer.

For, Moggallāna, Sāriputta has rule over mind,
he is not under mind's rule;
whatever attainment of abiding he wishes to abide in in the morning
in that attainment of abiding he abides in the morning;
whatever attainment of abiding he wishes to abide in at midday,
in that attainment of abiding he abides at midday;
whatever attainment of abiding he [271] wishes to abide in in the evening, in that attainment of abiding he abides in the evening." 11

■

When this had been said, the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the Lord:

"Now, by whom was it well spoken, Lord?"

"It was well spoken by you all in turn, Sāriputta.

But now hear from me by what type of monk the Gosīṅga sāl-wood would be illumined.

In this connection, Sāriputta, a monk, returning from alms-gathering after the meal,
sits down cross-legged,
the back erect,
having raised up mindfulness in front of him,
and thinking:

'I will not quit this cross-legged (position) until my mind is freed from the cankers without any residuum (for rebirth) remaining.'

By such a type of monk, Sāriputta,
would the Gosīṅga sāl-wood be illumined."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these venerable ones rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Greater Discourse in Gosīṅga: the Second

---

<sup>1</sup> Cf. A. i. 24. MA. ii. 247 says Revata the Doubter is meant here, not Revata of the Acacia Wood (Khadiravaniya-Revata).

<sup>2</sup> MA. ii. 259 says delightfulness is twofold: that of woods and that of people. Here both kinds are meant, for the wood is full of flowers and scents, and here the highest person in the world, the All awakened one, is staying with 30,000 renowned monks.

<sup>3</sup> MA. ii. 254 says there are seven. See D. iii. 254. Ānanda is called chief of those who have heard much at A. i. 23.

<sup>4</sup> As at M. i. 33. Revata is called chief of meditators at A. i. 24.

<sup>5</sup> MA. ii. 254, "thousand world-elements." Anuruddha is chief of those with deva-sight, A. i. 23.

<sup>6</sup> At A. i. 23 Kassapa the Great is chief of those who uphold the austere practices.

<sup>7</sup> abhidhamma.

<sup>8</sup> MA. ii. 255 says worldly or other-worldly.

<sup>9</sup> Simile at S. v. 71; A. iv. 230.

<sup>10</sup> Moggallāna is called chief of those of psychic power, A. i. 23. MA. ii. 256 explains that "abhidhamma-men, having come to knowledge of subtle points, having increased their vision, can achieve a supermundane state." Non-abhidhamma-men get muddled between "own doctrine" (sakavāda) and "other doctrine" (paravāda).

<sup>11</sup> A. i. 23, he is chief in great wisdom.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
4. Mahā Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
4. The Greater Division of the Pairs

33. Greater Discourse on the Cowherd

Mahā Gopālaka Sutta

---

Thus have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī
in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered one," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Monks, possessed of eleven qualities a cowherd cannot be one to take care of a herd of cattle and to make it prosperous.

Of what eleven?

Herein, monks, a cowherd is not one who is versed in material shapes,<sup>2</sup>
he is not skilled in (distinguishing) marks,
he does not remove flies' eggs,
he does not dress sores,
he makes no fumigation,<sup>3</sup> he does not know what is a ford,
he does not know [272] what is a watering-place,
he does not know what is a road,
he is not skilled in pastures,
he is one who milks dry,
he pays no special respect
to those bulls who are the sires and leaders of the herd.

Monks, if a cowherd is possessed of these eleven qualities, he cannot be one to take care of the herd and make it prosperous.

■

Even so, monks, if a monk is possessed of eleven qualities, he cannot become one to reach growth,
increase
and maturity in this dhamma and discipline.

With what eleven?

Herein, monks, a monk is one who is not versed in material shapes,
he is not skilled in (distinguishing) marks,
he does not remove flies' eggs,
he does not dress sores,
he makes no fumigation,
he does not know what is a ford,
he does not know what is a watering-place,
he does not know what is a road,
he is not skilled in pastures,
he is one who milks dry,

he pays no special respect
to those monks who are elders
and have gone forth many a day and are the sires and leaders of the Order.

---

And how, monks, is a monk not versed in material shapes?

Herein, monks, a monk
in regard to material shape does not comprehend as it really is that all material shape is of the four great elements and that material shape is derived from the four great elements.<sup>4</sup>

Even so, monks, is a monk not versed in material shapes.

---

And how, monks, is a monk
not skilled in (distinguishing) marks?

Herein, monks, a monk
does not comprehend as it really is:
A fool is marked by his deed,
a sage is marked by his deed.<sup>5</sup>

Even so, monks, is a monk
not skilled in (distinguishing) marks.

---

And how, monks, is a monk
not one to remove flies' eggs?

Herein,<sup>6</sup> monks, a monk gives in to thought about sense-pleasures that has arisen,
does not get rid of it,
does not avert it,
does not make an end of it,
does not send it to non-existence.

■

He gives in
to thought of malevolence that has arisen,
does not get rid of it,
does not avert it,
does not make an end of it,
does not send it to non-existence.

■

He gives in
to thought of harming that has arisen,
does not get rid of it,
does not avert it,
does not make an end of it,
does not send it to non-existence.

■

He gives in
to evil unskilled mental objects that have constantly arisen, does not get rid of them,
does not avert them,

does not make an end of them, does not send them to non-existence.

Even so, monks, is a monk
one who does not remove flies' eggs.

---

And how, monks, is a monk one who does not dress a sore?

Herein, monks, a monk, having seen material shape with the eye, is entranced by its general appearance,<sup>7</sup>
is entranced by its detail.

[273] Although coveting and dejection<sup>8</sup> -
evil unskilled states -
might get power over one who fares along with his organ of sight uncontrolled,
he does not proceed to control it, he does not guard the organ of sight, he does not come to control over the organ of sight.

■

Having heard a sound with the ear,
is entranced by its general appearance,
is entranced by its detail.

Although coveting and dejection -
evil unskilled states -
might get power over one who fares along with his organ of hearing uncontrolled,
he does not proceed to control it,

he does not guard the organ of hearing, he does not come to control over the organ of hearing.

■

Having smelt a smell with the nose,
is entranced by its general appearance,
is entranced by its detail.

Although coveting and dejection -
evil unskilled states -
might get power over one who fares along with his organ of smell uncontrolled,
he does not proceed to control it, he does not guard the organ of smell, he does not come to control over the organ of smell.

■

Having savoured a taste with the tongue,
is entranced by its general appearance,
is entranced by its detail.

Although coveting and dejection -
evil unskilled states -
might get power over one who fares along with his organ of taste uncontrolled,
he does not proceed to control it, he does not guard the organ of taste, he does not come to control over the organ of taste.

■

Having felt a touch with the body,
is entranced by its general appearance,
is entranced by its detail.

Although coveting and dejection -
evil unskilled states -
might get power over one who fares along with his organ of touch uncontrolled,
he does not proceed to control it, he does not guard the organ of touch, he does not come to control over the organ of touch.

■

Having cognised a mental object with the mind,
is entranced by its general appearance,
is entranced by its detail.

Although coveting and dejection -
evil unskilled states -
might get power over one who fares along with his organ of mind uncontrolled,
he does not proceed to control it, he does not guard the organ of mind, he does not come to control over the organ of mind.

Even so, monks, is a monk one who does not dress a sore.

---

And how, monks, is a monk
one who does not make a fumigation?

Herein, monks, a monk does not teach dhamma to others in detail
as he has heard it,
as he has borne it in mind.

Even so, monks, is a monk
one who does not make a fumigation.

---

And how, monks, is a monk
one who does not know a ford?

Herein, monks, a monk
who from time to time
has approached those monks who have heard much,
to whom the tradition has been handed down,
experts in dhamma,
experts in discipline,
experts in the summaries,
yet he does not question them, does not interrogate them, saying:

'How is this, revered ones?

What is the meaning of this, revered ones?'

These venerable ones do not disclose to him what was not disclosed, they do not make clear
what was not made clear,
and on various doubtful points in dhamma they do not resolve his doubts.

Even so, monks, is a monk
one who does not know a ford.

---

And how, monks, is a monk one who does not know a watering-place?

Herein, monks, a monk,
while dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Tathāgata are being taught, does not acquire knowledge of the goal,<sup>9</sup> does not acquire knowledge of dhamma, does not acquire the delight
that is connected with dhamma.

Even so, monks, is a monk one who does not know a watering-place.

---

And how, monks, is a monk one who does not know a road?

Herein, monks, a monk does not comprehend the ariyan eightfold Way as it really is.

Even so, monks, is a monk
one who does not know the road.

---

[274] And how, monks, is a monk not skilled in pastures?

Herein, monks, a monk does not comprehend as they really are the four arousings of mindfulness.

Even so, monks, is a monk
one not skilled in pastures.

---

And how, monks, is a monk
one who milks dry?

Herein, monks, when householders with faith invite a monk to take<sup>10</sup> the requisites of robe-material,
almsfood,
lodgings
and medicines for the sick, he does not know moderation in accepting such.

Even so, monks, is a monk
one who milks dry.

---

And how, monks, is a monk
one who pays no special respect to the monks who are elders,
gone forth many a day,
the sires and leaders of the Order?

Herein, monks, a monk<sup>11</sup> does not make friendliness as to acts of body rise up either openly or in private
for those monks who are elders,
gone forth many a day,
the sires and leaders of the Order;
he does not make friendliness as to acts of speech rise up either openly or in private,
he does not make friendliness as to acts of thought rise up either openly or in private.

Even so, monks, is a monk
one who pays no special respect
to the monks who are elders,
gone forth many a day,
the sires and leaders of the Order.

Monks, possessed of these eleven qualities a monk cannot become one to reach growth,
increase,
maturity in this dhamma and discipline.

§

Monks, possessed of eleven qualities, a cowherd can become one to take care of a herd of cattle and make it prosperous.

With what eleven?

Herein, monks, a cowherd is versed in material shapes,
he is skilled in (distinguishing) marks,
he removes flies' eggs,

he dresses sores,
he makes a fumigation,
he knows what is a ford,
he knows what is a watering-place,
he knows what is a road,
he is skilled in pastures,
he is one who does not milk dry,
he pays special respect
to those bulls who are the sires and leaders of the herd.

Monks, if a cowherd is possessed of these eleven qualities, he can become one to take care of the herd
and make it prosperous.

■

Even so, monks, if a monk is possessed of eleven qualities, he can become one to reach growth,
increase
and maturity
in this dhamma and discipline.

Of what eleven?

Herein, monks, a monk
is one who is versed in material shapes,
he is skilled in (distinguishing) marks,
he removes flies' eggs,
he dresses sores,
he makes a fumigation,
he knows what is a ford,
he knows what is a watering-place,
he [275] knows what is a road,
he is skilled in pastures,
he is one who does not milk dry,
he pays special respect

to those monks who are elders
and have gone forth many a day
and are the sires and leaders of the Order.

---

And how, monks, is a monk versed in material shapes?

Herein, monks, a monk
in regard to material shape comprehends as it really is that all material shape is of the four great elements and that material shape is derived from the four great elements.

Even so, monks, is a monk versed in material shapes.

---

And how, monks, is a monk skilled in (distinguishing) marks?

Herein, monks, a monk comprehends as it really is:

A fool is marked by his deed,
a sage is marked by his deed.

Even so, monks, is a monk skilled in (distinguishing) marks.

---

And how, monks, is a monk one who removes flies' eggs?

Herein, monks, a monk does not give in to thought about sense-pleasures that has arisen,
he gets rid of it,
averts it,
makes an end of it,
sends it to non-existence.

■

He does not give in
to thoughts of malevolence that have arisen that has arisen,
he gets rid of it,
averts it,
makes an end of it,
sends it to non-existence.

■

He does not give in
to thoughts of harming that have arisen that has arisen,
he gets rid of it,
averts it,
makes an end of it,
sends it to non-existence.

■

He does not give in
he does not give in
to evil unskilled mental objects that have constantly arisen,
he gets rid of them,
averts them,

makes an end of them,
sends them to non-existence.

Even so, monks, is a monk
one who removes flies' eggs.

---

And how, monks, is a monk
one who dresses a sore?

Herein, monks, a monk,
having seen material shape with the eye,
is not entranced by its general appearance,
is not entranced by the detail.

Because covetousness and dejection -
evil unskilled states -
might get power over one who fares along with his organ of sight uncontrolled,
he proceeds to control it,
he guards the organ of sight,
he comes to control over the organ of sight.

■

Having heard a sound with the ear,
is not entranced by its general appearance,
is not entranced by the detail.

Because covetousness and dejection -
evil unskilled states -
might get power over one who fares along with his organ of hearing uncontrolled,

he proceeds to control it,
he guards the organ of hearing,
he comes to control over the organ of hearing.

■

Having smelt a smell with the nose,
is not entranced by its general appearance,
is not entranced by the detail.

Because covetousness and dejection -
evil unskilled states -
might get power over one who fares along with his organ of smell uncontrolled,
he proceeds to control it,
he guards the organ of smell,
he comes to control over the organ of smell.

■

Having tasted a taste with the tongue,
is not entranced by its general appearance,
is not entranced by the detail.

Because covetousness and dejection -
evil unskilled states -
might get power over one who fares along with his organ of taste uncontrolled,
he proceeds to control it,
he guards the organ of taste,
he comes to control over the organ of taste.

■

Having felt a touch with the body,
is not entranced by its general appearance,
is not entranced by the detail.

Because covetousness and dejection -
evil unskilled states -
might get power over one who fares along with his organ of touch uncontrolled,
he proceeds to control it,
he guards the organ of touch,
he comes to control over the organ of touch.

■

Having cognised a mental object with the mind, he is not entranced with its general appearance, he is not entranced with the detail.

Because coveting and dejection -
evil unskilled states -
might get power over one who fares along with his organ of mind uncontrolled,
he proceeds to control it,
he guards the organ of mind,
he comes to control over the organ of mind.

Even so, monks, is a monk
one who dresses a sore.

---

And how, monks, is a monk
one who makes a fumigation?

Herein, monks, a monk teaches dhamma to others in detail
as he has heard it,
as he has borne it in mind.

Even so, monks, is a monk
one who makes a fumigation.

---

[276] And how, monks, is a monk
one who knows what is a ford?

Herein, monks, a monk
who from time to time
has approached those monks who have heard much,
to whom the tradition has been handed down,
experts in dhamma,
experts in discipline,
experts in the summaries,
and questions them,
interrogates them, saying:

'How is this, revered ones?

What is the meaning of this, revered ones?'

These venerable ones disclose to him
what was not disclosed, they make clear
what was not made clear,
and on various doubtful points of dhamma they resolve his doubts.

Even so, monks, is a monk
one who knows what is a ford.

---

And how, monks, is a monk
one who knows what is a watering-place?

Herein, monks, a monk,
while dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Tathāgata are being taught, acquires knowledge of the goal,
acquires knowledge of dhamma,
acquires the delight that is connected with dhamma.

Even so, monks, is a monk
one who knows what is a watering-place.

---

And how, monks, is a monk
one who knows what is a road?

Herein, monks, a monk comprehends the ariyan eightfold Way as it really is.

Even so, monks, is a monk
one who knows what is a road.

---

And how, monks, is a monk
one who is skilled in pastures?

Herein, monks, a monk comprehends as they really are
the four arousings of mindfulness.

Even so, monks, is a monk
one who is skilled in pastures.

---

And how, monks, is a monk
one who does not milk dry?

Herein, monks, when a householder with faith invites a monk to take the requisites of robe-material,
almsfood,
lodgings
and medicines for the sick, he knows moderation in accepting such.

Even so, monks, is a monk
one who does not milk dry.

---

And how, monks, is a monk one who pays special respect to the monks who are elders,
gone forth many a day,
the sires and leaders of the Order?

Herein, monks, a monk makes friendliness as to acts of body rise up whether openly or in private
for those monks who are elders,
gone forth many a day,

the sires and leaders of the Order;
he makes friendliness as to acts of speech rise up whether openly or in private,
he makes friendliness as to acts of thought
rise up whether openly or in private.

Even so, monks, is a monk one who pays special respect to the monks who are elders,
gone forth many a day,
the sires and leaders of the Order.

Monks, possessed of these eleven qualities,
a monk can become one to reach growth,
increase
and maturity
in this dhamma and discipline.

[277] Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Greater Discourse on the Cowherd: the Third

---

<sup>1</sup> As at A. v. 347.

<sup>2</sup> Cannot recognise the animals by counting them or by their colour, MA. ii. 258.

<sup>3</sup> Against gadflies, mosquitoes, etc., so during the rains the harassed cows cannot eat as much grass as they require, MA. ii. 259.

<sup>4</sup> M. i. 185.

<sup>5</sup> A. i. 102.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. M. i. 11.

<sup>7</sup> Vbh. 372; and cf. D. i. 70; A. ii. 16; K.S. iv. 63.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. M. i. 180.

<sup>9</sup> As at M. i. 37, ii. 206.

<sup>10</sup> abhihaṭṭhum pavārenti. Cf. abhiharati at Vin. iv. 82, and see B.D. ii. 329, n. 2.

<sup>11</sup> As at M. i. 206.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
4. Mahā Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
4. The Greater Division of the Pairs

34. Lesser Discourse on the Cowherd

Cūḷa Gopālaka Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying among the Vajjis at Ukkācelā on the banks of the river Ganges.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered one,"
these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Formerly, monks,
an incompetent cowherd of Magadha in the last month of the rains
at harvest time,

without considering the hither bank of the river Ganges,
without considering the further bank, drove his cattle across to the further bank
in Suvidehā
at a place where there was no ford.

Then, monks, the cattle huddled together in the middle of the stream of the river Ganges, got into difficulties and misfortune there.

What was the cause?

It was, monks,
that that incompetent cowherd of Magadha in the last month of the rains
at harvest time,
without considering the hither bank of the river Ganges,
without considering the further bank, drove the cattle across to the further bank
in Suvidehā
at a place where there was no ford.

Even so, monks,
any recluses or brahmans who are unskilled about this world, unskilled about the world beyond, unskilled about Māra's realm,<sup>1</sup> unskilled about what is not Māra's realm,<sup>2</sup> unskilled about Death's realm,<sup>1</sup> unskilled about what is not Death's realm<sup>2</sup> - whoever think they should listen to these (recluses and brahmans) and put their faith in them, that will be for a long time for their woe and anguish.

Once upon a time, monks,
a competent cowherd of Magadha
in the last month of the rains

at harvest time,
having considered the hither bank of the river Ganges, having considered the further [277] bank,
drove his cattle across to the further bank
in Suvidehā
at a place where there was a ford.

First of all he drove across those bulls who were the sires and leaders of the herd - these, having cut across the stream of the Ganges, went safely beyond.

Then he drove across
the sturdy bullocks
and young steers -
these, also, having cut across the stream of the Ganges,
went safely beyond.

Then he drove across the half-grown bull-calves and heifers - these too, having cut across the stream of the Ganges,
went safely beyond.

Then he drove across
the weaker calves -
these too, having cut across the stream of the Ganges,
went safely beyond.

At that time
there was a young new-born calf which, by following the lowing of its mother, also cut across the stream of the Ganges and went safely beyond.

What was the cause of this?

It was, monks,
that that cowherd of Magadha
in the last month of the rains
at harvest time,
having considered the hither bank of the river Ganges,
having considered the further bank,
drove his cattle across to the further bank
in Suvidehā
at a place where there was a ford.

Even so, monks,
any recluses or brahmans who are skilled about this world, skilled about the world beyond,
skilled about Māra's realm,
skilled about what is not Māra's realm,
skilled about Death's realm,
skilled about what is not Death's realm -
whoever think they should listen to these (recluses and brahmans)
and put their faith in them,
that will be for a long time for their welfare and happiness.

Monks, like unto those bulls
who were the sires and leaders of the herd, and who, having cut across the stream of the Ganges,
went safely beyond,
are those monks who are perfected ones,
the cankers destroyed,
who have lived the life,
done what was to be done,
laid down the burden,
attained their own goal,
the fetters of becoming being utterly destroyed,
and who are freed by perfect profound knowledge.

For these,
having cut across Māra's stream,<sup>3</sup> have gone safely beyond.<sup>4</sup>

Monks, like unto those sturdy bullocks
and young steers
who, having cut across the stream of the Ganges,
went safely beyond,
are those monks who,
by destroying the five fetters binding to this lower world, are of spontaneous uprising,
and being ones who attain nibbāna there, are not liable to return from that world.

For these also,
having cut across Māra's stream,
will go safely beyond.

[279] Monks, like unto those half-grown bull-calves and heifers who, having cut across the stream of the Ganges,
went safely beyond,
are those monks who,
by destroying the three fetters, by reducing attachment, aversion and confusion, are once-returners
who, having come back again to this world once only,
will make an end of anguish.

For these also,
having cut across Māra's stream,
will go safely beyond.

Monks, like unto those weaker calves
who, having cut across the stream of the Ganges,
went safely beyond,

are those monks who, by destroying the three fetters, are stream-attainers,
not liable for the abyss,
assured,
bound for awakening.

For these also,
having cut across Māra's stream,
will go safely beyond.

Monks, like unto that young new-born calf which, by following the lowing of its mother,
also cut across the stream of the Ganges
and went safely beyond, are those monks who are striving for dhamma, striving for faith.

For these also,
having cut across Māra's stream,
will go safely beyond.

Now I, monks, am skilled about this world,
skilled about the world beyond,
skilled about Māra's realm,
skilled about what is not Māra's realm,
skilled about Death's realm,
skilled about what is not Death's realm.

To those who think they should listen to me and place faith in me, there will be welfare and happiness
for a long time."

Thus spoke the Lord;
the Well-farer having said this,
the Teacher then spoke thus:

"This world, the world beyond, are well explained by the one who knows,
And what is accessible by Māra and what is not accessible by Death.

By the Self-awakened One, comprehending, thoroughly knowing every world,
Opened is the door of the Undying<sup>5</sup> for reaching security - nibbāna.

Cut across is the stream of the Evil One, shattered, destroyed;
Let there be abundant rapture, monks, let security be reached."

Lesser Discourse on the Cowherd:
the Fourth

---

<sup>1</sup> The triple stage of existence: kāma, rūpa, arūpa, MA. ii. 266.

<sup>2</sup> The nine transcendental things, MA. ii. 266.

<sup>3</sup> The stream of taṇhā, craving, MA. ii. 267.

<sup>4</sup> Beyond saṅsāra to nibbāna, MA. ii. 267.

<sup>5</sup> The ariyan Way, MA. ii. 267.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
4. Mahā Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
4. The Greater Division of the Pairs

35. Lesser Discourse to Saccaka

Cūḷa Saccaka Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Vesālī
in the Great Grove in the hall of the Gabled House.

Now at that time,
staying at Vesālī was Saccaka, the son of Jains,<sup>1</sup> a controversialist,
giving himself out as learned,
much honoured by the manyfolk.<sup>2</sup>

As he was going about Vesālī, he used to utter this speech:

"I do not see that recluse or brahman,
the head of a company,

the head of a group,
the teacher of a group,<sup>3</sup> even if he is claiming to be a perfected one,
a fully Self-awakened one,
who, when taken in hand by me,
speech by speech,
would not tremble,
would not shake,
would not shake violently,
and from whose armpits
sweat would not pour.

Even if I were to take in hand,
speech by speech,
an insensate post,
even that,
when taken in hand by me,
speech by speech,
would tremble,
would shake,
would shake violently -
let alone a human being."

Then the venerable Assaji,<sup>4</sup>
having dressed in the morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
entered Vesālī for almsfood.

Saccaka, the son of Jains,
who was always pacing up and down,
always roaming about on foot,<sup>5</sup> saw the venerable Assaji coming in the distance;
having seen him,
he approached the venerable Assaji;
having approached,
he exchanged greetings with the venerable Assaji,

and having exchanged greetings of courtesy and friendliness,
he stood at a respectful distance.

As he was standing at a respectful distance,
Saccaka, the son of Jains, spoke thus to the venerable Assaji:

"How, good Assaji, does the recluse Gotama train disciples?"

And what are the divisions by which a great part of the recluse Gotama's instruction for disciples proceeds?"

"Thus, Aggivessana,<sup>6</sup> does the Lord train disciples, and by such [281] divisions
does a great part of the Lord's instruction for disciples proceed:

'Material shape, monks, is impermanent,
feeling is impermanent,
perception is impermanent,
the habitual tendencies are impermanent,
consciousness is impermanent.

Material shape, monks, is not self,
feeling is not self,
perception is not self,
the habitual tendencies are not self,
consciousness is not self;

all conditioned things<sup>7</sup> are impermanent, all things<sup>8</sup> are not self.'

Thus, Aggivessana, does the Lord train disciples,
and by such divisions

does the great part of the Lord's instruction for disciples proceed."

"Indeed, we heard with disappointment,<sup>9</sup> good Assaji, those of us who heard that the recluse Gotama spoke like this.

Perhaps we could meet the good Gotama somewhere,
sometime,
perhaps there might be some conversation, perhaps we could dissuade him
from that pernicious view."

Now at that time
at least five hundred Licchavis were gathered together in the conference hall on some business or other.

Then Saccaka, the son of Jains, approached those Licchavis;
having approached,
he spoke thus to those Licchavis:

"Let the good Licchavis come forward,
let the good Licchavis come forward.

Today there will be conversation between me and the recluse Gotama.

If the recluse Gotama takes up his stand against me, as one of his well known disciples, the monk Assaji,
has taken up his stand against me, even as<sup>10</sup> a powerful man, having taken hold of the fleece of a long-fleeced ram, might tug it towards him,
might tug it backwards,

might tug it forwards and backwards,
even so will I,
speech by speech,
tug the recluse Gotama forwards,
tug him backwards,
tug him forwards and backwards.

And even as a powerful distiller of spirituous liquor, having sunk his crate for spirituous liquor in a deep pool of water, taking it by a corner would tug it forwards,
would tug it backwards,
would tug it forwards and backwards,
even so will I,
speech by speech,
tug the recluse Gotama forwards,
tug him backwards,
tug him forwards and backwards.

And even as a powerful drunkard of abandoned life, having taken hold of a hair-sieve at the corner, would shake it upwards,
would shake it downwards, would toss it about,<sup>11</sup> even [282] so will I,
speech by speech,
shake the recluse Gotama upwards, shake him downwards,
toss him about.

And even as a full-grown elephant, sixty years old,
having plunged into a deep tank, plays at the game called the 'merry washing,'<sup>12</sup> even so, methinks,

will I play the game of 'merry washing' with the recluse Gotama.

Let the good Licchavis come forward,
let the good Licchavis come forward;
today there will be conversation
between me and the recluse Gotama."

Then some Licchavis spoke thus:

"How can the recluse Gotama refute Saccaka, the son of Jains, when it is Saccaka, the son of Jains, who will refute the recluse Gotama?"

Some Licchavis spoke thus:

"How can he, being only<sup>13</sup> Saccaka, the son of Jains, refute the Lord
when it is the Lord who will refute Saccaka, the son of Jains?"

Then Saccaka, the son of Jains, surrounded by at least five hundred Licchavis,
approached the Great Wood,
and the hall of the Gabled House.

Now at that time
several monks were pacing up and down in the open air.

Then Saccaka, the son of Jains, approached these monks;
having approached,
he spoke thus to these monks:

"Good sirs, where is this revered Gotama staying now?"

We are anxious to see the revered Gotama."

"Aggivessana,
this Lord,
having plunged into the Great Wood, is sitting down for the day-sojourn
at the root of a tree."

Then Saccaka, the son of Jains, together with a great company of Licchavis,
having plunged into the Great Wood,
approached the Lord;
having approached,
he exchanged greetings with the Lord;
having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

And these Licchavis too - some having greeted the Lord,
sat down at a respectful distance;

some [283] exchanged greetings with the Lord, and having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy,
they sat down at a respectful distance;

some, having saluted the Lord with outstretched palms,
sat down at a respectful distance;

some, having made known their names and clans in the Lord's presence,
sat down at a respectful distance;

some, having become silent,
sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance,
Saccaka, the son of Jains, spoke thus to the Lord:

"I would ask the revered Gotama about a point if the revered Gotama grants me permission<sup>14</sup> to ask a question."15

Ask, Āggivessana, whatever you like."

"How does the good Gotama train disciples?

And what are the divisions by which a great part of the good Gotama's instructions for disciples proceeds?"

"Thus do I, Āggivessana, train disciples, and by such divisions
does the great part of my instruction for disciples proceed:

'Material shape, monks, is impermanent,
feeling is impermanent,
perception is impermanent,
the habitual tendencies are impermanent,
consciousness is impermanent.

Material shape, monks, is not self,
feeling is not self,
perception is not self,
the habitual tendencies are not self,
consciousness is not self;

all conditioned things are impermanent, all things are not self.'

Thus, Āggivessana, do I train disciples,
and by such divisions
does the great part of my instruction for disciples proceed."

"A simile occurs to me, good Gotama."

"Speak it forth, Āggivessana," the Lord said.

"Good Gotama, as<sup>16</sup> all seed growths and vegetable growths
come to growth,
increase
and maturity
because all depend on the earth and are based on the earth, and it is thus that these seed growths
and vegetable growths
come to growth,
increase
and maturity;

as, good Gotama, all those strenuous occupations that are carried on depend on the earth
and are based on the earth, and it is thus that these strenuous occupations are carried on;

so, good Gotama, that person<sup>17</sup> whose self is material shape,<sup>18</sup> because it is based on material shape, begets either merit or demerit,
this person whose self is feeling, because it is based on feeling,
begets either merit or demerit,
this person whose self is perception, because it is based [284] on perception,
begets either merit or demerit,
this person whose self is the habitual tendencies, because it is based on the habitual tendencies,
begets either merit or demerit,
this person whose self is consciousness, because it is based on consciousness,
begets either merit or demerit."

"Can it be, Aggivessana, that you speak thus:

'Material shape is my self,
feeling is my self,
perception is my self,
the habitual tendencies are my self,
consciousness is my self?'

"But I, good Gotama, do speak thus:

Material shape is my self,
feeling is my self,
perception is my self,
the habitual tendencies are my self,
consciousness is my self.

And so does this great concourse."

"What has this great concourse to do with you, Aggivessana?

Please do you, Aggivessana, unravel just your own words."

"But I, good Gotama, speak thus:

Material shape is my self,
feeling is my self,
perception is my self,
the habitual tendencies are my self,
consciousness is my self.

"Well then, Aggivessana,
I will question you in return about this matter.

You may answer me as you please.

What do you think about this, Aggivessana?

Would a noble anointed king,
such as King Pasenadi of Kosala
or such as King Ajātasattu of Magadha,
the son of the lady of Videhā, have power in his own territory to put to death
one deserving to be put to death,
to plunder
one deserving to be plundered,
to banish
one deserving to be banished?"

"Good Gotama, a noble anointed king,
such as King Pasenadi of Kosala
or such as King Ajātasattu of Magadha,
the son of the lady of Videhā, would have power in his own territory
to put to death
one deserving to be put to death,
to plunder
one deserving to be plundered,
to banish
one deserving to be banished.

Why, good Gotama,
even among these companies and groups, namely of the Vajjis and Mallas, there exists the power in their own territories
to put to death
one deserving to be put to death,
to plunder
one deserving to be plundered,
to banish
one deserving to be banished.

How much more than a noble anointed king,
such as King Pasenadi of Kosala
or such as King Ajātasattu of Magadha,
the son of the lady of Videhā?

He would have the power, good Gotama, and he deserves to have the power."

"What do you think about this, Aggivessana?

When you speak thus:

'Material shape is my self,'
have you power over this material shape of yours
(and can say),

"Let my material shape be thus",

"Let my material shape be not thus"?"<sup>19</sup>

[285] When this had been said, Saccaka, the son of Jains, became silent.

And a second time the Lord spoke thus to Saccaka, the son of Jains:

"What do you think about this, Aggivessana?

When you speak thus:

'Material shape is my self,'
have you power over this material shape of yours
(and can say),

"Let my material shape be thus",

"Let my material shape be not thus"?"

And a second time Saccaka, the son of Jains, became silent.

Then the Lord spoke thus to Saccaka, the son of Jains:

"Answer now, Aggivessana, now is not the time for you to become silent.

Whoever, Aggivessana, on being asked a legitimate question up to the third time
by the Tathāgata
does not answer,
verily his skull splits into seven pieces."<sup>20</sup>

Now at that time the yakkha Thunderbolt-bearer,<sup>21</sup> taking his iron thunderbolt which was aglow,
ablaze,
on fire,
came to stand above the ground over Saccaka, the son of Jains,
and said:

"If this Saccaka, the son of Jains,
does not answer
when he is asked a legitimate question
up to the third time
by the Lord,
verily I will make his skull split into seven pieces."

And only the Lord saw this yakkha Thunderbolt-bearer, and Saccaka, the son of Jains.

Then Saccaka, the son of Jains, afraid,
agitated,
his hair standing on end, seeking protection with the Lord, seeking shelter with the Lord, seeking refuge with the Lord,

spoke thus to the Lord:

"Let the revered Gotama ask me, I will answer."

"What do you think about this, Aggivessana?

When you speak thus:

'Material shape is my self,'
have you power over this material shape of yours
(and can say),

"Let my material shape be thus",

"Let my material shape be not thus"?"

"This is not so, good Gotama."

"Pay attention, Aggivessana.

When you have paid attention, Aggivessana, answer.

For your last speech
does not agree with your first,
nor your first
with your last.

■

"What do you think about this, Aggivessana?

When you speak thus:

'Feeling is my self,'
have you power over this feeling of yours (and can say),

"Let my feeling be thus",

"Let my feeling be not thus"?"

"This is not so, good Gotama."

"Pay attention, Aggivessana.

When you have paid attention, Aggivessana, answer.

For your last speech
does not agree with your first,
nor your first
with your last.

■

"What do you think about this, Aggivessana?"

When you speak thus:

'Perception is my self,'
have you power over this perception of yours
(and can say),

"Let my perception be thus",

"Let my perception be not thus"?"

"This is not so, good Gotama."

"Pay attention, Aggivessana.

When you have paid attention, Aggivessana, answer.

For your last speech
does not agree with your first,
nor your first
with your last.

■

"What do you think about this, Aggivessana?"

When you speak thus:

'Habitual tendencies are my self,' have you power over these habitual tendencies of yours (and can say),

"Let my habitual tendencies be thus",

"Let my habitual tendencies be not thus"?"

"This is not so, good Gotama."

"Pay attention, Aggivessana.

When you have paid attention, Aggivessana, answer.

For your last speech
does not agree with your first,
nor your first
with your last.

■

"What do you think about this, Aggivessana?"

When you speak thus:

'Consciousness is my self,'
have you [286] power over this consciousness of yours (and can say),

"Let my consciousness be thus",

"Let my consciousness be not thus"?"

"This is not so, good Gotama."

"Pay attention, Aggivessana.

When you have paid attention, Aggivessana, answer.

For your last speech
does not agree with your first,
nor your first
with your last.

---

What do you think about this, Aggivessana?

Is material shape permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, good Gotama."

"But is what is impermanent
anguish
or is it happiness?"

"Anguish, good Gotama."

"But is it fitting
to regard that which is impermanent,
anguish,
liable to change
as
'This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self?'"

"This is not so, good Gotama."

■

"What do you think about this, Aggivessana?"

Is feeling permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, good Gotama."

"But is what is impermanent
anguish
or is it happiness?"

"Anguish, good Gotama."

"But is it fitting
to regard that which is impermanent,
anguish,
liable to change
as
'This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self?'"

"This is not so, good Gotama."

■

"What do you think about this, Aggivessana?

Is perception permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, good Gotama."

"But is what is impermanent
anguish
or is it happiness?"

"Anguish, good Gotama."

"But is it fitting
to regard that which is impermanent,
anguish,
liable to change
as

"This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self?"

"This is not so, good Gotama."

■

"What do you think about this, Aggivessana?

Are the habitual tendencies permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, good Gotama."

"But is what is impermanent
anguish
or is it happiness?"

"Anguish, good Gotama."

"But is it fitting
to regard that which is impermanent,
anguish,
liable to change
as
'This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self?'"

"This is not so, good Gotama."

■

"What do you think about this, Aggivessana?

Is consciousness permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, good Gotama."

"But is what is impermanent
anguish
or is it happiness?"

"Anguish, good Gotama."

"But is it fitting
to regard that which is impermanent,
anguish,
liable to change
as
'This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self?'"

"This is not so, good Gotama."

---

"What do you think about this, Aggivessana?

Does he who is cleaving to anguish, attached to anguish,
clinging to anguish
regard anguish as
'This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self' -
and further,
could he comprehend his own anguish or could he dwell
having brought anguish to destruction?"

"How could this be, good Gotama?

This is not so, good Gotama."

■

[Horner omits: "What do you think about this, Aggivessana?

*Are not you cleaving to anguish,
attached to anguish,
clinging to anguish
regarding anguish as
'This is mine,
this am I,
this is my self?'*"]

"How could this not be, good Gotama?

This is so, good Gotama."]

"Aggivessana, as a man walking about aiming at the pith,
seeking for the pith,
looking about for the pith,<sup>22</sup> taking a sharp knife,
might enter a wood;
he might see there the stem of a great plantain tree,<sup>23</sup> straight,
young,
grown without defect;
he might cut it down at the root;
having cut it down at the root, he might cut off the crown;
having cut off the crown,
he might unroll the spirals of the leaves;
but unrolling the spirals of the leaves, he would not even [287] come upon softwood, how then on pith?

Even so are you, Aggivessana, when being questioned,
cross-questioned
and pressed for reasons<sup>24</sup> by me in regard to your own words, empty,<sup>25</sup>
void,
and have fallen short.<sup>26</sup>

But these words were spoken by you, Aggivessana, to the company at Vesālī:

"I do not see that recluse or brahman,
the head of a company,
the head of a group,
the teacher of a group,
even if he is claiming to be a perfected one,
a fully Self-awakened one,

who, when taken in hand by me,
speech by speech,
would not tremble,
would not shake,
would not shake violently,
and from whose armpits
sweat would not pour.

Even if I were to take in hand,
speech by speech,
an insensate post,
even that,
when taken in hand by me,
speech by speech,
would tremble,
would shake,
would shake violently -
let alone a human being."

But it is from your brow, Aggivessana, that drops of sweat are pouring, and having soaked through your upper and inner robes, are falling to the ground.

But there is not at present, Aggivessana, any sweat on my body."

And the Lord disclosed his golden coloured body to that concourse.

When this had been said, Saccaka, the son of Jains, having become silent,
having become ashamed,
his shoulders drooped,
his head cast down,
sat down brooding,
at a loss for an answer.

■

Then Dummukha,<sup>27</sup> the son of a Licchavi, knowing that Saccaka, the son of Jains, had become silent,
had become ashamed,
his shoulders drooped,
his head cast down,
brooding,
at a loss for an answer,
spoke thus to the Lord:

"A simile occurs to me, Lord."<sup>28</sup>

"Speak it forth, Dummukha," the Lord said.

"Lord, it is like a lotus-tank,<sup>29</sup> not far from a village or little town, where there might be a crab.

Then, Lord, several boys or girls, having come out from that village or little town, might approach that lotus-tank,
and having approached,
having plunged into that lotus-tank, having lifted the crab out of the water, might place it on the dry land.

And whenever that crab, Lord, might thrust out a claw, as often might those boys or girls hack and break
and smash it
with a piece of wood
or a potsherd.

Thus, Lord, that crab with all its claws hacked
and broken
and smashed,
could not become one to descend again to the tank as it used to do before.

Even so, Lord, whatever the distortions, the disagreements,
the [288] wriggings<sup>30</sup> of Saccaka, the son of Jains - all these<sup>31</sup> have been hacked, broken
and smashed
by the Lord.

And now, Lord,
Saccaka, the son of Jains,
cannot become one to approach the Lord again, that is to say desiring speech."<sup>32</sup>

When this had been said,
Saccaka, the son of Jains,
spoke thus to Dummukha,
the son of a Licchavi:

"You, Dummukha, wait,
you, Dumārakha, wait.

Not with you am I conferring,
I am conferring here with the good Gotama.

---

Let be, good Gotama, these words of mine
and of other individual recluses and brahmans.

Methinks this idle talk is regretted.<sup>33</sup>

Now, to what extent does a disciple of the good Gotama come to be one who is a doer of the instruction, one who accepts the exhortation,<sup>34</sup> one who has crossed over doubt and,
perplexity gone,
fares in the Teacher's instruction,
won to conviction,
not relying on others?"

"Now, Aggivessana, a disciple of mine in regard to whatever is material shape,
past,
future,
present,
subjective or objective,
gross or subtle,
low or excellent,
distant or near,
sees all material shape
as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom
as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.'

■

"In regard to whatever is feeling,
past,
future,
present,
subjective or objective,
gross or subtle,
low or excellent,
distant or near,
sees all feeling
as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom
as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.'

■

"In regard to whatever is perception,
past,
future,
present,
subjective or objective,
gross or subtle,
low or excellent,
distant or near,
sees all perception
as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom
as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.'

■

"In regard to whatever is the habitual tendencies,
past,
future,
present,
subjective or objective,
gross or subtle,
low or excellent,
distant or near,
sees all the habitual tendencies
as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom
as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.'

■

"In regard to whatever is consciousness,
past,
future,
present,
subjective or objective,
gross or subtle,
low or excellent,
distant or near,
sees all consciousness
as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom
as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,

this is not my self.'

To this extent, Aggivessana, a disciple of mine comes to be a doer of the instruction, an accepter of the exhortation, one who has crossed over doubt
and, perplexity gone,
fares in the Teacher's instruction,
won to conviction,
not relying on others."

---

"To what extent, good Gotama, does a monk become a perfected one,
the cankers destroyed,
one who has lived the life,
done what was to be done,
laid down the burden,
attained his own goal,
the fetter of becoming utterly destroyed,
and is freed with perfect profound knowledge?"

"Now, Aggivessana, a monk in regard to whatever is material shape,
past,
future,
present,
subjective or objective,
gross or subtle,
[289] low or excellent,
distant or near,
having seen all material shape

as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self,'

becomes freed
with no (further) attachment;35

■

"In regard to whatever is feeling,
past,
future,
present,
subjective or objective,
gross or subtle,
low or excellent,
distant or near,
having seen all feeling
as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self,'

becomes freed
with no (further) attachment;

■

"In regard to whatever is perception,
past,
future,
present,

subjective or objective,
gross or subtle,
low or excellent,
distant or near,
having seen all perception
as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self,'

becomes freed
with no (further) attachment;

■

"In regard to whatever is the habitual tendencies,
past,
future,
present,
subjective or objective,
gross or subtle,
low or excellent,
distant or near,
having seen all the habitual tendencies
as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self,'

becomes freed
with no (further) attachment;

■

"In regard to whatever is consciousness,
past,
future,
present,
subjective or objective,
gross or subtle,
low or excellent,
distant or near,
having seen all consciousness
as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom as:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self,'

becomes freed
with no (further) attachment;

To this extent, Aggivessana,
does a monk become a perfected one,
the cankers destroyed,
who has lived the life,
done what was to be done,
laid down the burden,
attained his own goal,
the fetter of becoming utterly destroyed,
and is freed with perfect profound knowledge.

Aggivessana, a monk with his mind freed thus becomes possessed of the three things than which there is nothing further:<sup>36</sup>

the vision than which there is nothing further, the course than which there is nothing further, the freedom than which there is nothing further.<sup>37</sup>

Aggivessana, a monk freed thus reveres,
esteems,
reverences,
honours
only the Tathāgata,
saying:

'The Lord is awakened,
he teaches dhamma for awakening;
the Lord is tamed,
he teaches dhamma for taming;
the Lord is calmed,
he teaches dhamma for calming;
the Lord is crossed over,
he teaches dhamma for crossing over;
the Lord has attained nibbāna, he teaches dhamma for attaining nibbāna."<sup>38</sup>

When this had been said,
Saccaka, the son of Jains,
spoke thus to the Lord:

"Good Gotama, I was arrogant,
I was presumptuous,
in that I deemed I could assail the revered Gotama,
speech by speech.

Good Gotama,
there might be safety for a man assailing a rutting elephant, but there could be no safety for a man
assailing the revered Gotama.

Good Gotama, there might be safety for a [290] man assailing a blazing mass of fire, but there could be no safety for a man
assailing the revered Gotama.

Good Gotama, there might be safety for a man assailing a deadly poisonous snake, but there could be no safety for a man
assailing the revered Gotama.

Good Gotama, I was arrogant,
I was presumptuous,
in that I deemed I could assail the revered Gotama,
speech by speech.

May the good Gotama consent (to accept) a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks."

The Lord consented by becoming silent.

Then Saccaka, the son of Jains,
having understood the Lord's consent, addressed those Licchavis, saying:

"Let the good Licchavis listen to me: the recluse Gotama is invited for a meal on the morrow together with the Order of monks.

Prepare anything of mine that you think will be suitable."

Then these Licchavis, towards the end of that night, prepared five hundred offerings of rice cooked in milk as the gift of food.<sup>39</sup>

Then Saccaka, the son of Jains, having had sumptuous food,
solid and soft,
made ready in his own park,
had the time announced to the Lord,
saying:

"It is time, good Gotama, the meal is ready."

Then the Lord,
having dressed in the morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
approached the park of Saccaka, the son of Jains;
having approached
he sat down on the appointed seat,
together with the Order of monks.

Then Saccaka, the son of Jains,
with his own hand
served and satisfied the Order of monks with the Lord at its head with the sumptuous food,
solid and soft.

Then Saccaka, the son of Jains, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl, having taken a low seat,<sup>40</sup>
sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance,
Saccaka, the son of Jains, spoke thus to the Lord:

"Whatever there is of merit or the accompaniment of merit<sup>41</sup> in this gift, good Gotama, let that be for the happiness of the donors."<sup>42</sup>

"There will be for the donors, Aggivessana, whatever attaches to the recipient of a gift of faith such as you who are not without [291] attachment, not without aversion,
not without confusion.

There will be for you, Aggivessana, whatever attaches to the recipient of a gift of faith such as me
who am without attachment,
without aversion,
without confusion."<sup>43</sup>

Lesser Discourse to Saccaka:
the Fifth

---

<sup>1</sup> On both sides, according to MA. ii. 268; but M. throughout this Sutta has v.l. Nigaṇṭhiputto, son of a Jain woman.

<sup>2</sup> As at M. i. 237.

<sup>3</sup> See M. i. 198.

<sup>4</sup> Sāriputta's teacher, MA. ii. 270; see Vin. i. 39 f.; one of the first five disciples.

<sup>5</sup> Stock, see M. i. 108, 237.

<sup>6</sup> Others addressed by this name (probably the name of a brahman clan, DPPN.) are Dīghanakha at M. i. 497, and the novice Aciravata at M. iii.

128.

<sup>7</sup> sankhārā, cf. Dh. 277.

<sup>8</sup> dhammā. These include, beside the sankhārā (conditioned things), the unconditioned nibbāna as well. Sankhārā are anicca and dukkha, but not nibbāna, so it is not a sankhārā. They are all, however, anattā.

<sup>9</sup> dusutaṃ.

<sup>10</sup> As at M. i. 374.

<sup>11</sup> As at M. i. 374; S. iii. 155; A. iii. 365. and MA. ii. 272 read correctly nicchodeti, see PED. and JPTS., 1917, p. 53.

<sup>12</sup> saṇadhovika, v.l. sāṇadhovika, literally hempen (or canvas) washing. MA. ii. 272 says "men play this game, which is great sport, by tying up handfuls of saṇavāka and sinking it in the water. Then they go there and taking a handful of the saṇa and saying, 'Right, left, front,' they give blows to planks, phalaka, in these directions, and then they wash, enjoying, drinking and eating sour gruel and strong drink and so on, which they have taken with them. The elephant king saw this game, and plunging into deep water, took up water with his trunk and sprinkled it on his body, his back, on both sides and between his thighs." Chalmers' "merry washing" gets the meaning well. See DA. 84 where sāṇadhovana is referred to as a game of the caṇḍālas, low class people.

<sup>13</sup> bhavamāno. MA. ii. 272: the meaning is that it is not possible for an ordinary human being to refute the Lord.

<sup>14</sup> okāsaṃ karoti, cf. Vin. i. 114.

<sup>15</sup> As at M. iii. 15; D. i. 51; A. v. 39.

<sup>16</sup> As at Miln. 33.

<sup>17</sup> purisapuggala. See B.D. iii, Intr., p. xxv ff.

<sup>18</sup> This is of course the very opposite of Gotama's teaching. MA. ii. 275 says rūpaṃ attā assā ti rūpattā.

<sup>19</sup> Cf. Vin. i. 13.

<sup>20</sup> As at D. i. 95.

<sup>21</sup> Sakka devarājā, not just any yakkha, MA. ii. 277. Sakka was a name for Indra, one of whose epithets was Vajirapāṇī, Thunderbolt in hand (Thunderbolt-bearer). According to C.E. Godage, The Place of Indra in Early Buddhism, Ceylon University Review, April, 1945, Vol. III, No. 1, p. 52, the above context and D. i. 95 "are the only instances in the Suttas in which Sakka comes in the guise of a Yakkha bearing a bolt." "Here, we see Sakka as a patron of the new religion," Cf. Jā. iii. 146, v. 92, vi. 155.

<sup>22</sup> As at S. iii. 141, iv, 167; cf. M. i. 193.

<sup>23</sup> The plantain tree was the emblem of insubstantiality, for it has no pith or heartwood, see S. iii. 142.

<sup>24</sup> As at M. i. 130.

<sup>25</sup> MA. ii. 279, devoid of pith.

<sup>26</sup> aparaddha = pārājita, defeated, MA. ii. 279. As at M. i. 440.

<sup>27</sup> MA. ii. 280, in spite of his name he was handsome.

<sup>28</sup> bhagavā of text should read bhante.

<sup>29</sup> As at S. i. 123.

<sup>30</sup> These same three words are used at M. i. 446 of a horse being broken in, and are therefore differently translated.

<sup>31</sup> tāni. S. i. 123 reads sabbāni, all. M. should be corrected to sabbāni tāni.

<sup>32</sup> vādādhīppāya, a controversialist, Fur. Dial. i. 167. [not on page 167]

<sup>33</sup> vilāpaṃ vilapitaṃ, or "idly talked."

<sup>34</sup> ovādapatikara, as at M. i. 491.

<sup>35</sup> Here spelt anuppādā.

<sup>36</sup> anuttariyāni. Cf. D. iii. 219. At D. iii. 250, 281, A. iii. 284, 325, 452 the "six" are different except for the first.

<sup>37</sup> MA. ii. 281 explains that these are the wisdom, the course and freedom that are worldly or other-worldly. Or, the first is called right view of the way of arahantship, the second the factors of the remaining ways, and the third the freedom that is the highest fruit. Or, again, the first is called the vision of nibbāna for one whose cankers are destroyed, the second the eight factors of the Way, and the third the highest fruit. DA. iii. 1003 "refers these to categories of the Path, Fruits and Nibbāna, with alternative assignments," Dial. iii. 213, n. 4.

<sup>38</sup> As at D. iii. 54. Quoted MA. ii. 134.

<sup>39</sup> I.e. food that might be given and so made "allowable," kappiya. The Licchavis had to know what was allowable and what not, and so they brought forward rice, bhatta, that could be brought forward, MA. ii. 283. The word bhattābhihāra occurs at S. i. 82.

<sup>40</sup> A mark of respect.

<sup>41</sup> puññamahī. MA. ii. 283 vipākakkhandhānaṃ yeva parivāro, what makes up the accumulations of fruitions (in the future).

<sup>42</sup> Here the Licchavis.

43 MA. ii. 283 points out that the Liccavis gave to Saccaka, not to the Lord, but that Saccaka gave to the Lord.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
4. Mahā Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
4. The Greater Division of the Pairs

36. Greater Discourse to Saccaka

Mahā Saccaka Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Vesālī
in the Great Grove in the hall of the Gabled House.

Now at that time the Lord came to be fully clothed<sup>1</sup> in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, wished to enter Vesālī for almsfood.

Then Saccaka, the son of Jains,
who was always pacing up and down,
always roaming about on foot,<sup>2</sup> approached the Great Grove
and the hall of the Gabled House.

The venerable Ānanda saw Saccaka, the son of Jains,
coming in the distance;

having seen him,
he spoke thus to the Lord:

"Lord, this Saccaka, the son of Jains, is coming,
a controversialist,
giving himself out as learned,
much honoured by the manyfolk.<sup>3</sup>

He, Lord, desires dispraise of the Awakened One, dispraise of dhamma,
dispraise of the Order.

It were good, Lord,
if the Lord were to sit down for a moment out of compassion."<sup>4</sup>

The Lord sat down on an appointed seat.

Then Saccaka, the son of Jains, approached the Lord;
having approached,
he exchanged greetings with the Lord;
having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance,
Saccaka, the son of Jains, spoke thus to the Lord:

[292] There are, good Gotama, some recluses and brahmans, who dwell intent on the development of body,<sup>5</sup> not on the development of mind.<sup>6</sup>

They acquire, good Gotama,
a feeling of physical pain.

If once upon a time, good Gotama, there had been acquired a feeling of physical pain, there may be paralysis of the legs,

and the heart may burst,
and warm blood may issue from the mouth,
or one may come to madness,
to mind-tossing.<sup>7</sup>

This comes to be for one, good Gotama, when the mind conforms to the body, when it is under the rule of body.

What is the cause of this?

It is the non-development of the mind.

But there are, good Gotama, some recluses and brahmans who live intent on the development of mind, not on the development of body.

They acquire, good Gotama,
a feeling of mental pain.

If once upon a time, good Gotama,
there had been acquired a feeling of mental pain, there may be a paralysis of the legs,
and the heart may burst,
and warm blood may issue from the mouth,
or one may come to madness,
to mind-tossing.

This comes to be for one, good Gotama,
whose body conforms to mind, is under the rule of mind.

What is the cause of this?

It is the non-development of body."

"But what have you, Aggivessana, heard about the development of body?"

"For example, Nanda Vaccha, Kisa Saṅkicca, Makkhali of the Cowpen<sup>8</sup> - these, good Gotama, are unclothed,<sup>9</sup> flouting life's decencies, licking (their hands after meals), not those to come
when asked to do so,
not those to stand still
when asked to do so.

They do not consent (to accept food) offered to (them)
or specially prepared for (them), nor to (accept) an invitation (to a meal).

They do not accept food straight from the cooking pot or pan,
nor within the threshold,
nor among the faggots,
nor among the rice- [293] pounders,
nor when two people were eating,
nor from a pregnant woman,
nor from one giving suck,
nor from one co-habiting with a man,
nor from gleanings,
nor near where a dog is standing,
nor where flies are swarming,
nor fish,
nor meat.

They drink neither fermented liquor
nor spirits
nor rice-gruel.

They are one-house-men, a one-piece-men,
or a two-house-men,
a two-piece-men
or a three-house-men, a three-piece-men
or a four-house-men, a four-piece-men
or a five-house-men, a five-piece-men
or a six-house-men, a six-piece-men
or a seven-house-men,
a seven-piece-men.

They subsist on one little offering, they subsist on two little offerings they subsist on three little offerings they subsist on four little offerings they subsist on five little offerings they subsist on six little offerings they subsist on seven little offerings.

They take food only once a day, and they take food once in two days and they take food once in three days and they take food once in four days and they take food once in five days and they take food once in six days and they take food once in seven days.

Then they live intent on the practice of eating rice at regular fort-nightly intervals.

"But do they, Aggivessana, keep going on so little?"

"No, good Gotama.

Now and then they eat very good solid food, partake of very good soft food, savour very good savourings, drink very good drinks.

They build up their bodily strength with these,
make their bodies grow and become fat."

"These, Aggivessana, attend later to what they had eschewed earlier; thus there is increase and loss for that body.<sup>10</sup>

But what have you, Aggivessana, heard about the development of mind?"

But, Saccaka, the son of Jains, on being questioned by the Lord on the development of mind, did not succeed (in replying).

Then the Lord spoke thus to Saccaka, the son of Jains:

"That which was first spoken of by you, Aggivessana, as the development of the body,
that, in the discipline for an ariyan,
is not the proper development of the body.

For you, Aggivessana,
do not know what is development of the body, so how can you know what is development of the mind?

Yet, Aggivessana, hear how there comes to be one who is not developed as to body and not developed as to mind, developed as to body

and developed as to mind;
pay careful attention
and I will speak."

"Yes, sir," Saccaka, the son of Jains, answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"And how, Aggivessana, does one come to be not developed as to body
and not developed as to mind?"

As to this, Aggivessana,
a pleasurable feeling arises in an uninstructed ordinary man;
he, being assailed by the pleasurable feeling, becomes addicted to pleasure and falls into addiction for pleasure.

If that pleasurable feeling of his is stopped, a painful feeling arises from the stopping [294] of the pleasurable feeling;
he, being assailed by the painful feeling, grieves,
mourns,
laments,
beats his breast
and falls into disillusion.

This pleasurable feeling, Aggivessana,
that has arisen in him,
impinging on the mind,
persists,
because of the non-development of body;
and the painful feeling that has arisen,
impinging on the mind,

persists,
because of the non-development of mind.

In anyone in whom, Aggivessana,
there are these two alternatives thus:
a pleasurable feeling that has arisen,
impinging on the mind,
persists,
because of the non-development of body;
and a painful feeling that has arisen,
impinging on the mind,
persists,
because of the non-development of mind -
he thus comes to be, Aggivessana,
not developed as to body
and not developed as to mind.

■

And how does there come to be, Aggivessana, one who is both developed as to body
and developed as to mind?

As to this, Aggivessana, a pleasurable feeling arises in an instructed disciple of the ariyans;
he, being assailed by the pleasurable feeling, does not become addicted to pleasure nor does he fall into addiction to pleasure.

If that pleasurable feeling of his is stopped and a painful feeling arises from the stopping of that pleasurable feeling,
he, being assailed by the painful feeling,
does not grieve,
mourn,
lament,

he does not beat his breast,
he does not fall into disillusion.

This pleasurable feeling, Aggivessana,
that has arisen in him,
impinging on his mind,
does not persist,
because of the development of the body;
and the painful feeling that has arisen,
impinging on the mind,
does not persist,
because of the development of mind.

In anyone in whom, Aggivessana,
there are these two alternatives thus:
a pleasurable feeling that has arisen,
impinging on the mind,
does not persist,
because of the development of body;
and a painful feeling that has arisen,
impinging on the mind,
does not persist,
because of the development of mind -
he thus comes to be, Aggivessana, both developed as to body
and developed as to mind."

"A believer thus am I in the revered Gotama.

For the revered Gotama is both developed as to body
and developed as to mind."

"This speech spoken by you, Aggivessana, is offensive and presumptuous, but yet will I answer you.

When I, Aggivessana, had had the hair of my head and beard shaved, and had clothed myself in saffron garments and had gone forth from home into homelessness - that a pleasurable feeling arisen in me, impinging on my mind,
could persist,
or that a painful feeling arisen,
impinging on my mind,
could persist,
such a situation could not occur."

[295] "Is it then that a pleasurable feeling has not arisen in the good Gotama
of such a nature that,
having arisen,
impinging on the mind,
it could not persist?"

Is it then that a painful feeling
has not arisen in the good Gotama
of such a nature that,
having arisen,
impinging on the mind,
it could not persist?"

"How could this not be, Aggivessana?"

Now, Aggivessana, before my Self-awakening
while I was still the bodhisatta,
not fully awakened,
it occurred to me:

Narrow is the household life, a path of dust,
going forth is in the open,

nor is it easy while dwelling in a house to lead the Brahma-faring completely fulfilled, utterly purified,
polished like a conch-shell.

Suppose now that I,
having cut off hair and beard,
having clothed myself in saffron garments,
should go forth from home into homelessness?

So I, Aggivessana, alter a time, being young,
my hair coal-black,
possessed of radiant youth,
in the prime of my life — although my unwilling parents wept and wailed — having cut off my hair and beard, having put on yellow robes, went forth from home into homelessness.

I, being gone forth thus,
a quester for whatever is good,
searching for the incomparable,
matchless path to peace,
approached Āḷāra the Kālāma;
having approached,
I spoke thus to Āḷāra the Kālāma:

'I, reverend Kālāma, want to fare the Brahmā-faring
in this dhamma and discipline.'

This said, Aggivessana, Āḷāra the Kālāma spoke thus to me:

'Let the venerable one proceed;
this dhamma is such
that an intelligent man,
having soon realised super-knowledge for himself

(as learnt from) his own teacher, may enter on and abide in it.'

So I, Aggivessana,
very soon,
very quickly,
mastered that dhamma.

I, Aggivessana, as far as mere lip service, mere repetition
were concerned,
spoke the doctrine of knowledge,
and the doctrine of the elders,
and I claimed —
I as well as others — that 'I know, I see.'

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'But Āḷāra the Kālāma does not merely proclaim this dhamma simply out of faith:
Having realised super-knowledge for myself,
entering on it,
I am abiding therein.

For surely Āḷāra the Kālāma proceeds knowing, seeing this dhamma.'

Then did I, Aggivessana, approach Āḷāra the Kālāma;
having approached,
I spoke thus to Āḷāra the Kālāma:

'To what extent do you, reverend Kālāma, having realised super-knowledge for yourself,
entering thereon,
proclaim this dhamma?'

When this had been said, Aggivessana, Āḷāra the Kālāma proclaimed the plane of no-thing.

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'It is not only Āḷāra the Kālāma who has faith,
I too have faith.
It is not only Āḷāra the Kālāma who has energy,
I too have energy.
It is not only Āḷāra the Kālāma who has mindfulness,
I too have mindfulness.
It is not only Āḷāra the Kālāma who has concentration,
I too have concentration.
It is not only Āḷāra the Kālāma who has intuitive wisdom,
I too have intuitive wisdom.

Suppose now that I should strive for the realisation of that dhamma which Āḷāra the Kālāma proclaims:

'Having realised super-knowledge for myself, entering on it I am abiding therein?'

So I, Aggivessana, very soon,
very quickly,
having realised super-knowledge for myself,
entering on that dhamma,
abided therein.

Then I, Aggivessana, approached Āḷāra the Kālāma;
having approached,
I spoke thus to Āḷāra the Kālāma:

'Is it to this extent that you, reverend Kalama,
proclaim this dhamma,
entering on it,
having realised it by your own super-knowledge?'

'It is to this extent that I, your reverence,
proclaim this dhamma,
entering on it,
having realised it by my own super-knowledge.'

'I too, your reverence,
having realised this dhamma by my own super-knowledge,
entering on it
am abiding in it.'

'It is profitable for us,
it is well gotten for us, your reverence, that we see a fellow Brahmā-farer
such as the venerable one.

This dhamma that I, entering on, proclaim,
having realised it by my own super-knowledge, is the dhamma that you, entering on,
are abiding in,
having realised it by your own super-knowledge;
the dhamma that you, entering on, are abiding in,
having realised it by your own super-knowledge,
is the dhamma that I, entering on, proclaim,
having realised it by my own super-knowledge.

The dhamma that I know,
this is the dhamma that you know.
The dhamma that you know, this is the dhamma that I know.

As I am,
so are you;
as you are,
so am I.

Come now, your reverence,
being just the two of us,

let us look after this group.'

In this way, Aggivessana, did Ālāra the Kālāma, being my teacher,
set me
— the pupil —
on the same level as himself
and honoured me with the highest honour.

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'This dhamma does not conduce to disregard
nor to dispassion
nor to stopping
nor to tranquillity
nor to super-knowledge
nor to awakening
nor to Nibbāna,
but only as far as reaching the plane of no-thing.'

So I, Aggivessana,
not getting enough from this dhamma, disregarded and turned away from this dhamma.

Then I, monks, a quester for whatever is good,
searching for the incomparable,
matchless path to peace,
approached Uddaka, Rāma's son;
having approached,
I spoke thus to Uddaka, Rāma's son:

'I, your reverence, want to fare the Brahmā-faring
in this dhamma and discipline.'

This said, Aggivessana, Uddaka, Rāma's son, spoke thus to me:

'Let the venerable one proceed;
this dhamma is such
that an intelligent man,
having soon realised super-knowledge for himself, (as learnt from) his own teacher,
may enter on and abide in it.'

So I, Aggivessana, very soon,
very quickly,
mastered that dhamma.

I, Aggivessana, as far as mere lip service, mere repetition were concerned,
spoke the doctrine of knowledge
and the doctrine of the elders,
and I claimed —
I as well as others — that
'I know,
I see.'

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'But Uddahka, Rāma's son, does not merely proclaim this dhamma simply out of faith:
Having realised super-knowledge for myself,
entering on it,
I am abiding in it.

For surely Uddaka, Rāma's son, proceeds knowing and seeing this dhamma.'

Then did I, Aggivessana, approach Uddaka, Rāma's;
having approached,
I spoke thus to Uddaka, Rāma's son:

'To what extent do you, reverend Rāma, having realised super-knowledge for yourself,

entering thereon
proclaim this dhamma?'

When this had been said, Aggivessana, Uddahka, Rāma's son, proclaimed the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-
perception.

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'It is not only Rāma who has faith,
I too have faith.
It is not only Rāma who has [166] energy,
I too have energy.
It is not only Rāma who has mindfulness,
I too have mindfulness.
It is not only Rāma who has concentration,
I too have concentration.
It is not only Rāma who has intuitive wisdom,
I too have intuitive wisdom.

Suppose now that I should strive for the realisation of that dhamma which Rāma proclaims:

'Having realised super-knowledge for myself,
entering on it
I am abiding in it?'

So I, Aggivessana, very soon,
very quickly,
having realised super-knowledge for myself,
entering on that dhamma,
abided therein.

Then I, Aggivessana, approached Uddaka, Rāma's son;
having approached,
I spoke thus to Uddaka, Rāma's son:

'Is it to this extent that you, reverend Rāma,
proclaim this dhamma,
entering on it,
having realised it by your own super-knowledge?'

'It is to this extent that I, your reverence,
proclaim this dhamma,
entering on it,
having realised it by my own super-knowledge.'

'I too, your reverence,
having realised this dhamma by my own super-knowledge, entering on it am abiding in it.'

'It is profitable for us, it is well gotten by us, your reverence,
that we see a fellow-Brahmā-farer
such as the venerable one.'

This dhamma that I, entering on, proclaim,
having realised it by my own super-knowledge, is the dhamma that you, entering on, are abiding in,
having realised it by your own super-knowledge;
the dhamma that you, entering on, are abiding in,
having realised it by your own super-knowledge,
is the dhamma that I, entering on, proclaim,
having realised it by my own super-knowledge.

The dhamma that I know,
this is the dhamma that you know.

That dhamma that you know,
this is the dhamma that I know.

As I am,
so are you;

as you are,
so am I.

Come now, your reverence,
being just the two of us,
let us look after this group.

In this way, Aggivessana, did Uddaka, Rāma's son, being my teacher, set me
— the pupil —
on the same level as himself
and honoured me with the highest honour.

Then it occurred to me, monks:

'This dhamma does not conduce to disregard
nor to dispassion
nor to stopping
nor to tranquillity
nor to super-knowledge
nor to awakening
nor to Nibbāna,
but only as far as reaching the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-
perception.'

So I, Aggivessana, not getting enough from this dhamma, disregarded and turned away from this dhamma.

Then I, Aggivessana, a quester for whatever is good,
searching for the incomparable,
matchless path to peace,
walking on tour through Magadha in due course arrived at Uruvela, the camp township.

There I saw a delightful stretch of land and a lovely woodland grove, and a clear flowing river

with a delightful ford, and a village for support nearby.

It occurred to me, Aggivessana:

'Indeed it is a delightful stretch of land, and the woodland grove is lovely, and the river flows clear
with a delightful ford,
and there is a village for support nearby.

Indeed this does well for the striving of a young man set on striving.'

So I, Aggivessana, sat down just there thinking:

Indeed this does well for striving.

Moreover,<sup>11</sup> Aggivessana, three similes occurred to me spontaneously,
never heard before:

It is as if<sup>12</sup> there were a wet sappy stick placed in water;
then a man might come along bringing an upper piece of fire-stick,<sup>13</sup>
and thinking:

'I will light a fire,
I will get heat.'

What do you think about this, Aggivessana?

Could that man, bringing an upper piece of fire-stick,
and rubbing that wet sappy stick that had been placed in water (with it),

light a fire,
could he get heat?"

"No, good Gotama.

What is the cause of this?

It is, good Gotama,
that such a stick is wet and sappy and that it was placed in water.

That man would only get fatigue and distress."

"In like manner, Aggivessana, whatever recluses or brahmans dwell not aloof from pleasures of the senses that are bodily,
then if that which is for them,
among the sense-pleasures,
desire for sense-pleasure,
affection for sense-pleasure,
infatuation with sense-pleasure,
thirst for sense-pleasure,
fever for sense-pleasure - if that is not properly got rid of subjectively nor properly allayed, whether these worthy recluses and brahmans experience [296] feelings which are acute,
painful,
sharp,
severe,
they could not become those for knowledge,
for vision,
for the incomparable Self-awakening;<sup>14</sup> and whether these worthy recluses and brahmans do not experience feelings
which are acute,
painful,

sharp,
severe,
they could not become those for knowledge,
for vision,
for the incomparable Self-awakening.

This, Aggivessana, was the first parable that occurred to me spontaneously,
never heard before.

Then, Aggivessana, a second parable occurred to me spontaneously,
never heard before.

It is as if, Aggivessana, a wet, sappy stick were placed on dry ground, far from water.

Then a man might come along bringing an upper piece of fire-stick,
and thinking:

'I will light a fire,
I will get heat.'

What do you think about this, Aggivessana?

Could that man,
bringing an upper piece of fire-stick,
and rubbing that wet sappy stick that had been placed on the dry ground,
far from water,
light a fire,
could he get heat?"|| ||

"No, good Gotama.

What is the cause of this?

It is, good Gotama, that that stick is wet and sappy although it had been placed on dry ground, far from water.

So that man would only get fatigue and distress."

"In like manner, Aggivessana, whatever recluses or brahmans dwell not aloof from pleasures of the senses that are bodily, then if that which is for them, among the sense-pleasures, desire for sense-pleasure, affection for sense-pleasure, infatuation with sense-pleasure, thirst for sense-pleasure, fever for sense-pleasure - if that is not properly got rid of subjectively nor properly allayed, whether these worthy recluses and brahmans experience feelings which are acute, painful, sharp, severe, they could not become those for knowledge, for vision, for the incomparable Self-awakening; and whether these worthy recluses and brahmans do not experience feelings which are acute, painful, sharp, severe, they could not become those for knowledge, for vision, for the incomparable Self-awakening.

This, Aggivessana, was the second parable that occurred to me spontaneously, never heard before.

Then, Aggivessana, a third parable occurred to me spontaneously, never heard before.

It is as if, Aggivessana, a dry sapless<sup>15</sup> stick were placed on the dry ground, far from water.

Then a man might come along bringing an upper piece of fire-stick, and thinking:

'I will light a fire,
I will get heat.'

What do you think about this, Aggivessana?

Could that man, bringing an upper piece of fire-stick, and rubbing that dry sapless stick that had been placed on dry ground, far from water, light a fire, could he get heat?"

"Yes, good Gotama.

What is the cause of this?

It is, good Gotama, that that stick was dry and sapless and had been placed on dry ground far from water."

"In like manner, Aggivessana, whatever recluses or brahmans dwell aloof
from pleasures of the senses that are bodily,
then if that which is for them,
among the sense-pleasures,
desire for sense-pleasure,
affection for sense-pleasure,
infatuation with sense- [297] pleasure,
thirst for sense-pleasure,
fever for sense-pleasure - if this is well got rid of subjectively, well allayed,
then whether these worthy recluses and brahmans experience feelings that are acute,
painful,
sharp,
severe,
indeed they become those for knowledge,
for vision,
for the incomparable Self-awakening;
and whether these worthy recluses and brahmans do not experience feelings that are acute,
painful,
sharp,
severe,
indeed they become those for knowledge,
for vision,
for the incomparable Self-awakening.

This, Aggivessana, was the third parable that occurred to me spontaneously,
never heard before.

These, Aggivessana, were the three parables that occurred to me spontaneously,
never heard before.

It occurred to me, Aggivessana:

'Suppose now that I,
with my teeth clenched,<sup>16</sup>
with my tongue pressed against the palate, by mind should subdue, restrain and dominate my mind?'

So I, Aggivessana, with my teeth clenched,
with my tongue pressed against the palate,
by mind subdued,
restrained
and dominated my mind.

While I was subduing, restraining
and dominating my mind,
with the teeth clenched,
the tongue pressed against the palate,
sweat poured from my armpits.

It is as if, Aggivessana, a strong man,
having taken hold of a weaker man by his head or shoulders, would subdue,
restrain
and dominate him.

Even so, while I, Aggivessana, was subduing,
restraining
and dominating my mind by mind, with my teeth clenched,
with my tongue pressed against the palate,
sweat poured from my armpits.

Although, Aggivessana, unsluggish energy came to be stirred up in me,
unmuddled mindfulness set up,
yet my body was turbulent,
not calmed,
because I was harassed<sup>17</sup> in striving by striving against that very pain.

But yet, Aggivessana, that painful feeling,
arising in me,
persisted without impinging on my mind. || ||

It occurred to me, Aggivessana:

'Suppose now that I should meditate the non-breathing meditation?'<sup>18</sup>

So I, Aggivessana,
stopped breathing in and breathing out
through the mouth
and through the nose.

When I, Aggivessana, had stopped breathing in and breathing out
through the mouth
and through the nose,
there came to be an exceedingly loud noise
of winds escaping by the auditory passages.

As there comes to be an exceedingly loud noise from the roaring of a smith's bellows,<sup>19</sup> even so when I, Aggivessana, stopped breathing in and breathing out
through the mouth [298]
and through the nose,
there came to be an exceedingly loud noise
of wind escaping by the auditory passages.

Although, Aggivessana, unsluggish energy came to be stirred up in me,
unmuddled mindfulness set up,
yet my body was turbulent,
not calmed,
because I was harassed in striving
by striving against that very pain.

It was even in this wise, Aggivessana, that a painful feeling that had arisen in me
persisted without impinging on my mind.

It occurred to me, Aggivessana:

'Suppose now that I should still meditate
the non-breathing meditation?'

So I, Aggivessana, stopped breathing in and breathing out
through the mouth
and through the nose
and through the ears.

When I, Aggivessana, had stopped breathing in and breathing out
through the mouth
and through the nose
and through the ears,
exceedingly loud winds rent my head.

As, Aggivessana, a strong man<sup>20</sup> might cleave one's head with a sharp-edged sword, even so when I, Aggivessana, stopped breathing in and breathing out
through the mouth
and through the nose
and through the ears,
exceedingly loud winds rent my head.

Although, Aggivessana, unsluggish energy came to be stirred up in me,
unmuddled mindfulness set up,
yet my body was turbulent,
not calmed,
because I was harassed in striving
by striving against that very pain.

But yet, Aggivessana, that painful feeling,
arising in me,
persisted without impinging on my mind.

It occurred to me, Aggivessana:

'Suppose that I should still meditate
the non-breathing meditation?'

So I, Aggivessana, stopped breathing in and breathing out
through the mouth
and through the nose
and through the ears.

When I, Aggivessana, had stopped breathing in and breathing out
through the mouth
and through the nose
and through the ears,
I came to have very bad headaches.<sup>21</sup>

As, Aggivessana, a strong man might clamp a turban on one's head with a tight leather strap, even so when I, Aggivessana, stopped breathing in and breathing out
through the mouth
and through the nose
and through the ears,
did I come to have very bad headaches.

Although, Aggivessana, unsluggish energy came to be stirred up in me,
unmuddled mindfulness set up,
yet my body was turbulent,
not calmed,
because I was harassed in striving
by striving against that very pain.

But yet, Aggivessana, that painful feeling,
arising in me,
persisted without impinging on my mind.

[299] It occurred to me, Aggivessana:

'Suppose now that I should still meditate
the non-breathing meditation?'

So I, Aggivessana, stopped breathing in and breathing out
through the mouth
and through the nose
and through the ears.

When I, Aggivessana, had stopped breathing in and breathing out
through the mouth
and through the nose
and through the ears,
very strong winds cut through my stomach.

As, Aggivessana, a skilled cattle-butcher
or his apprentice
might cut through the stomach
with a sharp butcher's knife, even so, Aggivessana, did very strong winds cut through my stomach.

Although, Aggivessana, unsluggish energy came to be stirred up in me,
unmuddled mindfulness set up,
yet my body was turbulent,

not calmed,
because I was harassed in striving
by striving against that very pain.

But yet, Aggivessana, that painful feeling,
arising in me,
persisted without impinging on my mind.

It occurred to me, Aggivessana:

'Suppose now that I should still meditate
the non-breathing meditation?'

So I, Aggivessana, stopped breathing in and breathing out
through the mouth
and through the nose
and through the ears.

When I, Aggivessana, had stopped breathing in and breathing out
through the mouth
and through the nose
and through the ears,
there came to be a fierce heat in my body.

As, Aggivessana, two strong men, having taken hold of a weaker man by his limbs, might set fire to him,
might make him sizzle up over a charcoal pit,
even so, Aggivessana,
when I had stopped breathing in and breathing out
through the mouth
and through the nose
and through the ears,
did there come to be a fierce heat in my body.

Although, Aggivessana, unsluggish energy came to be stirred up in me,
unmuddled mindfulness set up,
yet my body was turbulent,
not calmed,
because I was harassed in striving
by striving against that very pain.

But yet, Aggivessana, that painful feeling,
arising in me,
persisted without impinging on my mind.

In addition to this, Aggivessana, devatās, having seen me, spoke thus:

'The recluse Gotama has passed away.'

Other devatās spoke thus;

'The recluse Gotama has not passed away, but he is passing away.'

Other devatās spoke thus:

'The recluse Gotama has not passed away,
nor is he passing away;
the recluse Gotama is a perfected one,<sup>22</sup> the mode of living of a perfected one is just like this.'

[300] It occurred to me, Aggivessana:

'Suppose now that I should take the line of desisting from all food?'

Then, Aggivessana, devatās, having approached me,
spoke thus:

'Do not, good sir,
take the line of desisting from all food.

If you, good sir,
take the line of desisting from all food,
then we will give you deva-like essences to take in through the pores of the skin;
you will keep going by means of them.'

Then, Aggivessana, it occurred to me:

'Suppose that I should take the line of not eating anything, and these devatās were to give me deva-like essences
to take in through the pores of the skin, and that I should keep going by means of them, that would be an imposture in me.'

So I, Aggivessana, rejected those devatās<sup>23</sup>
I said,
'Enough.'

It occurred to me, Aggivessana:

'Suppose now that I were to take food little by little,
drop by drop,
such as bean-soup
or vetch-soup
or chick-pea-soup
or pea-soup?

So I, Aggivessana, took food
little by little,
drop by drop,
such as bean-soup
or vetch-soup

or chick-pea-soup
or pea-soup.

While I, Aggivessana, was taking food
little by little,
drop by drop,
such as bean-soup
or vetch-soup
or chick-pea-soup
or pea-soup,
my body became exceedingly emaciated.

Because I ate so little,<sup>24</sup> all my limbs became like the joints of withered creepers;
because I ate so little,
my buttocks became like a bullock's hoof;
because I ate so little,
my protruding backbone
became like a string of balls;
because I ate so little,
my gaunt ribs
became like the crazy rafters
of a tumble-down shed;
because I ate so little,
the pupils of my eyes
appeared lying low and deep;
because I ate so little,
my scalp became shrivelled and shrunk
as a bitter white gourd
cut before it is ripe
becomes shrivelled and shrunk by a hot wind.

If I, Aggivessana, thought:

'I will touch the skin of my belly,' it was my backbone that I took hold of.

If I thought:

'I will touch my backbone,' it was the skin of my belly that I took hold of.

For because I ate so little,
the skin of my belly, Aggivessana,
came to be cleaving to my backbone.

If I, Aggivessana, thought:

'I will obey the calls of nature,'
I fell down on my face then and there,
because I ate so little.

If I, Aggivessana, soothing my body, stroked my limbs with my hand,
the hairs,
rotted at the roots,
fell away from my body
as I stroked my limbs with my hand,
because I ate so little.

And further, Aggivessana, men, having seen me,
spoke thus:

'The recluse Gotama is black.'

Other men spoke thus:

'The recluse Gotama is not black, [301] the recluse Gotama is deep brown.'

Some men spoke thus:

'The recluse Gotama is not black,
he is not even deep brown, the recluse Gotama is of a sallow colour.'<sup>25</sup>

To such an extent, Aggivessana, was my clear pure complexion spoilt because I ate so little.

This, Aggivessana, occurred to me:

'Some recluses and brahmans
in the past have experienced feelings that were acute,
painful,
sharp,
severe;
but this is paramount,
nor is there worse than this.

And some recluses and brahmans
in the future
will experience feelings that are acute,
painful,
sharp,
severe;
but this is paramount,
nor is there worse than this.

And some recluses and brahmans
are now experiencing feelings that are acute,
painful,
sharp,
severe;
but this is paramount,
nor is there worse than this.

But I,
by this severe austerity,
do not reach states of further-men, the excellent knowledge and vision
befitting the ariyans.

Could there be another way to awakening?

This, Aggivessana, occurred to me:

'I know that while my father, the Sakyan, was ploughing,<sup>26</sup> and I was sitting in the cool shade of a rose-apple tree,
aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
entering on the first meditation,
which is accompanied by initial thought
and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful,
and while abiding therein,
I thought:

'Now could this be a way to awakening?'

Then, following on my mindfulness,<sup>27</sup> Aggivessana, there was the consciousness:

'This is itself the Way to awakening.'

This occurred to me, Aggivessana:

'Now, am I afraid of that happiness which is happiness
apart from sense-pleasures,
apart from unskilled states of mind?'

This occurred to me, Aggivessana:

'I am not afraid of that happiness
which is happiness
apart from sense-pleasures,
apart from unskilled states of mind.'

This occurred to me, Aggivessana:

'Now it is not easy to reach that happiness by thus subjecting the body to extreme emaciation.

Suppose I were to take material nourishment - boiled rice
and sour milk?'

So I, Aggivessana, took material nourishment - boiled rice
and sour milk.

Now at that time, Aggivessana, five monks<sup>28</sup> were attending me and (they thought):

'When the recluse [302] Gotama wins dhamma he will announce it to us.'

But when I, Aggivessana, took material nourishment - boiled rice
and sour milk -
then these five monks turned on me in disgust,
saying:

'The recluse Gotama lives in abundance, he is wavering in his striving,
he has reverted to a life of abundance.'

But when I, Aggivessana, had taken some material nourishment, having picked up strength,
aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
I entered on
and abided in
the first meditation
which is accompanied by initial thought
and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful.

But yet, Aggivessana, the pleasurable feeling, arising in me,
persisted without impinging on my mind.

By allaying initial thought
and discursive thought,
with the mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point, I entered on
and abided in
the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration,
and is rapturous and joyful.

But yet, Aggivessana, the pleasurable feeling, arising in me,
persisted without impinging on my mind.

By the fading out of rapture
I dwelt with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious,
and I experienced in my person
that joy of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,' and I entered on

and abided in
the third meditation.

But yet, Aggivessana, the pleasurable feeling, arising in me,
persisted without impinging on my mind.

By getting rid of joy
and by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of former pleasures and sorrows, I entered into
and abided in
the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

But yet, Aggivessana, the pleasurable feeling, arising in me,
persisted without impinging on my mind.

With the mind composed thus,
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable,
fixed,
immovable,
I directed my mind
to the knowledge and recollection
of former habitations:

I remembered a variety of former habitations, thus:
one birth,
two births,
three births,
four births,

five births,
ten births,
twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,
fifty births,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
and many an eon of integration
and many an eon of disintegration
and many an eon of integration-disintegration;
such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I came to be in another state
where such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I arose here.

Thus I remember divers former habitations
in all their modes and detail.

This, Aggivessana,
was the first knowledge attained by me

in the first watch of the night;
ignorance was dispelled,
knowledge arose,
darkness was dispelled,
light arose,
even as I abided diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute.

Then with the mind composed,
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable,
fixed,
immovable,
I directed my mind
to the knowledge of the passing hence
and the arising of beings.

With the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men
I see beings as they pass hence
or come to be;
I comprehend that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going,
according to the consequences of their deeds,
and I think:

Indeed these worthy beings
who were possessed of wrong conduct in body,

who were possessed of wrong conduct of speech,
who were possessed of wrong conduct of thought,
scoffers at the ariyans,
holding a wrong view,
incurring deeds consequent on a wrong view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

But these worthy beings
who were possessed of good conduct in body,
who were possessed of good conduct in speech,
who were possessed of good conduct in thought,
who did not scoff at the ariyans,
holding a right view,
incurring deeds consequent on a right view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

Thus with the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men
do I see beings as they pass hence,
as they arise;
I comprehend that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going
according to the consequences of their deeds.

This, Aggivessana,
was the second knowledge attained by me

in the middle watch of the night;
ignorance was dispelled,
knowledge arose,
darkness was dispelled,
light arose,
even as I abided diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute.

Then with the mind composed
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable,
fixed,
immovable,
I directed my mind
to the knowledge of the destruction of the cankers.

I understood as it really is:

This is anguish,
this is the arising of anguish,
this is the stopping of anguish,
this is the course leading to the stopping of anguish.

I understood as it really is:

These are the cankers,
this is the arising of the cankers,
this is the stopping of the cankers,
this is the course leading to the stopping of the cankers.

Knowing this thus,
seeing thus,
my mind was freed

from the canker of sense-pleasures,
and my mind was freed
from the canker of becoming,
and my mind was freed
from the canker of ignorance.

In freedom
the knowledge came to be:

I am freed;

and I comprehended:

Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close is the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of being such or such.

This, Aggivessana,
was the third knowledge attained by me
in the last watch of the night;
ignorance was dispelled,
knowledge arose,
darkness was dispelled,
light arose
even as I abided diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute.

But yet, Aggivessana, the pleasurable feeling, arising in me,
persisted without impinging on my mind.

Now I, Aggivessana, am aware that when I am teaching dhamma to companies consisting of many hundreds, each person thinks thus about me:

'The recluse Gotama is teaching dhamma especially for me.'

But this, Aggivessana, should not be understood thus.

For when a Tathāgata is teaching dhamma to others it is for the sake of general instruction.

And I, Aggivessana, at the close of such a talk, steady,
calm,
make one-pointed and concentrate my mind subjectively in that first characteristic of concentration<sup>29</sup> in which I ever constantly abide."

"This is to be believed of the good Gotama, for he is a perfected one,
a fully Self-awakened One.

But does the good Gotama allow that he sleeps during the day?"

[304] "I allow, Aggivessana, that during the last month of the hot weather, returning from alms-gathering after the meal, having laid down the outer cloak (folded) into four,
mindful and clearly conscious,
I fall asleep on my right side."

"But this, good Gotama, is what some recluses and brahmins call 'abiding in confusion.'"

"So far, Aggivessana, there is neither bewilderment nor non-bewilderment.

But, Aggivessana,
how there is bewilderment and non-bewilderment -
listen to it,
pay careful attention,
and I will speak."

"Yes, sir," Saccaka, the son of Jains,
answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"In whoever, Aggivessana, those cankers are not got rid of
that have to do with the defilements,
with again-becoming,
that are fearful,
whose result is anguish,
making for birth,
ageing
and dying
in the future<sup>30</sup> - him I call bewildered.

In whoever, Aggivessana, those cankers are got rid of which are connected with the defilements,
with again-becoming,
that are fearful,
whose result is anguish,
making for birth,
ageing
and dying
in the future -
him I call unbewildered.

Those cankers of the Tathāgata, Aggivessana, that are connected with the defilements,
with again-becoming,
that are fearful,
whose result is anguish,
making for birth,
ageing
and dying
in the future,
these are got rid of,
cut off at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump
so that they can come
to no further existence in the future.

Even as, Aggivessana, a palm-tree whose crown is cut off cannot come to further growth,
even so, Aggivessana,
got rid of,
cut off at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump
so that they can come
to no further existence in the future are those cankers of the Tathāgata
that have to do with the defilements,
with again-becoming,
that are fearful,
whose result is anguish,
making for birth,
ageing
and dying
in the future."

When this had been said, Saccaka, the son of Jains,
spoke thus to the Lord:

"It is wonderful, good Gotama,
it is marvellous, good Gotama, that while this was being said so mockingly<sup>31</sup> to the good Gotama, while he was being assailed by accusing ways of speech, his colour was clear
and his countenance happy
like that of a perfected one,
a fully Self-awakened One.

I allow that I, good Gotama, took [305] Pūraṇa Kassapa in hand
speech by speech,
but he, when taken in hand by me,
speech by speech,
shelved the question by (asking) another,
answered off the point
and evinced anger
and ill-will
and discontent.<sup>32</sup>

But while the good Gotama
was being spoken to thus so mockingly
and was being assailed by accusing ways of speech,
his colour was clear
and his countenance happy
like that of a perfected one,
a fully Self-awakened One.

I allow that I, good Gotama, took Makkhali of the Cow-pen in hand
speech by speech,
but he, when taken in hand by me,
speech by speech,
shelved the question by (asking) another,
answered off the point

and evinced anger
and ill-will
and discontent.

But while the good Gotama
was being spoken to thus so mockingly
and was being assailed by accusing ways of speech,
his colour was clear
and his countenance happy
like that of a perfected one,
a fully Self-awakened One.

I allow that I, good Gotama, took Ajita of the hair-blanket in hand
speech by speech,
but he, when taken in hand by me,
speech by speech,
shelved the question by (asking) another,
answered off the point
and evinced anger
and ill-will
and discontent.

But while the good Gotama
was being spoken to thus so mockingly
and was being assailed by accusing ways of speech,
his colour was clear
and his countenance happy
like that of a perfected one,
a fully Self-awakened One.

I allow that I, good Gotama, took Pakudha Kaccāyana in hand
speech by speech,
but he, when taken in hand by me,
speech by speech,

shelved the question by (asking) another,
answered off the point
and evinced anger
and ill-will
and discontent.

But while the good Gotama
was being spoken to thus so mockingly
and was being assailed by accusing ways of speech,
his colour was clear
and his countenance happy
like that of a perfected one,
a fully Self-awakened One.

I allow that I, good Gotama, took Sañjaya Belatṭha's son in hand
speech by speech,
but he, when taken in hand by me,
speech by speech,
shelved the question by (asking) another,
answered off the point
and evinced anger
and ill-will
and discontent.

But while the good Gotama
was being spoken to thus so mockingly
and was being assailed by accusing ways of speech,
his colour was clear
and his countenance happy
like that of a perfected one,
a fully Self-awakened One.

I allow that I, good Gotama, took Nātha's son, the Jain in hand
speech by speech,

but he, when taken in hand by me,
speech by speech,
shelved the question by (asking) another,
answered off the point
and evinced anger
and ill-will
and discontent.

But while the good Gotama
was being spoken to thus so mockingly
and was being assailed by accusing ways of speech,
his colour was clear
and his countenance happy
like that of a perfected one,
a fully Self-awakened One.

And if you please, we, good Gotama, are going now, for there is much to do, much to be done by us."

"Do now whatever you think it is the right time for, Aggivessana."

Then Saccaka, the son of Jains,
having rejoiced in what the Lord had said, having given thanks,<sup>33</sup> rising from his seat, departed.

Greater Discourse to Saccaka:
the Sixth

---

<sup>1</sup> I.e. he had clothed himself in a dyed double-cloth, rattadupaṭṭa, (cf. Jā. iv. 379, VvA. 4), had fastened on his girdle, and had put his rag-robe over one shoulder, MA. ii. 284. It remained to take his outer cloak to put on when he entered Vesālī.

<sup>2</sup> Stock, as at M. i. 108, 227-28.

<sup>3</sup> As at M. i. 227.

<sup>4</sup> For Saccaka, for he would see the Lord and hear dhamma, MA. ii. 284.

<sup>5</sup> bhāvanā, "development," more precisely mental development. MA. ii. 285 says kāya-bhāvanā is called vipassanā, insight. Achieving this there is no mental disturbance.

<sup>6</sup> citta-bhāvanā, is called samatha, calm. There is no paralysis for the person intent on concentration. What the Jain says is not true; see MA. ii. 285.

<sup>7</sup> Cf. S. i. 125-6, and last phrase at A. iii. 119, 219; and "mind-tossing," cittakkhepa, at Dh. 138.

<sup>8</sup> These three "shining lights," niyyātāro, are mentioned at M. i. 524; A. iii. 384. All were ājīvikas, and are said at MA. ii. 285 to have achieved leadership over the extreme ascetics.

<sup>9</sup> Following passage also at M. i. 77.

<sup>10</sup> Cf. S. ii. 94.

<sup>11</sup> From here to M. i. 249 = M. ii. 212 ff. Cf. Mhvu. ii. 121ff.

<sup>12</sup> As at M. iii. 95.

<sup>13</sup> uttarāṇī, opposite adharāṇī, MA. ii. 91, SA. iii. 241. The former word occurs at M. ii. 93 (a repetition of the above passage), M. ii. 152, iii. 95; Miln. 53.

<sup>14</sup> As at A. ii. 200.

<sup>15</sup> Cf. M. iii. 95; S. iv. 161.

<sup>16</sup> M. i. 120; Jā. i. 67.

<sup>17</sup> padhānābhitunnassa.

<sup>18</sup> appānaka jhāna; cf. M. ii. 212; Jā. i. 67.

<sup>19</sup> S. i. 106.

<sup>20</sup> This and the following similes at M. ii. 193, iii. 259; A. iii. 380; S. iv. 56.

<sup>21</sup> sīse sīsavedanā honti, there were head-feelings in the head.

<sup>22</sup> araham. Either the devatās were mistaken, for at this time Gotama was not an arahant in its meaning of one who had done all there was to be done, or the term is here being used in a pre-Buddhist sense. Cf. Jā. i. 67.

<sup>23</sup> Cf. Jā. i. 67.

<sup>24</sup> As at M. i. 80.

<sup>25</sup> maṅguracchavi, as at M. i. 429, ii. 33; D. i. 193, 242.

<sup>26</sup> According to MA. ii. 290 this was a ritual sowing, vappamaṅgala. See my art., Early Buddhism and the Taking of Life, B.C. Law Volume, Part I; also Jā. i. 57.

<sup>27</sup> I.e. of in-breathing and out-breathing, MA. ii. 291.

<sup>28</sup> Cf. Vin. i. 8 ff.; M. i. 171 ff.

<sup>29</sup> samādhi-nimitta, explained at MA. ii 292 as concentration on the fruit of voidness, suññata-phala-samādhi.

<sup>30</sup> Cf. M. i. 464; A. ii. 172.

<sup>31</sup> āsajja āsajja, as at D. i. 107; cf. also A. i. 172 and G.S. i. 156, n. Used not in an offensive sense at M. iii. 152.

<sup>32</sup> As at M. i. 442.

<sup>33</sup> MA. ii. 293 points out that although the Lord spoke two discourses to Saccaka he neither gained understanding (of the truths) nor went forth nor was established in the Refuges. But the Lord taught him dhamma for the sake of his future dwelling (vāsana, or, mental impressions). He saw that two hundred years after his own parinibbāna his teaching would be established in Ceylon. The Jain, having been reborn there, having gone forth and learnt the three Piṭakas, having made vision (vipassanā) grow, and having won arahantship, would be one whose cankers were destroyed.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
4. Mahā Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
4. The Greater Division of the Pairs

37. Lesser Discourse on the Destruction of Craving

Cūla-Taṇhā-Saṅkhaya Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattḥī
in the Eastern Monastery
in the palace of Migāra's mother.

Then Sakka, the lord of devas,
approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he stood at a respectful distance.

As he was standing at a respectful distance,
Sakka, the lord of devas, spoke thus to the Lord:

"Briefly, Lord, to what extent does a monk come to be freed by the destruction of craving,
completely fulfilled,
completely secure from the bonds,
a complete Brahma-farer, complete as to his culmination,<sup>1</sup> best of devas and men?"<sup>2</sup>

"As to this, lord of devas, a monk comes to hear:

'It is not fitting
that there should be inclination towards any (psycho-physical) conditions.'<sup>3</sup>

If, lord of devas, a monk comes to hear this, that

'It is not fitting
that there should be inclination
towards any (psycho-physical) conditions,'

he knows all the conditions thoroughly;
by knowing all the conditions thoroughly
he knows all the conditions accurately;
by knowing all the conditions accurately,
whatever feeling he feels,
pleasant
or painful
or neither painful nor pleasant,
he abides viewing impermanence,
he abides viewing dispassion,
he abides viewing stopping,<sup>4</sup> he abides viewing renunciation
in regard to those feelings.

When he is abiding viewing impermanence,
when he is abiding viewing dispassion, when he is abiding viewing stopping,
when he is abiding viewing renunciation
in regard to these feelings,
he grasps after nothing in the world;
not grasping
he is not troubled;
being untroubled he himself is [307] individually attained to nibbāna,<sup>5</sup> and he comprehends:

'Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close is the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of being such or such'.

Briefly, it is to this extent, lord of devas, that a monk comes to be freed
by the destruction of craving,
completely fulfilled,
completely secure from the bonds,
a complete Brahma-farer,
complete as to his culmination,
best of devas and men."

Then Sakka, the lord of devas,
having rejoiced in what the Lord had said,
having given thanks,
having greeted the Lord,
vanished then and there keeping his right side towards him.

Now at that time the venerable Moggallāna the Great was sitting down near the Lord.

Then it occurred to the venerable Moggallāna the Great:

"Now, did that yakkha,
when he thanked the Lord for his words,
grasp them or not?

Suppose that I should find out whether that yakkha,
when he thanked the Lord for his words, grasped them or not?"

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great,
as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm or might bend back his out-stretched arm, vanishing from the palace of Migāra's mother in the Eastern Monastery, appeared among the devas of the Thirty-Three.

Now at that time Sakka, the lord of devas, equipped and provided with five hundred deva-like musical instruments,<sup>6</sup> was amusing himself in the One Lotus pleasure grove.<sup>7</sup>

Sakka, the lord of devas,
saw the venerable Moggallāna the Great coming in the distance;
seeing him,
having had those five hundred deva-like musical instruments stopped, he approached the venerable Moggallāna the Great;
having approached,
he spoke thus to the venerable Moggal-lāna the Great:

"Come, my good Moggallāna, you are welcome, my good Moggallāna;
at last, my good Moggallāna, you take this occasion for coming here;
sit down, my good Moggallāna, this seat is appointed."

The venerable Moggallāna the Great sat down on the appointed seat.

Sakka, the lord of devas,
having taken a low seat,
sat down at a respectful distance.

The venerable Moggallāna the Great
spoke thus to Sakka, the lord of devas,
as he was sitting down at a respectful distance:

[308] "In regard to the talk that the Lord spoke in brief to you, Kosiya,<sup>8</sup> on freedom by the destruction of craving, it were good even for me to hear portions of this talk."

"I, my good Moggallāna, am very busy, there is much to be done by me;
both on my own account there are things to be done, and there are also (still more)<sup>9</sup> things to be done for the devas of the Thirty-Three.

Further, my good Moggallāna, it was properly heard,
properly learnt,
properly attended to,
properly reflected upon,
so that it cannot vanish quickly.

Once upon a time,<sup>10</sup> my good Moggallāna, a battle was in full swing between devas and demons.

In that battle, my good Moggallāna, the devas conquered,
the demons were defeated.

So I, my good Moggallāna, having won that battle and being victorious in the, battle, when I came back from there built a palace named Vejayanta<sup>11</sup> (Victory).

Now, my good Moggallāna, there are a hundred towers to the Vejayanta Palace, in each tower there are seven gabled houses, in each gabled house there are seven nymphs, and for each nymph there are seven attendants.

Would you, my good Moggallāna, like to see the delights of the Vejayanta Palace?"

The venerable Moggallāna the Great consented by becoming silent.

Then Sakka, the lord of devas, and the great rajah Vessavaṇa,<sup>12</sup> having put the venerable Moggallāna the Great in front of them approached Vejayanta Palace.

The female attendants of Sakka, the lord of devas,
saw the venerable Moggallāna the Great coming in the distance;
on seeing him,
shrinking and shy,
each entered her own inner room.

As a daughter-in-law<sup>13</sup> shrinks and is shy on seeing her father-in-law, even so did the female attendants of Sakka, the lord of devas, on seeing the venerable Moggallāna the Great,
shrinking and shy,
each enter her own inner room.

Then Sakka, the lord of devas, and Vessavaṇa, the great rajah, made the [309] venerable Moggallāna the Great follow them into the Vejayanta Palace
and roam about in it,
and (they said):

"My dear Moggallāna, see this delight of the Vejayanta Palace, and, dear Moggallāna, see that delight of the Vejayanta Palace."

"This shines forth as a deed of merit formerly done by the venerable Kosiya, and people seeing anything delightful speak thus:

'Indeed it shines forth from the devas of the Thirty-Three, that is to say it shines forth as a deed of merit
formerly done by the venerable Kosiya.'

Then it occurred to the venerable Moggallāna the Great:

"This yakkha lives much too indolently.

Suppose that I were to agitate this yakkha?'

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great worked such a working of psychic power that with his big toe he made Vejayanta Palace tremble, shake and quake.

Then the minds of Sakka, the lord of devas, and of the great rajah Vessavaṇa and of the devas of the Thirty-Three were full of wonder and marvel, and they said:

"Indeed, the great psychic power,
the great majesty
of the recluse is wonderful, it is indeed marvellous, inasmuch as with his big toe he makes this deva-like abode tremble, shake and quake."

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great, knowing that Sakka, the lord of devas, was agitated and astounded,<sup>14</sup> spoke thus to Sakka, the lord of devas:

"In regard to the talk that the Lord spoke in brief to you, Kosiya,
on freedom by the destruction of craving, it were good even for me to hear portions of that talk."

"As to that I, my good Moggallāna,
approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
I stood at a respectful distance.

As I was standing at a respectful distance, my good Moggallāna, I spoke thus to the Lord:

'Briefly, Lord, to what extent does a monk come to be freed by the destruction of craving,
completely fulfilled,
completely secure from the bonds,
a complete Brahma-farer,
complete as to his culmination,
best of devas and men?

When this had been said, my good Moggallāna, the Lord spoke thus to me;

'It is not fitting
that there should be inclination
towards any (psycho-physical) conditions.'

If, lord of devas, a monk comes to hear this, that

'It is not fitting
that there should be inclination
towards any (psycho-physical) conditions,'

he knows all the conditions thoroughly;
by knowing all the conditions thoroughly
he knows all the conditions accurately;
by knowing all the conditions accurately,
whatever feeling he feels,
pleasant
or painful
or neither painful nor pleasant,
he abides viewing impermanence,
he abides viewing dispassion,
he abides viewing stopping,
he abides viewing renunciation
in regard to those feelings.

When he is abiding viewing impermanence,
when he is abiding viewing dispassion,
when he is abiding viewing stopping,
when he is abiding viewing renunciation
in regard to these feelings,
he grasps after nothing in the world;
not grasping
he is not troubled;
being untroubled he himself is individually attained to nibbāna, and he comprehends:

'Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close is the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of being such or such'.

Briefly, it is to this extent, lord of devas,
that a monk comes to be freed by the destruction of craving,
completely fulfilled,
completely secure from the bonds,
a complete Brahma-farer,

complete as to his culmination,
best of devas and [310] men.'

Thus, my good Moggallāna, did the Lord speak to me briefly
on freedom by the destruction of craving."

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great, having rejoiced in what Sakka, the lord of devas, had said,
having given thanks,
as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm
or might bend back his outstretched arm, vanishing even so from among the devas of the Thirty-Three, did he become manifest in the palace of Migāra's mother in the Eastern Monastery.

Then soon after the venerable Moggallāna the Great had departed,
the female attendants of Sakka, the lord of devas,
spoke thus to Sakka, the lord of devas:

"Good sir, is not this lord your teacher?"

"Good ladies, this lord is not my teacher, he is a fellow Brahma-farer of mine,
the venerable Moggallāna the Great."

"It is a gain for you, good sir, that this fellow Brahma-farer of yours is of such great psychic potency,
of such great majesty;
certainly this lord is your teacher."

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Moggallāna the Great spoke thus to the Lord:

"Lord, does the Lord know that just now he spoke in brief on freedom by the destruction of craving to a very powerful yakkha?"

"I know, Moggallāna, that Sakka, the lord of devas, approached me here;
having approached,
having greeted me,
he stood at a respectful distance.

As he was standing at a respectful distance,
Sakka, the lord of devas, spoke thus to me, Moggallāna:

'Briefly, Lord, to what extent
does a monk come to be freed by the destruction of craving,
completely fulfilled,
completely secure from the bonds,
a complete Brahma-farer,
complete as to his culmination,
best of devas and men?

When this had been said, I, Moggallāna,
spoke thus to Sakka, the lord of devas:

'As to this, lord of devas, a monk comes to hear:

'It is not fitting
that there should be inclination
towards any (psycho-physical) conditions,'

he knows all the conditions thoroughly;
by knowing all the conditions thoroughly

he knows all the conditions accurately;
by knowing all the conditions accurately,
whatever feeling he feels,
pleasant
or painful
or neither painful nor pleasant,
he abides viewing impermanence,
he abides viewing dispassion,
he abides viewing stopping,
he abides viewing renunciation
in regard to those feelings.

When he is [311] abiding viewing impermanence,
when he is abiding viewing dispassion,
when he is abiding viewing stopping,
when he is abiding viewing renunciation
in regard to these feelings,
he grasps after nothing in the world;
not grasping
he is not troubled;
being untroubled he himself is
individually attained to nibbāna, and he comprehends:

'Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close is the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of being such or such'.

Briefly, it is to this extent, lord of devas,
that a monk comes to be freed by the destruction of craving,
completely fulfilled,
completely secure from the bonds,
a complete Brahma-farer,
complete as to his culmination,
best of devas and men.'

Briefly, it is to this extent, lord of devas,
that a monk comes to be freed by the destruction of craving,
completely fulfilled,
completely secure from the bonds,
a complete Brahma-farer,
complete as to his culmination,
best of devas and men.'

I, Moggallāna, know that I spoke in brief thus on freedom by the destruction of craving to Sakka, the lord of devas."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, the venerable Moggallāna the Great rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Lesser Discourse on the Destruction of Craving: the Seventh

---

<sup>1</sup> Cf. D. ii. 283, where Sakka puts the same question; also S. iii. 13; [SN 3.22.4 Woodward] A. v. 326. [AN 11.11 Woodward]

<sup>2</sup> A term usually reserved for the Buddha or Tathāgata, but used as above at A. v. 326. [AN 11.11 Woodward]

<sup>3</sup> MA. ii. 298 calls these the five khandhas (psycho-physical components), the twelve spheres (the six sense-organs and their appropriate kinds of sense-data), and the eighteen elements (see e.g. Vbh. 87; Dhs. 1333).

<sup>4</sup> Dispassion and stopping are twofold: dispassion for or stopping of destruction; and complete dispassion, complete stopping, MA. ii. 299.

<sup>5</sup> As at M. i. 67; [MN 11 Horner] S. iii. 54. MA. ii. 299 says he himself attains nibbāna by the nibbāna of the defilements.

<sup>6</sup> MA. ii. 300, consisting of five kinds.

<sup>7</sup> Ekaṇḍarīka uyyāna. MA. ii. 300 does not comment on this. See Ekaṇḍarīka paribbājakārāma, near Vesālī, M. i. 481.

<sup>8</sup> "Probably one of the several clan names which are also names of animals" (owl), DPPN. Cf. D. ii. 270, Ud. 30, Jā. ii. 252. C. E. Godage, "Place of Indra in Early Buddhism," University of Ceylon Review, Vol. III, No. 1, p. 53 thinks Indra (= Sakka) may have become the tutelary god of that particular clan (the Kusikas) to have gained this epithet.

<sup>9</sup> App'eva sakena ... api ca devānam yeva = na bahu ... pana bahu, MA. ii. 301.

<sup>10</sup> As at D. ii. 285.

<sup>11</sup> Cf. Thag. 1194-96; S. i. 234; DhA. i. 273.

<sup>12</sup> One of the names of Kuvera, a ruler over the yakkhas, his kingdom being to the north. MA. ii. 303 says he was a favourite of Sakka's.

<sup>13</sup> Cf. M. i. 186.

<sup>14</sup> MA. ii. 304 says this was due to joy.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
4. Mahā Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
4. The Greater Division of the Pairs

38. Greater Discourse on the Destruction of Craving

Mahā Taṇhā Saṅkhaya Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Now at that time a pernicious view<sup>1</sup> like this had accrued to the monk called Sāti, a fisherman's son a fisherman's son:

"In so far as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord it is that this consciousness itself runs on, fares on, not another."

Several monks heard:

"It is said that a pernicious [312] view like this has accrued to the monk called Sāti
a fisherman's son:

'In so far as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord it is that this consciousness itself runs on,
fares on,
not another.'

Then these monks approached the monk Sāti
a fisherman's son;
having approached,
they spoke thus to the monk Sāti a fisherman's son:

"Is it true, as is said,
that a pernicious view like this
has accrued to you,
reverend Sāti?

'In so far as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord
it is that this consciousness itself runs on,
fares on,
not another'?"

"Even so do I, your reverences,
understand dhamma taught by the Lord,
that it is this consciousness itself
that runs on,
fares on,
not another."

Then these monks,
anxious to dissuade the monk Sāti a fisherman's son,
from that pernicious view,
questioned him,
cross-questioned him,

and pressed him for his reasons,
saying:

"Do not, reverend Sāti, a fisherman's son speak thus,
do not misrepresent the Lord;
neither is misrepresentation of the Lord seemly,
nor would the Lord speak thus.

For, reverend Sāti, a fisherman's son
in many a figure
is conditioned genesis spoken of
in connection with consciousness
by the Lord, saying:

'Apart from condition
there is no origination of consciousness.'

But the monk Sāti a fisherman's son,
even although questioned,
cross-questioned
and pressed for his reasons by these monks, obstinately holding to
and adhering to
that pernicious view,
decided:

"Thus it is that I, your reverences,
understand dhamma taught by the Lord,
that it is this consciousness itself
that runs on,
fares on,
not another."

And since these monks were not able to dissuade the monk Sāti a fisherman's son,
from that pernicious view, they approached the Lord;

having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
they sat down at a respectful distance.

As they were sitting down at a respectful distance,
these monks spoke thus to the Lord:

"Lord, a pernicious view like this has accrued to the monk Sāti a fisherman's son:

'In so far as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord
it is that this consciousness itself runs on,
fares on,
not another'?"

We heard, Lord:

"It is said that a pernicious view like this has accrued to the monk called Sāti
a fisherman's son:

'In so far as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord
it is that this consciousness itself runs on,
fares on,
not another.'"

Then we approached the monk Sāti
a fisherman's son;
having approached,
they spoke thus to the monk Sāti a fisherman's son:

"Is it true, as is said,
that a pernicious view like this
has accrued to you,
reverend Sāti?"

'In so far as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord
it is that this consciousness itself runs on,
fares on,
not another'?"

"Even so do I, your reverences,
understand dhamma taught by the Lord,
that it is this consciousness itself
that runs on,
fares on,
not another."

Then, anxious to dissuade the monk Sāti a fisherman's son,
from that [313] pernicious view,
we questioned him,
cross-questioned him,
and pressed him for his reasons,
saying:

"Do not, reverend Sāti, a fisherman's son speak thus,
do not misrepresent the Lord;
neither is misrepresentation of the Lord seemly,
nor would the Lord speak thus.

For, reverend Sāti, a fisherman's son
in many a figure
is conditioned genesis spoken of
in connection with consciousness
by the Lord, saying:

'Apart from condition
there is no origination of consciousness.'

But the monk Sāti a fisherman's son,
even although questioned,
cross-questioned
and pressed for his reasons by us,

obstinately holding to
and adhering to
that pernicious view,
decided:

"Thus it is that I, your reverences,
understand dhamma taught by the Lord,
that it is this consciousness itself
that runs on,
fares on,
not another."

And since, Lord, we were not able to dissuade the monk Sāti, a fisherman's son,
from that pernicious view,
we are telling this matter to the Lord."

Then the Lord addressed a certain monk, saying:

"Come, do you, monk,
address the monk Sāti, a fisherman's son, in my name,
saying:

'Sāti, a fisherman's son the teacher is summoning you.'"

"Yes, Lord," and this monk,
having answered the Lord in assent, approached the monk Sāti, a fisherman's son;
having approached,
he spoke thus to the monk Sāti, a fisherman's son:

"The teacher is summoning you, reverend Sāti."

"Yes, your reverence,"
and the monk Sāti, a fisherman's son, having answered this monk in assent,
approached the Lord;
having approached,

having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

The Lord spoke thus to the monk Sāti, a fisherman's son,
as he was sitting down at a respectful distance:

"Is it true, as is said,
that a pernicious view like this has accrued to you, Sāti:

'In so far as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord
it is that this consciousness itself runs on,
fares on,
not another'?"

"Even so do I, Lord, understand dhamma taught by the Lord:

It is this consciousness itself that runs on,
fares on,
not another."

"What is this consciousness, Sāti?"

"It is this, Lord, that speaks,<sup>2</sup> that feels,
that experiences now here, now there,
the fruition of deeds
that are lovely and that are depraved."<sup>3</sup>

"But to whom, foolish man, do you understand that dhamma was taught by me thus?"

Foolish man, has not consciousness generated by conditions<sup>4</sup> been spoken of in many a figure by me, [314] saying:

'Apart from condition
there is no origination of consciousness'?

But now you, foolish man,
not only misrepresent me
because of your own wrong grasp, but you also injure<sup>5</sup> yourself
and give rise to much demerit which, foolish man, will be for your woe and sorrow
for a long time."

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"What do you think about this, monks?

Can this monk Sāti, a fisherman's son, have even a glimmering of this dhamma and discipline?"

"How could this be, Lord?

It is not so, Lord."

When this had been said, the monk Sāti, a fisherman's son, sat down silent,
ashamed,
his shoulders drooping,
his head bent,
brooding,
speechless.

Then the Lord, understanding why the monk Sāti, a fisherman's son,
was silent,
ashamed,
his shoulders drooping,
his head bent,
brooding,

speechless,
spoke thus to the monk Sāti, a fisherman's son:

"You, foolish man, will be known through this pernicious view of your own, for I will question the monks on it."

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Do you, monks, understand that dhamma was taught by me thus so that this monk Sāti, a fisherman's son, because of his own wrong grasp
not only misrepresents me
but is also injuring himself
and giving rise to much demerit?"

"No, Lord.

For in many a figure
has consciousness generated by conditions been spoken of to us by the Lord,
saying:

'Apart from condition
there is no origination of consciousness.'

"It is good, monks,
it is good that you understand thus dhamma taught by me to you, monks.

For in many a figure
has consciousness generated by conditions been spoken of by me to you, monks, saying:

'Apart from condition
there is no origination of consciousness.'

But this monk Sāti, a fisherman's son, because of his own wrong grasp,
not only misrepresents me,
but is also injuring himself
and giving rise to much demerit.

This will be for this foolish man's woe and sorrow
for a long time.

It is because, monks, an appropriate condition arises that consciousness is known by this or that name:
if consciousness arises because of eye and material shapes,
it is known as visual consciousness;
if consciousness arises because of ear and sounds,
it is known as auditory consciousness;
if, consciousness arises because of nose and smells,
it is known as olfactory consciousness;
if consciousness arises because of tongue and tastes,
it is known as gustatory consciousness;
[315] if consciousness arises because of body and touches,
it is known as tactile consciousness;
if consciousness arises because of mind and mental objects,
it is known as mental consciousness.

Monks, as a fire burns because of this or that appropriate condition, by that it is known:
if a fire burns because of sticks, it is known as a stick-fire;
and if a fire burns because of chips, it is known as a chip-fire;
and if a fire burns because of grass, it is known as a grass-fire;
and if a fire burns because of cow-dung, it is known as a cow-dung fire;

and if a fire burns because of chaff, it is known as a chaff-fire;
and if a fire burns because of rubbish, it is known as a rubbish-fire.

Even so, monks, when because of a condition appropriate to it consciousness arises, it is known by this or that name:
if consciousness arises because of eye and material shapes,
it is known as visual consciousness;
if consciousness arises because of ear and sounds,
it is known as auditory consciousness;
if, consciousness arises because of nose and smells,
it is known as olfactory consciousness;
if consciousness arises because of tongue and tastes,
it is known as gustatory consciousness;
if consciousness arises because of body and touches,
it is known as tactile consciousness;
if consciousness arises because of mind and mental objects,
it is known as mental consciousness.

Do you see, monks,
that this has come to be?"

"Yes, Lord."

"Do you see, monks,
the origination of this nutriment?"

"Yes, Lord."

"Do you see, monks,
that from the stopping of this nutriment, that which has come to be
is liable to stopping?"

"Yes, Lord."

"From doubt, monks,
does the perplexity arise:

'This that has come to be,
might it not be?'"

"Yes, Lord."

"From doubt, monks, the perplexity arises:

'Might there not be an origination of that nutriment?'"

"Yes, Lord."

"From doubt the perplexity arises:

'By the stopping of that nutriment, might that which has come to be not be liable to stopping?'"

"Yes, Lord."

"By seeing as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom, monks, that,
'This has come to be -
is that which is perplexity got rid of?'"

"Yes, Lord."

"By seeing as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom, monks, that,
'This is the origination of nutriment' -
is that which is perplexity got rid of?'"

"Yes, Lord."

"By seeing as it really is
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom, [316] monks, that,
'From the stopping of that nutriment
that which has come to be
is liable to stopping' -
is that which is perplexity got rid of?"

"Yes, Lord."

"Thinking,
'This has come to be' -
is there for you, monks
as to this,
absence of perplexity?"

"Yes, Lord."

"Thinking,
'This is the origination of nutriment' -
is there for you, monks,
as to this,
absence of perplexity?"

"Yes, Lord."

"Thinking,
'From the stopping of this nutriment,
this that has come to be
is liable to stopping' -
is there for you, monks,
as to this,
absence of perplexity?"

"Yes, Lord."

"Thinking,
'This has come to be' -

is it properly seen
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom
as it really is?"

"Yes, Lord."

"Thinking,
'This is the origination of nutriment' -
is it properly seen
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom
as it really is?"

"Yes, Lord."

"Thinking,
'From the stopping of this nutriment,
this that has come to be
is liable to stopping' -
is it properly seen
by means of perfect intuitive wisdom
as it really is?"

"Yes, Lord."

"If you, monks, cling to,
treasure,
cherish,
foster this view,
thus purified,
thus cleansed,
then, monks, would you understand that the Parable of the Raft<sup>6</sup> is dhamma taught for crossing over,
not for retaining?"

"No, Lord."

"But if you, monks, do not cling to,
do not treasure,
do not cherish,
do not foster<sup>7</sup> this view,
thus purified,
thus cleansed,
then, monks, would you understand that the Parable of the Raft is dhamma taught for crossing over,
not for retaining?"

"Yes, Lord."

"Monks, these four (forms of) nutriment<sup>8</sup> are for the maintenance of creatures that have come to be or for the assistance of those seeking birth.

What are the four?

Material nutriment,
whether coarse or fine, sensory impingement is the second,
mental striving is the third, consciousness is the fourth.

And [317] of these four (forms of) nutriment, monks, what is the provenance,
what the source,
what the birth,
what the origin?<sup>9</sup>

These four (forms of) nutriment, monks, have craving as the provenance, craving as source,

craving as birth,
craving as origin.

And, monks, what is the provenance of this craving,
what the source,
what the birth,
what the origin?

Feeling is the provenance of craving,
feeling is the source of craving, feeling is the birth of craving, feeling is the origin of craving.

And what, monks, is the provenance of feelings, what the source of feelings, what the birth of feelings, what the origin of feelings?

Sensory impingement is the provenance of feelings,
sensory impingement is the source of feeling sensory impingement is the birth of feeling sensory impingement is the origin of feeling.

And what, monks, is the provenance of sensory impingement what the source of sensory impingement what the birth of sensory impingement what is the origin of sensory impingement?

The six (sensory) spheres are the provenance the six (sensory) spheres are the source of sensory impingement the six (sensory) spheres are the birth of sensory impingement the six (sensory) spheres are the origin of sensory impingement.

And what, monks, is the provenance of the six (sensory) spheres what the source of the six (sensory) spheres what the birth of the six (sensory) spheres what is the origin of the six (sensory) spheres?

Psycho-physicality<sup>10</sup> is the provenance psycho-physicality is the source of the six (sensory) spheres psycho-physicality is the birth of the six (sensory) spheres psycho-physicality is the origin of the six (sensory) spheres.

And what, monks, is the provenance of psycho-physicality what the source of psycho-physicality what the birth of psycho-physicality what is the origin of psycho-physicality?

Consciousness is the provenance of psycho-physicality consciousness is the source of psycho-physicality consciousness is the birth of psycho-physicality, consciousness is the origin of psycho-physicality.

And what, monks, is the provenance of consciousness what is the source of consciousness what is the birth of consciousness what is the origin of consciousness?

The karma-formations are the provenance the karma-formations are the source of consciousness the karma-formations are the birth of consciousness the karma-formations are the origin of consciousness.

And what, monks, is the provenance of the karma-formations what the source of the karma-formations what the birth of the karma-formations what is the origin of the karma-formations?

Ignorance is the provenance ignorance is the source of the karma-formations ignorance is the birth of the karma-formations ignorance is the origin of the karma-formations.

So it is, monks, that conditioned by ignorance are the karma-formations;
conditioned by the karma- formations is consciousness;
conditioned by consciousness is psycho-physicality;
conditioned by psycho-physicality are the six (sensory) spheres;
conditioned by the six (sensory) spheres is sensory impingement;
conditioned by sensory impingement is feeling;
conditioned by feeling is craving;
conditioned by craving is grasping;
conditioned by grasping is becoming;
conditioned by becoming is [318] birth;
conditioned by birth,
ageing and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair
come into being.

Such is the arising of this entire mass of anguish.

"It has been said:

'Conditioned by birth is ageing and dying.'

Is there ageing and dying for you, monks,
conditioned by birth,
or how is it as to this?"

"Conditioned by birth, Lord, is ageing and dying.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'Conditioned by birth is ageing and dying.'

■

"It has been said:

'Conditioned by becoming is birth.'

Is there birth for you, monks, conditioned by becoming,
or how is it as to this?"

"Conditioned by becoming, Lord, is birth.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'Conditioned by becoming is birth.'"

■

"It has been said:

'Conditioned by grasping is becoming.'

Is there becoming for you, monks, conditioned by grasping,
or how is it as to this?"

"Conditioned by grasping, Lord, is becoming.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'Conditioned by grasping is becoming.'"

■

"It has been said:

'Conditioned by craving is grasping.'

Is there grasping for you, monks, conditioned by craving,
or how is it as to this?"

"Conditioned by craving, Lord, is grasping.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'Conditioned by craving is grasping.'

■

"It has been said:

'Conditioned by feeling is craving.'

Is there craving for you, monks, conditioned by feeling,
or how is it as to this?"

"Conditioned by feeling, Lord, is craving.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'Conditioned by feeling is craving.'

■

"It has been said:

'Conditioned by sensory impingement is feeling.'

Is there feeling for you, monks, conditioned by sensory impingement,
or how is it as to this?"

"Conditioned by sensory impingement, Lord,
is feeling.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'Conditioned by sensory impingement is feeling.'

■

"It has been said:

'Conditioned by the six (sensory) spheres is sensory impingement.'

Is there sensory impingement for you, monks, conditioned by the six (sensory) spheres,
or how is it as to this?"

"Conditioned by the six (sensory) spheres, Lord,
is sensory impingement.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'Conditioned by the six (sensory) spheres is sensory impingement.'

■

[319] "It has been said:

'Conditioned by psycho-physicality are the six (sensory) spheres.

Are there the six (sensory) spheres for you, monks, conditioned by psycho-physicality,
or how is it as to this?"

"Conditioned by psycho-physicality, Lord, are the six (sensory) spheres.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'Conditioned by psycho-physicality are the six (sensory) spheres.'

■

"It has been said:

'Conditioned by consciousness is psycho-physicality.'

Is there psycho-physicality for you, monks, conditioned by consciousness,
or how is it as to this?"

"Conditioned by consciousness, Lord, is psycho-physicality.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'Conditioned by consciousness is psycho-physicality.'

■

"It has been said:

'Conditioned by the karma-formations
is consciousness.'

Is there consciousness for you, monks, conditioned by the karma-formations,
or how is it as to this?"

"Conditioned by the karma-formations Lord,
is consciousness.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'Conditioned by the karma-formations is consciousness.'

■

"It has been said:

'Conditioned by ignorance are the karma-formations.'

Are there karma-formations for you, monks, conditioned by ignorance,
or how is it as to this?"

"Conditioned by ignorance, Lord, are the karma-formations.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'Conditioned by ignorance are the karma-formations.'

---

"It is good, monks.

Both you say this, monks,
and I too say this:

If this is,
that comes to be;
from the arising of this,
that arises,
that is to say:

Conditioned by ignorance are the karma-formations;
conditioned by the karma-formations is consciousness;
conditioned by consciousness is psycho-physicality;
conditioned by psycho-physicality are the six (sensory) spheres;
conditioned by the six (sensory) spheres is sensory impingement;
conditioned by sensory impingement is feeling;

conditioned by feeling is craving;
conditioned by craving is grasping;
conditioned by grasping is becoming;
conditioned by becoming is birth;
conditioned by birth,
ageing and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair
come into being.

Such is the arising of this entire mass of anguish.

---

But from the utter fading away and stopping of this very ignorance
is the stopping of the karma-formations;
from the stopping of the karma-formations
the stopping of consciousness;
from the stopping of consciousness
the stopping of psycho-physicality;
from the stopping of psycho-physicality
the stopping of the six (sensory) [320] spheres;
from the stopping of the six (sensory) spheres
the stopping of sensory impingement;
from the stopping of sensory impingement
the stopping of feeling;
from the stopping of feeling
the stopping of craving;
from the stopping of craving

the stopping of grasping;
from the stopping of grasping
the stopping of becoming;
from the stopping of becoming
the stopping of birth;
from the stopping of birth,
old age and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair
are stopped.

Such is the stopping of this entire mass of anguish.

It has been said:

'From the stopping of birth
is the stopping of ageing and dying.'

Is there for you, monks,
from the stopping of birth the stopping of ageing and dying,
or how is it as to this?"

"From the stopping of birth, Lord,
is the stopping of ageing and dying.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'From the stopping of birth is the stopping of ageing and dying.'

■

It has been said:

'From the stopping of becoming
is the stopping of birth.'

Is there for you, monks,
from the stopping of becoming
the stopping of birth,
or how is it as to this?"

"From the stopping of becoming, Lord,
is the stopping of birth.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'From the stopping of becoming is the stopping of birth.'

■

It has been said:

'From the stopping of grasping
is the stopping of becoming.'

Is there for you, monks,
from the stopping of grasping
the stopping of becoming,
or how is it as to this?"

"From the stopping of grasping, Lord,
is the stopping of becoming.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'From the stopping of grasping is the stopping of becoming.'

■

It has been said:

'From the stopping of craving
is the stopping of grasping.'

Is there for you, monks,
from the stopping of craving
the stopping of grasping,
or how is it as to this?"

"From the stopping of craving, Lord,
is the stopping of grasping.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'From the stopping of craving is the stopping of grasping.'

■

It has been said:

'From the stopping of feeling
is the stopping of craving.'

Is there for you, monks,
from the stopping of feeling
the stopping of craving,
or how is it as to this?"

"From the stopping of feeling, Lord,
is the stopping of craving.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'From the stopping of feeling is the stopping of craving.'

■

It has been said:

'From the stopping of sensory impingement
is the stopping of feeling.'

Is there for you, monks,
from the stopping of sensory impingement
the stopping of feeling,
or how is it as to this?"

"From the stopping of sensory impingement, Lord,
is the stopping of feeling.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'From the stopping of sensory impingement is the stopping of feeling.'

■

It has been said:

'From the stopping of the six (sensory) spheres
is the stopping of sensory impingement.'

Is there for you, monks,
from the stopping of the six (sensory) spheres
the stopping of sensory impingement,
or how is it as to this?"

"From the stopping of the six (sensory) spheres, Lord,
is the stopping of sensory impingement.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'From the stopping of the six (sensory) spheres is the stopping of sensory impingement.'

■

It has been said:

'From the stopping of psycho-physicality
is the stopping of the six (sensory) spheres.'

Is there for you, monks,
from the stopping of psycho-physicality
the stopping of the six (sensory) spheres,
or how is it as to this?"

"From the stopping of psycho-physicality, Lord, is the stopping of the six (sensory) spheres.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'From the stopping of psycho-physicality is the stopping of the six (sensory) spheres.'"

■

It has been said:

'From the stopping of consciousness
is the stopping of psycho-physicality.'

Is there for you, monks,
from the stopping of consciousness
the stopping of psycho-physicality,
or how is it as to this?"

"From the stopping of consciousness, Lord,
is the stopping of psycho-physicality.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'From the stopping of consciousness is the stopping of psycho-physicality.'"

■

It has been said:

'From the stopping of the karma-formations is the stopping of consciousness.'

Is there for you, monks,
from the stopping of the karma-formations
the stopping of consciousness,
or how is it as to this?"

"From the stopping of the karma-formations, Lord, is the stopping of consciousness.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'From the stopping of the karma-formations is the stopping of consciousness.'

■

It has been said:

'From the stopping of ignorance
is the stopping of the karma-formations.'

Is there for you, monks,
from the stopping of ignorance
the stopping of the karma-formations,
or how is it as to this?"

"From the stopping of ignorance, Lord,
is the stopping of the karma-formations.

Thus it is for us as to this:

'From the stopping of ignorance is the stopping of the karma-formations.'

"It is good, monks.

Both you say this, monks,
and I too say this:

If this is not,
that does not come to be;
from the stopping of this,
that is stopped,
that is to say:

From the stopping of ignorance is the stopping of the karma-formations;
from the stopping of the karma-formations
the stopping of consciousness;
from the stopping of consciousness
the stopping of psycho-physicality;
from the stopping of psycho-physicality
the stopping of the six (sensory) spheres;
from the stopping of the six (sensory) spheres
the stopping of sensory impingement;
from the stopping of sensory impingement
the stopping of feeling;
from the stopping of feeling
the stopping of craving;
from the stopping of craving
the stopping of grasping;
from the stopping of grasping
the stopping of becoming;
from the stopping of becoming
the stopping of birth;
from the stopping of birth,
old age and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair
are stopped.

Such is the stopping of this entire mass of anguish.

Now, would you, monks,
knowing thus,
seeing thus,
either run back to times gone by,<sup>11</sup> thinking:

'Now, were we in a past period,<sup>12</sup> were we not in a past period, what were we in a past period, how were we in a past period,
having been what,
what did we become in a past period?'

"No, Lord."

"Or would you, monks,
knowing thus,
seeing thus,
run forward into times to come,
thinking:

'Will we come to be<sup>12</sup> in a future period, will we not come to be in a future period, what will we come [321] to be in a future period, how will we come to be in a future period,
having been what,
what will we come to be in a future period?'

"No, Lord."

"Or would you, monks,
knowing thus,
seeing thus,
come to be subjectively doubtful now about the present period,

thinking:

'Am I,
am I not,
what am I,
how am I,
whence has this being come,
where going will it come to be?"

"No, Lord."

"Or would you, monks,
knowing thus,
seeing thus,
speak thus:

'The Lord is oppressive<sup>13</sup> to us, but we speak out of respect to our Teacher'?"

"No, Lord."

"Or would you, monks,
knowing thus,
seeing thus,
speak thus:

'A recluse speaks thus to us, and recluses,
but we do not speak thus'?"

"No, Lord."

"Or would you, monks,
knowing thus,
seeing thus,
look out for another teacher?"

"No, Lord."

"Or would you, monks,
knowing thus,
seeing thus,
fall back on those which are the customs and curious ceremonies<sup>14</sup> of ordinary recluses and brahmans (thinking) these to be the essence?"

"No, Lord."

"Do not you, monks, speak only of that which of yourselves you have known, seen<sup>15</sup>
and discerned?"

"Yes, Lord."

"It is good, monks.

You, monks, have been presented by me with this dhamma
which is self-realised,
timeless,
a come-and-see-thing,
leading onwards,
to be understood individually by the wise.

Monks, this dhamma is self-realised,
timeless,
a come-and-see-thing,
leading onwards,
to be understood individually by the wise.

What has been said
has been said on account of this.

Monks, it is on the conjunction of three things that there is conception.<sup>16</sup>

If there is here<sup>17</sup> a coitus of the parents, but it is not the mother's season and the gandhabba<sup>18</sup> is not present - for so long [322] there is not conception.

If there is here a coitus of the parents and it is the mother's season, but the gandhabba is not present -
for so long there is not conception.

But if, monks, there is here a coitus of the parents and it is the mother's season and the gandhabba is present, it is on the conjunction of these three things that there is conception.

Then, monks, the mother for nine or ten months carries the foetus in her womb with great anxiety for her heavy burden.

Then, monks, at the end of nine or ten months the mother gives birth
with great anxiety for her heavy burden.

When it is born,
she feeds it with her own life-blood.

For this, monks, is 'life-blood'
in the discipline for an ariyan,

that is to say mother's milk.

And, monks, when that boy has grown and has developed his sense-organs,<sup>19</sup> he plays at those which are games<sup>20</sup> for little boys,
that is to say
with a toy plough,
tip-cart,
at turning somersaults,
with a toy windmill,
with a toy measure of leaves,
with a toy cart,
with a toy bow.

Monks, when that boy has grown and has developed his sense-organs he enjoys himself, endowed with and possessed of the five strands of sense-pleasures:
material shapes cognisable through the eye,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sense pleasures,
alluring;
sounds cognisable through the ear,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sense pleasures,
alluring;
scents cognisable through the nose,
agreeable,
pleasant,

liked,
enticing,
connected with sense pleasures,
alluring;
savours cognisable through the tongue,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sense pleasures,
alluring;
touches cognisable through the body,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sense pleasures,
alluring.

---

When he has seen a material shape<sup>21</sup> through the eye, he feels attraction<sup>22</sup> for agreeable material shapes, he feels repugnance for disagreeable material shapes;
and he dwells without mindfulness aroused as to the body, with a mind that is limited;<sup>23</sup> and he does not [323] comprehend that freedom of mind<sup>24</sup>
and that freedom through intuitive wisdom
as they really are,
whereby those evil unskilled states of his
are stopped without remainder.

Possessed thus of compliance and antipathy,<sup>25</sup> whatever feeling he feels -
pleasant
or painful
or neither painful nor pleasant -
he delights in that feeling,
welcomes it
and persists in cleaving to it.

From delighting in that feeling of his,
from welcoming it,
from persisting in cleaving to it,
delight arises;
whatever is delight amid those feelings,
that is grasping;
conditioned by grasping is becoming;
conditioned by becoming is birth;
conditioned by birth,
old age and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair
come into being.

Such is the arising of this entire mass of anguish.

■

When he has heard a sound through the ear, he feels attraction for agreeable sounds, he feels repugnance for disagreeable sounds;
and he dwells without mindfulness aroused as to the body,
with a mind that is limited;
and he does not comprehend that freedom of mind

and that freedom through intuitive wisdom
as they really are,
whereby those evil unskilled states of his
are stopped without remainder.

Possessed thus of compliance and antipathy,
whatever feeling he feels -
pleasant
or painful
or neither painful nor pleasant -
he delights in that feeling,
welcomes it
and persists in cleaving to it.

From delighting in that feeling of his,
from welcoming it,
from persisting in cleaving to it,
delight arises;
whatever is delight amid those feelings,
that is grasping;
conditioned by grasping is becoming;
conditioned by becoming is birth;
conditioned by birth,
old age and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair
come into being.

Such is the arising of this entire mass of anguish.

■

When he has smelt a scent with the nose,
he feels attraction for agreeable scents, he feels repugnance for disagreeable scents;
and he dwells without mindfulness aroused as to the body,
with a mind that is limited;
and he does not comprehend that freedom of mind
and that freedom through intuitive wisdom
as they really are,
whereby those evil unskilled states of his
are stopped without remainder.

Possessed thus of compliance and antipathy,
whatever feeling he feels -
pleasant
or painful
or neither painful nor pleasant -
he delights in that feeling,
welcomes it
and persists in cleaving to it.

From delighting in that feeling of his,
from welcoming it,
from persisting in cleaving to it,
delight arises;
whatever is delight amid those feelings,
that is grasping;
conditioned by grasping is becoming;
conditioned by becoming is birth;
conditioned by birth,
old age and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair
come into being.

Such is the arising of this entire mass of anguish.

■

When he has savoured a taste with the tongue, he feels attraction for agreeable tastes, he feels repugnance for disagreeable tastes;
and he dwells without mindfulness aroused as to the body,
with a mind that is limited;
and he does not comprehend that freedom of mind
and that freedom through intuitive wisdom
as they really are,
whereby those evil unskilled states of his
are stopped without remainder.

Possessed thus of compliance and antipathy,
whatever feeling he feels -
pleasant
or painful
or neither painful nor pleasant -
he delights in that feeling,
welcomes it
and persists in cleaving to it.

From delighting in that feeling of his,
from welcoming it,
from persisting in cleaving to it,
delight arises;
whatever is delight amid those feelings,
that is grasping;
conditioned by grasping is becoming;
conditioned by becoming is birth;
conditioned by birth,
old age and dying,
grief,
sorrow,

suffering,
lamentation
and despair
come into being.

Such is the arising of this entire mass of anguish.

■

When he has felt a touch with the body,
he feels attraction for agreeable touches, he feels repugnance for disagreeable touches;
and he dwells without mindfulness aroused as to the body,
with a mind that is limited;
and he does not comprehend that freedom of mind
and that freedom through intuitive wisdom
as they really are,
whereby those evil unskilled states of his
are stopped without remainder.

Possessed thus of compliance and antipathy,
whatever feeling he feels -
pleasant
or painful
or neither painful nor pleasant -
he delights in that feeling,
welcomes it
and persists in cleaving to it.

From delighting in that feeling of his,
from welcoming it,
from persisting in cleaving to it,
delight arises;
whatever is delight amid those feelings,
that is grasping;
conditioned by grasping is becoming;

conditioned by becoming is birth;
conditioned by birth,
old age and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair
come into being.

Such is the arising of this entire mass of anguish.

■

When he has known a mental object with the mind, he feels attraction for agreeable mental objects, he feels repugnance for disagreeable mental objects;
and he dwells without mindfulness aroused as to the body,
with a mind that is limited;
and he does not comprehend that freedom of mind
and that freedom through intuitive wisdom
as they really are,
whereby those evil unskilled states of his
are stopped without remainder.

Possessed thus of compliance and antipathy,
whatever feeling he feels -
pleasant
or painful
or neither painful nor pleasant -
he delights in that feeling,
welcomes it
and persists in cleaving to it.

From delighting in that feeling of his,
from welcoming it,

from persisting in cleaving to it,
delight arises;
whatever is delight amid those feelings,
that is grasping;
conditioned by grasping is becoming;
conditioned by becoming is birth;
conditioned by birth,
old age and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair
come into being.

Such is the arising of this entire mass of anguish.

---

Now, monks, a Tathāgata arises in the world, a perfected one,
a fully Self-awakened one
endowed with right knowledge and conduct,
well-farer,
knower of the worlds,
the matchless charioteer of men to be tamed,
the Awakened One,
the Lord.

He makes known this world
with the devas,
with Māra,
with Brahmā,

creation
with its recluses and brahmans,
its devas and men,
having realised them by his own super-knowledge.

He teaches dhamma which is lovely at the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely at the ending,
with the spirit and the letter;
he proclaims the Brahma-faring
wholly fulfilled,
quite purified.

A householder
or a householder's son
or one born in another family
hears that dhamma.

Having heard that dhamma,
he gains faith in the Tathāgata.

Endowed with this faith
that he has acquired,
he reflects in this way:

'The household life is confined and dusty;
going forth is of the open;
it is not easy for one who lives in a house
to fare the Brahma-faring
wholly fulfilled,
wholly pure,
polished like a conch-shell.

Suppose now that I,
having cut off hair and beard,
having put on saffron robes,

should go forth from home
into homelessness?'

After a time,
getting rid of his wealth,
be it small or great,
getting rid of his circle of relations,
be it small or great,
having cut off his hair and beard,
having put on saffron robes,
he goes forth from home
into homelessness.

He, being thus one who has gone forth
and who is endowed with the training
and the way of living of monks,
abandoning onslaught on creatures,
is one who abstains from onslaught on creatures;
the stick laid aside,
the knife laid aside,
he lives kindly,
scrupulous,
friendly
and compassionate
towards all breathing things and creatures.

Abandoning the taking of what is not given,
he is one who abstains from taking what is not given;
being one who takes (only) what is given,
who waits for what is given,
not by stealing he lives with a self become pure.

Abandoning unchastity,
he is one who is chaste,
keeping remote (from unchastity),
abstaining from dealings with women.

Abandoning lying speech,
he is one who abstains from lying speech,
a truth-speaker,
a bondsman to truth,
trustworthy,
dependable,
no deceiver of the world.

Abandoning slanderous speech,
he is one who abstains from slanderous speech;
having heard something here
he is not one for repeating it elsewhere
for (causing) variance among these (people),
or having heard something elsewhere
he is not one to repeat it there
for (causing) variance among these (people).

In this way
he is a reconciler of those who are at variance,
and one who combines those who are friends.

Concord is his pleasure,
concord his delight,
concord his joy,
concord is the motive of his speech.

Abandoning harsh speech,
he is one who abstains from harsh speech.

Whatever speech is gentle,
pleasing to the ear,
affectionate,
going to the heart,
urbane,
pleasant to the manyfolk,

agreeable to the manyfolk -
he comes to be one who utters speech like this.

Abandoning frivolous chatter,
he is one who abstains from frivolous chatter.

He is a speaker at a right time,
a speaker of fact,
a speaker on the goal,
a speaker on dhamma,
a speaker on discipline,
he speaks words that are worth treasuring,
with similes at a right time
that are discriminating,
connected with the goal.

He comes to be one who abstains
from what involves destruction to seed-growth,
to vegetable growth.

He comes to be one who eats one meal a day,
refraining at night,
abstaining from eating at a wrong time.

He comes to be one who abstains
from watching shows of dancing,
singing,
music.

He comes to be one who abstains
from using garlands,
scents,
unguents,
adornments,
finery.

He comes to be one who abstains
from using high beds,
large beds.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting gold and silver.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting raw grain.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting raw meat.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting women and girls.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting women slaves and men slaves.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting goats and sheep.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting fowl and swine.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting elephants, cows, horses, mares.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting fields and sites.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting messages or going on such.

He comes to be one who abstains from buying and selling.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting from cheating with weights.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting from cheating with bronzes.

He comes to be one who abstains
from cheating with measures.

He comes to be one who abstains
from the crooked ways of bribery, fraud and deceit.

He comes to be one who abstains
from maiming, murdering, manacling, highway robbery.

He comes to be contented
with the robes for protecting his body,
with the almsfood for sustaining his stomach.

Wherever he goes
he takes these things with him as he goes.

As a bird on the wing
wherever it flies
takes its' wings with it as it flies,
so a monk,
contented with the robes for protecting his body,
with the almsfood for sustaining his stomach,
wherever he goes
takes these things with him as he goes.

He, possessed of the ariyan body of moral habit, subjectively experiences unsullied well-being.

Having seen a material shape with the eye,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwells with this organ of sight uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,

evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of sight,
he comes to control over the organ of sight.

Having heard a sound with the ear,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwells with this organ of hearing uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of hearing,
he comes to control over the organ of hearing.

Having smelt a smell with the nose,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwells with this organ of smell uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of smell,
he comes to control over the organ of smell.

Having savoured a taste with the tongue,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwells with this organ of taste uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of taste,
he comes to control over the organ of taste.

Having felt a touch with the body,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwells with this organ of touch uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of touch,
he comes to control over the organ of touch.

Having cognised a mental object with the mind,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he lives with this organ of mind uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of mind,
he comes to control over the organ of mind.

If he is possessed of this ariyan control of the (sense-) organs,
he subjectively experiences unsullied well-being.

Whether he is setting out
or returning,
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is looking down
or looking round,
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is bending back
or stretching out (his arm),
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is carrying his outer cloak,
his bowl,
his robe,
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is munching,
drinking,
eating,
savouring,
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is obeying the calls of nature,
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is walking,
standing,
asleep,
awake,
talking,
silent,
he is one who comports himself properly.

Possessed of this ariyan body of moral habit
and possessed of this ariyan control of the (sense-) organs
and possessed of this ariyan mindfulness
and clear consciousness,
he chooses a remote lodging in a forest,
at the root of a tree,
on a mountain slope,
in a wilderness,

in a hill-cave,
in a cemetery,
in a forest haunt,
in the open
or on a heap of straw.

He, returning from alms-gathering
after his meal,
sits down cross-legged
holding the back erect,
having made mindfulness
rise up in front of him.

He, having got rid of covetousness for the world,
lives with a mind devoid of coveting,
he purifies the mind of coveting.

By getting rid of the taint of ill-will,
he lives benevolent in mind;
and compassionate for the welfare
of all creatures and beings,
he purifies the mind of the taint of ill-will.

By getting rid of sloth and torpor,
he lives devoid of sloth and torpor;
perceiving the light,
mindful and clearly conscious,
he purifies the mind of sloth and torpor.

By getting rid of restlessness and worry,
he lives calmly,
the mind subjectively tranquillised,
he purifies the mind of restlessness and worry.

By getting rid of doubt,
he lives doubt-crossed;

unperplexed as to the states that are skilled,
he purifies his mind of doubt.

He, by getting rid Of these five hindrances - defilements of a mind and weakening to intuitive wisdom -
aloof from pleasure of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
enters and abides in the first meditation,
which is accompanied by initial thought and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness
and is rapturous and joyful.

And again, monks, a monk,
by allaying initial and discursive thought,
his mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters on and abides in the second meditation,
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration
and is rapturous and joyful.

And again, monks, a monk,
by the fading out of rapture,
dwells with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious,
and experiences in his person
that joy of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,'
and he enters on
and abides in
the third meditation.

And again, monks, a monk
by getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,

enters on
and abides in
the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

When he has seen a material shape through the eye, he does not feel attraction for agreeable material shapes, he does not feel [324] repugnance for disagreeable material shapes;
and he dwells with mindfulness aroused as to the body, with a mind that is immeasurable;<sup>26</sup>
and he comprehends that freedom of mind
and that freedom through intuitive wisdom
as they really are,
whereby those evil unskilled states of his
are stopped without remainder.

He who has thus got rid of compliance and antipathy, whatever feeling he feels -
pleasant
or painful
or neither painful nor pleasant -
he does not delight in that feeling,
does not welcome it
or persist in cleaving to it.

From not delighting in that feeling of his,
from not welcoming it,
from not persisting in cleaving to it,
whatever was delight in those feelings is stopped.

From the stopping of his delight
is the stopping of grasping;
from the stopping of grasping is the stopping of becoming;
from the stopping of becoming is the stopping of birth;

from the stopping of birth,
old age and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair
are stopped.

Such is the stopping of this entire mass of anguish.

■

When he has sound through the ear, he does not feel attraction for agreeable sounds, he does not feel repugnance for disagreeable sounds;
and he dwells with mindfulness aroused as to the body,
with a mind that is immeasurable;
and he comprehends that freedom of mind
and that freedom through intuitive wisdom
as they really are,
whereby those evil unskilled states of his
are stopped without remainder.

He who has thus got rid of compliance and antipathy, whatever feeling he feels -
pleasant
or painful
or neither painful nor pleasant -
he does not delight in that feeling,
does not welcome it
or persist in cleaving to it.

From not delighting in that feeling of his,
from not welcoming it,

from not persisting in cleaving to it,
whatever was delight in those feelings is stopped.

From the stopping of his delight
is the stopping of grasping;
from the stopping of grasping is the stopping of becoming;
from the stopping of becoming is the stopping of birth;
from the stopping of birth,
old age and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair
are stopped.

Such is the stopping of this entire mass of anguish.

■

When he has smelt a scent with the nose,
he does not feel attraction for agreeable scents, he does not feel repugnance for disagreeable scents;
and he dwells with mindfulness aroused as to the body,
with a mind that is immeasurable;
and he comprehends that freedom of mind
and that freedom through intuitive wisdom
as they really are,
whereby those evil unskilled states of his
are stopped without remainder.

He who has thus got rid of compliance and antipathy, whatever feeling he feels -
pleasant
or painful
or neither painful nor pleasant -

he does not delight in that feeling,
does not welcome it
or persist in cleaving to it.

From not delighting in that feeling of his,
from not welcoming it,
from not persisting in cleaving to it,
whatever was delight in those feelings is stopped.

From the stopping of his delight
is the stopping of grasping;
from the stopping of grasping is the stopping of becoming;
from the stopping of becoming is the stopping of birth;
from the stopping of birth,
old age and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair
are stopped.

Such is the stopping of this entire mass of anguish.

■

When he has savoured a taste with the tongue, he does not feel attraction for agreeable tastes, he does not feel repugnance for disagreeable tastes;
and he dwells with mindfulness aroused as to the body,
with a mind that is immeasurable;
and he comprehends that freedom of mind
and that freedom through intuitive wisdom
as they really are,
whereby those evil unskilled states of his
are stopped without remainder.

He who has thus got rid of compliance and antipathy, whatever feeling he feels -
pleasant
or painful
or neither painful nor pleasant -
he does not delight in that feeling,
does not welcome it
or persist in cleaving to it.

From not delighting in that feeling of his,
from not welcoming it,
from not persisting in cleaving to it,
whatever was delight in those feelings is stopped.

From the stopping of his delight
is the stopping of grasping;
from the stopping of grasping is the stopping of becoming;
from the stopping of becoming is the stopping of birth;
from the stopping of birth,
old age and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair
are stopped.

Such is the stopping of this entire mass of anguish.

■

When he has felt a touch with the body,
he does not feel attraction for agreeable touches, he does not feel repugnance for disagreeable touches;
and he dwells with mindfulness aroused as to the body,
with a mind that is immeasurable;

and he comprehends that freedom of mind
and that freedom through intuitive wisdom
as they really are,
whereby those evil unskilled states of his
are stopped without remainder.

He who has thus got rid of compliance and antipathy, whatever feeling he feels -
pleasant
or painful
or neither painful nor pleasant -
he does not delight in that feeling,
does not welcome it
or persist in cleaving to it.

From not delighting in that feeling of his,
from not welcoming it,
from not persisting in cleaving to it,
whatever was delight in those feelings is stopped.

From the stopping of his delight
is the stopping of grasping;
from the stopping of grasping is the stopping of becoming;
from the stopping of becoming is the stopping of birth;
from the stopping of birth,
old age and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair
are stopped.

Such is the stopping of this entire mass of anguish.

■

When he has known a mental object with the mind,
he does not feel attraction for agreeable mental objects, he does not feel repugnance for disagreeable mental objects;
and he dwells with mindfulness aroused as to the body,
with a mind that is immeasurable;
and he comprehends that freedom of mind
and that freedom through intuitive wisdom
as they really are,
whereby those evil unskilled states of his
are stopped without remainder.

He who has thus got rid of compliance and antipathy, whatever feeling he feels -
pleasant
or painful
or neither painful nor pleasant -
he does not delight in that feeling,
does not welcome it
or persist in cleaving to it.

From not delighting in that feeling of his,
from not welcoming it,
from not persisting in cleaving to it,
whatever was delight in those feelings is stopped.

From the stopping of his delight
is the stopping of grasping;
from the stopping of grasping is the stopping of becoming;
from the stopping of becoming is the stopping of birth;
from the stopping of birth,
old age and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation

and despair
are stopped.

Such is the stopping of this entire mass of anguish.

Do you, monks, bear in mind this freedom by the destruction of craving (taught) in brief by me, but (remember) that Sāti the monk, a fisherman's son, is caught in the great net of craving, the tangle of craving."<sup>27</sup>

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Greater Discourse on the Destruction of Craving:
the Eighth

---

<sup>1</sup> For other "pernicious views" see M. i. 130, 326; Vin. ii. 25-6; A. v. 194. Here the view is one of Eternalism. This therā, as MA. ii. 305 calls Sāti was not learned. He was a Jātaka-repeater, so he thought that, although the other khandhaa were stopped now here, now there, consciousness ran on from this world to that beyond and from there to this world. It is inferred that he therefore thought consciousness had no condition, paccaya, for arising. But the Buddha had said if there is a condition it arises, with no condition there is no origination of consciousness. He therefore spoke as the Buddha did not, gave a blow to the Conqueror's Wheel, and was a thief in his dispensation. MA. ii. 305.

<sup>2</sup> vado = vade? (PED), and see v.l. at M. i. 552. MA. ii. 305 gives vadati.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. M. i. 8.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. M. i. 191. [MN 28 - Horn]

<sup>5</sup> khaṇāti, to dig; cf. Dh. 247, 337. Cf. "wrong grasp" at M. i. 134.

<sup>6</sup> M. i. 134.

<sup>7</sup> Quoted at MA. ii. 109.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. S. ii. 11 ff.

<sup>9</sup> Cf. M. i. 67.

<sup>10</sup> nāma-rūpa, name-and-shape.

<sup>11</sup> Cf. S. ii. 26-7.

<sup>12</sup> Cf. M. i. 8.

<sup>13</sup> MA. ii. 309 says that here garu means bhārika, grievous, burdensome, to be followed unwillingly.

<sup>14</sup> vata-kotūhalo-maṅgalāni; cf. A. iii. 206, 439, and see G.S. iii. 151, n. 4.

<sup>15</sup> With the eye of intuitive wisdom, MA. ii. 309.

<sup>16</sup> Cf. M. ii. 157; Miln. 123; Divy. 1, 440.

<sup>17</sup> In this world of beings, MA. ii. 310.

<sup>18</sup> MA. ii. 310 explains gandhabba as the being who is coming into the womb the being about to enter the womb (tatr'ūpaka-satta) ... about to come into that situation, being driven on by the mechanism of kamma. See O.H. de A. Wijesekera, Vedic Qandharva and Pali Gandhabba, Ceylon University Review, Vol. III. No. 1, April, 1945, who suggests that gandhabba means a "saṁsāric being in the intermediate stage (between death and birth)."

<sup>19</sup> Here of course not in the sense of over-development or decay, as in old age, see D. ii. 305; M. i. 49; S. ii. 2, 42 ff.; but in the sense of growing out of babyhood into boyhood, as at A. v. 203.

<sup>20</sup> See D. i. 6; Vin. iii. 180 for these (and other) games, and notes at B.D. i. 316-17.

<sup>21</sup> Cf. S. iv. 120, 184.

<sup>22</sup> sārajjati. MA. ii. 311 says rāgaṃ uppādeti. S. iv. 120, 184 read adhimuccati.

<sup>23</sup> parittacetaso. The opposite, as given at M. i. 270, S. iv. 120, 186, is appamāṇacetaso, a mind that is boundless or immeasurable. Cf. A. i. 249: paritto appātumo appadukkhavihāri ... aparitto mahatta appamāṇavihārī. MA. ii. 311 explains paritta by akusala, unskilled.

<sup>24</sup> Often connected with the immeasurable or boundless (appamāṇa) brahmavihāras.

<sup>25</sup> Quoted at Kvu. 485; cf. A. iv. 158; S. i. 111. Explained as "attachment as well as hatred" at MA. ii. 311.

<sup>26</sup> Cf. A. i. 249, aparitto mahattā appamāṇavihārī.

<sup>27</sup> Cf. M. i. 383.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
4. Mahā Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
4. The Greater Division of the Pairs

39. Greater Discourse at Assapura

Mahā Assapura Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying among the Aṅgas;
a township of the Aṅgas was called Assapura.

While he was there
the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered one," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"'Recluses, recluses,'
so the people know you, monks,
and you,
on being asked:

'Who are you?'

should acknowledge:

'We are recluses.'

Such being your designations, monks,
such being your vocations,
thus you should train yourselves, monks:

'We will go forward undertaking those things that are to be done by recluses,<sup>1</sup> that are to be done by brahmans;
thus will this designation of ours become true
and the vocation real;
and the gifts of those things we make use of -
robe-material,
almsfood,
lodgings,
medicine for the sick -
will come to be of great fruit,
of great advantage to us;
and this our going forth
will come to be not barren but fruitful
and growing.'

And what, monks,
are the things to be done by recluses and to be done by brahmans?

Thinking:

'We will become endowed with modesty and fear of blame<sup>2</sup> -

thus you should train yourselves, monks.

But it may occur to you, monks:

'We are endowed with modesty
and fear of blame -
to this extent there is enough,
to this extent it is done;
attained by us is the goal of recluseship,
there is nothing further to be done by us' -
up to this very point
you may come to find contentment.

I protest to you, monks,
I declare to you, monks:

While you are aiming at recluseship, fall not short of the goal of recluseship<sup>3</sup>
if there is something further to be done.

And what, monks, is there further to be done?

Thinking:

'Our bodily conduct
must be perfectly pure,
clear,
open,
and without defects,
controlled.

But not on account of this perfectly pure bodily conduct will we exalt ourselves or disparage others' -
thus must you train yourselves, monks.

But it may occur to you, monks:

'We are endowed with modesty
and fear of blame;
our bodily conduct is quite pure -
to this extent there is enough,
to this [326] extent it is done;
attained by us is the goal of recluseship,
there is nothing further to be done by us' -
up to this very point
you may come to find contentment.

I protest to you, monks,
I declare to you, monks:

While you are aiming at recluseship,
fall not short of the goal of recluseship
if there is something further to be done.

And what, monks,
is there further to be done?

Thinking:

'Our conduct in speech
must be perfectly pure,
clear,
open,
without defects,
controlled.

But not on account of this perfectly pure speech will we exalt ourselves or disparage others' -
thus must you train yourselves, monks.

But it may occur to you, monks:

'We are endowed with modesty
and fear of blame;

our bodily conduct is perfectly pure;
our conduct in speech is perfectly pure -
to this extent there is enough,
to this extent it is done;
attained by us is the goal of recluseship,
there is nothing further to be done by us' -
up to this very point
you may come to find contentment.

I protest to you, monks,
I declare to you, monks:

While you are aiming at recluseship,
fall not short of the goal of recluseship
if there is something further to be done.

And what, monks,
is there further to be done?

Thinking:

'Our conduct in thought
must be perfectly pure,
clear,
open,
and without defects,
controlled.

But not on account of this perfectly pure thought will we exalt ourselves or disparage others' -
thus must you train yourselves, monks.

But it may occur to you, monks:

'We are endowed with modesty
and fear of blame;
our bodily conduct is perfectly pure;

our conduct in speech is perfectly pure;
our conduct in thought is perfectly pure -
to this extent there is enough,
to this extent it is done;
attained by us is the goal of recluseship,
there is nothing further to be done by us' -
up to this very point
you may come to find contentment.

I protest to you, monks,
I declare to you, monks:

While you are aiming at recluseship,
fall not short of the goal of recluseship
if there is something further to be done.

And what, monks,
is there further to be done?

Thinking:

'Our mode of living must be perfectly pure,
clear,
open,
and without defects,
controlled.

But not on account of this perfectly pure mode of living will we exalt ourselves or disparage others' - thus you must train yourselves, monks.

But it may occur to you, monks:

'We are endowed with modesty
and fear of blame;
our bodily conduct is perfectly pure;
our conduct in speech is perfectly pure;

our conduct in thought is perfectly pure;
our mode of living is perfectly pure -
to this extent there is enough,
to this extent it is done;
attained by us is the goal of recluseship,
there is nothing further to be done by us' -
up to this very point
you may come to find contentment.

I protest to you, monks,
I declare to you, monks:

While you are aiming at recluseship,
fall not short of the goal of recluseship
if there is something further to be done.

And what, monks,
is there further to be done?

Thinking:

'We must be guarded as to the doors of the sense-organs;
having seen a material shape with the eye
we are not entranced by the general appearance,
we are not entranced by the detail;
for if [327] one had the organ of vision uncontrolled,
coveting and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

We will fare along for its control,
we will guard the organ of sight, we will come to control over the organ of sight.

Having heard a sound with the ear
we are not entranced by the general appearance,
we are not entranced by the detail;

for if one had the organ of hearing uncontrolled,
coveting and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

We will fare along for its control,
we will guard the organ of hearing, we will come to control over the organ of hearing.

Having smelt a smell with the nose
we are not entranced by the general appearance,
we are not entranced by the detail;
for if one had the organ of smell uncontrolled,
coveting and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

We will fare along for its control,
we will guard the organ of smell, we will come to control over the organ of smell.

Having savoured a taste with the tongue
we are not entranced by the general appearance,
we are not entranced by the detail;
for if one had the organ of taste uncontrolled,
coveting and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

We will fare along for its control,
we will guard the organ of taste, we will come to control over the organ of taste.

Having felt a touch with the body
we are not entranced by the general appearance,
we are not entranced by the detail;
for if one had the organ of touch uncontrolled,

coveting and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

We will fare along for its control,
we will guard the organ of touch, we will come to control over the organ of touch.

Having cognised a mental object with the mind
we are not entranced by the general appearance,
we are not entranced by the detail;
for if one had the organ of mind uncontrolled,
coveting and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

We will fare along for its control,
we will guard the organ of mind, we will come to control over the organ of mind' -
this is how you must train yourselves, monks.

But it may occur to you, monks:

'We are endowed with modesty
and fear of blame;
our bodily conduct is perfectly pure;
our conduct in speech is perfectly pure;
our conduct in thought is perfectly pure;
our mode of living is perfectly pure,
guarded are the doors of our sense-organs -
to this extent there is enough,
to this extent it is done;
attained by us is the goal of recluseship,
there is nothing further to be done by us' -
up to this very point
you may come to find contentment.

I protest to you, monks,
I declare to you, monks:

While you are aiming at recluseship,
fall not short of the goal of recluseship
if there is something further to be done.

And what, monks,
is there further to be done?

Thinking:

'We must be moderate in eating, carefully reflecting must we eat, not for fun or pleasure or adornment
or beautifying, but just enough for maintaining this body and keeping it going,
for keeping it from harm,
for furthering the Brahma-faring;
with the thought:

'I am destroying old feeling, and I must not allow new feeling to arise, so that there will be blamelessness for me
and living in comfort' -
thus, monks, must you train yourselves.

But it may occur to you, monks:

'We are endowed with modesty
and fear of blame;
our bodily conduct is perfectly pure;
our conduct in speech is perfectly pure;
our conduct in thought is perfectly pure;
our mode of living is perfectly pure,

guarded are the doors of our sense-organs;
we are moderate in eating -
to this extent there is enough,
to this extent it is done;
attained by us is the goal of recluseship,
there is nothing further to be done by us' -
up to this very point
you may come to find contentment.

I protest to you, monks,
I declare to you, monks:

While you are aiming at recluseship,
fall not short of the goal of recluseship
if there is something further to be done.

And what, monks,
is there further to be done?

Thinking:

'We must be intent on vigilance;
during the day,
pacing up and down,
sitting down,
we must cleanse the mind
from obstructive mental objects;
during the first watch of the night,
pacing up and down,
sitting down
we must cleanse the mind
from obstructive mental objects;
during the middle watch of the night, we must lie down [328] on our right side in the lion posture,<sup>4</sup> placing one foot on the other,

mindful,
clearly conscious,
attending to the thought of getting up again;
during the last watch of the night, rising,
pacing up and down,
sitting down,
we must cleanse the mind
from obstructive mental objects' -
thus, monks, must you train yourselves.

But it may occur to you, monks:

'We are endowed with modesty
and fear of blame;
our bodily conduct is perfectly pure;
our conduct in speech is perfectly pure;
our conduct in thought is perfectly pure;
our mode of living is perfectly pure,
guarded are the doors of our sense-organs;
we are moderate in eating;
we are intent on vigilance -
to this extent there is enough,
to this extent it is done;
attained by us is the goal of recluseship,
there is nothing further to be done by us' -
up to this very point
you may come to find contentment.

I protest to you, monks,
I declare to you, monks:

While you are aiming at recluseship,
fall not short of the goal of recluseship
if there is something further to be done.

And what, monks,
is there further to be done?

Thinking:

'We must be possessed of mindfulness
and clear consciousness, acting with clear consciousness,<sup>5</sup> whether setting out or returning;
acting with clear consciousness, whether looking down or looking around,
acting with clear consciousness,
whether bending back or stretching out (the arm),
acting with clear consciousness,
whether carrying the outer cloak, the bowl, the robe,
acting with clear consciousness,
whether munching, drinking, eating, savouring,
acting with clear consciousness,
when obeying the calls of nature, acting with clear consciousness when walking,
standing,
sitting,
asleep,
awake,
talking,
silent' -
thus, monks, must you train yourselves.

But it may occur to you, monks:

'We are endowed with modesty
and fear of blame;
our bodily conduct is perfectly pure;
our conduct in speech is perfectly pure;
our conduct in thought is perfectly pure;
our mode of living is perfectly pure,

guarded are the doors of our sense-organs;
we are moderate in eating;
we are intent on vigilance;
we are possessed of mindfulness and clear consciousness -
to this extent there is enough,
to this extent it is done;
attained by us is the goal of recluseship,
there is nothing further to be done by us' -
up to this very point
you may come to find contentment.

I protest to you, monks,
I declare to you, monks:

While you are aiming at recluseship,
fall not short of the goal of recluseship
if there is something further to be done.

And what, monks,
is there further to be done?

'In this case, monks,
a monk chooses a remote lodging<sup>6</sup> in a forest,
at the root of a tree,
on a mountain slope,
in a wilderness,
in a hill-cave,
in a [329] cemetery,
in a forest haunt,
in the open
or on a heap of straw.

Returning from alms-gathering
after the meal,
he sits down cross-legged,

holding the back erect,
having made mindfulness rise up in front of him.

He, by getting rid of coveting for the world, he dwells with a mind devoid of coveting, he purifies the mind
of coveting.

By getting rid of the taint of ill-will he dwells benevolent in mind, compassionate for the welfare of all creatures and beings,
he purifies the mind
of the taint of ill-will.

By getting rid of sloth and torpor, he dwells devoid of sloth and torpor;
perceiving the light,
mindful,
clearly conscious,
he purifies the mind
of sloth and torpor.

By getting rid of restlessness and worry,
he dwells calmly,
the mind subjectively tranquilised,
he purifies the mind
of restlessness and worry.

By getting rid of doubt,
he dwells doubt-crossed,
unperplexed as to the states that are skilled,
he purifies the mind
of doubt.

Monks, as a man<sup>7</sup> after contracting a loan might set some affairs going, and if these affairs of his should succeed, and if he should pay off those old original debts, and if he had a surplus over with which to maintain a wife,
it might occur to him:

'I, formerly,
after contracting a loan,
set some affairs going,
and these affairs of mine succeeded so that I paid off those old original debts, and have a surplus over
with which to maintain a wife.'

He, from this source
would obtain joy,
he would reach gladness.

And, monks,
as a man might be a prey to disease,
in pain,
seriously ill,
and could not digest his food,
and there were not strength in his body, but if after a time he were to recover from that disease and could digest his food and there were some strength in his body,
it might occur to him:

'Formerly I was a prey to disease,
in pain,
seriously ill,

and could not digest my food,
and there was no strength in my body, but now I am recovered from that disease, I digest my food,
there is some strength in my body.'

He, from this source,
would obtain joy,
he would reach gladness.

And, monks,
as a man might be bound in a prison,
but after a time
might be freed from those bonds,
safe and sound,
and with no loss of his property,
it might occur to him:

'Formerly I was bound in a prison, but now I am freed from those bonds,
safe and sound,
and with no loss of my property.'

He, from this source
would obtain joy,
he would reach gladness.

Monks, it is as if a man had been a slave, not his own master, [330] subject to others,
not able to go where he liked, but who after a time were freed from that slavery,
his own master,
not subject to others,

able to go where he liked;
it might occur to him:

'Formerly I was a slave, not my own master,
subject to others,
not able to go where I liked, but now I am freed from that slavery, my own master,
not subject to others,
able to go where I like.'

He, from this source,
would obtain joy,
he would reach gladness.

Monks, as a rich and prosperous man<sup>8</sup> might travel on a road through a wilderness and after a time might emerge safe and sound
and with no loss of his property,
it might occur to him:

'Formerly I,
rich and prosperous,
travelled on a road through a wilderness, but now I have emerged
safe and sound
and with no loss of my property.'

He, from this source,
would obtain joy,
he would reach gladness.

Even so, monks,
does a monk regard these five hindrances that are not got rid of from the self as a debt,

as a disease,
as a prison,
as slavery,
as travelling on a road through a wilderness.

But, monks,
when these five hindrances are got rid of from the self, a monk regards them as debtlessness, as health,
as freedom from the bonds,
as liberty,
as secure ground.

By getting rid of these five hindrances which are defilements of the mind and weakening to intuitive wisdom<sup>9</sup> then, aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
he enters on and abides in
the first meditation
which is accompanied by initial thought
and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful.

He drenches,
saturates,
permeates,
suffuses
this very body
with the rapture and joy
that are born of aloofness;
there is no part of his whole body

that is not suffused
with the rapture and joy
that are born of aloofness.

Monks, as a skilled bath-attendant
or his apprentice,
having sprinkled bath-powder into a bronze vessel, might knead it together with drops of water until the ball of lather has taken up moisture, is drenched with moisture, suffused with moisture inside and out, but there is no oozing - even so, monks, does a monk drench,
saturate,
permeate,
suffuse
this very body
with the rapture and joy
that are born of aloofness;
there is no part of his whole body
that is not suffused
with the rapture and joy
that are born of aloofness.

And again, monks, a monk
by allaying initial and discursive [331] thought,
with the mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters on and abides in
the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration
and is rapturous and joyful.

He drenches,
saturates,
permeates,
suffuses
this very body
with the rapture and joy
that are born of concentration;
there is no part of his whole body
that is not suffused
with the rapture and joy
that are born of concentration.

Monks, as a pool of water with water welling up within it, but which has no inlet for water from the eastern side, no inlet for water from the western side, no inlet for water from the northern side, no inlet for water from the southern side, and even if the god did not send down showers upon it
from time to time,
yet a current of cool water having welled up from that pool would drench,
saturate,
permeate,
suffuse
that pool with cool water; there would be no part of that pool that was not suffused with cool water.

Even so, monks, does a monk drench,
saturate,
permeate,
suffuse
this very body

with the rapture and joy
that are born of concentration;
there is no part of his whole body
that is not suffused
with the rapture and joy
that are born of concentration.

And again, monks, a monk
by the fading out of rapture,
dwells with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious
and experiences in his person
that joy of which the ariyans say:

'Joyful lives he who has equanimity
and is mindful,'

and he enters on and abides in
the third meditation.

He drenches,
saturates,
permeates,
suffuses
this very body
with the joy that has no rapture;
there is no part of his whole body
that is not suffused
with the joy that has no rapture.

As in a pond of white lotuses or a pond of red lotuses or a pond of blue lotuses, some white lotuses
or red lotuses

or blue lotuses
are born in the water,
grow up in the water,
never rising above the surface but flourishing beneath it - these from their roots to their tips are drenched,
saturated,
permeated,
suffused
by cool water.

Even so, monks, a monk
drenches,
saturates,
permeates,
suffuses
this very body
with the joy that has no rapture;
there is no part of his whole body
that is not suffused
with the joy that has no rapture.

And again, monks, a monk
by getting rid of joy
and by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down
of his former pleasures and sorrows,
enters on and abides in
the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

He, having suffused this very body with a mind that is utterly pure,

utterly clean,
comes to be sitting down;
there [332] is no part of his whole body
that is not suffused
with a mind that is utterly pure,
utterly clean.

Monks, as a monk might be sitting down who has clothed himself including his head
with a white cloth,
no part of his whole body would not be suffused with the white cloth.

Even so, monks, a monk,
having suffused this very body
with a mind that is utterly pure,
utterly clean,
comes to be sitting down;
there is no part of his whole body that is not suffused by a mind that is utterly pure,
utterly clean.

He, with his mind thus composed,
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable,
fixed,
immovable,
directs his mind to the knowledge and recollection of former habitations:
thus:

One birth,
two births,
three births,
four births,
five births,
ten births,
twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,
fifty births,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
and many an eon of integration
and many an eon of disintegration
and many an eon of integration-disintegration;
such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I came to be in another state
where such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I arose here.

Thus he remembers divers former abodes in all their modes and detail.

Monks, it is as if a man should go from his own village to another village, and should go from that village to another village, and as if he should go back again from that village to his own village.<sup>10</sup>

This might occur to him:

'Now I went from my own village to a certain village, there I stood in such a way,
sat in such a way,
spoke in such a way,
became silent in such a way.

And from that village I went to a certain village,
there I stood in such a way,
sat in such a way,
spoke in such a way,
became silent in such a way.

Then I went back again from that village to my own village.'

Even so, monks, does a monk remember various former habitations, that is to say one birth, two births,
three births,
four births,
five births,
ten births,
twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,
fifty births,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,

and many an eon of integration
and many an eon of disintegration
and many an eon of integration-disintegration;
such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I came to be in another state
where such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I arose here.

Thus he remembers divers former abodes in all their modes and detail.

He, with his mind thus composed,
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable,
fixed,
immovable,
directs his mind to the knowledge of the passing hence and arising of beings.

With the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men
he sees beings as they pass hence
or come to be;
he comprehends that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going,
according to the consequences of their deeds,
and he thinks:

Indeed these worthy beings
who were possessed of wrong conduct in body,
who were possessed of wrong conduct of speech,
who were possessed of wrong conduct of thought,
scoffers at the ariyans,
holding a wrong view,
incurring deeds consequent on a wrong view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

But these worthy beings
who were possessed of good conduct in body,
who were possessed of good conduct in speech,
who were possessed of good conduct in thought,
who did not scoff at the ariyans,
holding a right view,
incurring deeds consequent on a right view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

Thus with the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men
he sees beings as they pass hence
or come to be;
he comprehends that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going,
according to the consequences of their deeds.

Monks, it is as if there were two houses with doors<sup>11</sup> and a man with vision standing there between them might see people entering a house and leaving it
and going back and forth and walking across.

Even so, monks, does a monk with the purified deva-vision
[333] surpassing that of men see beings as they pass hence
or come to be;
he comprehends that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going,
according to the consequences of their deeds,
and he thinks:

Indeed these worthy beings
who were possessed of wrong conduct in body,
who were possessed of wrong conduct of speech,

who were possessed of wrong conduct of thought,
scoffers at the ariyans,
holding a wrong view,
incurring deeds consequent on a wrong view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

But these worthy beings
who were possessed of good conduct in body,
who were possessed of good conduct in speech,
who were possessed of good conduct in thought,
who did not scoff at the ariyans,
holding a right view,
incurring deeds consequent on a right view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

Thus with the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men
he sees beings as they pass hence
or come to be;
he comprehends that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going,
according to the consequences of their deeds.

Then with the mind composed
quite purified,
quite clarified,

without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable,
fixed,
immovable,
he directs his mind
to the knowledge of the destruction of the cankers.

He understands as it really is:

This is anguish,
this is the arising of anguish,
this is the stopping of anguish,
this is the course leading to the stopping of anguish.

He understands as it really is:

These are the cankers,
this is the arising of the cankers,
this is the stopping of the cankers,
this is the course leading to the stopping of the cankers.

When he knows thus,
sees thus,
his mind is freed from the canker of sense-pleasures,
his mind is freed from the canker of becoming,
his mind is freed from the canker of ignorance.

In freedom
the knowledge comes to be
that he is freed,
and he comprehends:

Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close is the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of being such or such.

Monks, it is like<sup>12</sup> a pure,
limpid,
serene pool of water in which a man with vision standing on the bank might see oysters
and shells,
also gravel
and pebbles,
and shoals of fish moving about and keeping still.<sup>13</sup>

It might occur to him:

This pool of water is pure,
limpid,
serene,
here these oysters and shells,
and gravel and pebbles, and shoals of fish
are moving about
and keeping still.

Even so, monks, a monk comprehends as it really is:

This is anguish,
this is the arising of anguish,
this is the stopping of anguish,
this is the course leading to the stopping of anguish.

He understands as it really is:

These are the cankers,
this is the arising of the cankers,
this is the stopping of the cankers,
this is the course leading to the stopping of the cankers.

When he knows thus,
sees thus,
his mind is freed from the canker of sense-pleasures,
his mind is freed from the canker of becoming,
his mind is freed from the canker of ignorance.

In freedom
the knowledge comes to be
that he is freed,
and he comprehends:

Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close is the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of being such or such.

Monks, this is called a monk who is a recluse, and who is a brahman,
and who is washen,
and who is expert in lore, and who is learned,<sup>14</sup> and who is an ariyan,
and who is a perfected one.

And how, monks, is a monk a recluse?

Evil, unskilled states that are connected with the defilements,
with again-becoming,
fearful,
whose results are anguish,
leading to birth,
ageing and dying in the future
are allayed in him.

It is thus, monks, that a monk is a recluse.

And how, monks, is a monk a brahman?

Evil, unskilled states [334]
that are connected with the defilements,
with again-becoming,
fearful,
whose results are anguish,
leading to birth,
ageing and dying
in the future,
are excluded by him.

It is thus, monks, that a monk is a brahman.

And how, monks, is a monk washed? Evil, unskilled states that are connected with the defilements,
with again-becoming,
fearful,
whose results are anguish,
leading to birth,
ageing and dying
in the future,
are washed away by him.

It is thus, monks, that a monk is washed.

And how, monks, is a monk expert in lore? Evil unskilled states that are connected with the defilements,
with again-becoming,
fearful,
whose results are anguish,
leading to birth,
ageing and dying
in the future,
are understood by him.

It is thus, monks, that a monk is expert in lore.

And how, monks, does a monk become learned? Evil unskilled states that are connected with the defilements, with again-becoming, fearful, whose results are anguish, leading to birth, ageing and dying in the future, come to be vanished<sup>15</sup> from him.

It is thus, monks, that a monk comes to be learned.

And how, monks, is a monk an ariyan?

Evil unskilled states that are connected with the defilements, with again-becoming, fearful, whose results are anguish, leading to birth, ageing and dying in the future, are far from him.

It is thus, monks, that a monk is an ariyan.

And how, monks, is a monk a perfected one?

Evil unskilled states that are connected with the defilements, with again-becoming, fearful, whose results are anguish, leading to birth, ageing and dying

in the future,
are far from him.

It is thus, monks, that a monk is a perfected one.'

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Greater Discourse at Assapura:
The Ninth

---

<sup>1</sup> Cf. A. i. 229; but MA. ii. 313 says different duties are given here (below, in next paragraph).

<sup>2</sup> MA. ii. 313-14 quotes A. i. 51.

<sup>3</sup> See S. v. 25, quoted MA. ii. 314.

<sup>4</sup> MA. ii. 316 gives four postures, or sleeping-ways, seyyā: that of those indulging in sense-pleasures, that of the petas, that of the lion, and that of the Tathāgata. Cf. A. ii. 244-45. But the Tathāgata's posture is that (assumed) during the fourth meditation. At e.g. S. iv. 184 the Lord lay down in the lion-posture.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. M. i. 57, 181.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. A. iii. 72 with what follows.

<sup>7</sup> Cf. D. i. 71 ff.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. D. i. 73 (somewhat different).

<sup>9</sup> Cf. M. i. 181. this sentence differs at D. i. 73.

<sup>10</sup> MA. ii. 323 says these villages represent the three becomings mentioned in the recollection of former abodes (as is clear from the text).

<sup>11</sup> Facing one another, MA. ii. 323. This simile also at M. ii. 21, iii. 178, both in connection with deva-vision.

<sup>12</sup> = M. ii. 22 = D. i. 84 = A. i. 9.

<sup>13</sup> MA. ii. 324 says the gravel and pebbles lie still; the other two groups both keep still and move about.

<sup>14</sup> sottiyo; or, cleansed. Cf. Thag. 221.

<sup>15</sup> nissuta.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
4. Mahā Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
4. The Greater Division of the Pairs

40. Lesser Discourse at Assapura

Cūḷa Assapura Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying among the Aṅgas;
a township of the Aṅgas was called Assapura.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

[335] "Revered one,"
these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"'Recluses, recluses,'
so the people know you, monks,
and you, on being asked:

'Who are you?'

should acknowledge:

'We are recluses.'

Such being your, designations, monks,
such being your vocations,
thus you should train yourselves, monks:

'We will follow those practices which are fitting for recluses;
thus will this designation of ours
become true
and the vocation real;
and the gifts of those things we make use of -
robe-material,
almsfood,
lodging,
medicines for the sick -
will come to be of great fruit,
of great advantage to us;
and this our going forth
will come to be not barren
but fruitful
and growing.'

And how, monks, does a monk come to be one who is not following the practice that is fitting for recluses?

Monks, in any monk who is covetous, covetousness not got rid of;
who is malevolent in mind, malevolence not got rid of;
who is wrathful,
wrath not got rid of;

who is grudging,
grudging not got rid of;
who is hypocritical,
hypocrisy not got rid of;
who is spiteful,
spite not got rid of;
who is jealous,
jealousy not got rid of;
who is stingy,
stinginess not got rid of;
who is treacherous,
treachery not got rid of;
who is crafty,
craftiness not got rid of;
who is of evil desires, evil desires not got rid of;
who is of wrong view, wrong view not got rid of -
I, monks, say
that if he does not follow the practice fitting for recluses, there is no getting rid of these stains on recluses, defects in recluses,
faults in recluses,
occasions for the sorrowful states,
of what is to be experienced in a bad bourn.

Monks, as a deadly weapon<sup>1</sup> for fighting with, double-edged
and whetted sharp,
may be covered and enveloped
by his outer cloak - unto this do I, monks, liken this monk's going forth.

I, monks, do not say
that the recluseship
of one who wears an outer cloak depends merely on his wearing an outer cloak.

I, monks, do not say
that the recluseship
of one who is unclothed depends merely on his being unclothed.

I, monks, do not say
that the recluseship
of one living in dust and dirt depends merely on his living in dust and dirt.

I, monks, do not say
that the recluseship
of one who bathes ceremonially<sup>2</sup> depends merely on the ceremonial bathing.

I, monks, do not say
that the recluseship
of one who [336] lives at the root of a tree depends merely on his living at the root of a tree.

I, monks, do not say
that the recluseship
of one who lives in the open depends merely on his living in the open.

I, monks, do not say
that the recluseship
of one who stands erect depends merely on his standing erect.

I, monks, do not say
that the recluseship

of one who lives on a regimen<sup>3</sup> depends merely on his living on a regimen.

I, monks, do not say
that the recluseship
of one who meditates on chants<sup>4</sup> depends merely on his meditating on chants.

I, monks, do not say
that the recluseship
of one who has matted hair depends merely on his matted hair.

---

If, monks, the covetousness
of one who is covetous
and who wears an outer cloak
could be got rid of merely by wearing an outer cloak;

if the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

if the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

if the grudging
of one who is grudging;

if the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

if the spite
of one who is spiteful;

if the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

if the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

if the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

if the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

if the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

if the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who wears an outer cloak
could be got rid of
merely by wearing an outer cloak;

then his friends and acquaintances,
kith and kin,
would make him wear an outer cloak
from the very day that he was born, would encourage him to wear an outer cloak,
saying:

'Come, you auspicious-faced,<sup>5</sup> become a wearer of an outer cloak, for on your being a wearer of an outer cloak
the covetousness
of one who is covetous

will be got rid of,
merely by wearing an outer cloak;

the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

the grudging
of one who is grudging;

the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

the spite
of one who is spiteful;

the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who wears an outer cloak

will be got rid of
merely by wearing an outer cloak';

therefore I do not say
that the recluseship
of one who wears an outer cloak depends merely on his wearing an outer cloak.

---

If, monks, the covetousness
of one who is covetous
and who is unclothed
could be got rid of
merely by being unclothed;

if the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

if the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

if the grudging
of one who is grudging;

if the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

if the spite
of one who is spiteful;

if the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

if the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

if the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

if the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

if the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

if the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who is unclothed
could be got rid of
merely by being unclothed;

then his friends and acquaintances,
kith and kin,
would make him go unclothed
from the very day that he was born, would encourage him to go unclothed,
saying:

'Come, you auspicious-faced,
become one who goes unclothed, for on your being one who goes unclothed
the covetousness
of one who is covetous
will be got rid of,
merely by being unclothed;

the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

the grudging
of one who is grudging;

the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

the spite
of one who is spiteful;

the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who is unclothed
will be got rid of,
merely by being unclothed;

therefore I do not say
that the recluseship
of one who goes unclothed depends merely on his being unclothed.

---

If, monks, the covetousness
of one who is covetous
and who lives in dust and dirt
could be got rid of
merely by living in dust and dirt;

if the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

if the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

if the grudging
of one who is grudging;

if the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

if the spite
of one who is spiteful;

if the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

if the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

if the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

if the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

if the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

if the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who lives in dust and dirt
could be got rid of
merely by living in dust and dirt;

then his friends and acquaintances,
kith and kin,
would make go live in dust and dirt
from the very day that he was born, would encourage him to live in dust and dirt,
saying:

'Come, you auspicious-faced,
become one who lives in dust and dirt, for on your being one who lives in dust and dirt
the covetousness
of one who is covetous
will be got rid of,
merely by living in dust and dirt;

the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

the grudging
of one who is grudging;

the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

the spite
of one who is spiteful;

the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who lives in dust and dirt
will be got rid of,
merely by living in dust and dirt;

therefore I do not say
that the recluseship
of one who lives in dust and dirt depends merely by living in dust and dirt.

---

If, monks, the covetousness
of one who is covetous
and who bathes ceremonially

could be got rid of
merely by bathing ceremonially;

if the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

if the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

if the grudging
of one who is grudging;

if the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

if the spite
of one who is spiteful;

if the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

if the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

if the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

if the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

if the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

if the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who bathes ceremonially

could be got rid of
merely by bathing ceremonially;

then his friends and acquaintances,
kith and kin,
would make him bathe ceremonially
from the very day that he was born, would encourage him to bathe ceremonially,
saying:

'Come, you auspicious-faced,
become one who bathes ceremonially, for on your being one who bathes ceremonially
the covetousness
of one who is covetous
will be got rid of,
merely by bathing ceremonially;

the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

the grudging
of one who is grudging;

the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

the spite
of one who is spiteful;

the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who bathes ceremonially
will be got rid of,
merely by bathing ceremonially;

therefore I do not say
that the recluseship
of one who bathes ceremonially depends merely on bathing ceremonially.

---

If, monks, the covetousness
of one who is covetous
and who lives at the root of a tree
could be got rid of
merely by living at the root of a tree;

if the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

if the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

if the grudging
of one who is grudging;

if the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

if the spite
of one who is spiteful;

if the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

if the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

if the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

if the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

if the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

if the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who lives at the root of a tree
could be got rid of
merely by living at the root of a tree;

then his friends and acquaintances,
kith and kin,
would make him live at the root of a tree
from the very day that he was born, would encourage him to live at the root of a tree,

saying:

'Come, you auspicious-faced,
become one who lives at the root of a tree, for on your being one who lives at the root of a tree
the covetousness
of one who is covetous
will be got rid of,
merely by living at the root of a tree;

the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

the grudging
of one who is grudging;

the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

the spite
of one who is spiteful;

the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who lives at the root of a tree
will be got rid of,
merely by living at the root of a tree;

therefore I do not say
that the recluseship
of one who lives at the root of a tree depends merely on living at the root of a tree.

---

If, monks, the covetousness
of one who is covetous
and who lives in the open
could be got rid of merely by living in the open;

if the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

if the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

if the grudging
of one who is grudging;

if the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

if the spite
of one who is spiteful;

if the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

if the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

if the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

if the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

if the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

if the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who lives in the open
could be got rid of
merely by living in the open;

then his friends and acquaintances,
kith and kin,
would make him live in the open
from the very day that he was born, would encourage him to live in the open,
saying:

'Come, you auspicious-faced,
become one who lives in the open, for on your being one who lives in the open
the covetousness
of one who is covetous

will be got rid of,
merely by living in the open;

the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

the grudging
of one who is grudging;

the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

the spite
of one who is spiteful;

the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who lives in the open

will be got rid of,
merely by living in the open;

therefore I do not say
that the recluseship
of one who lives in the open depends merely on living in the open.

---

If, monks, the covetousness
of one who is covetous
and who stands erect
could be got rid of
merely by standing erect;

if the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

if the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

if the grudging
of one who is grudging;

if the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

if the spite
of one who is spiteful;

if the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

if the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

if the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

if the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

if the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

if the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who stands erect
could be got rid of
merely by standing erect;

then his friends and acquaintances,
kith and kin,
would make him stand erect
from the very day that he was born, would encourage him to stand erect,
saying:

'Come, you auspicious-faced,
become one who stands erect, for on your being one who stands erect
the covetousness
of one who is covetous
will be got rid of,
merely by standing erect;

the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

the grudging
of one who is grudging;

the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

the spite
of one who is spiteful;

the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who stands erect
will be got rid of,
merely by standing erect;

therefore I do not say
that the recluseship
of one who stands erect depends merely by standing erect.

---

If, monks, the covetousness
of one who is covetous
and who lives on a regimen
could be got rid of
merely by living on a regimen;

if the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

if the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

if the grudging
of one who is grudging;

if the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

if the spite
of one who is spiteful;

if the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

if the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

if the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

if the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

if the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

if the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who lives on a regimen
could be got rid of
merely by living on a regimen;

then his friends and acquaintances,
kith and kin,
would make him live on a regimen
from the very day that he was born, would encourage him to live on a regimen,
saying:

'Come, you auspicious-faced,
become one who lives on a regimen, for on your being one who lives on a regimen
the covetousness
of one who is covetous
will be got rid of,
merely by living on a regimen;

the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

the grudging
of one who is grudging;

the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

the spite
of one who is spiteful;

the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who lives on a regimen
will be got rid of,
merely by living on a regimen;

therefore I do not say
that the recluseship
of one who lives on a regimen depends merely by living on a regimen.

---

If, monks, the covetousness
of one who is covetous
and who meditates on chants

could be got rid of
merely by meditating on chants;

if the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

if the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

if the grudging
of one who is grudging;

if the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

if the spite
of one who is spiteful;

if the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

if the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

if the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

if the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

if the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

if the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who meditates on chants

could be got rid of
merely by meditating on chants;

then his friends and acquaintances,
kith and kin,
would make him meditate on chants
from the very day that he was born, would encourage him to meditate on chants,
saying:

'Come, you auspicious-faced,
become one who meditates on chants, for on your being one who meditates on chants
the covetousness
of one who is covetous
will be got rid of,
merely by meditating on chants;

the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

the grudging
of one who is grudging;

the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

the spite
of one who is spiteful;

the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who meditates on chants
will be got rid of,
merely by meditating on chants;

therefore I do not say
that the recluseship
of one who meditates on chants depends merely on meditating on chants.

---

If, monks, the covetousness
of one who is covetous
and who has matted hair
could be got rid of
merely by having matted hair;

if the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

if the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

if the grudging
of one who is grudging;

if the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

if the spite
of one who is spiteful;

if the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

if the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

if the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

if the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

if the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

if the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who has matted hair
could be got rid of
merely by having matted hair;

then his friends and acquaintances,
kith and kin,
would make him have matted hair
from the very day that he was born,

would encourage him to have matted hair,
saying:

'Come, you auspicious-faced,
become one who has matted hair, for on your being one who has matted hair
the covetousness
of one who is covetous
will be got rid of,
merely by having matted hair;

the malevolence of mind
of one who is malevolent;

the wrath
of one who is wrathful;

the grudging
of one who is grudging;

the hypocrisy
of one who is hypocritical;

the spite
of one who is spiteful;

the jealousy
of one who is jealous;

the stinginess
of one who is stingy;

the treachery
of one who is treacherous;

the craftiness
of one who is crafty;

the evil desires
of one who is of evil desires;

the wrong view
of one who is of wrong view
and who has matted hair
will be got rid of,
merely by having matted hair;

therefore I do not say
that the recluseship
of one who has matted hair depends merely on having matted hair.

---

And how, monks,
does a monk become one following practices fitting for recluses?

In whatever monk who was covetous covetousness is got rid of,
who was malevolent
malevolence of mind is got rid of,
who was wrathful
wrath is got rid of,
who was grudging
grudging is got rid of,
who was hypocritical hypocrisy is got rid of,
who was spiteful
spite is got rid of,
who was jealous,
jealousy is got rid of,

who was stingy,
stinginess is got rid of,
who was treacherous,
treachery is got rid of,
who was crafty,
craftiness is got rid of,
who was of evil desires, evil desire is got rid of,
who was of wrong view,
wrong view is got rid of,
I, monks, say
that if he follows the practice fitting for recluses, there is a getting rid of those stains on recluses,
defects in recluses,
faults in recluses,
occasions for the sorrowful states,
of what is to be experienced in a bad bourn.

He beholds the self purified of all these evil unskilled states, he beholds the self freed.

When he beholds the self purified
of all these evil unskilled states, when he beholds the self feed, delight is born;
rapture is born from delight;
when he is in rapture
the body is impassible;
when the body is impassible he experiences joy;
being joyful,
the mind is concentrated.

He dwells,
having suffused the first quarter

with a mind of friendliness,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the [338] fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwells having suffused the whole world
everywhere,
in every way
with a mind of friendliness
that is far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

■

He dwells,
having suffused the first quarter
with a mind of compassion,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwells having suffused the whole world
everywhere,
in every way
with a mind of compassion
that is far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,

without enmity,
without malevolence.

■

He dwells,
having suffused the first quarter
with a mind of sympathetic joy,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwells having suffused the whole world
everywhere,
in every way
with a mind of sympathetic joy
that is far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

■

He dwells,
having suffused the first quarter
with a mind of equanimity,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwells having suffused the whole world

everywhere,
in every way
with a mind of equanimity
that is far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

Monks, it is as if<sup>6</sup> there were a lovely lotus-pond
with clear water,
sweet water,
cool water,
limpid,
with beautiful banks;
and if a man were to come along from the east, overcome and overpowered by the hot-weather heat,<sup>7</sup>
exhausted,
parched
and thirsty,
he, on coming to that lotus-pond,
might quench<sup>8</sup> his thirst with water, might quench the hot-weather fever.

And if a man were to come along from the west,
overcome and overpowered by the hot-weather heat,
exhausted,
parched
and thirsty,
he, on coming to that lotus-pond,
might quench his thirst with water,
might quench the hot-weather fever.

And if a man were to come along from the north,
overcome and overpowered by the hot-weather heat,
exhausted,

parched
and thirsty,
he, on coming to that lotus-pond,
might quench his thirst with water,
might quench the hot-weather fever.

And if a man were to come along from the south,
overcome and overpowered by the hot-weather heat,
exhausted,
parched
and thirsty,
he, on coming to that lotus-pond,
might quench his thirst with water,
might quench the hot-weather fever.

From wherever a man might come along,
overcome and overpowered by the hot-weather heat,
exhausted,
parched
and thirsty,
he, on coming to that lotus-pond,
might quench his thirst with water,
might quench the hot-weather fever.

---

Even so, monks,
if from a noble's family
one has gone forth from home into homelessness
and has come into this dhamma and discipline
taught by the Tathāgata, having thus developed friendliness,
compassion,

sympathetic joy
and equanimity,
he attains inward calm -
I say it is by inward calm that he is following the practices fitting for recluses.

Even so, monks,
if from a brahman's family
one has gone forth from home into homelessness
and has come into this dhamma and discipline
taught by the Tathāgata,
having thus developed friendliness,
compassion,
sympathetic joy
and equanimity,
he attains inward calm -
I say it is by inward calm
that he is following the practices
fitting for recluses.

Even so, monks,
if from a merchant's family
one has gone forth from home into homelessness
and has come into this dhamma and discipline
taught by the Tathāgata,
having thus developed friendliness,
compassion,
sympathetic joy
and equanimity,
he attains inward calm -
I say it is by inward calm
that he is following the practices
fitting for recluses.

Even so, monks,
if from a worker's family
one has gone forth from home into homelessness
and has come into this dhamma and discipline
taught by the Tathāgata,
having thus developed friendliness,
compassion,
sympathetic joy
and equanimity,
he attains inward calm -
I say it is by inward calm
that he is following the practices
fitting for recluses.

Even so, monks,
from whatever family
one has gone forth from home into homelessness
and has come into this dhamma and discipline
taught by the Tathāgata,
having thus developed friendliness,
compassion,
sympathetic joy
and equanimity,
he attains inward calm -
I say it is by inward calm
that he is following the practices
fitting for recluses.

---

And if one has gone forth from home into homelessness from a noble's family,
and by the destruction of the cankers, having here and now realised

by his own super-knowledge
freedom of mind,
the freedom through intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
entering on them,
abides therein -
he is a recluse
through the destruction of the cankers.

If one has gone forth from home into homelessness
from a brahman's family,
and by the destruction of the cankers, having here and now realised
by his own super-knowledge
freedom of mind,
the freedom through intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
entering on them,
abides therein -
he is a recluse
through the destruction of the cankers.

If one has gone forth from home into homelessness
from a merchant's family,
and by the destruction of the cankers,
having here and now realised
by his own super-knowledge
freedom of mind,
the freedom through intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
entering on them,
abides therein -
he is a recluse
through the destruction of the cankers.

If one has gone forth from home into homelessness
from a worker's family,
and by the destruction of the cankers, having here and now realised
by his own super-knowledge
freedom of mind,
the freedom through intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
entering on them,
abides therein -
he is a recluse
through the destruction of the cankers.

If one has gone forth from home [339] into homelessness from a whatever family,
and by the destruction of the cankers,
having here and now realised
by his own super-knowledge
freedom of mind,
the freedom through intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
entering on them,
abides therein -
he is a recluse
through the destruction of the cankers.

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, those monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Lesser Discourse at Assapura:
The Tenth

---

<sup>1</sup> maṭaja; v.l. mataja.

<sup>2</sup> At S. iv. 312 = A. v. 263 spoken of as brahmins of the west. MA. ii. 325 says they enter the water three times a day (to cleanse themselves of their wrong-doings).

<sup>3</sup> MA. ii. 325 saying he eats once a month or a fortnight. Also that all these practices are external to "this teaching," where a monk who wears a robe is not called "a wearer of an outer cloak", saṅghāṭiko. The only practices that Gotama's followers have in common with the crowd outside are dwelling at the root of a tree and in the open.

<sup>4</sup> manta.

<sup>5</sup> bhadramukha. Also at M. ii. 53, S. i. 74. See K.S. i. 100, n. 3. MA. ii. does not comment.

<sup>6</sup> M. i. 76.

<sup>7</sup> M. i. 74.

<sup>8</sup> vineyya, might avert, drive or lead away.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
5. Cūḷa Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
5. The Lesser Division of the Pairs

41. Discourse to the People of Sālā

Sāleyyaka Sutta

---

[343]

Thus have I heard:

At one time<sup>1</sup> the Lord, walking on tour among the Kosalans together with a large Order of monks, arrived at the brahman village of the Kosalans named Sālā.

The brahman householders of Sālā heard:

"It is said that the recluse Gotama, the son of the Sakyans, gone forth from the Sakyan family, and walking on tour among the Kosalans together with a large Order of monks, has reached Sālā,
and that a lovely reputation has gone forth about the Lord Gotama thus:

'He is indeed Lord,
perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One,
endowed with knowledge and (right) conduct,
Well-farer,
knower of the worlds,
the matchless charioteer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
the Awakened One,
the Lord.<sup>2</sup>

Having realised through his own super-knowledge,
he makes known this world together with devas including the Māras and the Brahmās; creatures
together with recluses and brahmans, with devas and mankind.

He teaches dhamma
that is lovely at the beginning,
lovely in the middle
and lovely at the ending;
he explains with the spirit and the letter the Brahma-faring
completely fulfilled
and wholly purified.

Good indeed is the sight of perfected ones such as this."

Then the brahman householders of Sālā approached the Lord;
some, having approached, having greeted the Lord,
sat down at a respectful distance;
some exchanged greetings with the Lord;
having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy,

they sat down at a respectful distance;
some, having saluted the Lord with joined palms,
sat down at a respectful distance;
some, having made known their names and clans in the Lord's presence,
sat down at a respectful distance;
some, becoming silent,
sat down at a respectful distance.

As they were sitting down at a respectful distance,
the brahman householders of Sālā spoke thus to the Lord:

"Now, what is the cause, good Gotama, what is the reason why some beings here at the breaking up of the body after dying
arise in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell?

What is the cause,
what is the reason, good Gotama, why some beings here at the breaking up of the body after dying
arise in a good bourn,
a heaven world?"

"Householders, some beings here at the breaking up of the body after dying arise thus in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
[344] Niraya Hell
because of faring by not-dhamma, an uneven faring.

Householder, some beings here at the breaking up of the body after dying arise thus in a good bourn,
a heaven-world,

because of faring by dhamma, an even faring."

"We do not understand in full the matter that has been spoken of in brief by the good Gotama, and whose meaning was not explained in full.

It were good if the good Gotama were so to teach us dhamma that we might understand in full the matter spoken of in brief by the good Gotama, and whose meaning was not explained in full."

"Well then, householders, listen,
pay careful attention,
and I will speak."

"Yes, sir," these brahman householders of Sālā answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Threefold, householders, is the faring by not-dhamma, an uneven faring as to body;
fourfold is the faring by not-dhamma, an uneven faring as to speech;
threefold is the faring by not-dhamma, and uneven faring as to thought.

And what, householders, is the threefold faring by not dhamma, the uneven faring as to body?

In this case,<sup>3</sup> householders, a certain one makes onslaught on creatures, he is cruel,
bloody-handed,
intent on injuring and killing, without mercy to living creatures.<sup>4</sup>

He is a taker of what is not given; whatever property of another in village or jungle
is not given to him
he takes by theft.

He is a wrong-goer in regard to pleasures of the senses;
he has intercourse with (girls) protected by the mother,<sup>5</sup> protected by the father, protected by the parents,
protected by a brother,
protected by a sister,
protected by relations,
who have a husband,
whose use involves punishments,<sup>6</sup>
and even with those adorned with garlands of betrothal.

Even so, householders,
is the threefold faring by not-dhamma, the uneven faring, in regard to the body.

And how, householders, does there come to be the fourfold faring by not-dhamma, the uneven faring as to speech?

In this case, householders,
a certain one is of lying speech; when he is cited and asked as a witness before a council or company
or amid [345] his relations or amid a guild
or amid a royal family,
and is told:

'Now, good man, say what you know!'

although he does not know, he says,

'I know,'

although he knows, he says,

'I do not know';

although he has not seen, he says,

'I saw,'

although he has seen, he says,

'I did not see.'

Thus his speech becomes intentional lying either for his own sake or for the sake of another or for the sake of some material gain or other.

And he is a slanderer;
having heard something at one place,
he makes it known elsewhere for (causing) variance among those (people);<sup>7</sup>
or having heard something elsewhere he makes it known among these people
for (causing) variance among these (people).

In this way he sows discord among those who are in harmony, or is one who foments those who are at variance.

Discord is his pleasure, discord his delight,
discord his joy,
discord is the motive of his speech.

And he is one of harsh speech.<sup>8</sup>

Whatever speech is rough,<sup>9</sup> hard,
severe on others,
abusive of others,
bordering on wrath,
not conducive to concentration,
such speech does he utter.

And he is a frivolous chatterer, one who speaks at a wrong time, one who does not speak in accordance with fact,
one who speaks about what is not the goal, one who speaks about not-dhamma, one who speaks about not-discipline.

He utters speech that is not worth treasuring; owing to its being at the wrong time it is incongruous,
has no purpose,
is not connected with the goal.

Even so, householders, is the fourfold faring by not-dhamma, the uneven faring in regard to speech.

And what, householders, is the threefold faring by not-dhamma, the uneven faring as to thought?

In this case, householders, a certain one comes to be covetous;
he covets that which is the property of another, thinking,

'O that what is the other's might be mine';

he is malevolent in mind, corrupt in thought and purpose,
and thinks,

'Let these beings be killed or slaughtered or annihilated or destroyed, or may they not exist at all.'

And he is of wrong view, of perverted outlook,
thinking,

'There is no (result of) gift,<sup>10</sup> there is no (result of) offering,
no (result of) sacrifice;
there is no fruit or ripening of deeds well done or ill done;
there is not this [346] world, there is not a world beyond;<sup>11</sup> there is not a mother, there is not a father,<sup>12</sup> there are no spontaneously uprising beings;<sup>13</sup> there are not in the world recluses and brahmans who are faring rightly, proceeding rightly,
and who proclaim this world
and the world beyond, having realised them by their own super-knowledge.'<sup>14</sup>

Even so, householders, is the threefold faring by not-dhamma, the uneven faring in regard to thought.

Thus it is, householders, that as a result of faring by not-dhamma, the uneven faring,
some beings here,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
arise in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

---

And threefold, householders, is the faring by dhamma, the even faring in regard to body, fourfold is the faring by dhamma,
the even faring in regard to speech, threefold is the faring by dhamma,
the even faring in regard to thought.

And what, householders, is the threefold faring by dhamma,
the even faring in regard to body?

In this case, householders, a certain one,
abandoning onslaught on creatures,<sup>15</sup> is restrained from onslaught on creatures;
the stick laid aside,
the sword laid aside,
he lives scrupulous,
merciful,
kindly and compassionate to all living creatures.

Abandoning taking what is not given,
he is restrained from taking what is not given.

He does not take by theft any property of another in village or jungle
that is not given to him.

Abandoning wrong-doing in regard to pleasures of the senses, he is restrained from wrong-doing in regard to pleasures of the senses; he does not have intercourse with (girls) who are protected by the mother,
protected by the father,
protected by the parents,
protected by a brother,
protected by a sister,

protected by relations,
who have a husband,
whose use involves punishment, nor even with those adorned with [347] the garlands of betrothal.

Even so, householders is the threefold faring by dhamma,
the even faring in regard to body.

And what, householders, is the fourfold faring by dhamma,
the even faring in regard to speech?

In this case, householders, a certain one,
abandoning lying speech is restrained from lying speech.<sup>16</sup>

When he is cited and asked as a witness before a council or company
or amid his relations
or amid a guild
or amid a royal family,
and is told:

'Now, good man, say what you know,'

if he does not know, he says,

'I do not know';

if he knows, he says,

'I know';

if he has not seen, he says,

'I did not see,'

if he has seen, he says,

'I saw.'

Thus his speech does not come to be intentional lying either for his own sake or for that of another
or for the sake of some material gain or other.

Abandoning slanderous speech,
he is restrained from slanderous speech.

Having heard something at one place,
he is not one for repeating it elsewhere for (causing) variance among those people, or having heard something elsewhere he is not one to repeat it to these people
for (causing) variance among these people.

In this way he is a reconciler of those who are at variance
and one who combines those who are friends.

Concord is his pleasure,
concord his delight,
concord his joy,
concord is the motive of his speech.

Abandoning harsh speech,
he is restrained from harsh speech.

Whatever speech is gentle,
pleasing to the ear,
affectionate,
going to the heart,
urbane,
pleasant to the multitude - such speech does he utter.

Abandoning frivolous chatter,
he is restrained from frivolous chatter.

He is one who speaks at a right time, who speaks in accordance with fact,
who speaks about the goal,
who speaks about dhamma, who speaks about discipline.

He utters speech that is worth treasuring,
with similes at a right time, purposeful,
connected with the goal.

Even so, householders, is the fourfold faring by dhamma,
the even faring in regard to speech.

And what, householders, is the threefold faring by dhamma,
the even faring in regard to thought?

In this case, householders, a certain one comes to be not covetous,<sup>17</sup> he does not covet the property of another,
thinking,

'O, might that be mine which is the other's.'

And he is not malevolent in mind, not corrupt of thought and purpose, but thinks,

'Let these beings, friendly, peaceful, secure, happy, look after self.'<sup>18</sup>

And he is of right view, not of perverted outlook,
thinking,

'There is (result of) gift, [348] there is (result of) offering, there is (result of) sacrifice;
there is fruit and ripening of deeds well done and ill done;
there is this world,
there is a world beyond;
there is mother,
there is father,
there are spontaneously uprising beings;
there are in the world recluses and brahmans who are faring rightly, proceeding rightly
and who proclaim this world
and the world beyond
having realised them by their own super-knowledge.'

Even so, householders, is the threefold faring by dhamma,
the even faring in regard to thought.

Thus it is, householders, that as a result of faring by dhamma, the even faring,
some beings here at the breaking up of the body after dying
arise in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

If, householders, a dhamma-farer,
an even-farer should wish:

'O that I at the breaking up of the body after dying might arise in companionship with rich nobles,'

this situation occurs when he,
at the breaking up of the body after dying
might arise in companionship with rich nobles.

What is the cause of this?

It is that he is a dhamma-farer,
an even-farer.

If, householders, a dhamma-farer,
an even-farer should wish:

'O that I at the breaking up of the body after dying should arise in companionship with rich brahmans ...

with rich householders,'

this situation occurs when he,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
might arise in companionship with rich householders.

What is the cause of this?

It is that he is a dhamma-farer,
an even-farer.

If, householders, a dhamma-farer,
an even-farer, should wish:

'O that I, at the breaking up of the body after dying, might arise in companionship with the devas belonging to the four Great Regents ... with the devas of the Thirty-Three ... with the Yama's devas ... with the Tusita devas ... with the devas of creation ... with the devas who have power over the creations of others ... with the devas in the retinue of Brahmā ... with the devas of light ... with the devas of limited light ... with the devas of boundless light ... with the devas of brilliance ... with the devas of splendour ..

with the devas of limited splendour ... with the devas of boundless splendour ... with the Subhakiṇṇa devas ...
Vehapphala devas ...
Aviha devas ...
Atappa devas ...
Sudassa devas ...
Sudassī devas ...
Akanitṭha devas ...
with the devas experiencing the plane of infinite ether ... with the devas experiencing the plane of infinite consciousness ... with the devas experiencing the plane of no-thing ... with the devas experiencing the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-
perception,
this situation occurs when he,
at the breaking up of the body after dying, might arise in the companionship with the devas who experience the plane of [349] neither-perception-nor-non-perception.

What is the cause of this?

It is that he is a dhamma-farer,
an even-farer.

If, householders, a dhamma-farer,
an even-farer should wish:

'O that I, by the destruction of the cankers, might enter on and abide in that freedom of mind, that freedom through intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
having realised them here and now through my own super-knowledge,'

this situation occurs when he,
by the destruction of the cankers,

might enter on and abide in the freedom of mind,
the freedom through intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
having realised them here and now through his own super-knowledge.

What is the cause of this?

It is that he is a dhamma-farer,
an even-farer."

When this had been said,
the brahman householders of Sālā spoke thus to the Lord:

"It is wonderful good Gotama,
it is wonderful, good Gotama.

As if one might set upright what has been upset,
or might disclose what was covered,
or might show the way to one who had gone astray,
or bring an oil lamp into the darkness
so that those with vision might see material shapes - even so in many a figure has dhamma been proclaimed by the revered Gotama.

We ourselves are going to the reverend Gotama for refuge,
to dhamma
and to the Order of monks.

Let the revered Gotama accept us as lay-followers going for refuge from today forth
for as long as life lasts."

Discourse to the People of Sālā: the First

---

<sup>1</sup> As at M. i. 400-1.

<sup>2</sup> See above, p. 223. {scroll down a bit}

<sup>3</sup> As at M. iii. 46; A. v. 264 ff. Cf. Asl. 97 ff.

<sup>4</sup> M. ii. 97, iii. 203; A. v. 289.

<sup>5</sup> See the ten kinds of women at Vin. iii. 139, and notes at B.D. i. 237.

<sup>6</sup> saparidaṇḍa. MA. ii. 330 says: "Whoever goes to the woman so and so thinking 'such is the punishment for him,' if punishments are instituted with regard to a village or house or street, that is called saparidaṇḍa." Cf. Vin. iii. 139.

<sup>7</sup> Cf. opposite at D. i. 4 (of Gotama).

<sup>8</sup> Cf. opposite at D. i. 4; Dhs. 1343.

<sup>9</sup> aṇḍaka Cf. Bud. Psych. Ethics, p. 349, n. 4. MA. ii. agrees with Asl. (there quoted).

<sup>10</sup> This is a "heretical" view; cf. M. i. 401, 515; D. i. 55; S. iii. 206. MA. ii. 332 = DA. 165 says n'atthi dinnam means there is no existence of the fruit of giving.

<sup>11</sup> MA. ii. 332 = DA. i. 165: "when one is established in the world beyond, this world is not ('there is not this world'); when one is established in the world here, a world beyond is not ('there is not a world beyond'). All beings are cut off precisely here or there." Apparently there was no relation between the two worlds; in this deterministic view deeds done would not bring one to a world beyond — although this view apparently conceded that there was such a world.

<sup>12</sup> MA. ii. 332 = DA. i. 165: "there is no existence of fruit of good or bad behaviour" — towards parents.

<sup>13</sup> MA. ii. 332 = DA. i. 165: "having deceased, there are no arising beings" — meaning apparently there is no more birth for them, no more life.

<sup>14</sup> Here the "heretic" is speaking of the non-existence of omniscient Buddhas, MA. ii. 332.

<sup>15</sup> Cf. D. i. 4; A. v. 266

<sup>16</sup> Cf. M. i. 179; A. v. 267.

<sup>17</sup> Cf. A. v. 267 f.

<sup>18</sup> attānaṃ pariharantu; cf. A. ii. 3, 228, 253.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
5. Cūḷa Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
5. The Lesser Division of the Pairs

42. Discourse to the People of Verañjā

Verañjaka Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Now at that time brahman householders of Verañjā entered Sāvattḥī on some business or other.

The brahman householders of Verañjā heard:

"It is said that the recluse Gotama, the son of the Sakyans, gone forth from the Sakyan family, and walking on tour among the Kosalans together with a large Order of monks, has reached Verañjā, and that a lovely reputation has gone forth about the Lord Gotama thus:

'The Lord is perfected, wholly Self-awakened, endowed with (right) knowledge and conduct, well-farer, knower of the worlds, incomparable charioteer of men to be tamed, teacher of devas and men, the Awakened

One, the Lord ... He teaches dhamma that is lovely at the beginning, lovely in the middle and lovely at the ending, with the spirit and the meaning, he proclaims the Brahma-faring, wholly purified, quite pure. It were good to see perfected ones like this."

Then the brahman householders of Verañjā approached the Lord; some, having approached, having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance; some exchanged greetings with the Lord; having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy, they sat down at a respectful distance; some, having saluted the Lord with joined palms, sat down at a respectful distance; some, having made known their names and clans in the Lord's presence, sat down at a respectful distance; some, becoming silent, sat down at a respectful distance.

As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, the brahman householders of Verañjā spoke thus to the Lord:

"Now, what is the cause, good Gotama, what is the reason why some beings here at the breaking up of the body after dying arise in a sorrowful state, a bad bourn, the abyss, Niraya Hell?

What is the cause, what is the reason, good Gotama, why some beings here at the breaking up of the body after dying arise in a good bourn, a heaven world?"

"Householders, some beings here at the breaking up of the body after dying arise thus in a sorrowful state, a bad bourn, the abyss, Niraya Hell because of faring by not-dhamma, an uneven faring.

Householder, some beings here at the breaking up of the body after dying arise thus in a good bourn, a heaven-world, because of faring by dhamma, an even faring."

"We do not understand in full the matter that has been spoken of in brief by the good Gotama, and whose meaning was not explained in full.

It were good if the good Gotama were so to teach us dhamma that we might understand in full the matter spoken of in brief by the good Gotama, and whose meaning was not explained in full."

"Well then, householders, listen, pay careful attention, and I will speak."

"Yes, sir," these brahman householders of Verañjā answered the Lord in assent. The Lord spoke thus:

"Threefold, householders, is the faring by not-dhamma, an uneven faring as to body; fourfold is the faring by not-dhamma, an uneven faring as to speech; threefold is the faring by not-dhamma, and uneven faring as to thought.

And what, householders, is the threefold faring by not dhamma, the uneven faring as to body?

In this case, householders, a certain one makes onslaught on creatures, he is cruel, bloody-handed, intent on injuring and killing, without mercy to living creatures.

He is a taker of what is not given; whatever property of another in village or jungle is not given to him he takes by theft.

He is a wrong-goer in regard to pleasures of the senses; he has intercourse with (girls) protected by the mother, protected by the father, protected by the parents, protected by a brother, protected by a sister, protected by relations, who have a husband, whose use involves punishments, and even with those adorned with garlands of betrothal.

Even so, householders, is the threefold faring by not-dhamma, the uneven faring, in regard to the body.

And how, householders, does there come to be the fourfold faring by not-dhamma, the uneven faring as to speech?

In this case, householders, a certain one is of lying speech; when he is cited and asked as a witness before a council or company or amid his relations or amid a guild or amid a royal family, and is told: 'Now, good man, say what you know,' although he does not know, he says, 'I know,' although he knows, he says, 'I do not know'; although he has not seen, he says, 'I saw,' although he has seen, he says, 'I did not see.' Thus his speech becomes intentional lying either for his own sake or for the sake of another or for the sake of some material gain or other.

And he is a slanderer; having heard something at one place, he makes it known elsewhere for (causing) variance among those (people); or having heard something elsewhere he makes it known among these people for (causing) variance among these (people).

In this way he sows discord among those who are in harmony, or is one who foments those who are at variance.

Discord is his pleasure, discord his delight, discord his joy, discord is the motive of his speech.

And he is one of harsh speech.

Whatever speech is rough, hard, severe on others, abusive of others, bordering on wrath, not conducive to concentration, such speech does he utter.

And he is a frivolous chatterer, one who speaks at a wrong time, one who does not speak in accordance with fact, one who speaks about what is not the goal, one who speaks about not-dhamma, one who speaks about not-discipline.

He utters speech that is not worth treasuring; owing to its being at the wrong time it is incongruous, has no purpose, is not connected with the goal.

Even so, householders, is the fourfold faring by not-dhamma, the uneven faring in regard to speech.

And what, householders, is the threefold faring by not-dhamma, the uneven faring as to thought?

In this case, householders, a certain one comes to be covetous; he covets that which is the property of another, thinking, 'O that what is the other's might be mine'; he is malevolent in mind, corrupt in thought and purpose, and thinks, 'Let these beings be killed or slaughtered or annihilated or destroyed, or may they not exist at all.'

And he is of wrong view, of perverted outlook, thinking, 'There is no (result of) gift, there is no (result of) offering, no (result of) sacrifice; there is no fruit or ripening of deeds well done or ill done; there is not this world, there is not a world beyond; there is not a mother, there is not a father, there are no spontaneously uprising beings; there are not in the world recluses and brahmans who are faring rightly, proceeding rightly, and who proclaim this world and the world beyond, having realised them by their own super-knowledge.'

Even so, householders, is the threefold faring by not-dhamma, the uneven faring in regard to thought.

Thus it is, householders, that as a result of faring by not-dhamma, the uneven faring, some beings here, at the breaking up of the body after dying, arise in a sorrowful state, a bad bourn, the abyss, Niraya Hell.

And threefold, householders, is the faring by dhamma, the even faring in regard to body, fourfold is the faring by dhamma, the even faring in regard to speech, threefold is the faring by dhamma, the even faring in regard to thought.

And what, householders, is the threefold faring by dhamma, the even faring in regard to body?

In this case, householders, a certain one, abandoning onslaught on creatures, is restrained from onslaught on creatures; the stick laid aside, the sword laid aside, he lives scrupulous, merciful, kindly and compassionate to all living creatures.

Abandoning taking what is not given, he is restrained from taking what is not given.

He does not take by theft any property of another in village or jungle that is not given to him.

Abandoning wrong-doing in regard to pleasures of the senses, he is restrained from wrong-doing in regard to pleasures of the senses; he does not have intercourse with (girls) who are protected by the mother, protected by the father, protected by the parents, protected by a brother, protected by a sister, protected by relations, who have a husband, whose use involves punishment, nor even with those adorned with the garlands of betrothal.

Even so, householders is the threefold faring by dhamma, the even faring in regard to body.

And what, householders, is the fourfold faring by dhamma, the even faring in regard to speech?

In this case, householders, a certain one, abandoning lying speech is restrained from lying speech.

When he is cited and asked as a witness before a council or company or amid his relations or amid a guild or amid a royal family, and is told: 'Now, good man, say what you know,' if he does not know, he says, 'I do not know'; if he knows, he says, 'I know'; if he has not seen, he says, 'I did not see,' if he has seen, he says, 'I saw.'

Thus his speech does not come to be intentional lying either for his own sake or for that of another or for the sake of some material gain or other.

Abandoning slanderous speech, he is restrained from slanderous speech.

Having heard something at one place, he is not one for repeating it elsewhere for (causing) variance among those people, or having heard something elsewhere he is not one to repeat it to these people for (causing) variance among these people.

In this way he is a reconciler of those who are at variance and one who combines those who are friends.

Concord is his pleasure, concord his delight, concord his joy, concord is the motive of his speech.

Abandoning harsh speech, he is restrained from harsh speech.

Whatever speech is gentle, pleasing to the ear, affectionate, going to the heart, urbane, pleasant to the multitude - such speech does he utter.

Abandoning frivolous chatter, he is restrained from frivolous chatter.

He is one who speaks at a right time, who speaks in accordance with fact, who speaks about the goal, who speaks about dhamma, who speaks about discipline.

He utters speech that is worth treasuring, with similes at a right time, purposeful, connected with the goal.

Even so, householders, is the fourfold faring by dhamma, the even faring in regard to speech.

And what, householders, is the threefold faring by dhamma, the even faring in regard to thought?

In this case, householders, a certain one comes to be not covetous, he does not covet the property of another, thinking, 'O, might that be mine which is the other's.'

And he is not malevolent in mind, not corrupt of thought and purpose, but thinks, 'Let these beings, friendly, peaceful, secure, happy, look after self.'

And he is of right view, not of perverted outlook, thinking, 'There is (result of) gift, there is (result of) offering, there is (result of) sacrifice; there is fruit and ripening of deeds well done and ill done; there is this world, there is a world beyond; there is mother, there is father, there are spontaneously uprising beings; there are in the world recluses and brahmans who are faring rightly, proceeding rightly and who proclaim this world and the world beyond having realised them by their own super-knowledge.'

Even so, householders, is the threefold faring by dhamma, the even faring in regard to thought.

Thus it is, householders, that as a result of faring by dhamma, the even faring, some beings here at the breaking up of the body after dying arise in a good bourn, a heaven world.

If, householders, a dhamma-farer, an even-farer should wish: 'O that I at the breaking up of the body after dying might arise in companionship with rich nobles,' this situation occurs when he, at the breaking up of the body after dying might arise in companionship with rich nobles.

What is the cause of this?

It is that he is a dhamma-farer, an even-farer.

If, householders, a dhamma-farer, an even-farer should wish: 'O that I at the breaking up of the body after dying should arise in companionship with rich brahmans ... with rich householders,' this situation occurs when he, at the breaking up of the body after dying, might arise in companionship with rich householders.

What is the cause of this?

It is that he is a dhamma-farer, an even-farer.

If, householders, a dhamma-farer, an even-farer, should wish: 'O that I, at the breaking up of the body after dying, might arise in companionship with the devas belonging to the four Great Regents ... with the devas of the Thirty-Three ... with the Yama's devas ... with the Tusita devas ... with the devas of creation ... with the devas who have power over the creations of others ... with the devas in the retinue of Brahmā ... with the devas of light ... with the devas of limited light ... with the devas of boundless light ... with the devas of brilliance ... with the devas of splendour .. with the devas of limited splendour ... with the devas of boundless splendour ... with the Subhakiṇṇa devas ... Vehapphala devas ... Aviha devas ... Atappa devas ... Sudassa devas ... Sudassī devas ... Akaniṭṭha devas ... with the devas experiencing the plane of infinite ether ... with the devas experiencing the plane of infinite consciousness ... with the devas experiencing the plane of no-thing ... with the devas experiencing the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception, this situation occurs when he, at the breaking up of the body after dying, might arise in the companionship with the devas who experience the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception.

What is the cause of this?

It is that he is a dhamma-farer, an even-farer.

If, householders, a dhamma-farer, an even-farer should wish: 'O that I, by the destruction of the cankers, might enter on and abide in that freedom of mind, that freedom through intuitive wisdom that are cankerless, having realised them here and now through my own super-knowledge,' this situation occurs when he, by the destruction of the cankers, might enter on and abide in the freedom of mind, the freedom through intuitive wisdom that are cankerless, having realised them here and now through his own super-knowledge.

What is the cause of this?

It is that he is a dhamma-farer, an even-farer."

When this had been said, the brahman householders of Verañjā spoke thus to the Lord: "It is wonderful good Gotama, it is wonderful, good Gotama. As if one might set upright what has been upset, or might disclose what was covered, or might show the way to one who had gone astray, or bring an oil lamp into the darkness so that those with vision might see material shapes - even so in many a figure has dhamma been proclaimed by the revered Gotama We ourselves are going to the reverend Gotama for refuge, to dhamma and to the Order of monks. Let the revered Gotama accept us as lay-followers going for refuge from today forth for as long as life lasts."

Discourse to the People of Verañjā: the Second

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
5. Cūḷa Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
5. The Lesser Division of the Pairs

43. Greater Discourse of the Miscellany

Mahā Vedalla Sutta

---

THUS have I heard.

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then the venerable Koṭṭhita the Great,<sup>1</sup> emerging from solitary meditation towards evening, approached the venerable Sāriputta<sup>2</sup>: having approached, he exchanged greetings with the venerable Sāriputta; having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy, he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Koṭṭhita the Great spoke thus to the venerable Sāriputta:

"Your reverence, one is called:

'Poor in intuitive wisdom,
poor in intuitive wisdom.'

Now what are the respects in which one is called
'Poor in intuitive wisdom,'
your reverence?"

"Your reverence, if it is said
'He does not comprehend,
he does not comprehend,'
therefore he is called
'Poor in intuitive wisdom.'

What does he not comprehend?

He does not comprehend
'This is anguish,'
he does not comprehend
'This is the arising of anguish,'
he does not comprehend
'This is the stopping of anguish,'<sup>3</sup>
he does not comprehend
'This is the course leading to the stopping of anguish.'

If it is said,
'He does not comprehend,
he does not comprehend,'
your reverence,
therefore he is called
'poor in intuitive wisdom.'"

[351] "It is good, your reverence," and the venerable Koṭṭhita the Great, having rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said, having thanked him,
asked the venerable Sāriputta a further question:

"Your reverence, one is called
'Intuitively wise,

intuitively wise.'

Now what are the respects
in which one is called
'intuitively wise,'
your reverence?"

"Your reverence, if it is said
'He comprehends,
he comprehends,'
he is therefore called
'Intuitively wise.'

And what does he comprehend?

He comprehends
'This is anguish,'
he comprehends
'This is the arising of anguish,'
he comprehends
'This is the stopping of anguish,'
he comprehends
'This is the course leading to the stopping of anguish.'

If it is said,
'He comprehends,
he comprehends,'
your reverence,
therefore he is called
'intuitively wise.'"

"Your reverence, it is called
'Discriminative consciousness,<sup>4</sup> discriminative consciousness.'

Now in what respects, your reverence, is it called

'discriminative consciousness'?"

"Your reverence, if it said

'It discriminates,<sup>5</sup>

it discriminates,'

it is therefore called discriminative consciousness.

And what does it discriminate?

It discriminates pleasure and it discriminates pain and it discriminates neither pain nor pleasure.<sup>6</sup>

If it is said

'It discriminates,

it discriminates,'

your reverence,

therefore it is called

'Discriminative consciousness.'"

"That which is intuitive wisdom,

your reverence,

and that which is discriminative consciousness,

are these states associated or dissociated?

And is it possible to lay down a difference between these states,

having analysed them again and again?"

"That which is intuitive wisdom,

your reverence,

and that which is discriminative consciousness,

these states are associated,

not dissociated,

and it is not possible to lay down a difference between these states,

having analysed them again and again.

Whatever one comprehends,
your reverence,
that one discriminates;
whatever one discriminates that one comprehends;
therefore these states are associated,
not dissociated,
and it is not possible to lay down a difference between these states,
having analysed them again and again."

"That which is intuitive wisdom,
your reverence,
and that which is discriminative consciousness, what is the difference between these states which are associated,
not dissociated?"

[352] "That which is intuitive wisdom,
your reverence,
and that which is discriminative consciousness among these states that are associated,
not dissociated,
intuitive wisdom is to be developed, discriminative consciousness is for apprehending.<sup>7</sup>

This is the difference between them."

"Your reverence, it is said,
'Feeling, feeling!'

Now what are the respects
in which it is called 'feeling,' your reverence?"

"Your reverence, if it is said,
'He feels, he feels,'
it is therefore called 'feeling!'

And what does he feel?

He feels pleasure,
and he feels pain,
and he feels neither pain nor pleasure.

If it is said, 'He feels, he feels,' your reverence, therefore it is called 'feeling.'"<sup>8</sup>

"Your reverence, it is said,
'Perception, perception.'

Now what are the respects
in which it is called 'perception,' your reverence?"

"Your reverence, if it is said,
'He perceives, he perceives,' it is therefore called 'perception.'

And what does he perceive?

He perceives what is dark green and he perceives what is yellow and he perceives what is red and he perceives what is white.

If it is said
'He perceives, he perceives,' your reverence,
it is therefore called 'perception.'"

"That which is feeling, your reverence,
and that which is perception
and that which is discriminative consciousness — are these states associated or dissociated?

And is it possible to lay down a difference between these states,
having analysed them again and again?"

"That which is feeling, your reverence,
and that which is perception
and that which is discriminative consciousness —
these states are associated,
not dissociated,
and it is not possible to lay down a difference between these states,
having analysed them again and again.

Your reverence, whatever one feels,
that one perceives;
whatever one perceives
that one discriminates;
therefore these states are associated,
not dissociated,
and it is not possible to lay down a difference between these states,
having analysed them again and again."

"What is knowable, your reverence, by purified mental consciousness isolated from the five sense-organs?"<sup>2</sup> [353] "Your reverence, thinking,

'Ether is unending,'
the plane of infinite ether is knowable by pure mental consciousness isolated from the five sense-organs;

thinking,
'Consciousness is unending,'
the plane of infinite consciousness is knowable;

thinking,
'There is not anything,' the plane of no-thing is knowable."

"By what means does one comprehend a knowable mental object, your reverence?"

"One comprehends a knowable mental object, your reverence, by means of the eye of intuitive wisdom."<sup>10</sup>

"But what is intuitive wisdom for, your reverence?"

"Your reverence, intuitive wisdom is for super-knowledge, for apprehending,<sup>11</sup>
for getting rid of."

[294] "But how many conditions are there, your reverence, for bringing right understanding<sup>12</sup> into existence?"

"There are two conditions, your reverence,
for bringing right understanding into existence:
the utterance of another (person) and wise attention.<sup>13</sup>

Your reverence, these are the two conditions for bringing right understanding into existence."

"If right understanding is forwarded, by how many factors, your reverence, does there come to be the fruit of freedom of mind and the advantage of the fruit<sup>14</sup> of freedom of mind, and the fruit of freedom through intuitive wisdom
and the advantage of the fruit of freedom through intuitive wisdom?"

"Your reverence, if right understanding is forwarded by five factors there comes to be the fruit of freedom of mind and the advantage of the fruit of freedom of mind,
and the fruit of freedom through intuitive wisdom
and the advantage of the fruit of freedom through intuitive wisdom:
in this case, your reverence,

right understanding is forwarded by moral habit, and it is forwarded by hearing,<sup>15</sup> and it is forwarded by discussion, and it is forwarded by calm and it is forwarded by vision.

Your reverence, if right understanding is forwarded by these five factors, there comes to [354] be the fruit of freedom of mind
and the advantage of the fruit of freedom of mind, and there comes to be the fruit of freedom through intuitive wisdom and the advantage of the fruit of freedom through intuitive wisdom."<sup>16</sup>

"And how many becomings are there, your reverence?"

"These three are becomings, your reverence:
becoming of sense-pleasures, becoming of fine-materiality, becoming of immateriality."<sup>17</sup>

"How, your reverence,
is there the recurrence of again-becoming in the future?"

"For those creatures who are hindered by ignorance, fettered by craving, delighting in this and that, there thus comes to be recurrence of again-becoming in the future."<sup>18</sup>

"But how, your reverence, is there not recurrence
of again-becoming in the future?"

"By the fading away of ignorance,
by the uprising of knowledge,<sup>19</sup> by the stopping of craving, there is thus no recurrence

of again-becoming in the future "

"And what, your reverence, is the first meditation?"

"As to this, your reverence, a monk,
aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
enters on
and abides in
the first meditation
which is accompanied by initial thought
and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful.

This, your reverence, is called the first meditation."

"Of how many factors, your reverence, is the first meditation?"

"Your reverence, the first meditation is five-factored:
if a monk has entered on the first meditation there is initial thought
and discursive thought and rapture
and joy
and one-pointedness of mind.

Thus, your reverence, is the first meditation five-factored."

"Your reverence, in regard to the first meditation, how many factors are abandoned, how many factors are possessed?"

"Your reverence, in regard to the first meditation, five factors are abandoned,
five are possessed:
if a monk has entered on the first meditation,
desire for sense-pleasure is abandoned, malevolence is abandoned, sloth and torpor are abandoned, restlessness and worry are abandoned, doubt is abandoned, but there is initial thought
and discursive thought, rapture
and joy
and one-pointedness of mind.

Thus, your reverence, in regard to the first [355] meditation,
five factors are abandoned,
five factors are possessed."

"Your reverence, these five sense-organs,<sup>20</sup> different in range,
different in pasture,
do not react to the pasture and range of one another;
that is to say the organ of eye,
the organ of ear,
the organ of nose,
the organ of tongue,
the organ of body.

What is the repository<sup>21</sup> of these five sense-organs,
different in range,
different in pasture,
which do not react to the pasture and range of one another?

And what is it that reacts to their pasture and range?"

"Your reverence, these five sense-organs,
different in range,
different in pasture,
do not react to the pasture and range of one another;
that is to say the organ of eye,
the organ of ear,
the organ of nose,
the organ of tongue,
the organ of body.

Of these five sense-organs, your reverence,
different in range,
different in pasture,
not reacting to the pasture and range of one another,
mind is the repository, and mind reacts to their pasture and range."

"Your reverence, these are the five sense-organs,
that is to say,
the organ of eye,
the organ of ear,
the organ of nose,
the organ of tongue,
the organ of body.

On what do these five sense-organs depend, your reverence?"

"Your reverence, these are the five sense-organs,
that is to say,
the organ of eye,
the organ of ear,
the organ of nose,
the organ of tongue,
the organ of body.

Your reverence, these five sense-organs depend on vitality."<sup>22</sup>

"And on what does vitality depend, your reverence?"

"Vitality depends on heat."

"And on what does heat depend, your reverence?"

"Heat depends on vitality."

"Your reverence, we now understand the words of the venerable Sāriputta
thus:

'Vitality depends on heat';

we now understand the words of the venerable Sāriputta thus:

'Heat depends on vitality.'

What is the precise meaning to be attached to these words, your reverence?"

"Well then, your reverence, I will make a simile<sup>23</sup> for you.

For by a simile
some intelligent persons here understand the meaning of what has been said:

As when an oil lamp is burning the light is seen because of the flame and the flame is seen because of the light, so, your reverence,
vitality depends on heat
and heat on vitality."

[356] "Now, your reverence, are these properties of vitality<sup>24</sup> states that are to be felt,

or are the properties of vitality one thing, states that are to be felt another?"

"Your reverence, these properties of vitality are not themselves states to be felt.

If, your reverence, these properties of vitality were themselves states to be felt, no emergence<sup>25</sup> could be shown for a monk who had won
to the stopping of perception and feeling.

But because, your reverence, the properties of vitality are one thing and states to be felt another, therefore the emergence of a monk who has won
to the stopping of perception and feeling
can be shown."

"In regard to this body, your reverence, when how many things are got rid of,
does this body lie cast away, flung aside like unto a senseless log of wood?"<sup>26</sup>

"In regard to this body, your reverence, when three things are got rid of:
vitality,
heat
and consciousness,
then does this body lie cast away, flung aside like unto a senseless log of wood."

"What is the difference, your reverence, between that dead thing,
passed away,
and that monk who has attained to the stopping of perception and feeling?"

"Your reverence, the bodily activities<sup>27</sup> of that dead thing, passed away,
have been stopped,
have subsided,
the vocal activities<sup>28</sup> have been stopped,
have subsided,
the mental activities<sup>29</sup> have been stopped,
have subsided,
the vitality is entirely destroyed,
the heat allayed,
the sense-organs are entirely broken asunder.

But that monk who has attained to the stopping of perception and feeling, although his bodily activities have been stopped,
have subsided,
although his vocal activities have been stopped,
have subsided,
although his mental activities have been stopped,
have subsided,
his vitality is not entirely destroyed,
his heat is not allayed, his sense-organs are purified.

This, your reverence, is the difference [357] between a dead thing,
passed away,
and that monk who has attained to the stopping of perception and feeling."

"And how many conditions are there, your reverence, for the attainment of the freedom of mind
which has neither anguish nor joy?"

"There are four conditions, your reverence,
for the attainment of the freedom of mind
which has neither anguish nor joy.

In this case, your reverence,
a monk by getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,
enters on
and abides in
the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

These, your reverence, are the four conditions for attaining the freedom of mind
which has neither anguish nor joy."

"How many conditions are there, your reverence,
for the attainment of the freedom of mind
that is signless?"

"There are two conditions, your reverence,
for the attainment of the freedom of mind
that is signless:
paying no attention to any signs,
and paying attention to the signless realm.<sup>30</sup>

These, your reverence, are the two conditions
for the attainment of the freedom of mind
that is signless."

"How many conditions are there, your reverence,
for the persistence of the freedom of mind
that is signless?"

"There are three conditions, your reverence,
for the persistence of the freedom of mind
that is signless:

paying no attention to any signs,
and paying attention to the signless realm, and a preceding preparation.

These, your reverence, are the three conditions
for the persistence of the freedom of mind
that is signless."

"How many conditions are there, your reverence, for emergence from the freedom of mind
that is signless?"

"There are the two conditions, your reverence, for emerging from the freedom of mind
that is signless:
paying attention to all signs,
and not paying attention to the signless realm.

These, your reverence, are the two conditions
for emergence from the freedom of mind
that is signless."

"Your reverence, whatever is immeasurable freedom of mind<sup>31</sup> and whatever is freedom of mind that is naught<sup>32</sup> and whatever is freedom of mind that is void and whatever is freedom of mind that [358] is signless — are these states different in connotation and different in denotation, or are they identical in connotation while being different only in denotation?"<sup>33</sup>

"Your reverence, whatever is immeasurable freedom of mind and whatever is the freedom of mind that is naught and whatever is freedom of mind that is void
and whatever is freedom of mind that is signless — there is a method according to which these states are different in connotation

as well as being different in denotation;

and, your reverence, there is a method according to which these states are identical in connotation

while being different in denotation.

And what, your reverence, is the method according to which these states are different in connotation

as well as being different in denotation?

As to this, your reverence,

a monk abides having suffused the first quarter

with a mind of friendliness,

likewise the second,

likewise the third,

likewise the fourth;

just so above,

below,

across;

he dwells having suffused the whole world everywhere,

in every way

with a mind of friendliness,

that is far-reaching,

widespread,

immeasurable,

without enmity,

without malevolence.

He dwells having suffused the first quarter

with a mind of compassion,

likewise the second,

likewise the third,

likewise the fourth;

just so above,

below,

across;

he dwells having suffused the whole world everywhere,
in every way
with a mind of compassion,
that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

He dwells having suffused the first quarter
with a mind of sympathetic joy,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwells having suffused the whole world everywhere,
in every way
with a mind of sympathetic joy,
that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

He dwells having suffused the first quarter
with a mind of equanimity,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwells having suffused the whole world everywhere,
in every way

with a mind of equanimity,
that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

This, your reverence, is called immeasurable freedom of mind.<sup>34</sup>

And what, your reverence, is the freedom of mind that is naught?

As to this, your reverence,
a monk passing quite beyond the plane of infinite consciousness,
thinking,
'There is not anything,'
enters on and abides in the plane of no-thing.

This, your reverence, is called the freedom of mind that is naught.

And what, your reverence,
is the freedom of mind that is void?

As to this, your reverence, a monk forest-gone
or gone to the root of a tree
or gone to an empty place, reflects thus:

'This is void of self<sup>35</sup> or of what pertains to self.'<sup>36</sup>

[298] This, your reverence, is called the freedom of mind that is void.

[359] And what, your reverence, is the freedom of mind that is signless?

As to this, your reverence, a monk,
by paying no attention to any signs, entering on the concentration of mind that is signless,
abides therein.

This, your reverence, is called the freedom of mind that is signless.

This, your reverence, is the method according to which these states are different in connotation as well as differing in denotation.

And what, your reverence, is the method according to which these states are identical in connotation
while being different in denotation?

Attachment, your reverence, is productive of the measurable, hatred is productive of the measurable, confusion is productive of the measurable.

For a monk whose cankers are destroyed,
these are got rid of,
cut off at the roots,
made like a palm-tree stump
so that they can come to no further existence in the future.

To the extent, your reverence, that freedoms of mind are immeasurable,<sup>37</sup> unshakable freedom of mind
is shown to be their chief,
for that unshakable freedom of mind
is void of attachment,
void of hatred,
void of confusion.

Attachment, your reverence, is something (obstructive),<sup>38</sup> hatred is something (obstructive), confusion is something (obstructive).<sup>39</sup>

For a monk whose cankers are destroyed,
these are got rid of,
cut off at the roots,
made like a palm-tree stump
so that they can come to no further existence in the future.

To the extent, your reverence, that freedoms of mind are naught, unshakable freedom of mind
is shown to be their chief,
for that unshakable freedom of mind
is void of attachment,
void of hatred,
void of confusion.

Attachment, your reverence,
is productive of signs, hatred is productive of signs, confusion is productive of signs.

For a monk whose cankers are destroyed
these are got rid of,
cut off at the roots,
made like a palm-tree stump
so that they can come to no further existence in the future.

To the extent, your reverence, that freedoms of mind are signless,<sup>40</sup> unshakable freedom of mind
is shown to be their chief,
for that unshakable freedom of mind
is void of attachment,

[360] void of hatred,
void of confusion.<sup>41</sup>

This, your reverence, is the method according to which these states are identical in connotation
while being different in denotation."

Thus spoke the venerable Sāriputta.

Delighted, the venerable Koṭṭhita the Great rejoiced in what the venerable Sāriputta had said.

Greater Discourse of the Miscellany:
the Third

---

<sup>1</sup> At A. i. 24 he is called chief of those who have mastery in logical analysis;
cited at MA. ii. 337.

<sup>2</sup> At A. i. 23 called chief of those of great intuitive wisdom; cited at MA. ii.
335.

<sup>3</sup> He does not comprehend that the third truth, of stopping, is nibbana. MA.
ii. 338 points out that the first two truths are concerned with the "round "of rebirths, and the last two with what is not the "round" vivaṭṭa.

<sup>4</sup> viññāṇa.

<sup>5</sup> vijānāti.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. M. i. 59.

<sup>7</sup> pariññeyyaṇṇm; cf. pariññeyya dhamma at S. iii. 36. MA. ii. 342 keeps the view that there is no difference. For it says that discriminative consciousness being joined to intuitive wisdom should be developed with it, and that intuitive wisdom being joined to discriminative consciousness should be apprehended with it.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. S. iii. 69.

<sup>9</sup> That is, in the fourth jhāna. [Ed.: See AN 9.37 for this same idea stated another way.]

<sup>10</sup> Wisdom that has become vision. MA. ii. 345 gives two kinds of wisdom, that of concentration and that of vision.

<sup>11</sup> Wisdom that has become vision. MA. ii. 345 gives two kinds of wisdom, that of concentration and that of vision.

abhiññatthaṃ and pariññatthaṃ also at It. p. 29. But cf. p. 352, above, where consciousness is for apprehending, pariññeyya.

<sup>12</sup> MA. ii. 346, the right understanding through vision, the right understanding of the Way.

<sup>13</sup> MA. ii. 346 cites Sāriputta as having heard a verse (Vin. i. 40) spoken by Assaji, as an example of hearing from another; and paccekabuddhas as coming to omniscience through their own wise attention.

<sup>14</sup> Sn. 256.

<sup>15</sup> I.e. hearing from others, learning.

<sup>16</sup> For, the Way to arahantship coming into being as a result of practising these five factors, gives the fruit, MA. ii. 346.

<sup>17</sup> Cf. A. i. 223; S. ii. 3, 65, 101; Vin. iii. 3.

<sup>18</sup> Cf. A. i. 223.

<sup>19</sup> As at M. i. 67; S. ii. 82.

<sup>20</sup> Cf. the following passage with S. v. 217 f.

<sup>21</sup> paṭisaraṇa also resort, arbiter, as at M. i. 310, iii. 9, or underlying principle.

<sup>22</sup> āyu MA. ii. 349 says jīvitindriya. Cf. Chānd. Up. 6. 8. 4, 6.

<sup>23</sup> As at M. i. 148.

<sup>24</sup> āyusaṅkhāra. MA. ii. 350 āyum eva. Cf. D. ii. 106; Ud. 64; A. iv. 311; S. ii. 266

<sup>25</sup> I.e. from this (ninth) attainment, that of the stopping of perception and feeling.

<sup>26</sup> Cf. S. iii. 143, quoted MA. ii. 351; cf. Dh. 41; Thag. 468; M. Sta. 66.

<sup>27</sup> Defined in next Discourse, M. i. 301, and similarly at MA. ii. 351: in-breathing and out-breathing. Cf. S. iv. 294-97.

<sup>28</sup> Thought-conception and discursive thought. The "ariyan silence" ensues when these are stopped.

<sup>29</sup> Feeling and perception.

<sup>30</sup> This is Nibbāna, MA. ii. 352. Nimitta (signs) and animitta refer to experiential phenomena (i.e. to conditioned existence), and their absence.

<sup>31</sup> This appears to refer to the brahrnavihāra, see below.

<sup>32</sup> Cf. Sn. 1113-1115. "Naught because of the non-existence of any (kiñcana) basis for meditation," MA. ii. 353.

<sup>33</sup> Cf. M. iii. 145 f. in connection with immeasurable and widespread freedom of mind.

<sup>34</sup> Cf. M. ill. 146.

<sup>35</sup> MA. ii. 353, the self that composes an individual or man.

<sup>36</sup> I.e. the requisites of robe-material and so on, MA. ii. 353. Cf. S. iv. 54, 296; Kvu. 67, 579.

<sup>37</sup> MA. ii. 354 gives twelve: four brahmavihāras, the ways and fruits — and also Nibbāna.

<sup>38</sup> kiñcana. MA. ii. 354 says that when passion has uprisen it does something (kiñcati) to a man, it crushes him, or obstructs him.

<sup>39</sup> Cf. D. iii. 217, tayo kiñcanā.

<sup>40</sup> These number thirteen: vision, the four (concentrations) which are formless, the four ways, the four fruits. Vision is signless because it removes the signs of permanence, joy and self. The next four are signless because of the non-existence (in them) of the sign of form. The ways and fruits are signless through the non-existence of the defilements which produce signs. Nibbāna too is simply signless," MA. ii. 355.

<sup>41</sup> MA. iii. 355 notes that void freedom of mind is not treated separately, for "void of attachment" and so on has come in everywhere.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaññāsa
5. Cūḷa Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
5. The Lesser Division of the Pairs

44. Lesser Discourse of the Miscellany

Cūḷa Vedalla Sutta

---

THUS have I heard.

At one time the Lord was staying near Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place.

Then the layfollower Visākha approached the nun Dhammadinnā;<sup>1</sup>
having approached,
having greeted the nun Dhammadinnā,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the lay follower Visākha spoke thus to the nun Dhammadinnā:

"Lady, it is said,

'Own body,<sup>2</sup>
own body.'

Now, lady, what is called
'own body'
by the Lord?"

"Friend Visākha,
these five groups of grasping
are called 'own body' by the Lord,
that is to say,
the group of grasping after material shape,
the group of grasping after feeling,
the group of grasping after perception,
the group of grasping after the habitual tendencies,
the group of grasping after consciousness.

These five groups of grasping, friend Visākha,
are called 'own body' by the Lord."

[361] "It is good, lady," and the lay follower Visākha, having rejoiced in what the nun Dhammadinnā had said,
having thanked her,
asked the nun Dhammadinnā a further question:

"Lady, it is said,

'The uprising of own body,
the uprising of own body.'

Now, lady, what is called
'the uprising of own body'
by the Lord?"

"Whatever, friend Visākha, is the craving<sup>3</sup>

connected with again-becoming,
accompanied by delight and attachment,
finding delight in this and that,
namely the craving for sense-pleasures,
the craving for becoming,
the craving for annihilation,
this, friend Visākha,
is called 'the uprising of own body' by the Lord."

"Lady, it is said,

'The stopping of own body,
the stopping of own body.'

Now, lady, what is called
'stopping of own body'
by the Lord?"

"Whatever, friend Visākha, is the stopping,
with no attachment remaining,
of that self-same craving,
the giving up of it,
the renunciation of it,
the release from it,
the doing away with it,
this, friend Visākha,
is called 'The stopping of own body' by the Lord."

"Lady, it is said,

'The course leading to the stopping of own body,
the course leading to the stopping of own body.'

Now, lady, what is called
'the course leading to the stopping of own body'
by the Lord?"

"This ariyan eightfold Way itself, friend Visākha, is called 'the course leading to the stopping of own body' by the Lord, that is to say perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration."

"Do those five groups of grasping, lady, (comprise) the whole of grasping?"

Or is there a grasping apart from the five groups of grasping?"

"No, friend Visākha,
these five groups of grasping (comprise) the whole of grasping,
and there is no grasping apart from the five groups of grasping.

Whatever, friend Visākha, is the attachment and desire for the five groups of grasping, that is grasping after them."

"But how, lady, does there come to be (wrong) view as to own body?"

"In this case, friend Visākha, an uninstructed average person,
taking no count of the pure ones, not skilled in the dhamma of the [362] pure ones,
untrained in the dhamma of the pure ones,

taking no count of the true men,
not skilled in the dhamma of the true men,
untrained in the dhamma of the true men, regards material shape as self<sup>4</sup> or self as having material shape<sup>5</sup> or material shape as in self<sup>6</sup> or self as in material shape;<sup>7</sup> he regards feeling as self or self as having feeling or feeling as in self or self as in feeling;

he regards perception as self or self as having perception or perception as in self or self as in perception;

he regards the habitual tendencies as self or self as having habitual tendencies or habitual tendencies as in self or self as in habitual tendencies;

he regards consciousness, as self or self as having consciousness or consciousness as in self or self as in consciousness.

Thus, friend Visākha, does there come to be (wrong) view as to own body."

"But how, lady, does there not come to be (wrong) view as to own body?"

"In this case, friend Visākha,
an instructed disciple of the pure ones,

taking count of the pure ones,
skilled in the dhamma of the pure ones,
well trained in the dhamma of the pure ones,
taking count of the true men,
skilled in the dhamma of the true men,
well trained in the dhamma of the true men, does not regard material shape as self nor self as having material shape nor material shape as in self nor self as in material shape;

he does not regard feeling as self nor self as having feeling nor feeling as in self nor self as in feeling;

he does not regard perception as self nor self as having perception nor perception as in self nor self as in perception;

he does not regard the habitual tendencies as self nor self as having habitual tendencies nor habitual tendencies as in self nor self as in habitual tendencies;

he does not regard consciousness as self nor self as having consciousness nor consciousness as in self nor self as in consciousness.

Thus, friend Visākha, does there not come to be (wrong) view as to own body."

"But what, lady, is the ariyan eightfold Way?"

"This, friend Visākha, is the ariyan eightfold Way,
that is to say,
perfect view,
perfect thought,
perfect speech,
perfect action,
perfect way of living,
perfect endeavour,
perfect mindfulness,
perfect concentration."

"But, lady, is the ariyan eightfold Way composite<sup>8</sup> or in-composite?"

"The ariyan eightfold Way, friend Visākha, is composite."

"Now, lady, are the three classes arranged in accordance with [363] the ariyan eightfold Way or is the ariyan eightfold Way arranged in accordance with the three classes?"

"Friend Visākha, the three classes are not arranged in accordance with the ariyan eightfold Way, but the ariyan eightfold Way is arranged in accordance with the three classes."

Whatever, friend Visākha, is perfect speech and whatever is perfect action and whatever is perfect way of living - these things are arranged in the class of Moral Habit.

And whatever is perfect endeavour and whatever is perfect mindfulness and whatever is perfect concentration - these things are arranged in the class of Concentration.

And whatever is perfect view and whatever is perfect thought - these things are arranged in the class of Intuitive Wisdom."<sup>9</sup>

"And what, lady, is concentration, what are the distinguishing marks of concentration, what are the requisites for concentration, what is the development of concentration?"

"Whatever, friend Visākha, is one-pointedness of mind,
this is concentration;
the four arousings of mindfulness are the distinguishing marks of concentration; the four right efforts are the requisites for concentration;
whatever is the practice,
the development,
the increase of these very things,
this is herein the development of concentration."

"And how many activities<sup>10</sup> are there,<sup>11</sup> lady?"

"There are these three activities, friend Visākha: activities of body,
activities of speech,
activities of mind."

"And what, lady, is activity of body, what activity of speech,

what activity of mind?"

"In-breathing and out-breathing, friend Visākha,
is activity of body;
initial thought and discursive thought
is activity of speech;
perception and feeling is activity of mind."

"But why, lady, is in-breathing and out-breathing activity of body,
why is initial thought and discursive thought
activity of speech,
why is perception and why is feeling
activity of mind?"

"In-breathing and out-breathing, friend Visākha - these are bodily things dependent on the body, therefore in-breathing and out-breathing
is activity of body.

Having first had initial thought and discursive thought, one subsequently utters a speech, therefore initial and discursive thought is activity of speech.

Perception and feeling - these are mental things, dependent on mind,
therefore perception and feeling is (each) activity of mind."

"And how, lady, does there come to be the attainment of the stopping of perception and feeling?"

"Friend Visākha,
it does not occur to a monk

who is attaining the stopping of perception and feeling:

'I will attain
the stopping of perception and feeling,'

or

'I am attaining
the stopping of perception and feeling,'

or

'I have attained
the stopping of perception and feeling.'

For, his mind has been previously so developed in that way<sup>12</sup> that it leads him on to the state of being such."<sup>13</sup>

"But, lady, when a monk is attaining
the stopping of perception and feeling, what things are stopped first:
activity of body
or activity of speech
or activity of mind?"

"Friend Visākha, when a monk is attaining
the stopping of perception and feeling, activity of speech is stopped first,<sup>14</sup> then activity of body,<sup>15</sup> then activity of mind."<sup>16</sup>

"And how, lady, does there come to be emergence from the attainment of the stopping of perception and feeling?"

"Friend Visākha,
it does not occur to a monk

who is emerging from the attainment
of the stopping of perception and feeling:

'I will emerge
from the attainment of the stopping of perception and feeling,

or

'I am emerging
from the attainment of the stopping of perception and feeling,

or

I have emerged
from the attainment of the stopping of perception and feeling.'

For his mind has been previously so developed in that way that it leads him on to the state of being such."

"But, lady, when a monk is emerging from the attainment
of the stopping of perception and feeling,
what things arise first:

activity of body

or activity of speech

or activity of mind?

"Friend Visākha,
when a monk is emerging from the attainment
of the stopping of perception and feeling, activity of mind arises first, then activity of body,
then activity of speech."

"Lady, how many impingements<sup>17</sup> assail a monk who has emerged from the attainment
of the stopping of perception and feeling?"

"Friend Visākha,
when a monk has emerged from the attainment
of the stopping of perception and feeling three impingements assail him: impingement that is void,<sup>18</sup> impingement that is signless,<sup>19</sup> impingement that is undirected."<sup>20</sup>

"When, lady, the mind of a monk has emerged from the attainment of the stopping of perception and feeling, towards what does his mind tend,
slide
and gravitate?"

"Friend Visākha, the mind of a monk who has emerged from the attainment of the stopping of perception and feeling tends,
slides
and gravitates towards aloofness."<sup>21</sup>

"How many feelings are there, lady?"

"There are these three feelings, friend Visākha: Feeling that is pleasant, feeling that is painful, feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant."<sup>22</sup>

"And what, lady, is feeling that is pleasant, what feeling that is painful, what feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant?"

"That, friend Visākha, which is experienced,
whether by body or mind,
and is pleasant and agreeable,
this is a pleasant feeling.

That, friend Visākha, which is experienced,
whether by body or mind,
and is painful and disagreeable, this is a painful feeling.

That, friend Visākha, which is experienced,
whether by body or mind,
and is neither agreeable nor disagreeable, this is a feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant."

"But, lady, how is pleasant feeling pleasant, how painful?

How is painful feeling painful, how pleasant?

How is neutral feeling pleasant,
how painful?"

"Friend Visākha,
pleasant feeling is that where pleasantness is lasting,
pain variable;
painful feeling is that where pain is lasting, [366] pleasantness variable; neutral feeling is pleasant as to knowing, painful as to not knowing."

"But, lady, what tendency lies latent in pleasant feeling, what tendency lies latent in painful feeling, what tendency lies latent in neutral feeling?"

"Friend Visākha,
a tendency to attachment
lies latent in pleasant feeling;
a tendency to repugnance lies latent in painful feeling;

a tendency to ignorance
lies latent in a neutral feeling."<sup>23</sup>

"But, lady, does a tendency to attachment lie latent in all pleasant feeling?

Does a tendency to repugnance lie latent in all painful feeling?

Does a tendency to ignorance lie latent in all neutral feeling?"

"Friend Visākha,
a tendency to attachment
does not lie latent in all pleasant feeling,
a tendency to repugnance
does not lie latent in all painful feeling,
a tendency to ignorance
does not lie latent in all neutral feeling."

"But, lady, what is to be got rid of
in pleasant feeling?

What is to be got rid of
in painful feeling?

What is to be got rid of
in neutral feeling?"

"A tendency to attachment, friend Visākha, is to be got rid of
in pleasant feeling;
a tendency to repugnance
is to be got rid of
in painful feeling;
a tendency to ignorance

is to be got rid of
in neutral feeling."

"But, lady, is a tendency to attachment to be got rid of
from every pleasant feeling?

Is a tendency to repugnance
to be got rid of
from every painful feeling?

Is a tendency to ignorance
to be got rid of
from every neutral feeling?"

"No, friend Visākha,
a tendency to attachment
is not to be got rid of
from every pleasant feeling,
a tendency to repugnance
is not to be got rid of
from every painful feeling,
a tendency to ignorance
is not to be got rid of
from every neutral feeling.

In this case, friend Visākha,
a monk,
aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
enters on and abides in the first meditation which is accompanied by initial thought and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful.

It is by this means that he gets rid of attachment, no tendency to attachment lies latent there.

In this case, friend Visākha,
a monk reflects thus:

'Surely I,
entering on it,
will abide in that plane which the ariyans, entering on,
are now abiding in.'

From setting up a [367] yearning for the incomparable Deliverances there arises, as a result of the yearning,
distress;
it is by this means that he gets rid of repugnance, no tendency to repugnance
lies latent there.

In this case, friend Visākha,
a monk,
by getting rid of joy,
and by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,
enters on and abides in
the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

It is by this means that he gets rid of ignorance, no tendency to ignorance

lies latent there."

"But, lady,
what is the counterpart<sup>24</sup> of pleasant feeling?"

"Friend Visākha,
the counterpart of pleasant feeling is painful feeling."

"And what, lady,
is the counterpart
of painful feeling?"

"Friend, Visākha,
the counterpart of painful feeling is pleasant feeling."

"And what, lady,
is the counterpart
of neutral feeling?"

"Ignorance, friend Visākha,
is the counterpart
of neutral feeling."

"And what, lady,
is the counterpart
of ignorance?"

"Knowledge, friend Visākha,
is the counterpart
of ignorance."

"And what, lady,
is the counterpart

of knowledge?"

"Freedom, friend Visākha,
is the counterpart
of knowledge."

"And what, lady,
is the counterpart
of freedom?"

"Nibbāna, friend Visākha,
is the counterpart
of freedom."

"And what, lady,
is the counterpart
of nibbāna?"<sup>25</sup>

"This question goes too far, friend Visākha, it is beyond the compass of an answer.

Friend Visākha,
the Brahma-faring is for emergence in nibbāna, for going beyond to nibbāna, for culminating in nibbāna.<sup>26</sup>

Friend Visākha,
if you so desire,
having drawn near the Lord,
ask him about this matter.

As the Lord explains, so will you remember."

Then the layfollower Visākha,
having rejoiced in what the nun Dhammadinnā had said,
having thanked her,

rising from his seat,
having greeted her,
keeping his right side towards her,
drew near the Lord;
having drawn near,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the layfollower Visākha told the Lord the whole of the conversation he had had with the nun Dhammadinnā.

When he [368] had been told, the Lord spoke thus to the layfollower Visākha:

"Clever, Visākha,
is the nun Dhammadinnā,
of great wisdom, Visākha,
is the nun Dhammadinnā.

If you had asked me, Visākha, about this matter,
I too would have answered exactly as the nun Dhammadinnā answered;<sup>27</sup> and this is indeed the meaning of that;
thus do you remember it."<sup>28</sup>

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, the layfollower Visākha rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Lesser Discourse of the Miscellany: the Fourth

---

<sup>1</sup> In his time as a householder Visākha had been Dhammadinnā's husband, MA. ii. 355; PvA. 21; KhpA. 204; DhA. iv. 229. She is called the chief teacher of dhamma among the women disciples, A. i. 25. A verse is ascribed to her at Thīg. 12 (cf. Dh. 218).

<sup>2</sup> sakkāya. MA. ii. 358 makes Dhammadinnā say, "I have not long gone forth. How should I know about 'own body' or 'other's body'?"

<sup>3</sup> Cf. M. i. 48-9.

<sup>4</sup> MA. ii. 360 quotes a passage from Pts. i. 143 where such a person regards material shape and self as identical (not two, advaya) like the flame and hue of a lighted lamp.

<sup>5</sup> As a tree has a shadow, cf. Pts. i. 144.

<sup>6</sup> As a scent is in a flower, cf. Pts. i. 145.

<sup>7</sup> As a jewel is in a casket, cf. Pts. i. 145.

<sup>8</sup> saṅkhata. MA. ii. 361 explains by cetito kappito pakappito āyūhito nibbattito samapajjantena samāpajjitabbo, thought out, arranged, fixed, cultivated, produced, to be entered on by entering it.

<sup>9</sup> Quoted Asl. 305.

<sup>10</sup> saṅkhāra-, here with a different sense from saṅkhāra as one of the khandhas, and meaning function or formation. "Being dependent on body it is put together (saṅkharīyati) by the body, produced by it," MA. ii. 364; and similarly for speech and thought.

<sup>11</sup> Cf. the following with S. iv. 294.

<sup>12</sup> He thinks "At that time I will become (or, I must be) without mind, (acittaka, unconscious)," MA. ii. 365.

<sup>13</sup> So a mind developed in this way leads the man on to a state of suchness, lathattāya, a state of unconsciousness, MA. ii. 365.

<sup>14</sup> In the second jhāna.

<sup>15</sup> In the fourth jhāna.

<sup>16</sup> In the inner stopping, antonirodhe, cf. MA. ii. 349.

<sup>17</sup> phassa is the awareness, cognition or reaction dependent on the impingement or impact of sense-data on their appropriate sense-organ; see M. i. 111.

<sup>18</sup> It is seen to be not-self, MA. ii. 367. Cf. MA. ii. 113 where anattā is suññata, empty.

<sup>19</sup> Impermanent, MA. ii. 367.

<sup>20</sup> Not directed to ill, for he understands ill to be rāga, dosa and moka. In fact, in meditation, he realises that nibbāna is void of attachment, hatred and confusion, unmarked or not "signed" by them, not directed towards them, MA. ii. 367. On the three terms of the text, see Vin. iii. 93, and B.D i. 161, n. 3 for further references.

<sup>21</sup> I.e. nibbāna, MA. ii. 367.

<sup>22</sup> Cf. S. iv. 205.

<sup>23</sup> Cf. S. iv. 208.

<sup>24</sup> paṭibhāga, analogy, equal, comparable to.

<sup>25</sup> Cf. Miln. 316; appaṭibhāga nibbāna; and MA. ii. 370, nibbānam nām'etaṃ appaṭibhāgaṃ.

<sup>26</sup> Cf. S. v. 218.

27 This Sutta therefore ranks as the Conqueror's speech, not as the disciple's speech, MA. ii. 371.

28 Cf. S. iv. 374 where the Lord explains certain matters exactly as the nun Khemā had done.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
5. Cūḷa Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
5. The Lesser Division of the Pairs

45. Lesser Discourse on the (Ways of) Undertaking Dhamma

Cūḷa Dhamma-Samādāna Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvathī
in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered One," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"These four, monks,
are (ways of) undertaking dhamma.<sup>1</sup>

What four?

There is, monks, the undertaking of dhamma
that is happiness in the present
but results in suffering in the future.

There is, monks, the undertaking of dhamma
that is both suffering in the present
as well as resulting in suffering in the future.

There is, monks, the undertaking of dhamma
that is suffering in the present
but results in happiness in the future.

There is, monks, the undertaking of dhamma
that is both happiness in the present as well as resulting in happiness in the future.

---

And what, monks, is the undertaking of dhamma
that is happiness in the present
but results in suffering in the future?

There are, monks, some recluses and brahmans who speak like this and are [369] of these views:

'There is no fault in pleasures of the senses.'<sup>2</sup>

These come to indulgence<sup>3</sup> in pleasures of the senses; these gratify themselves with girl-wanderers

who tie their hair into top-knots;
these speak thus:

'How can these worthy recluses and brahmans, seeing future peril among sense-pleasures,
speak of getting rid of sense-pleasures, lay down a full knowledge of sense-pleasures?'

Saying:

'Happiness is in the young,
soft
and downy arms
of this girl-wanderer,' these come to indulgence in pleasures of the senses.

These, having come to indulgence in sense-pleasures,
at the breaking up of the body after dying
arise in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

Here they experience feelings that are painful,
sharp,
acute.

They speak thus:

'These worthy recluses and brahmans,
seeing future peril in sense-pleasures,
speak of getting rid of sense-pleasures
and lay down a full knowledge of sense-pleasures.

But we, because of sense-pleasures, are experiencing these feelings that are painful,

sharp,
acute,
their provenance being sense-pleasures.'

It is as if, monks,
in the last month of the hot weather,
a creeper's seed-pod should burst and a seed of the creeper, monks, should fall at the root of a sal-tree.

Then, monks, the devatā residing in that sal-tree,
afraid,
agitated,
might fall a-trembling.<sup>1</sup>

Then, monks, the friends and acquaintances, the kith and kin of that devatā who resides in that sal-tree -
devatās of parks,
devatās of groves,
devatās of trees,
devatās residing in medicinal herbs, grasses
and woods -
gathering together and assembling might give comfort thus:

'Do not be afraid, revered one,
do not be afraid, revered one.

For a peacock might swallow this creeper's seed
or a deer might consume it or a forest-fire might burn it or workers in the wood might remove it or white ants might eat it,
or it might not germinate.'

But, monks, if neither a peacock should swallow this creeper's seed nor a deer consume it nor a forest-fire might burn it nor workers in the wood might remove it nor white ants might eat it, it might germinate.

Rained on heavily by the monsoon clouds, it might grow apace,
and a young,
soft
and downy creeper,
clinging to it might fasten on to that sal-tree.

Then, [370] monks, it might occur to the devatā
residing in that sāl-tree:

'Why then, did these worthy friends and acquaintances,
kith and kin:
devatās of parks
devatās of parks,
devatās of groves,
devatās of trees,
devatās residing in medicinal herbs, grasses
and woods,
seeing future peril in this creeper's seed,
gathering together and assembling,
give comfort thus:

'Do not be afraid, revered one,
do not be afraid, revered one.

For a peacock might swallow this creeper's seed
or a deer might consume it
or a forest-fire might burn it
or workers in the wood might remove it
or white ants might eat it,
or it might not germinate?'

Pleasant is the touch of this young,
soft,
downy
and clinging creeper.'

It might cover that sāl-tree;
when it had covered that sāl-tree, it might form a canopy above it, it might produce dense undergrowth;<sup>5</sup> when it had produced a dense undergrowth it might strangle
every great branch of that sāl-tree.

Then, monks, it might occur to the devatā
residing in that sāl-tree:

'It was because of seeing this future peril in the creeper's seed that those worthy friends and acquaintances,
kith and kin:
devatās of parks
devatās of parks,
devatās of groves,
devatās of trees,
devatās residing in medicinal herbs, grasses
and woods,
seeing future peril in this creeper's seed,

gathering together and assembling,
give comfort thus:

'Do not be afraid, revered one,
do not be afraid, revered one.

For a peacock might swallow this creeper's seed
or a deer might consume it
or a forest-fire might burn it
or workers in the wood might remove it
or white ants might eat it,
or it might not germinate.'

For I, because of this creeper's seed, am experiencing painful,
sharp,
acute feelings.'

Even so, monks,
there are some worthy recluses and brahmans
who speak thus
and are of these views:

' There is no fault in pleasures of the senses.'

These, come to indulgence in sense-pleasures,
at the breaking up of the body after dying
arise in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

Here they experience feelings that are painful,
sharp,
acute.

They speak thus:

'These worthy recluses and brahmans,
seeing future peril in sense-pleasures,
speak of getting rid of sense-pleasures
and lay down a full knowledge of sense-pleasures.

But we, because of sense-pleasures,
are experiencing these feelings that are painful,
sharp,
acute,
their provenance being sense-pleasures.'

This, monks, is called
the undertaking of dhamma
that is happiness in the present but results in suffering in the future.

---

And what, monks, is the undertaking of dhamma
that is both suffering in the present
as well as resulting in suffering in the future?

Here, monks, there is some unclothed (ascetic),
flouting life's decencies licking his hands (after meals),
not one to come when asked to do so,
not one to stand still when asked to do so.

He does not consent (to accept food) offered to (me) or specially prepared for (him)
nor to (accept) an invitation (to a meal).

He does not accept (food) straight from a cooking pot or pan,

nor within the threshold,
nor among the faggots,
nor among the rice-pounders,
nor when two people were eating,
nor from a pregnant woman,
nor from one giving suck,
nor from one co-habiting with a man,
nor from gleanings,
nor near where a dog is standing,
nor where flies are swarming,
nor fish,
nor meat.

He drinks neither fermented liquor
nor spirits
nor rice-gruel.

He is a one-house-man,
a one-piece-man,
or a two-house-man,
a two-piece-man
or a three-house-man,
a three-piece-man
or a four-house-man,
a four-piece-man
or a five-house-man,
a five-piece-man
or a six-house-man,
a six-piece-man
or a seven-house-man,
a seven-piece-man.

He subsists on one little offering, and he subsists on two little offerings and he subsists on three little offerings and he subsists on four little offerings and he subsists on five little offerings and he subsists on six little offerings and he subsists on seven little offerings.

He takes food only once a day,
and once in two days
and once in three days
and once in four days
and once in five days
and once in six days
and once in seven days.

He lives intent on the practice of eating rice at regular fortnightly intervals.

He comes to be one feeding on potherbs or feeding on millet
or on wild rice
or on snippets of skin
or on water-plants
or on the red powder of rice husks
or on the discarded scum of rice on the boil or on the flour of oil-seeds
or grass
or cowdung.

He is one who subsisted
on forest roots and fruits,
eating the fruits that had fallen.

He wares coarse hempen cloths, and he wares mixed cloths,
and he wares cerements,
and he wares rags taken from the dust heap, and he wares tree-bark fibre,
and he wares antelope skins, and he wares strips of antelope skin, and he wares cloths of kusa-grass, and he wares cloths of bark, and he wares cloths of wood shavings, and he wares a blanket of human hair, and he wares a blanket of animal hair, and he wares owls' feathers.

He is one who plucks out
the hair of his head and beard,
intent on the practice of plucking out
the hair of head and beard.

He becomes one who stands upright,
refusing a seat;
He becomes one who squats on his haunches,
intent on the practice of squatting.

He becomes one for covered thorns, making his bed on covered thorns;
and he is intent on the practice of going down to the water to bathe up to three times in an evening.

He, at the breaking up of the body after dying, arises in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

This, monks, is called
the undertaking of dhamma
that is both suffering in the present
as well as resulting in suffering in the future.

---

And what, monks, is the undertaking of dhamma
that is suffering in the present
but results in happiness in the future?

Here, monks, there is someone who is full of attachment by nature and who constantly experiences
suffering and grief born of attachment;

he [371] is full of hatred by nature and who constantly experiences
suffering and grief born of hatred;

full of confusion by nature, and constantly experiences suffering and grief born of confusion.

With suffering and with grief, his face covered with tears and crying, he fares the Brahma-faring<sup>6</sup> that is utterly fulfilled, utterly pure.

He, at the breaking up of the body after dying
arises in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

This, monks, is called
the undertaking of dhamma
that is suffering in the present but results in happiness in the future.

---

And what, monks, is the undertaking of dhamma
that is both happiness in the present
as well as resulting in happiness in the future?

Here, monks, someone is not full of attachment by nature and who does not constantly experiences suffering and grief born of attachment;

he is not full of hatred by nature and does not constantly experiences
suffering and grief born of hatred;

he is not full of confusion by nature,
and does not constantly experiences
suffering and grief born of confusion.

He, aloof from the pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
entering into the first meditation
which is accompanied by initial thought
and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful,
abides in it.

And again, he, by allaying initial and discursive thought,
his mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters on
and abides in
the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration
and is rapturous and joyful.

And again, he, by the fading out of rapture,
dwells with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious,
and experiences in his person
that joy of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,'
and he enters on
and abides in
the third meditation.

And again, he, by getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,
enters on
and abides in
the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

At the breaking up of the body after dying
he arises in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

This, monks, is called
the undertaking of dhamma
that is both happiness in the present
as well as resulting in happiness in the future.

These, monks, are the four (ways of) undertaking dhamma."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Lesser Discourse on the (Ways of) Undertaking Dhamma:
The Fifth

---

<sup>1</sup> Cf. below, p. 373; D. iii. 229.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. A.i. 266.

<sup>3</sup> pātabyatam, derived at MA. ii. 371 from pir, to drink. Cf. G.S., i. 244, n. 2. MA. says the pleasures of the senses are to be enjoyed according to one's likes.

<sup>4</sup> At the thought that the creeper, sprung from the seed, would cover the tree with its leaves, and because of the great weight the tree would fall to the ground in a gale or heavy rain, be broken, and the devatā destroyed, MA. ii. 372.

<sup>5</sup> oghanm janeyya, explained as keṭṭhā ghanam janeyya at MA. ii. 372, "it might produce denseness below. Climbing aloft and encircling the whole tree, then falling downwards again, it might touch the earth,"

<sup>6</sup> MA. ii. 373 says his teachers and preceptors give commands for punishments which cause pain and grief, and further says it is due to kamma that one person is full of attachment and so on and another not.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
5. Cūḷa Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
5. The Lesser Division of the Pairs

46. Greater Discourse on the (Ways of)
Undertaking Dhamma

Mahā Dhamma-Samādāna Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvathī
in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered One," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"For the most part, monks, beings wish like this,

desire like this,
intend like this:

'O may unpleasant,
unenjoyable,
disagreeable things
dwindle away,

O may pleasant,
enjoyable,
agreeable things
grow much,'

Monks, unpleasant,
unenjoyable,
disagreeable things
grow much
in those beings of such wishes, such desires,
such intentions;

pleasant,
enjoyable,
agreeable things
dwindle away.

As to this, what do you, monks, take to be the cause?"

"Things for us,<sup>1</sup> Lord,
are rooted in the Lord,
have the Lord for conduit,
the Lord for arbiter.<sup>2</sup>

It were good indeed, Lord,
if the meaning of this speech of the Lord's
were explained;

having heard the Lord,
monks would remember."

"Well then, monks, listen,
attend carefully,
I will speak."

"Yes, Lord,"
these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"In this case, monks,
the uninstructed average person,
taking no count of the pure ones,
unskilled in the dhamma of the pure ones,
untrained in the dhamma of the pure ones,
taking no count of the true men,
unskilled in the dhamma of the true men,
untrained in the dhamma of the true men,
does not know what things should be followed, does not know what things should not be followed, does not know what things should be associated with,
does not know what things should not be associated with.

Not knowing what things should be followed, not knowing what things should not be followed, not knowing what things should be associated with,
not knowing what things should not be associated with,
he follows things that should not be followed, he does not follow things that should be followed, he associates with things that should not be associated with,
he does not associate with [373] things that should be associated with.

While he is following things that should not be followed, not following things that should be followed, associating with things that should not be associated with,

not associating with things that should be associated with,
unpleasant,
unenjoyable,
disagreeable
things grow much,
pleasant,
enjoyable,
agreeable
things dwindle away.

What is the reason for this?

This is so, monks,
for one who is unintelligent<sup>3</sup> about this.

But, monks, the instructed disciple of the pure ones, taking count of the dhamma of the pure ones,
skilled in the dhamma of the pure ones,
well trained in the dhamma of the pure ones,
taking count of the true men,
skilled in the dhamma of the true men,
well trained in the dhamma of the true men, knows what things should be followed, knows what things should not be followed, knows what things should be associated with,
knows what things should not be associated with.

Knowing what things should be followed, knowing what things should not be followed, knowing what things should be associated with, knowing what things should not be associated with,
he follows things that should be followed, does not follow things that should not be followed, does not associate with things that should not be associated with, associates with things that should be associated with.

While he is not following things that should not be followed, following things that should be followed, not associating with things that should not be associated with, associating with things that should be associated with,
unpleasant,
unenjoyable,
disagreeable
things dwindle away,
pleasant,
enjoyable,
agreeable things grow much.

What is the cause of this?

This is so, monks,
for one who is intelligent about this.

---

Monks, there are four (ways of) undertaking dhamma.<sup>4</sup>

What are the four?

There is, monks,
the undertaking of dhamma
that is both suffering in the present
as well as resulting in suffering in the future.

There is, monks, the undertaking of dhamma
that is happiness in the present
but results in suffering in the future.

There is, monks, the undertaking of dhamma
that is suffering in the present

but results in happiness in the future.

There is, monks, the undertaking of dhamma
that is both happiness in the present
as well as resulting in happiness in the future.

As to this, monks,
that undertaking of dhamma<sup>5</sup>
that is both suffering in the present
as well as resulting in suffering in the [374] future: if anyone is unintelligent about this,
ignorant,
he does not comprehend as it really is:

'This undertaking of dhamma
is both suffering in the present
as well as resulting in suffering in the future.

Unintelligent about this,
ignorant,
not comprehending it
as it really is,
he follows it,
he does not avoid it.

While he is following it,
not avoiding it,
unpleasant,
unenjoyable,
disagreeable
things grow much,
pleasant,
enjoyable,
agreeable
things dwindle away.

What is the cause of this?

It is so, monks,
for one who is unintelligent about this.

■

As to this, monks,
that undertaking of dhamma
that is happiness in the present
but results in suffering in the future:
if anyone is unintelligent about this,
ignorant,
he does not comprehend as it really is:

This undertaking of dhamma
is happiness in the present
but results in suffering in the future.

Unintelligent about this,
ignorant,
not comprehending it
as it really is,
he follows it,
he does not avoid it.

While he is following it,
not avoiding it,
unpleasant,
unenjoyable,
disagreeable
things grow much,
pleasant,
enjoyable,
agreeable
things dwindle away.

What is the cause of this?

It is so, monks,
for one who is unintelligent about this.

■

As to this, monks, that undertaking of dhamma
that is suffering in the present
but results in happiness in the future;
if anyone is unintelligent about this,
ignorant,
he does not comprehend as it really is:

This undertaking of dhamma
is suffering in the present
but results in happiness in the future.

Unintelligent about this,
ignorant,
not comprehending it as it really is,
he does not follow it,
he avoids it.

While he is not following it,
avoiding it,
unpleasant,
unenjoyable,
disagreeable things grow much,
pleasant,
enjoyable,
agreeable things dwindle away.

What is the cause of this?

It is so, monks,
for one who is unintelligent about this.

■

As to this, monks,
that undertaking of dhamma
that is both happiness in the present
as well as resulting in happiness in the future;
if anyone is unintelligent about this,
ignorant,
he does not comprehend as it really is:

This undertaking of dhamma
is both happiness in the present
as well as resulting in happiness in the future.

Unintelligent about this,
ignorant,
not comprehending it as it really is,
he does not follow it,
he avoids it.

While he is not following it,
avoiding it,
unpleasant,
unenjoyable,
disagreeable things grow much,
pleasant,
enjoyable,
agreeable things dwindle away.

What is the cause of this?

It is so, monks,
for one who is unintelligent about this.

■

As to this, monks,
that undertaking of dhamma
that is both suffering in the present
as well as resulting in suffering in the future; if anyone is intelligent about this,
wise,
he comprehends as it really is:

This undertaking of dhamma
is both suffering in the present
as well as resulting in suffering in the future.

Intelligent [375] about this,
wise,
comprehending it as it really is,
he does not follow it,
he avoids it.

While he is not following it,
avoiding it,
unpleasant,
unenjoyable,
disagreeable things dwindle away,
pleasant,
enjoyable,
agreeable things grow much.

What is the cause of this?

It is so, monks,
for one who is intelligent about this.

■

As to this, monks,
that undertaking of dhamma
which is happiness in the present

but results in suffering in the future;
if anyone is intelligent about this,
wise,
he comprehends as it really is:

This undertaking of dhamma
is happiness in the present
but results in suffering in the future.

Intelligent about this,
wise,
comprehending it as it really is,
he does not follow it,
he avoids it.

While he is not following it,
avoiding it,
unpleasant,
unenjoyable,
disagreeable things dwindle away,
pleasant,
enjoyable,
agreeable things grow much.

What is the cause of this?

It is so, monks,
for one who is intelligent about this.

■

As to this, monks,
that undertaking of dhamma
that is suffering in the present
but results in happiness in the future;
if anyone is intelligent about this,

wise,
he comprehends as it really is:

This undertaking of dhamma
is suffering in the present
but results in happiness in the future.

Intelligent about this,
wise,
comprehending it as it really is,
he follows it,
he does not avoid it.

While he is following it,
not avoiding it,
unpleasant,
unenjoyable,
disagreeable things dwindle away,
pleasant,
enjoyable,
agreeable things grow much.

What is the cause of this?

It is so, monks,
for one who is intelligent about this.

■

As to this, monks,
that undertaking of dhamma
that is both happiness in the present
as well as resulting in happiness in the future;
if anyone is intelligent about this,
wise,
he comprehends as it really is:

This undertaking of dhamma
is both happiness in the present
as well as resulting in happiness in the future.

Intelligent about this,
wise,
comprehending it as it really is,
he follows it,
he does not avoid it.

While he is following it,
not avoiding it,
unpleasant,
unenjoyable,
disagreeable things dwindle away,
pleasant,
enjoyable,
agreeable things grow much.

What is the cause of this?

It is so, monks,
for one who is intelligent about this.

---

And what, monks, is the undertaking of dhamma
that is suffering in the present and results in suffering in the future?

In this case, monks, someone,
even with suffering,
even with grief,
becomes one to make onslaught on creatures;

and because of his onslaught on creatures
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he becomes one who takes what was not given
and because of his taking what was not given
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he becomes one to behave wrongly in regard to sense pleasures and because of his behaving wrongly in regard to sense pleasures
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he becomes a liar
and because of his lying
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he becomes a slanderer
and because of his slandering
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he becomes a harsh speaker
and because of his harsh speech
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he becomes a frivolous talker

and because of his frivolous talk
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he becomes covetous
and because of his covetousness
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he becomes malevolent in thought
and because of his malevolence in thought
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he becomes [376] of wrong view;
and because of his wrong view
he experiences suffering and grief.

He, at the breaking up of the body after dying
uprises in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

This, monks, is called
the undertaking of dhamma
that is both suffering in the present
as well as resulting in suffering in the future.

---

And what, monks, is the undertaking of dhamma
that is happiness in the present
but results in suffering in the future?

In this case, monks, someone,
even with happiness,
even with pleasure
becomes one to make onslaught on creatures;
and because of his onslaught on creatures
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with happiness,
even with pleasure,
he becomes one who takes what was not given
and because of his taking what was not given
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with happiness,
even with pleasure,
he becomes one to behave wrongly in regard to sense pleasures
and because of his behaving wrongly in regard to sense pleasures
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with happiness,
even with pleasure,
he becomes a liar
and because of his lying
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with happiness,
even with pleasure,
he becomes a slanderer
and because of his slandering
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,

he becomes a harsh speaker
and because of his harsh speech
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with happiness,
even with pleasure,
he becomes a frivolous talker
and because of his frivolous talk
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with happiness,
even with pleasure,
he becomes covetous
and because of his covetousness
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with happiness,
even with pleasure,
he becomes malevolent in thought
and because of his malevolence in thought
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with happiness,
even with pleasure,
he becomes of wrong view;
and because of his wrong view
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

He, at the breaking up of the body after dying
uprises in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

This, monks, is called
the undertaking of dhamma

that is happiness in the present but results in suffering in the future.

---

And what, monks, is the undertaking of dhamma
that is suffering in the present
but results in happiness in the future?

In this case, monks, someone,
even with suffering,
even with grief,
abstains from onslaught on creatures;
and because of his abstaining from onslaught on creatures
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who abstains from taking what was not given;
and because of his abstaining from taking what was not given
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who abstains from wrong behaviour in regard to sense-pleasures;
and because of his abstaining from wrong behaviour in regard to sense-pleasures
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who abstains from lying;
and because of his abstaining from lying
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who abstains from slander;
and because of his abstaining from slander
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who abstains from harsh speech;
and because of his abstaining from harsh speech
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who abstains from frivolous talk;
and because of his abstaining from frivolous talk
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who abstains from covetousness;
and because of his abstaining from covetousness
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who abstains from malevolence in thought;
and because of his abstaining from malevolence in thought
he experiences suffering and grief.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who who is of right view;
and because of his right view
he experiences suffering and grief.

He, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
arises in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

This, monks, is called
the undertaking of dhamma
that is suffering in the present but results in happiness in the future.

---

And what, monks, is the undertaking of dhamma
that is both happiness in the present
as well as resulting in happiness in the future?

In this case, monks, someone,
even with happiness,
even with pleasure,
is one to abstain from onslaught on creatures;
and because of his abstaining from onslaught on creatures
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with happiness,
even with pleasure, [377]
he abstains from taking what was not given and because of his abstaining from taking what was not given
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with happiness,
even with pleasure,
he is one who abstains from taking what was not given;
and because of his abstaining from taking what was not given
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who abstains from wrong behaviour in regard to sense-pleasures;
and because of his abstaining from wrong behaviour in regard to sense-pleasures
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who abstains from lying;
and because of his abstaining from lying
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who abstains from slander;
and because of his abstaining from slander
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who abstains from harsh speech;
and because of his abstaining from harsh speech
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who abstains from frivolous talk;
and because of his abstaining from frivolous talk
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who abstains from covetousness;
and because of his abstaining from covetousness
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who abstains from malevolence in thought;
and because of his abstaining from malevolence in thought
he experiences happiness and pleasure.

Even with suffering,
even with grief,
he is one who who is of right view;
and because of his right view
he experiences suffering and grief.

He, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
arises in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

This, monks, is called
the undertaking of dhamma
that is both happiness in the present
as well as resulting in happiness in the future.

These, monks, are the four undertakings of dhamma.

Monks, it is as if there were a bitter gourd infused with poison.

Then a man might come along,
anxious to live,
anxious not to die,
anxious for happiness,
averse from suffering,
and someone might speak thus to him:

'This bitter gourd
is infused with poison;
if you like,
drink;

but while you are drinking, it will please you
neither with its colour, scent,
nor taste,
and when you have drunk
you will come to death
or to suffering like unto death.'

He might drink without heeding him,
he might not give it up.

While he was drinking,
he might not be pleased
either with the colour,
scent
or taste,
and when he had drunk
he might come to death
or to suffering like unto death.

I, monks, say that this undertaking of dhamma is similar,
that is to say the undertaking of dhamma
that is both suffering in the present
as well as resulting in suffering in the future.

■

Monks, it is as if there were in a drinking-bowl<sup>6</sup> a beverage that has colour, scent
and taste,
but into which poison has been infused.|| ||

Then a man might come along,
anxious to live,
anxious not to die,
anxious for happiness,
averse from suffering,<sup>7</sup>
and someone might speak thus to him:

'My good man, in this drinking-bowl is a beverage that has colour, scent
and taste,
but poison has been infused into it.

If you like,
drink,
and while you are drinking you will be pleased with the colour, scent
and taste,
but when you have drunk
you will come to death
or to suffering like unto death.'

He might drink without heeding him,
he might not give it up.

While he was drinking
he might be pleased with the colour, scent
and taste,
but when he had drunk
he would come to death
or to suffering like unto death.

I, monks, say that this undertaking of dhamma is similar,
that is to say

the undertaking of dhamma
that is happiness in the present
but results in suffering in the future.

[378] Monks, it is as if ammonia were infused into various medicines.<sup>8</sup>

Then a man might come along suffering from jaundice,
and someone might say to him:

'My good man, this is ammonia infused into various medicines.

If you like,
drink,
but while you are drinking it you will be pleased
neither with the colour,
scent
nor taste,
but when you have drunk
you will become eased.'

He might drink,
heeding him,
he might not give it up.

While he was drinking
he might not be pleased either with the colour
or scent
or taste,
but when he had drunk
he might become eased.

I, monks, say
that this undertaking of dhamma is similar,
that is to say
the undertaking of dhamma
that is suffering in the present, but results in happiness in the future.

■

Monks, it is as if milk and honey
and oil
and sugar
were mixed together.

Then a man might come along suffering from dysentery,
and someone might say to him:

'My good man, this is milk
and honey
and oil
and sugar
mixed together.

If you like,
drink;
while you are drinking
you will be pleased
with the colour,
scent
and taste;
and when you have drunk
you will become eased.'

He might drink,
heeding him,

he might not give it up.

While he was drinking,
he might be pleased with the colour,
scent
and taste,
and when he had drunk
he would become eased.

I, monks, say
that this undertaking of dhamma is similar,
that is to say
the undertaking of dhamma
that is both happiness in the present
as well as resulting in happiness in the future.

Monks, as in<sup>9</sup> the last month of the rains,
at harvest time
when the sky is clear,
without a cloud,
and the sun,
ascending in the firmament and driving away the darkness from all the sky,
shines forth,
and is bright
and brilliant -
even so, monks, is this undertaking of dhamma
that is both happiness in the present
as well as resulting in happiness in the future, because,
having driven away the opposing tenets of the ordinary recluses and brahmans, it shines forth

and is bright
and brilliant."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Greater Discourse on the (Ways of) Undertaking Dhamma:
the Sixth

---

<sup>1</sup> As at M. i. 317, 465, iii. 115; A. i. 199, iv. 158, 351, v. 355.

<sup>2</sup> Bhagavanpaṭisaraṇā; cf. M. iii. 9 dhammapaṭisaraṇā, and M. i. 295 mano paṭisaraṇa.

<sup>3</sup> A foolish, blind worldling, MA. ii. 375.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. above, p. 368.

<sup>5</sup> Not obeying the five precepts; MA. ii. 375, based on text p. 313 below.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. S. ii. 110.

<sup>7</sup> As at M. ii. 261; S. v. 170.

<sup>8</sup> Vin. i, 58, 96; It. p. 103.

<sup>9</sup> S. iii. 156, v. 44; It. p. 20.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
5. Cūḷa Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
5. The Lesser Division of the Pairs

47. Discourse on Inquiring

Vīmaṃsaka Sutta

---

Thus have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvātthi in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Revered one,' these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Monks, an inquiring monk<sup>1</sup>, learning the range<sup>2</sup> of another's mind, should make a study<sup>3</sup> of the Tathāgata so as to distinguish whether he is a fully Self-awakened One or not.'

'For us,<sup>4</sup> Lord, things are rooted in the Lord, have the Lord for their conduit, the Lord for their arbiter.

Well for us, Lord, if the Lord would reveal the meaning of this saying; having heard the Lord, the monks will remember.'

'Very well, monks; listen, attend carefully and I will speak.'

'Yes, Lord,' these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Monks, an inquiring monk, learning the range of another's mind, should make a study of the Tathāgata in regard to two things: things cognisable through the eye and through the ear, thinking:

'Do those that are impure states cognisable through the eye and the ear<sup>5</sup> exist in a Tathāgata or not?'

While he is studying this he knows thus:

'Those impure states which are cognisable through the eye and the ear do not exist in a Tathāgata.'

After he has studied this and knows thus:

'Those impure states which are cognisable through the eye and the ear do not exist in a Tathāgata,'

he then studies further, thinking:

'Do those that are mixed states<sup>6</sup> cognisable through the eye and the ear exist in a Tathāgata or not?'

While he is studying this he knows thus:

'Those mixed states cognisable through the eye and the ear do not exist in a Tathāgata.'

[380] After he has studied this and knows thus:

'Those mixed states cognisable through the eye and the ear do not exist in a Tathāgata.'

he then studies further, thinking:

'Do those that are absolutely pure states cognisable through the eye and the ear exist in a Tathāgata or not?'

While he is studying this he knows thus:

'Those which are absolutely pure states cognisable through the eye and the ear exist in a Tathāgata.'

After he has studied this and knows thus:

'These absolutely pure states which are cognisable through the eye and the ear exist in the Tathāgata.'

he then studies further, thinking:

'Has this venerable one been possessed of this skilled state for a long time or only for a short time?'

While he is studying this he knows thus:

'This venerable one has been possessed of this skilled state for a long time, this venerable one has not been possessed of it for only a short time.'

After he has studied this and knows thus:

'This venerable one has been possessed of this skilled state for a long time, this venerable one has not been possessed of it for only a short time.'

he then studies further:

'Do there exist any perils for that venerable monk who has attained to fame and won renown?'

Monks, there are some perils that do not exist here for a monk until he has attained to fame and won renown.

It is, monks, after a monk has attained to fame and won renown that some perils exist for him here.

While he is studying this he knows thus:

'Although the venerable monk has attained to fame and won renown, some perils do not exist for him here.'

After he has studied this and knows thus:

'Although this venerable monk has attained to fame and won renown, some perils do not exist for him here,'

he then studies further:

'Does this venerable one refrain out of fearlessness, does not he refrain out of fear?<sup>7</sup>

Is it because, through the destruction of attachment, that, being without attachment, he does not follow pleasures of the senses?'

As he is studying this he knows thus:

'This venerable one refrains out of fearlessness, this venerable one refrains not out of fear; he does not follow pleasures of the senses because, through the destruction of attachment, he is without attachment.'

If, monks, others should question this monk thus:

'What are the venerable one's facts, what his evidence by reason of which the venerable one speaks thus:

'This venerable one refrains out of [381] fearlessness, this venerable one refrains not out of fear; he does not follow pleasures of the senses because, through the destruction of attachment, he is without attachment!'

Monks, a monk answering properly would answer thus:

'This venerable one, whether staying in an Order or staying alone,<sup>8</sup> whether those near him are progressing well, whether they are progressing badly, whether they lead a group, whether they are engaged with any material things here or whether they are unstained by any material things here – this venerable one does not despise them because of this.<sup>9</sup>

This have I heard face to face with the Lord, this have I learnt face to face with him:

'I am restrained out of fearlessness, I am not restrained out of fear; without attachment because of the destruction of attachment, I do not follow pleasures of the senses.'

Monks, the Tathāgata should himself be further questioned hereon:

'Do those impure states cognisable through the eye and through the ear exist in the Tathāgata or not?'

Monks, in answering,<sup>10</sup> a Tathāgata would answer thus,

'Those impure states cognisable through the eye and through the ear do not exist in a Tathāgata.'

'Do those mixed states cognisable through the eye and through the ear exist in a Tathāgata or not?'

Monks, in answering, a Tathāgata would answer thus:

'Those mixed states cognisable through the eye and through the ear do not exist in a Tathāgata.'

'Do those absolutely pure states cognisable through the eye and through the ear exist in a Tathāgata or not?'

Monks, in answering, a Tathāgata would answer thus:

'Those absolutely pure states cognisable through the eye and through the ear exist in a Tathāgata.

This is my path, this is my pasture<sup>11</sup> and no one is like (me) in this.<sup>12</sup>

Monks, a disciple should draw near a teacher who speaks like this so as to hear dhamma.

From further to further, from excellence to excellence, the Teacher teaches him dhamma, what is dark and what is bright, with their counterparts.<sup>13</sup>

As, monks, the Teacher gradually teaches [382] dhamma to the monk, from further to further, from excellence to excellence, what is dark and what is bright with their counterparts, so does he gradually by his superknowledge of point after point of dhamma come to fulfilment in dhamma.

He has confidence in the Teacher, that:

'The Lord is a fully Self-awakened One, well taught is dhamma by the Lord, the Order fares along well.'

Monks, if others should ask that monk:

'But what are the venerable one's facts, what the evidence by reason of which he speaks thus:

'The Lord is a fully Self-awakened one, well taught is dhamma by the Lord, the Order fares along well?'

that monk, monks, answering rightly would answer thus:

'I, your reverences, drew near the Lord so as to hear dhamma.

The Lord taught me dhamma from further to further, from excellence to excellence, what is dark and what is bright with their counterparts.

As the Lord gradually taught me dhamma from further to further, from excellence to excellence, what is dark and what is bright with their counterparts, so did I gradually by my superknowledge of point after point in dhamma come to fulfilment in dhamma.

I have confidence in the Teacher, that:

'The Lord is a fully Self-awakened One, well taught is dhamma by the Lord, the Order fares along well.'

"Monks, in anyone in whom faith in the Teacher is established, rooted, supported by these methods,<sup>14</sup> by these sentences, by these words,<sup>15</sup> that faith is called reasoned, based on vision,<sup>16</sup> strong; it is indestructible by a recluse or brahman or deva or Māra or a Brahmā or by anyone in the world.

Thus, monks, does there come to be study of the Tathāgata's dhamma, and thus does the Tathāgata come to be well studied in the proper manner.'

Thus spoke the Lord. Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

---

<sup>1</sup> MA. ii. 378 distinguishes three kinds of inquiring; here inquiring about the Teacher is meant.

<sup>2</sup> Here pariyāya is explained by vāra, track, and pariccheda, range or limit, MA. ii. 378.

<sup>3</sup> samannesanā, search, quest.

<sup>4</sup> As at M. i. 309, etc.

<sup>5</sup> MA. ii. 380, the Teacher's bodily conduct is cognisable through the eye, his speech through the ear.

<sup>6</sup> MA. ii. 381, those which are sometimes "dark" and sometimes "bright."

<sup>7</sup> The worldling has four fears, the "learner" (sekha) three, so he is restrained out of fear. But there is not even one fear for him whose cankers are destroyed, MA. ii. 385.

<sup>8</sup> Temporarily (half a month or three months), for solitary meditation, as implied by the references given (to S. v. 320, 325) at MA. ii. 386.

<sup>9</sup> All are alike to the muni (sage). The verse stating this is found at MA. ii. 387; DhA. i. 146, and cf. Miln. 410.

<sup>10</sup> There is no "aright" (sammā) as at Fur. Dial. i. 229, for a Truth-finder could not do otherwise than speak aright, as noticed at MA. ii. 387.

<sup>11</sup> etapatho'ham asmi etagocarō. MA. ii. 387 gives etapātha as another reading, and explains by "utter purity of living and morality."

<sup>12</sup> In purity of moral habit without craving, MA. ii. 387.

<sup>13</sup> sappaṭibhāga appears to mean savipāka, with their results, fruits.

<sup>14</sup> MA. ii. 388, by his inquiries as to the Teacher

<sup>15</sup> As at M. i. 114; cf. S. v. 219.

<sup>16</sup> MA. ii. 388 here says: based on the way of stream-attainment; it is the basis of faith; the faith of a stream-attainer cannot be destroyed by Māra.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaññāsa
5. Cūḷa Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
5. The Lesser Division of the Pairs

48. Discourse at Kosambī<sup>1</sup>

Kosambīya Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Kosambī in Ghosita's monastery.

Now at that time, the monks of Kosambī, disputatious,
quarrelsome,
contentious,<sup>2</sup> lived wounding another with the weapons of the tongue.<sup>3</sup>

They neither convinced one another
nor came to be convinced themselves, nor did they win one another over or come to be won over themselves.<sup>4</sup>

Then a certain monk approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance,
that monk spoke thus to the Lord:

"Now, Lord, the monks of Kosambī, disputatious,
quarrelsome,
contentious,
live wounding another with the weapons of the tongue.

They neither convinced one another
nor came to be convinced themselves,
nor did they win one another over or come to be won over themselves."

Then the Lord addressed a certain monk,
saying:

"Come you, monk,
summon these monks in my name,
saying:

"The Teacher is summoning you."

"Yes, Lord,"
and this monk,
having answered the Lord in assent,
approached those monks;
having approached,
he spoke thus to those monks:

"The Teacher is summoning the venerable ones."

"Yes, your reverence,"
and those monks
having answered that monk in assent,
approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
they sat down at a respectful distance.

The Lord spoke thus to those monks
as they were sitting down at a respectful distance:

"Is it true, as is said, that you, monks, are disputatious,
quarrelsome,
contentious,
and live wounding another with the weapons of the tongue.

That you neither convince one another nor came to be convinced yourselves, that you neither win one another over nor are won over yourselves?"

[384] "Yes, Lord."

"What do you think about this, monks?"

At the time when you,
disputatious,
quarrelsome,
contentious,
live wounding one another
with the weapon of the tongue, is a friendly act of body<sup>5</sup> offered<sup>6</sup> your fellow Brahma-farers, both in public and in private?

Is a friendly act of speech offered your fellow Brahma-farers,
both in public and in private?

Is a friendly act of thought offered your fellow Brahma-farers,
both in public and in private?

"No, Lord."

"Then it is to be said, monks, that at that time when you,
disputatious,
quarrelsome,
contentious,
live wounding one another
with the weapons of the tongue - at that time no friendly act of body is offered your fellow Brahma-farers, both in public and in private no friendly act of speech is offered your fellow Brahma-farers,
both in public and in private no friendly act of thought is offered your fellow Brahma-farers, either in public or in private.

Therefore, knowing what,
seeing what,
is it that you,
foolish men,
disputatious,
quarrelsome,
contentious,
live wounding one another
with the weapons of the tongue?

You neither convince one another nor are convinced yourselves, neither do you win one another over

nor are won over yourselves.

So this, foolish men,
will be for a long time
for your woe and sorrow."

---

Then the Lord addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks, these six things are to be remembered;<sup>7</sup>
making for affection,
making for respect,
they conduce to concord,
to lack of contention,
to harmony
and unity.

What six?

Herein, monks, a monk should offer his fellow Brahma-farers a friendly act of body
both in public and in private.

This is a thing to be remembered,
making for affection,
making for respect,
which conduces to concord,
to lack of contention,
harmony
and unity.

■

And again, monks,
a monk should offer a friendly act of speech
both in public and in private.

This is a thing to be remembered,
making for affection,
making for respect,
which conduces to concord,
to lack of contention,
harmony
and unity.

■

And again, monks,
a monk should offer a friendly act of thought
both in public and in private.

This is a thing to be remembered,
making for affection,
making for respect,
which conduces to concord,
to lack of contention,
harmony
and unity.

■

And again, monks,
whatever those lawful acquisitions, lawfully acquired,
if they be even but what is put into the begging bowl - a monk should be one to enjoy sharing such acquisitions, to enjoy them in common with his virtuous fellow Brahma-farers.

This too is a thing to be remembered,
making for affection,
making for respect,
which conduces to concord,
to lack of contention,
harmony
and unity.

■

And again, monks,
whatever those moral habits that are faultless, without flaw,
spotless,
without blemish,
freeing,
praised by wise men,
untarnished,
conducive to concentration - a monk should dwell united in virtues such as [385] these with his fellow Brahma-farers,
both in public and in private.

This too is a thing to be remembered,
making for affection,
making for respect,
which conduces to concord,
to lack of contention,
harmony
and unity.

■

And again, monks,
whatever view is ariyan,<sup>8</sup>
leading onwards,

leading him who acts according to it
to the complete destruction of anguish - a monk should dwell united in a view such as this
with his fellow Brahma-farers,
both in public and in private.

This too is a thing to be remembered,
making for affection,
making for respect,
which conduces to concord,
to lack of contention,
harmony
and unity.

Monks, these are the six things to be remembered,
making for affection,
making for respect,
which conduce to concord,
to lack of contention,
to harmony and unity.

---

And, monks,
of these six things to be remembered,
this is the topmost,
this the roof-plate,
this the dome,<sup>9</sup>
that is to say
whatever view is ariyan,
leading onwards,
leading him who acts according to it
to the complete destruction of anguish.

As, monks, in a house with a peaked roof,
this is the topmost,
the roof-plate,
the dome,
that is to say the peak,
even so, monks,
of these six things to be remembered,
this is the topmost,
this the roof-plate,
this the dome,
that is to say
whatever view is ariyan,
leading onwards,
leading him who acts according to it
to the complete destruction of anguish.

And what, monks, is that view which is ariyan,<sup>10</sup>
leading onwards,
and which leads him who acts according to it
to the complete destruction of anguish?

Herein, monks,
a monk who is forest-gone
or gone to the root of a tree
or gone to an empty place, reflects like this;

'Now, have I a subjective obsession,
not got rid of,
owing to which I,
if my mind were obsessed by it,
could not know,
could not see
(things) as they really are?

If, monks, a monk is obsessed by addiction to sense-pleasures,
to this extent is his mind obsessed.

If, monks, a monk is obsessed
by malevolence,
to this extent is his mind obsessed.

If, monks, a monk is obsessed by sloth and torpor,
to this extent is his mind obsessed.

If, monks, a monk is obsessed by restlessness and worry,
to this extent is his mind obsessed.

If, monks, a monk is obsessed by doubt, to this extent is his mind obsessed,
to this extent is his mind obsessed.

If, monks, a monk centres his thought on this world,
to this extent is his mind obsessed.

If, monks, a monk centres his thought
on the world beyond,
to this extent is his mind obsessed.

If, monks, a monk, disputatious,
quarrelsome,
contentious,
lives wounding with the weapons of his tongue,
to this extent is his mind obsessed.

■

He comprehends thus:

'I have no subjective obsession,
not got rid of,
owing to which I,
if my mind were obsessed by it, [386] could not know,
could not see (things) as they really are;
my thought is well directed towards awakening as to the truths.'

This is the first knowledge won by him, ariyan,
transcendental,
not in common with average men.

And again, monks,
the ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'While I am following,
developing,
maturing this view,
I gain calm for myself,
I gain quenchedness<sup>11</sup> for myself.'

■

He comprehends thus:

'While I am following,
developing,
maturing this view,
I gain calm for myself,
I gain quenchedness for myself.<sup>12</sup>

This is the second knowledge won by him,
ariyan,

transcendental,
not in common with average men.

■

And again, monks,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'Is there another recluse or brahman - outside here -
who is possessed of a view
such as I am possessed of?'

He comprehends thus:

'There is no other recluse or brahman - outside here -
who is possessed of a view
such as I am possessed of.'

This is the third knowledge won by him, ariyan, transcendental,
not in common with average men.

■

And again, monks, the ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'Am I too possessed
of the kind of propriety
a man is possessed of
who is endowed with right view?'

And what kind of propriety, monks,
is a man possessed of
who is endowed with (right) view?

This is propriety, monks,
for a man endowed with (right) view:

Whatever kind of offence he falls into he makes known the removal<sup>13</sup> of such an offence, for he confesses it,
discloses it,
declares it quickly to the Teacher
or to intelligent fellow Brahma-farers;
having confessed,
disclosed
and declared it,
he comes to restraint in the future.<sup>14</sup>

Just as an innocent little baby lying on its back quickly draws back its hand or foot if it has touched a live ember -
even so, monks,
this is propriety
for a man endowed with (right) view:

Whatever kind of offence he falls into he makes known the removal of such an offence,
for he confesses it,
discloses it,
declares it quickly to the Teacher
or to intelligent fellow Brahma-farers;
having confessed,
disclosed
and declared it,
he comes to restraint in the future.

He comprehends thus:

'I too am possessed
of the kind of propriety which a man is possessed of
who is endowed with (right) view.'

This is the fourth knowledge won by him,
ariyan,
transcendental,
not in common with average men.

■

[387] And again, monks, the ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'Am I too possessed
of the kind of propriety
a man is possessed of
who is endowed with (right) view?'

And what kind of propriety, monks,
is a man possessed of
who is endowed with (right) view?

This is propriety, monks,
for a man endowed with (right) view:

If he is zealous concerning those manifold things<sup>15</sup>
which are to be done for fellow Brahma-farers, he then becomes of strong aspiration
for training in the higher moral habit,
for training in the higher thought,
for training in the higher intuitive wisdom.

Just as a cow with a young calf, while she is pulling the grass keeps an eye on the calf - even so, monks, this is propriety

for a man endowed with (right) view:

If he is zealous concerning those manifold things
which are to be done for fellow Brahma-farers,
he then becomes of strong aspiration
for training in the higher moral habit,
for training in the higher thought,
for training in the higher intuitive wisdom.

He comprehends thus:

'I too am possessed
of the kind of propriety
a man is possessed of
who is endowed with (right) view.'

This is the fifth knowledge won by him,
ariyan,
transcendental,
not in common with average men.

And again, monks, the ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'Am I too possessed
of the kind of strength
a man is possessed of
who is endowed with (right) view?

And what kind of strength, monks,
is a man possessed of
who is endowed with (right) view?

This is strength, monks,
for a man endowed with (right) view:

While dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Tathāgata
are being taught,
having applied himself,
paying attention,
concentrating with all the mind, he listens to dhamma with ready ear.<sup>16</sup>

He comprehends thus:

'I too am possessed
of the kind of strength
a man is possessed of
who is endowed with (right) view.'

This is the sixth knowledge won by him,
ariyan,
transcendental,
not in common with average men.

■

And again, monks,
the ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'Am I too possessed
of the kind of strength
a man is possessed of
who is endowed with (right) view?

And what kind of strength, monks,
is a man possessed of
who is endowed with (right) view?

This is strength, monks,
for a man endowed with (right) view:

While dhamma and discipline
proclaimed by the Tathāgata
are being taught,
he acquires knowledge of the goal,
he acquires knowledge of dhamma, he acquires the rapture that is connected with [388] dhamma.<sup>17</sup>

He comprehends thus:

'I too am possessed
of the kind of strength
a man is possessed of
who is endowed with (right) view.'

This monks, is the seventh knowledge won by him,
ariyan,
transcendental,
not in common with average men.

Thus, monks, propriety has come to be well sought by an ariyan disciple who is possessed of seven factors for realising the fruit of stream-attainment.

Possessed of seven factors thus, monks, an ariyan disciple is possessed of the fruit of stream-attainment."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse at Kosambī: the Eighth

---

<sup>1</sup> Called at MA. ii. 389 and DA. i. 123 Kosambakasutta, "Discourse to the monks of Kosambī." At MA. i. 176 and DA. i. 123 it is cited as a discourse which arose out of a quarrel.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Vin. i. 341, 352 ff., M. iii. 152 f.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Ud. 67.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Vin. i. 337 f.

<sup>5</sup> mettaṃ kāyakammaṃ.

<sup>6</sup> paccupaṭṭhita, offered, presented.

<sup>7</sup> dhammā sārāṇīya; MA. ii. 394 saritabbayuttā, that should be remembered. Also at M. ii. 250 f.; A. iii. 288; D. ii, 80, iii. 245.

<sup>8</sup> Connected with the Way, MA. ii. 401.

<sup>9</sup> As at A. iii. 10.

<sup>10</sup> Here the view of the Way (or stage) of stream-attainment, MA. ii. 401. So, it is said at the end of this Discourse, the seven kinds of knowledge enumerated in it pertain to a stream-attainer.

<sup>11</sup> nibbuti, explained at MA. ii. 401 as kilesavūpamma, allayment of the defilements.

<sup>12</sup> I.e. a view of one who has attained the stage of stream-entrant.

<sup>13</sup> By confession or by a formal act of the Order (saṅghakamma); MA. ii. 402. He does not keep his offence concealed.

<sup>14</sup> The view that future restraint or control results from confession is often met with in the Vinaya- and Sutta-piṭakas.

<sup>15</sup> Greater and lesser duties, the former comprising the making and dyeing of robe-material, keeping the shrine clean, and duties in the Observance-hall and so on. The lesser duties comprise putting out water for washing the feet, oil and so forth. Alternative lists are then given, MA. ii, 402.

<sup>16</sup> Cf. M. i. 445, iii. 201; S. i. 112; Ud. 80; also Vin. i. 103, etc.

<sup>17</sup> M. i. 37, 221.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
5. Cūḷa Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
5. The Lesser Division of the Pairs

49. Discourse on a Challenge to a Brahmā

Brahmā-Nimantaṇika Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattḥī
in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered One," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"At one time I, monks, was staying at Ukkatṭhā in the Subhaga Grove near the great sāl-tree.<sup>1</sup>

At that time, monks, an evil wrong view<sup>2</sup> came to have accrued to Baka the Brahmā<sup>3</sup>
like this:

'This<sup>4</sup> is permanent,
this is stable,
this is eternal,
this is entire,
this is not liable to passing away,
this is not born,
does not age,
does not die,
does not pass away,
does not uprise,
and there is not another further escape from this.'<sup>5</sup>

Then did I, monks, knowing with my mind
the reasoning in the mind of Baka the Brahmā, as a [389] strong man might bend back his outstretched arm or might stretch out his bent arm, so, vanishing from near the great sāl-tree in the Subhaga Grove at Ukkatṭhā, did I appear in that Brahma-world.

Monks, Baka the Brahmā saw me coming in the distance; seeing me, he spoke thus:

'Come, good sir,
you are welcome, good sir.

At last, good sir,
you make this occasion for coming here.'<sup>6</sup>

But this, good sir, is permanent,
this is stable,
this is eternal,
this is entire,
this is not liable to passing away,
this is not born,
nor does it age
or die
or pass away
or uprise,
and there is not another further escape from this.'

When this had been said,
I, monks, spoke thus to Baka the Brahma:

'Indeed, Baka the Brahma is steeped in ignorance,
indeed, Baka the Brahma is steeped in ignorance, inasmuch as he says

"permanent"
although it is indeed impermanent,
"stable"
although it is indeed unstable,
"eternal"
although it is indeed not eternal,
"entire"
although it is indeed not entire,
"not liable to passing away" although it is indeed liable to passing away, and because in regard to what is born, and ages
and dies
and passes away
and uprises,
he says:
"This is not born,

nor does it age
or die
or pass away
or uprising,"
and although there is another further escape,
he says:
"There is not another further escape."

Then, monks, Māra the Evil One, having entered a certain company of Brahmas,<sup>7</sup> spoke thus to me:

'Monk, monk,
do not meddle with this,
do not meddle with this.

For, monk,
this Brahmā
is a Great Brahmā,<sup>8</sup> Victor,
Unvanquished,
All-seeing,
Controller,
Lord,
Maker,
Creator,
Chief,
Disposer,
Master,
Father of all that have become and will be.

Monk, there were recluses and brahmins in the world before you who scorned extension, loathed extension,
who scorned cohesion,

loathed cohesion,
who scorned heat,
loathed heat,
who scorned motion,
loathed motion,
who scorned creatures,
loathed creatures,
who scorned devas,
loathed devas,
who scorned Pajāpati, loathed Pajāpati,
who scorned Brahmā, loathed Brahmā<sup>9</sup> - these at the breaking up of the body,
at the Cutting off of life,
were established in a low group.<sup>10</sup>

But, monk, there were recluses and brahmans in the world before you, [390] who lauded extension, delighted in extension,
who lauded cohesion,
delighted in cohesion,
who lauded heat,
delighted in heat,
who lauded motion,
delighted in motion,
who lauded creatures,
delighted in creatures,
who lauded devas,
delighted in devas,
who lauded Pajāpati,
delighted in Pajāpati,
who lauded Brahmā,
delighted in Brahmā -
these at the breaking up of the body,

at the cutting off of life,
were established in an excellent group.<sup>11</sup>

On account of this do I, monk, speak thus:

"Please do you, good sir,
do exactly what Brahmā says to you,
do not go beyond Brahmā's word.

If you, monk, should go beyond Brahmā's word, it will be with you, monk, as with a man who might beat back approaching glory<sup>12</sup> with a stick, or, monk, as with a man who might miss<sup>13</sup> the earth with his hands and feet as he was falling down hell's precipices.

Please do you, good sir,
do exactly what Brahmā says to you,
do not go beyond Brahmā's word.

Do not you, monk,
see the seated company of Brahmā?"

And so, monks, Māra the Evil One conducted me to the company of Brahmā.

When he had spoken thus,
I, monks, spoke thus to Māra the Evil One:

'I, Evil One, know you; do not think that I do not know you.

Māra, you are the Evil One.

And whoever, Evil One,
is a Brahmā,
and whatever are Brahmā-companies, and whatever are Brahmā-conclaves, all are in your grasp,

all are in your power.

It occurs to you thus, Evil One:

'Let this one too be in my grasp, let this one too be in my power.

But I, Evil One, am not in your grasp,
I am not in your power.'

When I had said this, monks, Baka the Brahmā spoke thus to me:

'But I, good sir, say "permanent" because it is permanent,
I say "stable"
because it is stable,
I say "eternal"
because it is eternal,
I say "entire"
because it is entire,
I say "not liable to passing away" because it is not liable to passing away, and of what is not born,
does not age,
die,
pass away
and uprise,
this is just what I say:
"This is not born,
it does not age,
it does not die,
it does not pass away,
it does not uprise;"

and because there is not another further escape, I say, "There is not another further escape."

There were, monk, recluses and brahmans in the world before you who practised austerities for a term as long as your whole life.

These would know thus:
either, if there is another further escape:
There is another further escape;
or, if there is not another further escape:
There is not another further escape.

So I, monk, say this to you:

You will never see another further escape however [391] much you may go in for toil and trouble.

But if you, monk, would ascertain<sup>14</sup> extension, you will become near to me,<sup>15</sup> reposing on my substance,<sup>16</sup>
to be done to as I will,
dwarfed.<sup>17</sup>

If you would ascertain cohesion,
you will become near to me,
reposing on my substance,
to be done to as I will,
dwarfed.

If you would ascertain heat,
you will become near to me,
reposing on my substance,
to be done to as I will,
dwarfed.

If you would ascertain motion,
you will become near to me,
reposing on my substance,
to be done to as I will,
dwarfed.

If you would ascertain creatures,
you will become near to me,
reposing on my substance,
to be done to as I will,
dwarfed.

If you would ascertain devas,
you will become near to me,
reposing on my substance,
to be done to as I will,
dwarfed.

If you would ascertain Pajāpati,
you will become near to me,
reposing on my substance,
to be done to as I will,
dwarfed.

If you would ascertain Brahmā,
you will become near to me,
reposing on my substance,
to be done to as I will,
dwarfed.

'But I too, Brahma, know this:

If I were to ascertain extension,
I will become near to you,
reposing on your substance,
to be done to as you will,
dwarfed.

If I were to ascertain cohesion,
I will become near to you,
reposing on your substance,
to be done to as you will,
dwarfed.

If I were to ascertain heat,
I will become near to you,
reposing on your substance,
to be done to as you will,
dwarfed.

If I were to ascertain motion,
I will become near to you,
reposing on your substance,
to be done to as you will,
dwarfed.

If I were to ascertain creatures,
I will become near to you,
reposing on your substance,
to be done to as you will,
dwarfed.

If I were to ascertain devas,
I will become near to you,
reposing on your substance,
to be done to as you will,
dwarfed.

If I were to ascertain Pajāpati,
I will become near to you,
reposing on your substance,
to be done to as you will,
dwarfed.

If I were to ascertain Brahmā,
I will become near to you,
reposing on your substance,
to be done to as you will,
dwarfed.

Moreover I both comprehend your bourn, Brahmā, and I comprehend your splendour:<sup>18</sup>

Baka the Brahma is of great psychic power thus,
Baka the Brahma is of great majesty thus,
Baka the Brahma is of great fame thus.

As far as moon and sun revolve in their course
And light up all the quarters with their radiance,
So far extends the thousand-world system:
Here your sway is exercised.

But do you know the distinctions?<sup>19</sup>
The passionate and dispassionate likewise?
The becoming thus, the becoming otherwise,
The coming and the going of beings?<sup>20</sup>

It is thus that I, Brahmā, both comprehend your bourn and comprehend your splendour:
Baka the Brahma is of great psychic power thus,
Baka the Brahma is of great majesty thus,
Baka the Brahma is of great fame thus.

But there are, Brahmā, three other classes
which you do not know,
do not see,
but which I know and see.

There is, Brahmā,
the class called Radiant ones from which you have passed away, uprising here;
but because of your very long abiding<sup>21</sup> (here), the recollection of it is confused, and [392] because of that you neither know nor see it;
I know and see it.

Thus I, Brahmā, am not merely on an exact equality with you
as regards super-knowledge;
how could I be lower,
since I am indeed greater than you?

There is, Brahmā, the class called Lustrous ones which you neither know nor see,
but which I know and see.

There is, Brahmā, the class called Vehapphala which you neither know nor see,
but which I know and see.

Thus again I, Brahmā, am not merely on an exact equality with you
as regards super-knowledge;
how could I be lower,
since I am indeed greater than you?

I, Brahma, knowing extension to be extension,
to that extent
knowing that which is not reached<sup>22</sup> by means of the extensity of extension,
do not think:
'It is extension,<sup>23</sup>
(of self) in (regard to) extension, (of self) as extension, extension is mine' -

I do not salute extension.

Thus again I, Brahmā,
am not merely on an exact equality with you
as regards super-knowledge;
how could I be lower,
since I am indeed greater than you?

■

I, Brahmā, knowing cohesion to be cohesion,
to that extent
knowing that which is not reached by means of the cohesiveness of cohesion,
do not think:
'It is cohesion
(of self) in (regard to) cohesion, (of self) as cohesion, cohesion is mine' -
I do not salute cohesion.

Thus again I, Brahmā,
am not merely on an exact equality with you
as regards super-knowledge;
how could I be lower,
since I am indeed greater than you?

■

I, Brahmā, knowing heat to be heat,
to that extent
knowing that which is not reached by means of the hotness of heat,
do not think:
'It is heat
(of self) in (regard to) heat,

(of self) as heat,
heat is mine' -
I do not salute heat.

Thus again I, Brahmā,
am not merely on an exact equality with you
as regards super-knowledge;
how could I be lower,
since I am indeed greater than you?

■

I, Brahmā, knowing motion to be motion,
to that extent
knowing that which is not reached by means of motion's movement,
do not think:
'It is motion
(of self) in (regard to) motion, (of self) as motion, motion is mine' -
I do not salute motion.

Thus again I, Brahmā,
am not merely on an exact equality with you
as regards super-knowledge;
how could I be lower,
since I am indeed greater than you?

■

I, Brahmā, knowing creatures to be creatures,
to that extent
knowing that which is not reached by means of the creatures's creaturehood,
do not think:
'It is a creature

(of self) in (regard to) creatures, (of self) as a creature, creatures are mine' -
I do not salute creatures.

Thus again I, Brahmā,
am not merely on an exact equality with you
as regards super-knowledge;
how could I be lower,
since I am indeed greater than you?

■

I, Brahmā, knowing devas to be devas,
to that extent
knowing that which is not reached by means of the deva's devahood,
do not think:
'It is a deva
(of self) in (regard to) devas, (of self) as a deva, devas are mine' -
I do not salute devas.

Thus again I, Brahmā,
am not merely on an exact equality with you
as regards super-knowledge;
how could I be lower,
since I am indeed greater than you?

■

I, Brahmā, knowing Pajāpati to be Pajāpati,
to that extent
knowing that which is not reached by means of Pajāpati's Pajāpatihood,
do not think:

'It is Pajāpati
(of self) in (regard to) Pajāpati,
(of self) as Pajāpati, Pajāpati is mine' -
I do not salute Pajāpati.

Thus again I, Brahmā,
am not merely on an exact equality with you
as regards super-knowledge;
how could I be lower,
since I am indeed greater than you?

■

I, Brahmā, knowing Brahmā to be Brahmā,
to that extent
knowing that which is not reached by means of Brahmā's of Brahmahood,
do not think:
'It is Brahmā
(of self) in (regard to) Brahmā,
(of self) as Brahmā, Brahmā is mine' -
I do not salute Brahmā.

Thus again I, Brahmā,
am not merely on an exact equality with you
as regards super-knowledge;
how could I be lower,
since I am indeed greater than you?

■

I, Brahmā, knowing the Radiant ones to be the Radiant ones,
to that extent
knowing that which is not reached by means of the Radiant-ones' radiance,

do not think:

'It is the Radiant ones
(of self) in (regard to) the Radiant ones, (of self) as a Radiant one, the Radiant ones are mine' -
I do not salute the Radiant ones.

Thus again I, Brahmā,
am not merely on an exact equality with you
as regards super-knowledge;
how could I be lower,
since I am indeed greater than you?

■

I, Brahmā, knowing the Lustrous ones to be the Radiant ones,
to that extent
knowing that which is not reached by means of the the Lustrous ones' Luster,
do not think:
'It is the Lustrous ones
(of self) in (regard to) the Lustrous ones, (of self) as a Lustrous one, the Lustrous ones are mine' -
I do not salute the Lustrous ones.

Thus again I, Brahmā,
am not merely on an exact equality with you
as regards super-knowledge;
how could I be lower,
since I am indeed greater than you?

■

I, Brahmā, knowing the Vehapphalas to be the Vehapphalas,
to that extent
knowing that which is not reached by means of the the Vehapphalas' Vehapphalahood,

do not think:

'It is the Vehapphalas
(of self) in (regard to) the Vehapphalas, (of self) as a Vehapphalan, the Vehapphalas are mine' -
I do not salute the Vehapphalas.

Thus again I, Brahmā,
am not merely on an exact equality with you
as regards super-knowledge;
how could I be lower,
since I am indeed greater than you?

■

I, Brahmā, knowing the Overlord<sup>24</sup> to be the Overlord,
to that extent
knowing that which is not reached by means of the the Overlord's Overlordship,
do not think:

'It is the Overlord
(of self) in (regard to) the Overlord, (of self) as the Overlord, the Overlord is mine' - I do not salute the Overlord.

Thus again I, Brahmā,
am not merely on an exact equality with you
as regards super-knowledge;
how could I be lower,
since I am indeed greater than you?

■

I, Brahma, knowing the all to be the all,
to that extent
knowing that which is not reached by the allness of the all,
do not think:
'It is all,
(of self) in (regard to) all,
(of self) as all,
all is mine " -
I do not salute the all.

Thus again I, Brahmā,
am not merely on an exact equality with you
as regards super-knowledge;
how could I be lower,
since I am indeed greater than you?"

If, through the allness of the all<sup>25</sup> that is not reached by you, good sir, take care lest it be vain for you, lest it be empty.

Discriminative consciousness which cannot be characterised,<sup>26</sup> which is unending, lucid in every respect,<sup>27</sup> cannot be reached through the extensity of extension, the cohesiveness of cohesion, heat's hotness,
motion's movement,
creatures' creaturehood, devas' deva-hood, Pajāpati's Pajāpatihood,
the Brahmās' Brahmahood, the Radiant ones' radiance, the Lustrous ones' lustre,

the Vehapphalas' Vehapphalahood, it cannot be reached through the Overlord's over-lordship, it cannot be reached by the allness of the all.

And now I am vanishing from you, good sir.'

[393] 'Now, Brahmā, you vanish from me if you are able,'

Then, monks, Baka the Brahmā
saying:

'I will vanish from the recluse Gotama,
I will vanish from the recluse Gotama,'

was nevertheless unable to vanish from me.

When this had been said,
I, monks, spoke thus to Baka the Brahmā:

'Now I am vanishing from you, Brahmā.'

'Come, good sir,
you vanish from me if you are able.'

Then I, <sup>28</sup> monks, having resolved a psychic resolve like this: <sup>29</sup>

'May Brahmā
and Brahmā's company
and Brahmā's conclave
hear the sound of me without seeing me,' disappeared and spoke this verse:

Having seen danger in becoming itself,
And becoming seeking dis-becoming. <sup>30</sup>

I saluted not becoming Nor grasped after any delight.

Then, monks, Brahmā
and Brahmā's company
and Brahmā's conclave
were filled with wonder and amazement,
and said:

'Wonderful, good sirs,
marvellous, good sirs,
is the great psychic power,
the great majesty
of the recluse Gotama;
indeed before now there has not been seen or heard another recluse or brahman of such great psychic power,
of such great majesty
as this recluse Gotama, a son of the Sakyans,
gone forth from a Sakyan family.

For a people delighting in becoming,
delighted with becoming,
revelling in becoming,
he has indeed pulled up becoming with its root.'

Then, monks, Māra the Evil One, having entered a certain Brahma-conclave,
spoke thus to me:

'If you, good sir, know thus,
if you have understood<sup>31</sup> thus,
do not communicate it to disciples<sup>32</sup>

or to those who have gone forth;
do not teach dhamma to disciples
or to those who have gone forth;
do not crave for disciples or for those who have gone forth.

Monk, there were recluses and brahmins in the world before you, claiming to be perfected ones,
fully self-awakened ones;
these communicated to disciples and to those who had gone forth;
they taught dhamma to disciples
and to those who had gone forth;
they craved for disciples and for those [394] who had gone forth.

These, having communicated to disciples
and to those who had gone forth, having taught dhamma to disciples
and to those who had gone forth, having craved for disciples
and for those who had gone forth,
at the breaking up of the body,
at the cutting off of life,
were established in a low group.<sup>33</sup>

Monk, there were recluses and brahmins in the world before you, claiming to be perfected ones,
fully self-awakened ones;
these did not communicate to disciples or to those who had gone forth;
they did not teach dhamma to disciples
or to those who had gone forth;
they did not crave for disciples or for those who had gone forth.

These, not having communicated to disciples
or to those who had gone forth, not having taught dhamma to disciples
or to those who had gone forth, not having craved for disciples
or for those who had gone forth,
at the breaking up of the body,
at the cutting off of life,
were established in an excellent group.<sup>34</sup>

So I speak thus to you, monk:

Please do you, good sir,
dwell untroubled
and intent on abiding in ease here and now.<sup>35</sup>

What is skill
is not pointing out,<sup>36</sup> good sir, so do not instruct others.!

When this had been said, I, monks, spoke thus to Māra the Evil One:

'I know you, Evil One,
do not think:

'He does not know me.'

Evil One, you are Māra.

You do not speak to me thus, Evil One, because you are friendly
and compassionate;
you speak to me thus, Evil One, because you are not friendly, not compassionate.

And you think thus, Evil One:

Those to whom the recluse Gotama teaches dhamma, will get beyond my reach.

Although those recluses and brahmans, Evil One, who claimed:

"We are fully self-awakened ones," were not fully self-awakened ones, nevertheless I, Evil One, who claim:

"I am a fully self-awakened one,"

am indeed a fully self-awakened one.

For, Evil One,
whether a Tathāgata is teaching dhamma to disciples,
he is such a one;
whether, Evil One,
a Tathāgata is not teaching dhamma to disciples,
he is such a one;
whether, Evil One,
a Tathāgata is communicating it to disciples,
he is such a one;
whether, Evil One,
a Tathāgata is not communicating it to disciples,
he is such a one.

What is the reason for this?

Evil One, in a Tathāgata those cankers which are connected with the defilements,
with again-becoming,
fearful,

whose results are anguish,
which make for birth,
ageing and dying [395] in the future,
these are got rid of,
cut off at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump so that they can come to no further existence in the future.<sup>37</sup>

Evil One,
as a palm-tree whose crown has been cut off cannot put forth growth again, even so, Evil One, in a Tathāgata those cankers which are connected with the defilements,
with again-becoming,
fearful,
whose results are anguish,
which make for birth,
ageing and dying in the future,
these are got rid of,
cut off at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump
that can come to no further existence in the future.'

Because of Māra's failure to persuade (me) and because of the invitation to a Brahmā, a synonym for this homily is therefore A challenge to a Brahmā."

Discourse on a Challenge to a Brahma:
the Ninth

---

<sup>1</sup> As at M. i. 1; quoted Kvu. 559.

<sup>2</sup> An eternalist view, MA. ii. 405.

<sup>3</sup> At S. i. 142, Jā. iii. 358 this Baka episode appears to occur in Sāvathī.

<sup>4</sup> According to MA. ii. 405, "this" is a Brahmatṭhāna.

<sup>5</sup> "Further" there are, however, three stages in meditation, four ways, four fruits, and nibbāna, MA. ii. 405.

<sup>6</sup> As at M. i. 252, 481.

<sup>7</sup> MA. ii. 405 says he was not able to enter among Great Brahmās or among priests of the Brahmās.

<sup>8</sup> Following sequence of terms at D. i. 18; first six also at It. p. 15.

<sup>9</sup> For the sequence: extension to Brahmā, see M. i. 1 ff.

<sup>10</sup> kāya. MA. ii. 406 says they were reborn in the four woeful ways.

<sup>11</sup> MA. ii. 406, in the Brahma-world.

<sup>12</sup> siri, luck, glory, prosperity. MA. ii. 406 says nothing.

<sup>13</sup> virāgeyya. MA. ii. 406-7 reads virādheyya.

<sup>14</sup> I.e. in meditation, ajjhosati.

<sup>15</sup> opasāyika. MA. ii. 407 gives samīpasaya.

<sup>16</sup> vatthusāyika.

<sup>17</sup> bāhiteyyo. This is obscure. To be sent out, degraded; or, as paṭibāheti, to be kept off, shut off, warded off. MA. ii. 407 jajjharikāgumbato pi nīcataro lakuṇṭakataro kātabbo bhavissasi, weakened, degraded, dwarfed.

<sup>18</sup> juti. This spelling seems to be faulty for cuti (given as v.l. at M. i. 557 and also as v.l. for muṭi at MA. ii. 36 in quoting the above passage); see P.E.D. But MA. ii. 408 gives ānubhāva.

<sup>19</sup> paroparam. MA. ii. 408 says the high and low, the poor and excellent.

<sup>20</sup> Cf. Jā. i. 132, ii. 313; A. i. 227; DA. ii. 659.

<sup>21</sup> nivāsa, abode, residence; cf. pubbenivāsa, former abodes or habitations, or former births.

<sup>22</sup> ananubhūtam; MA. ii. 412 calls it nibbāna.

<sup>23</sup> Cf. M. i. 1.

<sup>24</sup> abhibhu.

<sup>25</sup> MA. ii. 412 says the Brahmā meant the Imperishable, akkhara, whereas the Teacher meant his own body.

<sup>26</sup> MA. ii. 413, invisible."

<sup>27</sup> This sequence also at D. i. 223, where last phrase reads sabbato paham, while M. reads sabbatopabham. See Dial. i. 283. n. 2.

<sup>28</sup> To end of the verse, quoted at Vism. 394.

<sup>29</sup> As at Vin. i. 16; D. i. 106; S. iii. 92, etc.

<sup>30</sup> Or "annihilation," vibhava.

<sup>31</sup> anubuddha, or awakened. MA. ii. 415 says, "if you have understood (anubuddho) the four truths thus by yourself."

<sup>32</sup> MA. ii. 416 calls these householders.

<sup>33</sup> MA. ii. 415, in the four woeful ways.

<sup>34</sup> MA. ii. 415 instancing a Brahma-world.

<sup>35</sup> Cf. Vin. ii. 188.

<sup>36</sup> MA. ii. 415, reading akkhānaṃ instead of text's akkhātāṃ, says it is skill not to point out, exhort or teach dhamma to others; this is best.

<sup>37</sup> As at M. i. 250, 280.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
I. Mūlapaṇṇāsa
5. Cūḷa Yamaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
I. The First Fifty Discourses
5. The Lesser Division of the Pairs

50. Discourse on a Rebuke to Māra

Māra Tajjaniya Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the venerable Moggallāna the Great was staying among the Bhaggas in Sumsumāragira in Bhesakaḷā Grove in the deer-park.

Now at that time the venerable Moggallāna the Great was pacing up and down in the open.

Now at that time Māra the Evil One, entering the venerable Moggallāna the Great's belly, got into his stomach.

Then it occurred to the venerable Moggallāna the Great:

"Now why is my belly heavy as if it were heaped full?"<sup>1</sup>

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great, having come down from the place for pacing up and down in, having entered the dwelling-place, sat down on a seat made ready.

As he was sitting down, the venerable Moggallāna the Great reflected carefully about himself.

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great saw that Māra the Evil One, having entered his belly, had got into his stomach; seeing him, he spoke thus to Māra the Evil One:

"Get out, Evil One;
Evil One, get out;
do not annoy a Tathāgata [396] or a Tathāgata's disciple, lest for a long time there be woe and sorrow for you."

Then it occurred to Māra the Evil One:

"This recluse speaks thus not even knowing,
not even seeing me:

'Get out, Evil One,
Evil One, get out.

Do not annoy a Tathāgata or a Tathāgata's disciple, lest for a long time there be woe and sorrow for you.'

Even his teacher could not know me so quickly,
so how can this disciple know me?"

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great spoke thus to Māra the Evil One:

"But I do know you, Evil One.

Do not you think:

'He does not know me.'

You, Evil One, are Māra.

It occurred to you, Evil One:

"This recluse speaks thus not even knowing,
not even seeing me:

'Get out, Evil One,
Evil One, get out.

Do not annoy a Tathāgata or a Tathāgata's disciple, lest for a long time there be woe and sorrow for you.'

Even his teacher could not know me so quickly,
so how can this disciple know me?"

Then it occurred to Māra the Evil One:

"It is because this recluse knows and sees me that he speaks thus:

'Get out, Evil One,
Evil One, get out.

Do not annoy a Tathāgata or a Tathāgata's disciple, lest for a long time there be woe and sorrow for you.'

Then Māra the Evil One, having gone out through the venerable Moggallāna the Great's mouth, stood against the door.<sup>2</sup>

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great saw Māra the Evil One
standing against the door;

seeing him,
he spoke thus to Māra the Evil One:

"Indeed I do see you now, Evil One.

Do not think:

'He does not see me';

it is you, Evil One,
standing against the door.

Once upon a time, I, Evil One, was the Māra called Dūsin;<sup>3</sup> as such Kāli was the name of my sister, you were her son,
thus you were my nephew.

Now at that time, Evil One, Kakusandha,
the Lord,
the perfected one,
fully self-awakened one,
had arisen in the world.

Now, Evil One, Vidhura and Sañjīva were the pair of disciples which was the chief,
the lucky pair of Kakusandha,<sup>4</sup>
the Lord,
the perfected one,
the fully self-awakened one.

Of all the disciples, Evil One, of Kakusandha,
the Lord,
perfected one,
fully self-awakened one,

there was none there equal to the venerable Vidhura in regard to teaching dhamma.

It was because of this, [397] Evil One, that the venerable Vidhura's name came to be Vidhura, the Peerless.

But the venerable Sañjīva, Evil One,
forest-gone,
gone to the roots of trees
and gone to empty places, with no trouble
attained the stopping of perceiving and feeling.

Once upon a time, Evil One, the venerable Sañjīva was sitting at the root of a certain tree
attaining the stopping of perceiving and feeling.

Then, Evil One, cowherds, goatherds, yeoman farmers, travellers,<sup>5</sup> saw the venerable Sañjīva sitting at the root of that tree attaining the stopping of perceiving and feeling;
having seen him,
it occurred to them:

'Indeed it is wonderful,
indeed it is marvellous,
that this recluse is just sitting dead.

Come, we will cremate him.'

Then, Evil One, these cowherds, goatherds, yeomen farmers, travellers, having collected grass and sticks and cow-dung and having heaped them over the venerable Sañjīva's body, lit the fire and departed.

Then, Evil One, the venerable Sañjīva, having emerged towards the end of that night from that attainment,

having shaken his robes,
having dressed in the morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
entered a village for almsfood.

Evil One, those cowherds, goatherds, yeomen farmers and travellers saw the venerable Sañjīva walking for almsfood;
having seen him,
it occurred to them:

'Indeed it is wonderful,
indeed it is marvellous
that this recluse who was just sitting dead - that he has come back to life.'<sup>6</sup>

It was because of this, Evil One, that the venerable Sañjīva's name came to be Sañjīva, the Quick.

Then, Evil One, it occurred to the Māra Dūsin:

'I simply do not know either the coming or the going of these monks who are of moral habit,
lovely in character.

Suppose I were to visit brahmans and householders (and say):

"Come, do you revile, abuse, vex, annoy
the monks who are of good moral habit,
lovely in character,
for it is likely that when they are being reviled, abused, vexed and annoyed by [399] you
there will be a change of heart so that Dūsin the Māra might get a chance over them."

'Then, Evil One, the Māra Dūsin visited brahmans and householders (and said):

"Come, do you revile, abuse, vex, annoy
the monks who are of good moral habit,
lovely in character,
for it is likely
that when they are being reviled, abused, vexed and annoyed by you
there will be a change of heart
so that Dūsin the Māra might get a chance over them."

Then, Evil One, those brahmans and householders who had been visited by the Māra Dūsin reviled, abused, vexed and annoyed the monks who were of good moral habit, lovely in character, saying:

'But these little shaveling recluses are menials, black,
the offscourings of our kins- [398] man's feet.<sup>7</sup>

They say,

"We are meditatives,
we are meditatives",

and with their shoulders drooping,
with their faces cast down, as if drugged,<sup>8</sup> they meditate,
they meditate absorbed,
they meditate more absorbed, they meditate quite absorbed.<sup>9</sup>

As an owl
on the branch of a tree when tracking a mouse

meditates,
meditates absorbed,
meditates more absorbed,
meditates quite absorbed,
so do these little shaveling recluses,
menials,
black the offscourings of our kinsman's feet
meditate quite absorbed.

And as a jackal on the bank of a river when tracking fish
meditates,
meditates absorbed,
meditates more absorbed,
meditates quite absorbed,
so do these little shaveling recluses,
menials,
black the offscourings of our kinsman's feet
meditate quite absorbed.

And as a cat
on the edge of a refuse heap when tracking a mouse<sup>10</sup>
meditates,
meditates absorbed,
meditates more absorbed,
meditates quite absorbed,
so do these little shaveling recluses,
menials,
black the offscourings of our kinsman's feet
meditate quite absorbed.

And as an ass
at the edge of a refuse-heap, its burden removed,

meditates,
meditates absorbed,
meditates more absorbed,
meditates quite absorbed,
so do these little shaveling recluses,
menials,
black,
the offscourings of our kinsman's feet,
saying:

'We are meditatives,
we are meditatives,'

with their shoulders drooping,
with their faces cast down,
as if drugged,
meditate,
meditate absorbed,
meditate more absorbed,
meditate quite absorbed.

Evil One, nearly all the people
who passed away at that time,
at the breaking up of the body after dying arose in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

Then, Evil One, Kakusandha,
the Lord,
perfected one,
fully self-awakened one,
addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks,
brahmans and householders have been visited by the Māra Dūsin (who said):

"Come, do you revile, abuse, vex, annoy
the monks who are of good moral habit,
lovely in character,
for it is likely
that when they are being reviled, abused, vexed and annoyed by you
there will be a change of heart
so that Dūsin the Māra might get a chance over them."

Come, do you, monks, abide,
having suffused the first quarter with a mind of friendliness,
likewise the second,
like wise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
abide having suffused the whole world,
everywhere,
in every way
with a mind of friendliness,
that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

Abide, having suffused the first quarter with a mind of compassion,
likewise the second,
like wise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,

across;
abide having suffused the whole world,
everywhere,
in every way
with a mind of friendliness,
that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

Abide, having suffused the first quarter with a mind of sympathetic joy,
likewise the second,
like wise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
abide having suffused the whole world,
everywhere,
in every way
with a mind of friendliness,
that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

Abide, having suffused the first quarter with a mind of equanimity,
likewise the second,
like wise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
abide having suffused the whole world,

everywhere,
in every way
with a mind of friendliness,
that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

Then, Evil One, these monks,
forest-gone
and gone to the roots of trees
and gone to empty places, thus exhorted,
thus instructed by Kakusandha,
the Lord,
perfected one,
fully self-awakened one,
abided, having suffused the first quarter with a mind of friendliness,
likewise the second,
like wise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
abide having suffused the whole world,
everywhere,
in every way
with a mind of friendliness,
that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

Abided, having suffused the first quarter with a mind of compassion,
likewise the second,
like wise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
abide having suffused the whole world,
everywhere,
in every way
with a mind of friendliness,
that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

Abided, having suffused the first quarter with a mind of sympathetic joy,
likewise the second,
like wise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
abide having suffused the whole world,
everywhere,
in every way
with a mind of friendliness,
that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

Abided, having suffused the first quarter with a mind of equanimity,
likewise the second,

like wise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
abide having suffused the whole world,
everywhere,
in every way
with a mind of friendliness,
that is far-reaching,
widespread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

Then, Evil One, it occurred to the Māra Dūsin:

'Even although I am working thus,
I do not know the coming or the going
of these monks who are of good moral habit,
lovely in character.

Suppose I were to visit brahmans and householders (and say):

"Come, do you reverence,
revere,
respect,
honour the monks who are of good moral habit,
lovely in character,
for it is likely that when they are being revered,
revered,
respected
and honoured by you,
there will be a change of heart,
so that Dūsin the Māra can get a chance over them."

Then, Evil One, the Māra Dūsin visited these brahmans and householders (and said):

"Come, do you reverence,
revere,
respect,
honour the monks who are of good moral habit,
lovely in character,
for it is likely that when they are being revered,
revered,
respected
and honoured by you,
there will be [400] a change of heart,
so that Dūsin the Māra can get a chance over them."

Then, Evil One, these brahmans and householders who had been visited by Dūsin the Māra, reverenced,
revered,
respected
and honoured those monks who were of good moral habit,
lovely in character.

Evil One, nearly all the people
who passed away at that time,
at the breaking up of the body after dying arose in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

Then, Evil One, Kakusandha,
the Lord,
perfected one,
fully self-awakened one,
addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, brahmans and householders have been visited by the Māra Dūsin (who said):

"Come, do you reverence,
revere,
respect,
honour those monks
who are of good moral habit,
lovely in character,
for it is likely that when they are being revered,
revered,
respected
and honoured by you
there will be a change of heart
so that Dūsin the Māra can get a chance over them."

Come, do you, monks, dwell beholding what is unlovely in the body,<sup>11</sup> conscious of the cloying of food,<sup>12</sup> conscious of there being no delight in the whole world,<sup>13</sup> beholding<sup>14</sup> the impermanence of all constructions.<sup>15</sup>

Then, Evil One, these monks,
forest-gone,
gone to the roots of trees
and gone to empty places,
being exhorted thus,
being instructed thus by Kakusandha,
the Lord,
perfected one,
fully self-awakened one,
dwelt beholding what is unlovely in the body, conscious of the cloying of food, conscious of there being no delight in the whole world, beholding the impermanence of all constructions.

Then, Evil One, Kakusandha,
the Lord,
perfected one,
fully self-awakened one,
having dressed in the morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
entered a village for almsfood
with the venerable Vidhura as his attendant.

Then, Evil One, Dūsin the Māra, having visited a certain young man, having taken up a stone, gave a blow to the venerable Vidhura's head;
his head split.

Then, Evil One, the venerable Vidhura with his head broken and dripping with blood, - even so followed close after Kakusandha,
the Lord,
the perfected one,
fully self-awakened one.

Then, Evil One, Kakusandha,
the Lord,
perfected one,
fully self-awakened one,
looked around with the "elephant-look."<sup>16</sup> and thought:

"Indeed, this Dūsin the Māra does not know moderation."

While he was looking [401] around, Evil One, Dūsin the Māra deceased from that place and arose in the Great Niraya Hell.

Evil One, there are three appellations of that Great Niraya Hell:

it is called

"Belonging to the sphere of the Six Sensory Impingements"<sup>17</sup>

and it is called

"The Meeting of the Spikes"<sup>18</sup>

and it is called

"The Separate Feelings."

Then, Evil One, the guardian of Niraya Hell, having approached me, spoke thus:

'When, good sir, spike shall meet spike within your heart, then you should understand this:

There will be a thousand years of boiling in Niraya Hell for me.'

Then I, Evil One, for many years, for many a hundred,
for many a thousand years, boiled in that Great Niraya Hell.

After ten thousand years of that Great Niraya Hell itself, feeling a feeling called vuṭṭhānima (pain),
I was boiled in Ussada (Hell).

Because of this, Evil One, my body came to be such, like a man's;
my head came to be such, like a fish's."

<sup>19</sup>What was that Niraya Hell like where Dūsin was boiled For striking the disciple Vidhura and the brahman<sup>20</sup> Kakusandha?

It was that of the hundred iron spikes, all suffered separately -
This<sup>21</sup> was the Niraya Hell where Dūsin was boiled
For striking the disciple Vidhura and the brahman Kakusandha.

Whatever monk, the Awakened One's disciple, understands this -
Dark One, for striking such a monk you go to suffering.<sup>22</sup>

Mansions<sup>23</sup> stand for an eon in the middle of the sea,
The hue of beryl-stones,<sup>24</sup> brilliant, glowing, radiant;
There dance full many nymphs in divers hues.

Whatever monk, the Awakened One's disciple, understands this -
Dark One, for striking such a monk you go to suffering.

Whoever, urged on by the Awakened One, watched by the Order of monks,
With his great toe shakes the palace of Migāra's mother<sup>25</sup>-

[402] Whatever monk, the Awakened One's disciple, understands this -
Dark One, for striking such a monk you go to suffering.

Whoever with his great toe shakes Vejayanta Palace,<sup>26</sup> Rigid through psychic power and strongly moves the devatās -

Whatever monk, the Awakened One's disciple, understands this -
Dark One, for striking such a monk you go to suffering.

Whoever inquires of Sakka in the Vejayanta Palace,
'Have you, friend, found the freedoms by the destruction of craving?'<sup>27</sup>
To whom Sakka truthfully answers the question put to him -

Whatever monk, the Awakened One's disciple, understands this -
Dark One, for striking such a monk you go to suffering.

Whoever inquires of Brahmā in conclave in Sudhammā's hall,<sup>28</sup> 'Do you,<sup>29</sup> friend, even today hold those views which formerly were views of yours?
Do you see the passing radiance in the Brahma-world?'<sup>30</sup>
To whom, Brahmā truthfully answers (those questions) in succession:<sup>31</sup>
'Good sir, those views are not mine which formerly were views of mine;

I see the passing radiance in the Brahma-world;
How could I say today: I am permanent, eternal?' -

Whatever monk, the Awakened One's disciple, understands this -
Dark One, for striking such a monk you go to suffering.

Who, by deliverance,<sup>32</sup> has gained great Neru's<sup>33</sup> peak, The forest<sup>34</sup> of the Eastern Videhas,<sup>35</sup> and whatever men sleep on the ground<sup>36</sup> -

Whatever monk, the Awakened One's disciple, understands this -
Dark One, for striking such a monk you go to suffering.

Verily, a fire does not think, 'I am burning a fool,'
For the fool is burnt by assailing the blazing fire;
Even so, you, Māra, by assailing the Tathāgata,
Will yourself burn yourself like a fool touching a fire.
Māra<sup>37</sup> acquires demerit for assailing a Tathāgata.
But do you not think, Evil One: Evil does not mature for me?
The evil done (by you) must be heaped up<sup>38</sup> for a long time, End-maker.
Māra, turn away from the Wake,<sup>39</sup> have no hopes among the monks.

Thus did a monk tilt at<sup>40</sup> Māra in the Bhesakaḷā Grove, Wherefore that dejected fiend<sup>41</sup> vanished then and there."<sup>42</sup>

Discourse on a Rebuke to Māra
the Tenth

Lesser Division of the Pairs
the Fifth

TOLD ARE THE FIRST FIFTY

---

<sup>1</sup> masacitam. See VbhA. 510 (on Vbh. 386), and PED.

<sup>2</sup> paccaggaḷe aṭṭhasi. PED. "stuck in his throat." MA. ii. 416 says paṭi-aggaḷe aṭṭhāsi. Aggaḷam vuccati kavāṭam.

<sup>3</sup> At Vism. 229 is said to have died untimely as his life-current was cut off by kamma.

<sup>4</sup> D. ii. 4; S. ii. 191; Budv. XXIII. 20; Jā. i. 42.

<sup>5</sup> As at Vin. iv. 108.

<sup>6</sup> paṭisañjīvito. This feat is called samādhivipphārā iddhi; see Budv. A. 26, Vism. 380-81, Pts. ii. 212.

<sup>7</sup> M. ii. 177; D. i. 90; S. iv. 117. MA. ii. 418 = DA. 264 refers to the brahman theory of the origin of the four castes, and says recluses sprang from the soles of Brahma's feet.

<sup>8</sup> madhurakajāta. Not here, as more frequently, combined with kāyagata; cf. D. ii. 99; S. iii. 106; A. iii. 69. See K.S. iii. 90, n. 2. MA. ii. 418 gives aḷasiyajāta, slothful, lazy.

<sup>9</sup> jhāyanti pajjhāyanti nijjhāyanti apajjhāyanti. As at M. iii. 14. MA. ii. 418 says these prefixes have an increasing emphasis. Therefore the final one would not be "de-trance" (Chalmers), for the a- would not be privative; the prefix would be apa-, and would denote a rather more advanced state than those denoted by the other prefixes.

<sup>10</sup> S. ii. 270.

<sup>11</sup> MA. ii. 420 cites A. iv. 46-7. [AN 7.46 P 46; AN 7.46 Hare]

<sup>12</sup> MA. ii. 420 cites A. iv. 49. [AN 7.46 P 49; AN 7.46 Hare]

<sup>13</sup> MA. ii. 420 cites A. iv. 50. [AN 7.46 P 50; AN 7.46 Hare]

<sup>14</sup> MA. ii. 420 cites A. iv. 51. [AN 7.46 P 51; AN 7.46 Hare]

<sup>15</sup> Cf. A. iii. 79, 83, 143.

<sup>16</sup> That is, not merely twisting the neck from this side to that, but turning the whole body.

<sup>17</sup> See S. iv. 125.

<sup>18</sup> See Jā. vi. 453.

<sup>19</sup> At Thag. 1187-1208 these verses are ascribed to Māra.

<sup>20</sup> Brahman here of course in the sense of arahant.

<sup>21</sup> MA. ii. 422 says this is described in the Devadūta Sutta, M. iii. 178; cf. A. i. 138 ff.

<sup>22</sup> = Thag. 25.

<sup>23</sup> MA. ii. 422 says they are to be understood as in Vv. and Pv.

<sup>24</sup> Or, lapis lazuli, veḷuriya.

<sup>25</sup> MA. ii. 422 refers us to Pāsādakampanasutta, (S. v. 269).

<sup>26</sup> MA. ii. 422 refers us to Cūlatanhasankhayavimuttisutta (M. i. 251; Cf. S. i. 234 f.).

<sup>27</sup> M. i. 255.

<sup>28</sup> See M. Sta. 49 (referred to by the Comy. as Baka Brahma Sutta) and S. i. 142. MA. ii. 422 also says that Sudhammā's hall is here meant to be in the Brahma-world, not in the Tāvātimsa abode, but there is no deva-world without its Sudhammasabhā. The whole Brahma-world was one glory, MA. ii. 423.

<sup>29</sup> As at S. i. 145.

<sup>30</sup> I.e. the radiance of Sāriputta, Moggallāna, Kassapa the Great and so on as they were sitting in the Lord's effulgence in the Brahma-world, having attained the condition of heat. MA. ii. 423 and see S. i. 145.

<sup>31</sup> anupubbari yathātatham, as at Sn. 600. Thag. 1199 reads (as in previous stanza) pañham pūṭṭho.

<sup>32</sup> MA. ii. 423, deliverance through jhāna.

<sup>33</sup> A mountain in Himavā, at Jā. iii. 247. Neru, Sineru, Meru are different mountains.

<sup>34</sup> Jambudīpa (India), MA. ii. 423.

<sup>35</sup> One of the four great continents (or islands).

<sup>36</sup> The men of Aparagoyāna and Uttarakuru; the former is one of the four great continents, the latter a mythical region. Bu. here refers to Nandopanandadamana. See Jā. v. 126.

<sup>37</sup> Also at S. i. 114.

<sup>38</sup> karoto cīyati pāpam; v. ll. karoto te nijiyati, karoto casati. Thag. 1207 reads karato te miyyate pāpam. Cf. pahūtam cīyate puññam, Sn. 428.

<sup>39</sup> buddhamhā. No need to translate this as "the awakened mind," or to annotate: "applied to a disciple." On the contrary it is in opposition to the disciples, the "monks" of the next phrase. Māra, in point of fact, followed Gotama from the day of his enlightenment to that of his parinibbāna.

<sup>40</sup> aghaṭṭesi, v.ll. asaddhesi, asajjesi; Thag. 1208 atajjesi (which is perhaps best).

<sup>41</sup> yakkha.

<sup>42</sup> Last line also at Sn. 449; cf. Vin. i. 21, 22.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
1. Gahapati Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
1. The Division on Householders

51. Discourse to Kandaraka<sup>1</sup>

Kandaraka Sutta

---

[339] [3]

Thus have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Cāmpa on the bank of the Gaggarā lotus-pond together with a large Order of monks.

Then Pessa, the son of an elephant-trainer, and the wanderer Kandaraka approached the Lord; when they had approached, Pessa, the son of the elephant-trainer, having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance.

But the wanderer Kandaraka exchanged greetings with the Lord; having conversed in a friendly and courteous way, he stood at a respectful distance.

As he was standing at a respectful distance the wanderer Kandaraka, having looked round at the Order of monks which became absolutely silent, spoke thus to the Lord:

"It is wonderful, good Gotama, it is marvellous, good Gotama, that is to say how the Order of monks has been led<sup>2</sup> properly by the good Gotama.

And, good Gotama, those who in the long past were perfected ones, fully Self-Awakened Ones - did these Lords also have an equally excellent Order of monks that they led properly even as the Order of monks is now being led properly by the good Gotama?

And, good Gotama, those who in the distant future will be perfected ones, fully Self-Awakened Ones - will these Lords also have an equally excellent Order of monks that they will lead properly even as the Order of monks is now being led properly by the good Gotama?"

"It is so, Kandaraka; it is so, Kandaraka.

Those who, Kandaraka, in the long past were perfected ones, fully Self-Awakened Ones - these Lords had an equally excellent Order of monks that they led properly, even as the Order of monks is now being led properly by me.

And those, Kandaraka, who in the distant future [4] will be perfected ones, fully Self-Awakened Ones - these Lords will have an equally excellent Order of monks that they will lead properly, even as the Order of monks is now being led properly by me.

For there are, Kandaraka, monks in this Order of monks who are perfected ones, the cankers destroyed, who have lived the life, done what was to be done, shed the burden, attained their own goal, and who, by the utter destruction of the fetters of becoming, are freed by perfect profound knowledge.

And there are, Kandaraka, monks in this Order of monks who are learners, undeviating in moral habit,<sup>3</sup> undeviating in conduct, intelligent, their ways of living intelligent, and these dwell with their minds well applied to the four applications of mindfulness.

What four?

As to this, Kandaraka, [340] a monk fares along contemplating the body in the body, ardent, clearly conscious (of it), mindful (of it), so as to control the covetousness and dejection in the world;

he fares along contemplating the feelings in the feelings, ardent, clearly conscious (of them), mindful (of them), so as to control the covetousness and dejection in the world;

he fares along contemplating the mind in the mind, ardent, clearly conscious (of it), mindful (of it), so as to control the covetousness and dejection in the world;

he fares along contemplating the mental states in the mental states, ardent, clearly conscious (of them), mindful (of them), so as to control the covetousness and dejection in the world."<sup>4</sup>

When this had been said, Pessa, the son of an elephant-trainer, spoke thus to the Lord:

"It is wonderful, revered sir, it is marvellous, revered sir, that these four applications of mindfulness are so well laid down by the Lord for the purification of beings, for the overcoming of griefs and sorrows, for the going down of sufferings and miseries, for winning the right path, for realising nibbāna."<sup>5</sup>

And, revered sir, we householders too, dressed in white, from time to time dwell with our minds well applied to the four applications of mindfulness."<sup>6</sup>

As to this, revered sir, we fare along contemplating the body in the body ... the feelings in the feelings ... the mind in the mind ... the mental states in the mental states, ardent, clearly [5] conscious (of them), mindful (of them), so as to control the covetousness and dejection in the world.

It is wonderful, revered sir, it is marvellous, revered sir, how the Lord knows the welfare and woe of beings while there is this human tangle, this human guile, this human treachery.

For this,<sup>7</sup> revered sir, is a tangle, that is to say human beings.

But this, revered sir, is an open clearing, that is to say animals.<sup>8</sup>

Now I, revered sir, am able to make an elephant under training so remember that, every time he is coming into Cāmpa or leaving it, he will display all kinds of treachery, deceit, fraud, trickery.

But, revered sir, those that are called our slaves or messengers or workpeople, they do one thing with their body, another in speech, and their thought is still other.<sup>9</sup>

It is wonderful, revered sir, it is marvellous, revered sir, how the Lord knows the welfare and woe of beings while there is this human tangle, this human guile, this human treachery.

For this, revered sir, is a tangle, that is to say human beings.

But this, revered sir, is an open clearing, that is to say animals."

"It is so, Pessa, it is so, Pessa.

[341] For this, Pessa, is a tangle, that is to say human beings.

But this, Pessa, is an open clearing, that is to say animals.

Pessa, these four kinds of persons are found in the world.<sup>10</sup>

What four?

As to this, Pessa, some person is a self-tormentor, intent on the practice of self-torment;

as to this, Pessa, some person is a tormentor of others, intent on the practice of tormenting others;

as to this, Pessa, some person is both a self-tormentor, intent on the practice of tormenting self, and a tormentor of others, intent on the practice of tormenting others;

as to this, Pessa, some person is neither a self-tormentor, not intent on the practice of self-torment, nor a tormentor of others, not intent on the practice of tormenting others.

He, neither a self-tormentor nor a tormentor of others, is here-now allayed, quenched, become cool, an experiencer of bliss<sup>11</sup> that lives with self Brahma-become.

Of these four persons, Pessa, which appeals to your mind?"

"Now, revered sir, that person who is a self-tormentor, intent on the practice of self-torment - that person does not appeal to my mind.

And, revered sir, that person who is a tormentor of others, intent on the practice of tormenting others - neither does [6] that person appeal to my mind.

And, revered sir, that person who is a self-tormentor, intent on the practice of self-torment, and who is also a tormentor of others, intent on the practice of tormenting others - neither does that person appeal to my mind.

But, revered sir, that person who is neither a self-tormentor, not intent on the practice of self-torment, nor a tormentor of others, not intent on the practice of tormenting others, he, neither a self-tormentor nor a tormentor of others, is here-now allayed, quenched, become cool, an experiencer of bliss that lives with self Brahma-become - this person appeals to my mind."

"But why, Pessa, do these three persons not appeal to your mind?"

"Revered sir, whatever person is a self-tormentor, intent on the practice of self-torment, he mortifies and torments himself<sup>12</sup> although he yearns for happiness and recoils from pain.

Therefore this person does not appeal to my mind.

And, revered sir, whatever person is a tormentor of others, intent on the practice of tormenting others, he mortifies and torments others although they yearn for happiness and recoil from pain.

Therefore this person does not appeal to my mind.

And, revered sir, whatever person is both a self-tormentor, intent on the practice of self-torment, and also a tormentor of others, intent on the practice of tormenting others, he mortifies and torments himself and others although they (all) yearn for happiness and recoil from pain.

Therefore this person does not appeal to my mind.

But, [342] revered sir, whatever person is neither a self-tormentor, intent on the practice of self-torment, nor a tormentor of others, intent on the practice of tormenting others, he, neither a self-tormentor nor a tormentor of others, is here-now allayed, quenched, become cool, an experiencer of bliss that lives with self Brahma-become.

Therefore this person appeals to my mind.

But, revered sir, we must be going, we are very busy, there is much to be done by us."

"You must do, Pessa, whatever you think it is now the right time for."

Then Pessa, the son of the elephant trainer, having rejoiced in what the Lord had said, having given thanks, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him.

Soon after Pessa, the son of the elephant-trainer, had departed, the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

[7] "Monks, Pessa, the son of the elephant-trainer, is clever;<sup>13</sup> monks, Pessa, the son of the elephant-trainer, is of great wisdom.

If, monks, Pessa, the elephant-trainer's son, had sat down for a moment whilst I had analysed the four kinds of persons for him in detail, he would have gained great good.<sup>14</sup>

Nevertheless, even to some extent has Pessa, the elephant-trainer's son, gained great good."

"It is the right time for this, Lord<sup>15</sup> it is the right time for this, Wellfarer - for the Lord to analyse these four persons in detail.

When the monks have heard the Lord, they will remember."

"Well then, monks, listen, attend carefully, and I will speak."

"Yes, revered sir," these monks answered the Lord in assent. The Lord spoke thus:

"And which, monks, is the self-tormentor, intent on the practice of self-torment?"

In this case, monks, some person comes to be unclothed,<sup>16</sup> flouting life's decencies, licking his hands (after meals), not one to come when asked to do so, not one to stand still when asked to do so.

He does not consent (to accept food) offered or specially prepared (for him) or (to accept) an invitation (to a meal).

He does not accept (food) straight from a cooking-pot or pan, nor within the threshold, nor among the faggots, nor among the rice-pounders, nor when two people are eating, nor from a pregnant woman, nor from one giving suck, nor from one cohabiting with a man, nor from gleanings, nor from where a dog is standing by, nor where flies are swarming, nor fish, nor meat.

He drinks neither fermented liquor nor spirits nor rice-gruel.

He comes to be a one-house man or a one-piece man, or a two-house man or a two-piece man ... or a seven-house man or a seven-piece man.

He subsists on one little offering ... he subsists on seven little offerings.

He takes food only once a day, [343] and once in two days ... and once in seven days.

Then he lives intent on such a practice as eating rice at regular fortnightly intervals.

He is one feeding on potherbs or feeding on millet or on wild rice or on snippets of leather or on water-plants or on the red powder of rice husks or on the discarded scum of rice on the boil or on the flour of oil- [8] seeds or grass or cowdung.

He is one who subsists on forest roots or fruits, eating the fruits that have fallen.

He wears coarse hempen cloths and he wears mixed cloths or cerements or rags taken from the dust-heap or tree-bark fibre or antelope skins or strips of antelope skin or cloths of kusa-grass or cloths or bark or cloths of wood shavings or a blanket of human hair or he wears owls' feathers.

He is one who plucks out the hair of his head and beard, intent on the practice of plucking out the hair of the head and beard; and he is one who stands upright, refusing a seat; and he is one who squats on his haunches, intent on the practice of squatting; and he is one for covered thorns, he makes his bed on covered thorns; and he lives intent on the practice of going down to the water to bathe three times in an evening.

Thus in many a way does he live intent on the practice of mortifying and tormenting his body.

Monks, this is called the person who is a self-tormentor, intent on the practice of self-torment.

And which, monks, is the person who is a tormentor of others, intent on the practice of tormenting others?

In this case, monks, some person is a cattle-butcher, or a pig-killer, fowler, deer-stalker, hunter, fisherman, thief, executioner, jailer, or (one of) those others who follow a bloody calling.<sup>17</sup>

This is the person, monks, who is called a tormentor of others, intent on the practice of tormenting others.

And which, monks, is the person who is both a self-tormentor, intent on the practice of tormenting self, and also a tormentor of others, intent on the practice of tormenting others?

In this case, monks, some person is a noble anointed king or a very rich brahman.

He, having had a new conference hall<sup>18</sup> built to the east of the town, having had his head and beard shaved, having put on a shaggy skin, having smeared his body with ghee and oil, scratching his back with a deer-horn, enters the conference hall together with his chief consort and a brahman priest.

Then he lies down to sleep on the bare grassy ground.

The king lives on the milk from one udder of a cow that has a calf of like colour, [344] his chief consort lives on the milk from the second udder, the brahman priest lives on the milk from the third udder, the milk from the fourth udder they offer to the fire; the calf lives on what is over.

He speaks thus:

'Let so many bulls be slain for the sacrifice, let so many steers [9] ... heifers ... goats ... let so many rams be slain for the sacrifice, let so many trees be felled for the sacrificial posts, let so much kusa-grass be reaped for the sacrificial spot.'<sup>19</sup>

Those who are called his slaves or messengers or workpeople, they, scared of the stick, scared of danger,<sup>20</sup> with tearful faces and crying, set about their preparations.

This, monks, is called the person who is both a self-tormentor, intent on the practice of self-torment, and a tormentor of others, intent on the practice of tormenting others.

And which, monks, is the person who is neither a self-tormentor, not intent on the practice of self-torment, nor a tormentor of others, not intent on the practice of tormenting others, and who, neither a self-tormentor nor a tormentor of others, is here-now allayed, quenched, become cool, an experiencer of bliss that lives with self Brahma-become?

In this case, monks, a Tathāgata arises in the world,<sup>21</sup> a perfected one, fully Self-Awakened One, endowed with (right) knowledge and conduct, well-farer, knower of the worlds, matchless charioteer of men to be tamed, teacher of devas and mankind, the Awakened One, the Lord.

Having realised it by his own super-knowledge, he proclaims this world with its devas, Māras, Brahmās, creation with its recluses and brahmans, with its devas and men.

With the meaning and the spirit he teaches dhamma that is lovely at the beginning, lovely in the middle, lovely at the ending; he proclaims the Brahma-faring wholly fulfilled and purified.

A householder or a householder's son or one born in some respectable family hears that dhamma.

When he has heard that dhamma he acquires faith in the Tathāgata.

Possessed of this faith he has acquired, he reflects thus:

'Confined is this household life, a path of dust, while going forth is of the open air.

Yet it is not easy for one who has lived in a house to fare the Brahma-faring completely fulfilled, completely purified, polished like a conch-shell.

Yet suppose I were to have my hair and beard shaved, to don saffron robes, and go forth from home into homelessness?'

After a time, getting rid of his mass of wealth, whether large or small, [345] getting rid of his circle of relations, whether large or small, having had his hair and beard shaved, having donned saffron robes, he goes forth from home into homelessness.

He, gone forth thus, being possessed of the way of life and the [10] training of monks, abandoning onslaught on creatures, is one that abstains from onslaught on creatures; stick and sword laid aside he dwells scrupulous, kindly, friendly and compassionate towards all living things and creatures.

Abandoning the taking of what has not been given, he is one that abstains from taking what has not been given; taking (only) what is given, waiting for what is given, without stealing he dwells with self become pure.

Abandoning unchastity, he is one that is chaste, keeping remote he is one that refrains<sup>22</sup> from dealings with women. Abandoning lying speech, he is one that abstains from lying speech, a truth-speaker, a bondsman to truth, trustworthy, dependable, no deceiver of the world.

Abandoning slanderous speech, he is one that abstains from slanderous speech; having heard something here he is not one to repeat it elsewhere for (causing) variance among those people; or, having heard something elsewhere he is not one to repeat it here for (causing) variance among these people; concord is his pleasure, concord his delight, concord his joy, concord the motive of his speech.

Abandoning harsh speech, he is one that abstains from harsh speech; whatever speech is gentle, pleasing to the ear, affectionate, going to the heart, urbane, pleasant to the manyfolk, agreeable to the manyfolk - he is one that utters speech like this.

Abandoning frivolous chatter, he is one that abstains from frivolous chatter; he is a speaker at a right time, a speaker of fact, a speaker on the goal, a speaker on dhamma, a speaker on discipline, he speaks words that are worth treasuring, with an opportune simile,<sup>23</sup> discriminating, connected with the goal.

He is one that abstains from what involves destruction to seed-growth, to vegetable growth. He is one that eats one meal a day, desisting at night, refraining from eating at a wrong time.

He is one that abstains from watching shows of dancing, singing, music.

He is one that abstains from using garlands, scents, unguents, adornments, finery. He is one that abstains from using high beds, large beds.

He is one that abstains from accepting gold and silver.

He is one that abstains from accepting raw grain ... raw meat ... women and girls ... women slaves and men slaves ... goats and sheep ... fowl and swine ... elephants, cows, horses, mares ... fields and sites.

He is one that abstains from the practice of sending or going on [11] messages.

He is one that abstains from buying and selling ... from cheating with weights, bronzes and measures.

[346] He is one that abstains from the crooked ways of bribery, fraud and deceit.

He is one that abstains from maiming, murdering, manacling, highway robbery.

He is contented with a robe to protect his body, with almsfood to sustain his stomach.

Wherever he goes he takes these things with him as he goes.

As a bird on the wing wherever it flies takes its wings with it as it flies, so a monk, contented with a robe to protect his body, with almsfood to sustain his stomach, wherever he goes takes these things with him as he goes.

He, possessed of this ariyan body of moral habit, inwardly experiences the bliss of blamelessness.<sup>24</sup>

Having seen a material shape with the eye, he is not entranced by the general appearance, he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwell with this organ of sight uncontrolled, covetousness and dejection, evil unskilled states of mind might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it, he guards the organ of sight, he achieves control over the organ of sight. Having heard a sound with the ear ...

Having smelt a smell with the nose ...

Having savoured a taste with the tongue ...

Having felt a touch with the body ...

Having cognised a mental object with the mind, he is not entranced by the general appearance, he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwell with this organ of mind uncontrolled, covetousness and dejection, evil unskilled states of mind might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it, he guards the organ of mind, he achieves control over the organ of mind.

He, possessed of this ariyan control over the sense-organs, inwardly experiences the bliss of being 'unaffected.'<sup>25</sup>

Whether he is setting out or returning, he is one who comports himself properly; whether he is looking down or looking round ... whether he is bending back or stretching out (his arm) ... whether he is carrying his outer cloak, his bowl, his robe ... whether he is munching, drinking, eating, savouring ... whether he is obeying [12] the calls of nature .. whether he is walking, standing, asleep, awake, talking, silent, he is one who comports himself properly.

Possessed of this ariyan body of moral habit, possessed of this ariyan control over the sense-organs, and possessed of this ariyan mindfulness and clear consciousness, he chooses a remote lodging in a forest, at the root of a tree, on a mountain slope, in a wilderness, a hill-cave, a cemetery, a forest haunt, in the open air or on a heap of straw.

Returning from alms-gathering after the meal, he sits down cross-legged holding the back erect, having made mindfulness rise up in front of him.

[347] Having got rid of covetousness for the world, he lives with a mind devoid of coveting and purifies the mind of coveting.

By getting rid of the taint of ill-will, he lives benevolent in mind; and compassionate for the welfare of all creatures and beings, he purifies the mind of the taint of ill-will.

By getting rid of sloth and torpor, he lives devoid of sloth and torpor; perceiving the light, mindful and clearly conscious, he purifies the mind of sloth and torpor.

By getting rid of restlessness and worry, he lives calmly, the mind inwardly tranquillised, and he purifies the mind of restlessness and worry.

By getting rid of doubt, he lives doubt-crossed; unperplexed as to states that are skilled, he purifies the mind of doubt.

He, by getting rid of these five hindrances - defilements of the mind and weakening to intuitive wisdom - aloof from pleasures of the senses, aloof from unskilled states of mind, enters and abides in the first meditation, which is accompanied by initial thought and discursive thought, is born of aloofness and is rapturous and joyful.

By allying initial and discursive thought, the mind subjectively tranquillised and fixed on one point, he enters and abides in the second meditation, which is devoid of initial and discursive thought, is born of concentration and is rapturous and joyful.

By the fading out of rapture, he dwells with equanimity, attentive and clearly conscious, and experiences in his person that joy of which the ariyans say: 'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful', and he enters and abides in the third meditation.

By getting rid of joy, by getting rid of anguish, by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows, he enters and abides in the fourth meditation, which has neither anguish nor joy, and which is entirely purified by equanimity and mindfulness.

Thus with the mind composed,<sup>26</sup> quite purified, quite clarified, [13] without blemish, without defilement, grown soft and workable, stable, immovable, he directs his mind to the knowledge and recollection of former habitations. He recollects a variety of former habitations, thus:

one birth, two births, three ... four ... five ... ten ... twenty ... thirty ... forty ... fifty ... a hundred ... a thousand ... a hundred thousand births, and many an eon of integration and many an eon of disintegration and many an eon of integration-disintegration:

'Such a one was I by name, having such and such a clan, such and such a colour, so I was nourished, such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine, so did the span of life end.

Passing from this, I came to be in another state where I was such a one by name, having such and such a clan, such and such a colour, so I was nourished, such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine, [348] so did the span of life end.

Passing from this, I arose here.'

Thus he recollects divers former habitations in all their modes and detail.

With the mind composed thus, quite purified ... fixed, immovable, he directs his mind to the knowledge of the passing hence and the arising of beings.

With the purified deva-vision surpassing that of men, he sees beings as they pass hence or come to be; he comprehends that beings are mean, excellent, comely, ugly, well-going, ill-going, according to the consequences of deeds, and thinks:

'Indeed these worthy beings who were possessed of wrong conduct in body, speech and thought, scoffers at the ariyans, holding a wrong view, incurring deeds consequent on a wrong view - these, at the breaking up of the body after dying, have arisen in a sorrowful state, a bad bourn, the abyss, Niraya Hell.

But these worthy beings who were possessed of good conduct in body, speech and thought, who did not scoff at the ariyans, holding a right view, incurring deeds consequent on a right view - these at the breaking up of the body after dying, have arisen in a good bourn, a heaven world.'

Thus with the purified deva-vision surpassing that of men does he see beings as they pass hence, as they arise; he comprehends that beings are mean, excellent, comely, ugly, well-going, ill-going according to the consequences of deeds.

With the mind composed thus ... fixed, immovable, he directs his mind to the knowledge of the destruction of the cankers.

He comprehends as it really is:

This is anguish, this is the arising of anguish, this is the stopping of anguish, this is the course leading to the stopping of anguish.

He comprehends as it really is:

These are the cankers, this is the arising of the cankers, this is the stopping of the cankers, this is the course leading to the stopping of the cankers.

Knowing [14] thus, seeing thus, his mind is freed from the canker of sense-pleasures and his mind is freed from the canker of becoming and his mind is freed from the canker of ignorance.

In freedom the knowledge comes to be:

I am freed; and he comprehends:

Destroyed is birth, brought to a close the Brahma-faring, done is what was to be done, there is no more of being such or so.

This, monks, is called the person who is neither a self-tormentor intent on the practice of tormenting self, nor a tormentor of others intent on the practice of tormenting others.

[349] He, neither a self-tormentor nor a tormentor of others, is here-now allayed, quenched, become cool, an experiencer of bliss that lives with self Brahma-become."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse to Kandaraka: The First

---

<sup>1</sup> Kandaraka (whom MA. iii. 2 says was a clothed wanderer) asks only one question however; but the answer and the way Pessa takes this up lead on to the main topics: the ineffectiveness and cruelty of asceticism, and the disciple's development from the moment he acquires faith to his attainment of arahantship. The name of this Discourse might more suitably be rendered: "Discourse prompted by Kandaraka."

<sup>2</sup> paṭipādita, made to fare, to journey along.

<sup>3</sup> santata-sīla. Santata, which MA. iii. 4 explains as nirantara, uninterrupted, means consistent, stable.

<sup>4</sup> See M. Sta. 10 (M.L.S. i. 83) [sic p 70] and D. Sta. 22.

<sup>5</sup> As at (M.L.S. i. 83) [sic p 70]

<sup>6</sup> As they have various things to do for monks they cannot engage in the four applications of mindfulness all the time; but when they get an opportunity they are able to do so, MA. iii. 6.

<sup>7</sup> Cited at DhA. i. 173.

<sup>8</sup> All four-footed things, MA. ill. 7.

<sup>9</sup> Cf. DhA. i. 173.

<sup>10</sup> Cf. M. i. 411, ii. 159; D. iii. 234; A. ii. 205; Pug. 55.

<sup>11</sup> MA. iii. 10, the "blisses" (happineses, eases) of meditation, the Ways, the fruits, nibbāna.

<sup>12</sup> cf. S. iv. 337 ff.

<sup>13</sup> Not in regard to these four categories of persons, but in regard to the four applications of mindfulness, MA. iii. 10.

<sup>14</sup> mahatā atthena saṃyutto agamissa. Siam. version has abhavissa for text's agamissa, and is supported by MA. iii. 10-11: sotāpanno abhavism.

<sup>15</sup> bhagavā, as at M. i. 433.

<sup>16</sup> The remainder of this paragraph as at M. i. 77-78; A. ii. 205 ff. is similar to above from here to the end of this Discourse.

<sup>17</sup> Cf. A. iii. 383.

<sup>18</sup> santhāgāra. MA. iii. 12 says yaññasālā, sacrificial hall.

<sup>19</sup> D. i. 141; A. ii. 207.

<sup>20</sup> bhayalajjitā; cf. Dhp. 188. Tajjita also means "spurred on by."

<sup>21</sup> From here to the end of this Discourse cf. M. i. 179 ff.; and see M.L.S. i. 235 ff. for notes. [Ed.: Linked as cited but this must really be to M.L.S. i. 224 scroll up a few lines from here.]

<sup>22</sup> virato. I have translated the more frequent paṭivirato of this passage as "one that abstains."

<sup>23</sup> sāpadesa, explained at DA. i. 76 as sa-upama, sakāraṇa, with a simile, with a device (argument, supposition?).

<sup>24</sup> anavajjasukha.

<sup>25</sup> avyāsekasukha, not sprinkled (with evil), not mixing with it. His control acts as a barrier to the flowing-in of impurity. At M.L.S. i. 227 I translated the compound as "unsullied well-being." I now think that the above translation better balances the "bliss of blamelessness" at the end of the preceding paragraph, and that the two compounds ending in sukha are intentional. "Unsullied well-being" at vol. i, p. 226 [Ed. corrected] is an error and should read "bliss of blamelessness."

<sup>26</sup> A. ii. 211 omits this paragraph and the next.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
1. Gahapati Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
1. The Division on Householders

52. Discourse to a Citizen of Aṭṭhaka

Aṭṭhaka-Nāgara Sutta

---

[349] [14]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the venerable Ānanda was staying near Vesāli in Beluva hamlet.<sup>2</sup>

Now at that time the householder Dasama of Aṭṭhaka had arrived in Pātaliputta on some business or other.

Then the householder Dasama of Aṭṭhaka approached a monk in Cock's monastery<sup>3</sup>; having approached, having greeted that monk, he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the householder Dasama of Aṭṭhaka spoke thus to that monk:

"Revered sir, where is the venerable Ānanda staying at present, for we are anxious to see the venerable Ānanda?"

"Householder, the venerable Ānanda is staying near Vesālī in Beluva hamlet."

[15] Then the householder Dasama of Atṭhaka, having concluded his business in Pātaliputta, approached the venerable Ānanda in Beluva hamlet; having approached, having greeted the venerable Ānanda, he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the householder Dasama of Atṭhaka spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda:

"Now is there, revered Ānanda, any one thing pointed out by that Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened One, [350]whereby if a monk dwell diligent, ardent, self-resolute, his mind, not (yet) freed, is freed; or the cankers, not (yet) completely destroyed, go to complete destruction; or he attains that matchless security from the bonds, not (yet) attained?"

"There is one thing, householder, pointed out by that Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened one, whereby if a monk dwell diligent, ardent, self-resolute, his mind not (yet) freed, is freed; and also the cankers, not (yet) completely destroyed, go to complete destruction; and, too, he attains the matchless security from the bonds, not (yet) attained."

"But what, revered Ānanda, is this one thing pointed out by the Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened one, whereby if a monk dwell diligent, ardent, self-resolute, his mind not (yet) freed, is freed; and also the cankers, not (yet) completely destroyed, go to complete destruction; and, too, he attains the matchless security from the bonds, not (yet) attained?"

"As to this, householder, a monk,
aloof from the pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
entering into the first meditation
which is accompanied by initial thought
and discursive thought,

is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful,
abides in it.

He reflects on this and comprehends:

'This first meditation is effected and thought out.<sup>4</sup>

But whatever is effected and thought out, that is impermanent, it is liable to stopping.'

Firm in this, he attains the destruction of the cankers.

If he does not attain the destruction of the cankers, then by this attachment to Dhamma, by this delight in Dhamma, by the destruction of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore), he is of spontaneous uprising, one who attains nibbāna there, not liable to return from that world.

This, householder, is one thing pointed out by the Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened one, whereby if a monk dwell diligent, ardent, self-resolute, his mind not (yet) freed, is freed; and also the cankers, not (yet) completely destroyed, go to complete destruction; and, too, he attains the matchless security from the bonds, not (yet) attained.

■

And again, householder, a monk,
by allaying initial and discursive thought,
his mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters on
and abides in
the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration
and is rapturous and joyful.

He reflects on this and comprehends:

'This second meditation is also effected and thought out.

But whatever is effected and thought out, that is impermanent, it is liable to stopping.'

[16] Firm in this, he attains the destruction of the cankers.

If he does not attain the destruction of the cankers, then by this attachment to Dhamma, by this delight in Dhamma, by the destruction of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore), he is of spontaneous uprising, one who attains nibbāna there, not liable to return from that world.

This, householder, is one thing pointed out by the Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened one, [351] whereby if a monk dwell diligent, ardent, self-resolute, his mind not (yet) freed, is freed; and also the cankers, not (yet) completely destroyed, go to complete destruction; and, too, he attains the matchless security from the bonds, not (yet) attained.

■

And again, householder, a monk,
by the fading out of rapture,
dwells with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious,
and experiences in his person
that joy of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,'
and he enters on
and abides in
the third meditation.

He reflects on this and comprehends:

'This third meditation is also effected and thought out.

But whatever is effected and thought out, that is impermanent, it is liable to stopping.'

Firm in this, he attains the destruction of the cankers.

If he does not attain the destruction of the cankers, then by this attachment to Dhamma, by this delight in Dhamma, by the destruction of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore), he is of spontaneous uprising, one who attains nibbāna there, not liable to return from that world.

This, householder, is one thing pointed out by the Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened one, whereby if a monk dwell diligent, ardent, self-resolute, his mind not (yet) freed, is freed; and also the cankers, not (yet) completely destroyed, go to complete destruction; and, too, he attains the matchless security from the bonds, not (yet) attained.

■

And again, householder, a monk,
by getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,
enters on
and abides in
the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

He reflects on this and comprehends:

'This fourth meditation is also effected and thought out.

But whatever is effected and thought out, that is impermanent, it is liable to stopping.'

Firm in this, he attains the destruction of the cankers.

If he does not attain the destruction of the cankers, then by this attachment to Dhamma, by this delight in Dhamma, by the destruction of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore), he is of spontaneous uprising, one who attains nibbāna there, not liable to return from that world.

This, householder, is one thing pointed out by the Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened one, whereby if a monk dwell diligent, ardent, self-resolute, his mind not (yet) freed, is freed; and also the cankers, not (yet) completely destroyed, go to complete destruction; and, too, he attains the matchless security from the bonds, not (yet) attained.

■

And again, householder, a monk dwells,
having suffused the first quarter with a mind of friendliness,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwelt having suffused the whole world
everywhere,
in every way,
with a mind of friendliness
that was far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

He reflects on this and comprehends:

'This freedom of mind that is friendliness is also effected and thought out.

But whatever is effected and thought out, that is impermanent, it is liable to stopping.'

Firm in this, he attains the destruction of the cankers.

If he does not attain the destruction of the cankers, then by this attachment to Dhamma, by this delight in Dhamma, by the destruction of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore), he is of spontaneous uprising, one who attains nibbāna there, not liable to return from that world.

This, householder, is one thing pointed out by the Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened one, whereby if a monk dwell diligent, ardent, self-resolute, his mind not (yet) freed, is freed; and also the cankers, not (yet) completely destroyed, go to complete destruction; and, too, he attains the matchless security from the bonds, not (yet) attained.

■

And again, householder, a monk dwells, having suffused the first quarter with a mind of compassion,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwelt having suffused the whole world
everywhere,
in every way,
with a mind of compassion
that was far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

He reflects on this and comprehends:

'This freedom of mind that is compassion is also effected and thought out.

But whatever is effected and thought out, that is impermanent, it is liable to stopping.'

Firm in this, he attains the destruction of the cankers.

If he does not attain the destruction of the cankers, then by this attachment to Dhamma, by this delight in Dhamma, by the destruction of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore), he is of spontaneous uprising, one who attains nibbāna there, not liable to return from that world.

This, householder, is one thing pointed out by the Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened one, whereby if a monk dwell diligent, ardent, self-resolute, his mind not (yet) freed, is freed; and also the cankers, not (yet) completely destroyed, go to complete destruction; and, too, he attains the matchless security from the bonds, not (yet) attained.

■

And again, householder, a monk dwells, having suffused the first quarter with a mind of sympathetic joy,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwelt having suffused the whole world
everywhere,
in every way,
with a mind of sympathetic joy
that was far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

He reflects on this and comprehends:

'This freedom of mind that is sympathetic joy is also effected and thought out.

But whatever is effected and thought out, that is impermanent, it is liable to stopping.'

Firm in this, he attains the destruction of the cankers.

If he does not attain the destruction of the cankers, then by this attachment to Dhamma, by this delight in Dhamma, by the destruction of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore), he is of spontaneous uprising, one who attains nibbāna there, not liable to return from that world.

This, householder, is one thing pointed out by the Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened one, whereby if a monk dwell diligent, ardent, self-resolute, his mind not (yet) freed, is freed; and also the cankers, not (yet) completely destroyed, go to complete destruction; and, too, he attains the matchless security from the bonds, not (yet) attained.

■

And again, householder, a monk dwells, having suffused the first quarter with a mind of equanimity,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwelt having suffused the whole world
everywhere,
in every way,
with a mind of equanimity
that was far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,

without enmity,
without malevolence.

He reflects on this and comprehends:

'This freedom of mind that is equanimity is also effected and thought out.

But whatever is effected and thought out, that is impermanent, [352] it is liable to stopping.'

Firm in this, he attains the destruction of the cankers.

If he does not attain the destruction of the cankers, then by this attachment to Dhamma, by this delight in Dhamma, by the destruction of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore), he is of spontaneous uprising, one who attains nibbāna there, not liable to return from that world.

This, householder, is one thing pointed out by the Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened one, whereby if a monk dwell diligent, ardent, self-resolute, his mind not (yet) freed, is freed; and also the cankers, not (yet) completely destroyed, go to complete destruction; and, too, he attains the matchless security from the bonds, not (yet) attained.

■

And again, householder, a monk
by wholly transcending perception of material shapes, by the going down of perception due to [17] sensory impressions,
by not attending to perception of variety,
thinking:

'Ether<sup>5</sup> is unending,'

enters on

and abides in the plane of infinite ether.

He reflects on this and comprehends:

'This attainment of the plane of infinite ether is also effected and thought out.

But whatever is effected and thought out, that is impermanent, it is liable to stopping.'

Firm in this, he attains the destruction of the cankers.

If he does not attain the destruction of the cankers, then by this attachment to Dhamma, by this delight in Dhamma, by the destruction of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore), he is of spontaneous uprising, one who attains nibbāna there, not liable to return from that world.

This, householder, is one thing pointed out by the Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened one, whereby if a monk dwell diligent, ardent, self-resolute, his mind not (yet) freed, is freed; and also the cankers, not (yet) completely destroyed, go to complete destruction; and, too, he attains the matchless security from the bonds, not (yet) attained.

■

And again, householder, monks, a monk by wholly transcending the plane of infinite ether,
thinking:

'Consciousness is unending,'

enters on

and abides in

the plane of infinite consciousness.

He reflects on this and comprehends:

'This attainment of the plane of infinite consciousness is also effected and thought out.

But whatever is effected and thought out, that is impermanent, it is liable to stopping.'

Firm in this, he attains the destruction of the cankers.

If he does not attain the destruction of the cankers, then by this attachment to Dhamma, by this delight in Dhamma, by the destruction of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore), he is of spontaneous uprising, one who attains nibbāna there, not liable to return from that world.

This, householder, is one thing pointed out by the Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened one, whereby if a monk dwell diligent, ardent, self-resolute, his mind not (yet) freed, is freed; and also the cankers, not (yet) completely destroyed, go to complete destruction; and, too, he attains the matchless security from the bonds, not (yet) attained.

■

And again, householder, a monk,
by wholly transcending the plane of infinite consciousness,
thinking:
'There is not anything,'
enters on
and abides in
the plane of no-thing.

He reflects on this and comprehends:

'This attainment of the plane of no-thing is also effected and thought out.

But whatever is effected and thought out, that is impermanent, it is liable to stopping.'

Firm in this, he attains the destruction of the cankers.

If he does not attain the destruction of the cankers, then by this attachment to Dhamma, by this delight in Dhamma, by the destruction of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore), he is of spontaneous uprising, one who attains nibbāna there, not liable to return from that world.

This, householder, is one thing pointed out by the Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened one, whereby if a monk dwell diligent, ardent, self-resolute, his mind not (yet) freed, is freed; and also the cankers, not (yet) completely destroyed, go to complete destruction; and, too, he attains the matchless security from the bonds, not (yet) attained.

When this had been said, the householder Dasama of Aṭṭhaka spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda:

"Revered Ānanda, it is as though a man who was seeking for one opening to (some hidden) treasure were to come at one and the same time on eleven openings to the treasure.

[353]Even so do I, reverend sir, in seeking for one [18] door to the deathless come to hear<sup>6</sup> at one and the same time of eleven doors to the deathless.

And too, reverend sir, it is like a man's house that has eleven doors; if his house were on fire he could make himself safe by any one of the doors.

Even so can I, reverend sir, make myself safe by any one of these eleven doors to the deathless.

Now, reverend sir, members of other sects will look about for a fee for the teacher, but why should not I pay honour to the venerable Ānanda?"

Then the householder Dasama of Aṭṭhaka, having had the Order of monks that was at Pāṭaliputta and Vesālī gathered together, with his own hand served and satisfied them with sumptuous foods, solid and soft, and presented each monk with a separate pair of cloths; to the venerable Ānanda he presented a set of three robes and had a dwelling-place<sup>7</sup> that cost five hundred pieces built for the venerable Ānanda.

---

<sup>1</sup> This Discourse is also at A. v. 342 ff., and is there called Dasama Sutta, after the name of the householder. See the notes at G.S. v. 219 ff.

<sup>2</sup> On a slope of a hill to the south of Vesālī, MA. iii. 12 = Comy. on A.

<sup>3</sup> MA. iii. 13 says it was made by a seṭṭhi, a rich man, banker or merchant, called Kukkuṭa (Cock).

<sup>4</sup> abhisāṅkhatam abhisañcetayitaṃ

<sup>5</sup> As I used "either" for ākāsa in vol. i, I retain it in this volume, although "ether," for science, no longer means the substratum or ultimate matter out of which come all solids, liquids, gases, etc. Nor is ākāsa "space" in such contexts as the above; it is, however, as is nibbāna, in some sense an absolute, for neither of the two is born of kamma, of cause, or of nature, Miln. 268.

<sup>6</sup> savanāya (for the hearing of); A. v. 346 reads sevanāya (for entering in by), with v.l. savanāya.

<sup>7</sup> MA. iii. 16, says a paṇṇasālā, a leaf hut (or, hall).

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
1. Gahapati Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
1. The Division on Householders

53. Discourse for Learners

Sekha Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord<sup>1</sup> was staying among the Sakyans near Kapilavatthu in Nigrodha's monastery.

Now at that time a new conference hall had not long been built for the Sakyans of Kapilavatthu, and had never (yet) been occupied by a recluse or brahman or any human being.

Then the Sakyans of Kapilavatthu approached the Lord; living approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance.

As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, the Sakyans of Kapilavatthu spoke thus to the Lord:

"Lord, there is a new conference hall here, built not long ago for the Sakyans of Kapilavatthu, which has never (yet) been occupied by a recluse or brahman or any human being.

Lord, let the Lord be the first to use it.

When the Lord has used it first, the Sakyans of Kapilavatthu will use it afterwards, and for a long time that will be for the welfare and happiness of the Sakyans of Kapilavatthu."<sup>2</sup>

The Lord consented by becoming silent.

Then the Sakyans of Kapilavatthu, having understood the Lord's consent, rising from their seats, having greeted the Lord, approached the conference hall keeping their right sides towards him.

Having approached, having spread the conference hall with all the spreadings,<sup>3</sup> having got seats ready, having set out a water vessel, having hung up an oil lamp, they approached the Lord; having approached and greeted the Lord, they stood at a respectful distance.

As they were standing at a respectful distance, the Sakyans of Kapilavatthu spoke thus to the Lord:

"Lord, the conference hall has been spread with all the spreadings, seats have been got ready, a water vessel set out, an oil lamp hung up.

Let the Lord now do that for which he thinks it is the right time."

When the Lord had dressed, taking his bowl and robe, he approached the conference hall together with an Order of monks; having approached, he washed his feet, entered the conference hall and sat down against the middle pillar, facing the east.

The Order of monks also washed their feet, entered the conference hall and sat down against the western wall, facing the east with the Lord in front of them.

The Sakyans of Kapilavatthu also washed their feet, entered the conference hall and sat down against the eastern wall, facing the west with the Lord in front of them.

Then the Lord, having gladdened, roused, incited, delighted the Sakyans of Kapilavatthu with reasoned talk far into the night, addressed the venerable Ānanda,<sup>4</sup> saying:

"Ānanda, let there occur to you a learner's course<sup>5</sup> for the Sakyans of Kapilavatthu; my back is aching, I will stretch it."

"Yes, revered sir," the venerable Ānanda answered the Lord in assent.

Then the Lord, having folded his outer robe into four, lay down on his right side in the lion posture, foot resting on foot, mindful, clearly conscious, reflecting on the thought of getting up again.

Then the venerable Ānanda addressed Mahānāma the Sakyan<sup>6</sup>, saying:

"Now, Mahānāma, a disciple of the ariyans is possessed of moral habit, he is one who guards the doors of the sense-organs, he is moderate in eating, intent on vigilance, possessed of the seven excellent things,<sup>7</sup> one who acquires at will,<sup>8</sup> without trouble, without difficulty, the four meditations<sup>ed2</sup> which are of the purest mentality, abidings in ease here and now.<sup>9</sup>

And how, Mahānāma, is an ariyan disciple possessed of moral habit?<sup>10</sup>

As to this, Mahānāma, an ariyan disciple is moral;<sup>11</sup> he lives controlled by the control of the Obligations<sup>ed3</sup>, possessed of (right) behaviour and resort, seeing danger in the slightest faults; undertaking them rightly, he trains in the rules of training.

It is thus, Mahānāma, that an ariyan disciple is possessed of moral habit.

And how, Mahānāma, is an ariyan disciple one who guards the doors of the sense-organs?<sup>12</sup>

As to this, Mahānāma, an ariyan disciple, having seen a material shape with the eye, is not entranced by the general appearance, is not entranced by the detail.

For is he dwell with the organ of sight uncontrolled, covetousness and dejection, evil unskilled states of mind, might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it, he guards the organ of sight; he achieves control over the organ of sight.

Having heard a sound with the ear ...

Having smelt a smell with the nose ...

Having savoured a taste with the tongue ...

Having felt a touch with the body ...

Having cognised a mental state with the mind, he is not entranced by the general appearance, is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwell with the organ of mind uncontrolled, covetousness and dejection, evil unskilled states, might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it, he guards the organ of mind; he achieves control over the organ of mind.

It is thus, Mahānāma, that an ariyan disciple is one who guards the doors of the sense-organs.

And how Mahānāma, is an ariyan disciple one who is moderate in eating?<sup>13</sup>

As to this, Mahānāma, an ariyan disciple takes food reflecting carefully, not for fun or indulgence or personal charm or beautification, but just enough for maintaining this body and keeping it going, for keeping it unharmed, for furthering the Brahma-faring, with the thought:

'Thus will I crush out an old feeling, and I will not allow a new feeling to arise, and then there will be for me subsistence and blamelessness and abiding in comfort.'

It is thus, Mahānāma, that an ariyan disciple is moderate in eating.

And how Mahānāma, is an ariyan disciple intent on vigilance?<sup>14</sup>

As to this, Mahānāma, an ariyan disciple during the day, while pacing up and down and while sitting down, cleanses his mind of obstructive mental states; during the first watch of the night, pacing up and down, sitting down, he cleanses his mind of obstructive mental states; during the middle watch of the night, he lies down on his right side in the lion posture, foot resting on foot, mindful, clearly conscious, reflecting on the thought of getting up again;

during the last watch of the night, when he has risen, while pacing up and down, while sitting down, he cleanses his mind of obstructive mental states.

It is thus, Mahānāma, that an ariyan disciple is intent on vigilance.

And how, Mahānāma, is an ariyan disciple possessed of the seven excellent things?<sup>15</sup>

As to this, Mahānāma, the ariyan disciple is of faith;<sup>16</sup> he has faith in the awakening of the Tathāgata, and thinks: He is indeed Lord, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened One, endowed with right knowledge and conflict, well-farer, knower of the world(s), matchless charioteer of men to be tamed, teacher of devas and men, the Awakened One, the Lord.

He comes to have shame; he is ashamed of wrong conduct in body, of wrong conduct in speech, of wrong conduct in thought, he is ashamed to fall into evil unskilled mental states.

He has fear of blame; he fears blame for wrong conduct in body ...

speech ...

thought, he fears blame for falling into evil unskilled mental states.

He is one who has heard much, who remembers what he has heard, who stores up what he has heard.

Those things, lovely in the beginning, lovely in the middle, lovely at the ending which, with the meaning and the spirit, declare the Brahma-faring wholly fulfilled, perfectly purified, such things are much heard by him, borne in mind, familiarised by speech, pondered over in the mind, well penetrated by right view.<sup>17</sup>

He dwells with stirred up energy<sup>18</sup> for getting rid of unskilled mental states, for acquiring skilled mental states, steadfast, firm in advance, persevering amid skilled mental states.

He is mindful,<sup>19</sup> possessed of the highest mindfulness and discrimination,<sup>20</sup> remembering, recollecting<sup>21</sup> what he has done and said long ago.

He is one of wisdom,<sup>22</sup> endowed with wisdom leading to (the cutting off of) rise and fall, with the ariyan penetration leading to the complete destruction of anguish.

It is thus, Mahānāma, that an ariyan disciple is possessed of the seven excellent things.

And how, Mahānāma, is an ariyan disciple one who acquires at will, without trouble, without difficulty, the four meditations which are of the purest mentality, abidings in ease here and now?<sup>23</sup>

As to this, Mahānāma, an ariyan disciple, aloof from pleasure of the senses, aloof from unskilled states of mind, enters and abides in the first meditation, which is accompanied by initial thought and discursive thought, is born of aloofness and is rapturous and joyful.

By allaying initial and discursive thought, with the mind subjectively tranquillised and fixed on one point, he enters and abides in the second meditation which is devoid of initial and discursive thought, is born of concentration and is rapturous and joyful ... he enters and abides in the third meditation ...

the fourth meditation.

It is thus, Mahānāma, that an ariyan disciple is one who acquires at will, without trouble, without difficulty, the four meditations which are of the purest mentality, abidings in ease here and now.

When, Mahānāma, an ariyan disciple is endowed with moral habit thus, is one who guards the doors of his sense-organs thus, is moderate in eating thus, is intent on vigilance thus, is endowed with the seven excellent things thus, is one who acquires thus at will, without trouble, without difficulty, the four meditations which are of purest mentality, abidings in ease here and now, then he, Mahānāma, is called an ariyan disciple who is on a learner's course, possessed of (mental) soundness, he becomes one for successful breaking through,<sup>24</sup> he becomes one for self-awakening, he becomes one for winning the matchless security from the bonds.

Mahānāma, it is as if there were eight or ten or a dozen hen's eggs, properly sat on, properly incubated, properly hatched by that hen; such a wish as this would not arise in that hen:

'O may my chicks, having pierced through the egg-shell with the point of the claw on their feet or with their beaks, break forth safely,' for these chicks were ones who were able to break forth safely having pierced the egg-shells with the point of the claw on their feet or with their beaks.

Even so, Mahānāma, when an ariyan disciple is endowed with moral habit thus, is one who guards the doors of his sense-organs thus,
is moderate in eating thus,
is intent on vigilance thus,
is endowed with the seven excellent things thus,
is one who acquires thus at will, without trouble, without difficulty the four meditations which are of the purest mentality, abidings in ease here and now, then he, Mahānāma, is called an ariyan disciple who is on a learner's course, possessed of (mental) soundness, he becomes one for successful breaking through, he becomes one for self-awakening, he because one for winning the matchless security from the bonds.

That ariyan disciple, Mahānāma, having come to this matchless purification through equanimity and mindfulness,<sup>25</sup> recollects a variety of former habitations, that is to say one birth, two births ...

Thus in all their mode and detail he recollects a variety of former habitations.

This is his first breaking through as a chick's from the egg-shell.

Then this ariyan disciple, Mahānāma, having come to this matchless purification through equanimity and mindfulness, with the purified deva-vision surpassing that of men, sees beings as they are passing hence and uprising, mean, excellent, comely, ugly, well-going, ill-going ...

he comprehends beings according to the consequences of deeds.

This is his second breaking through as a chick's from the egg-shell.

Then this ariyan disciple, Mahānāma, having come to this matchless purification through equanimity and mindfulness, by the destruction of the cankers having here-now realised by his own super-knowledge the freedom of mind and the freedom through intuitive wisdom that are cankerless, enters and abides therein.

This is his third breaking through as a chick's from the egg-shell.

Whatever ariyan disciple, Mahānāma, is possessed of moral habit, this is so of him in regard to conduct.<sup>26</sup>

And, Mahānāma, whatever ariyan disciple is guarded as to the doors of his sense-organs, this too is so of him in regard to conduct.

And, Mahānāma, whatever ariyan disciple is moderate in eating ...

is intent on vigilance ...

is possessed of the seven excellent things ...

acquires at will, without trouble, without difficulty, the four meditations that are of the purest mentality, abidings in ease here and now, this too is so of him in regard to conduct.

But, Mahānāma, whatever ariyan disciple in many a figure recollects his former habitations, that is to say one birth, two births ... that is so of him in regard to knowledge.<sup>27</sup>

And, Mahānāma, whatever ariyan disciple, by the purified deva-vision surpassing that of men, sees beings as they are passing hence and uprising, mean, excellent, comely ugly, well-going, ill-going ... who comprehends beings according to the consequences of deeds, this too is so of him in regard to knowledge.

And, Mahānāma, whatever ariyan disciple, by the destruction of the cankers, having realised here and now by his own super-knowledge the freedom of mind and the freedom through wisdom that are cankerless, enters and abides therein, this too is so of him in regard to knowledge.<sup>28</sup>

Mahānāma, this ariyan disciple is said to be possessed of knowledge and to be possessed of (right) conduct and to be possessed of knowledge and (right) conduct.

And, Mahānāma, this verse was spoken by Brahmā Ever-Young:<sup>29</sup>

"The noble warrior is best among those people who value clan;
He who is possessed of knowledge and (right) conduct is the best of devas and men."<sup>30</sup>

Mahānāma, this verse was rightly sung, not wrongly sung by Brahmā Ever-Young; it was rightly spoken, not wrongly spoken; it is connected with the goal, not connected with what is not the goal.

It is approved by the Lord."

Then the Lord, having risen, addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying:

"It is good, it is good, Ānanda; it is good that you, Ānanda, spoke on a learner's course to the Sakyans of Kapilavatthu."

Thus spoke the venerable Ānanda, the Teacher approving.

Delighted, the Sakyans of Kapilavatthu rejoiced in what the venerable Ānanda had said.

---

<sup>1</sup> S. iv. 182-3. At D. iii. 207 ff. the scene is laid among the Mallas of Pāvā.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. RV VIII. 17. 14, "Strong pillar thou, Lord of the home!"

<sup>3</sup> sabbasantharim santhāgāram santharivā. On santhata, p.p. of santharati, see B.D. ii. p. xxi ff.; and on v.11. of santharivā in this connection see D. iii, 208, n. 5. The reading should probably be santharāpetvā as in D.

<sup>4</sup> Ānanda was a learned expert in the three Piṭakas, and was able to speak of the three (parts of the) training by means of them: the Vinaya spoken for speaking of the higher morality, the Sutta-piṭaka for speaking of the higher thought, and the Abhidhamma-piṭaka for speaking of the higher wisdom,

MA. ii9i. 28. These three branches of the whole training are all mentioned in this Discourse.<sup>ed1</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Sekho pāṭipado. Cf. A. ii. 86 (bhikkhu sekkho hoti paṭipado, and where it would seem that pāṭi- is "the more correct," G.S. ii. 96, n. 2), and Iti. p. 80, (sāvako ... pi sekho).

<sup>6</sup> MA. iii. 29 says he was chief and head of the company at that time.

<sup>7</sup> saddhammehi; MA. iii. 29 reads sundaradhammehi sataṃ vā sappurisaṃ dhammehi. AA. iv. explains saddhammehi by suddhammehi. With this paragraph cf. A. iv. 108f.

<sup>8</sup> See M. i. 33.

<sup>9</sup> This phrase also at A. ii. 23, 36, etc. See P.T.C., s.v. abhicetasika.

<sup>10</sup> MA. iii. 29 refers to the āka<sup>o</sup>kheyya Sutta (M. Sta. 6), etc. See also M. Sta. 107.

<sup>11</sup> sīlavant. Cf. Sāmaññaphalasuttanta, §§ 43-62, each of which ends by saying: idaṃ pi 'ssa hot sīlasmiṃ, a phrase to be compared with idaṃ pi 'ssa hoti caraṇasmīṃ ... vijjāya, "this is so of him in regard to conduct ... knowledge" on p. 24 below.

<sup>12</sup> Cf. M. i. 180 (M.L.S. i. 226)

<sup>13</sup> As at M. i. 273

<sup>14</sup> As at M. i. 273.

<sup>15</sup> Cf. M. iii. 23; D. iii. 252, 282; A. iv. 108 ff.

<sup>16</sup> Cf. S. v. 196.

<sup>17</sup> Cf. M. iii. 11.

<sup>18</sup> Cf. M. ii. 95, S. v. 197, A. iii. 11, iv. 3, Ud. 37.

<sup>19</sup> Cf. S. v. 197, A. iii. 11.

<sup>20</sup> nepakka, see Vbh. 249.

<sup>21</sup> MA. iii. 30 distinguishes saying that saritā (remembering) is remembering once, anussaritā (recollecting) is remembering again and again.

<sup>22</sup> Cf. M. ii, 95.

<sup>23</sup> Cf. A. ii. 22f., iii. 131, iv. 108 ff.

<sup>24</sup> I.e. from ignorance to knowledge, from darkness to light. Cf. M. i. 104.

<sup>25</sup> In the fourth meditation. See also below, p. 31. [MN 54].

<sup>26</sup> caraṇa.

<sup>27</sup> vijjā. On vijjācaraṇa see A. ii. 163, v. 326 f.; and Vism. 202.

<sup>28</sup> Cf. the fifteen things (dhammā) given at Vism. 202 in its definition of caraṇa, "conduct," The implied idea of movement in the word caraṇa is also made explicit at Vism. 202: "these very fifteen things are those by which an ariyan disciple walks (carati, fares, moves) and goes to the deathless quarter." Cf. also the fifteen factors (aṅga) at M. i. 303, 304. The three knowledges are meant here according to MA. iii. 33, and also, as Vism. 202 notices, in the Bhayabheravasutta (M. Sta. 4), but eight are spoken of in the Ambatṭhasutta (D. i. 100.)

<sup>29</sup> Sanaṅkumāra. See Chānd. Up. Ch. VII.

<sup>30</sup> D. i. 99; iii. 97; S. i. 153, ii. 284; A. v. 327.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
1. Gahapati Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
1. The Division on Householders

54. Discourse to Potaliya

Potaliya Sutta

---

[359] [25]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Aṅguttarāpa.<sup>1</sup>

Āpaṇa<sup>2</sup> was a market town in Aṅguttarāpa.

Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
entered Āpaṇa for almsfood.

When he had walked for almsfood in Āpaṇa and was returning from the alms-gathering after the meal, he approached a certain forest-thicket for the day-sojourn;
and having plunged into that forest-thicket he sat down at the root of a tree.

And the householder Potaliya,<sup>3</sup> who was constantly pacing up and down and roaming about on foot, fully dressed<sup>4</sup> and clothed,<sup>4</sup> with parasol and slippers, approached that forest-thicket;
having plunged into that forest-thicket,
he approached the Lord;
having approached,
he exchanged greetings with the Lord;
having conversed in a friendly and courteous way,
he stood at a respectful distance.

Then the Lord spoke thus to the householder Potaliya
as he was standing at a respectful distance:

"There are seats, householder;
if you wish,
do sit down."

When this had been said,
the householder Potaliya
thinking:

"The recluse Gotama addresses me with the word 'householder',
angry,
displeased,
became silent.

And a second time
the Lord spoke thus to the householder Potaliya:

"There are [26] seats, householder;
if you wish,

do sit down."

And a second time
the householder Potaliya
thinking:

"The recluse Gotama addresses me
with the word 'householder',
angry,
displeased,
became silent.

And a third time
the Lord spoke thus to the householder Potaliya:

"There are seats, householder;
if you wish,
do sit down."

When this had been said,
the householder Potaliya
thinking:

"The recluse Gotama addresses me
with the word 'householder',
angry,
displeased,
spoke thus to the Lord:

"This,[360]good Gotama, is not proper, it is not suitable,
that you should address me
with the word 'householder.' "

"But you, householder, have all the characteristic marks and signs of a householder."

"But all relevant occupations have been abandoned by me, good Gotama, all avocations given up."

"But, householder,
how have all occupations been abandoned by you,
all avocations given up?"

"As to this, good Gotama, I handed over to my sons as their inheritance all that I had of wealth or grain
or silver
or gold.

Without giving advice or blame in these matters
I live on a minimum of food and covering.<sup>5</sup>

This is how all occupations have been abandoned by me, good Gotama,
all avocations given up."

"But what you, householder, call a giving up of avocations is one thing;
but in the discipline for an ariyan the giving up of avocations is another thing."

"And what, revered sir, is the giving up of avocations
in the discipline for an ariyan?"

It would be good, revered sir, if the Lord were to teach me dhamma as to that which is the giving up of avocations

in the discipline for an ariyan."

"Well then, householder, listen,
attend carefully
and I will speak."

"Yes, revered sir,"
the householder Potaliya answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Householder, these eight things conduce to the giving up of avocations in the discipline for an ariyan.<sup>6</sup>

What eight?

Through no onslaught on creatures,
onslaught on creatures should be got rid of;

through taking what is given,
taking what is not given should be got rid of;

through speaking truth,
lying speech should be got rid of;

through unslanderous speech,
slanderous speech should be got rid of;

through non-covetise and greed,
covetise and greed should be got rid of;

through no angry fault-finding,
angry fault-finding should be got [27] rid of;

through no wrathful rage,
wrathful rage should be got rid of;

through no arrogance,
arrogance should be got rid of.

These are the eight things, householder, spoken of in brief,
not explained in detail,
that, in the discipline for an ariyan,
conduce to the giving up of avocations."

"As to these eight things, revered sir, which are spoken of in brief,
not explained in detail,
and which, in the discipline for an ariyan,
conduce to the giving up of avocations,
it were good, revered sir,
if the Lord
out of compassion
were to explain these eight things to me in detail."

"Well then, householder, listen,
attend carefully
and I will speak."

"Yes, revered sir,"
the householder Potaliya answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

[361]"When I said:

'Through no onslaught on creatures, onslaught on creatures should be got rid of' -

in reference to what was this said?

As to this, householder,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'I am faring along
for getting rid of
and abandoning
those fetters of which onslaught on creatures might be a cause; for if I were to make onslaught on creatures,
not only would self upbraid me as a result of making onslaught on creatures, but intelligent men (also)
after scrutinising,
would blame me<sup>7</sup>
as a result of making onslaught on creatures;
and at the breaking up of the body after dying
a bad bourn would be expected
as a result of making onslaught on creatures.

This is indeed a fetter,
this is a hindrance,
that is to say onslaught on creatures.

But for one who refrains from onslaught on creatures there are not those destructive and consuming cankers<sup>8</sup> that might arise as a result of making onslaught on creatures.'

When I said:

'Through no onslaught on creatures, onslaught on creatures should be got rid of,'

it was said in reference to this."

■

"When I said:

'Through taking what is given,
taking what is not given should be got rid of' -

in reference to what was this said?

As to this, householder,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'I am faring along
for getting rid of
and abandoning
those fetters of which
taking what is not given might be a cause; for if I were to take what is not given,
not only would self upbraid me
as a result of taking what is not given,
but intelligent men (also)
after scrutinising,
would blame me
as a result of taking what is not given;
and at the breaking up of the body after dying
a bad bourn would be expected
as a result of taking what is not given.

This is indeed a fetter,
this is a hindrance,
that is to say taking what is not given.

But for one who refrains
from taking what is not given
there are not those destructive and consuming cankers
that might arise as a result of taking what is not given.'

When I said:

'Through taking what is given,
taking what is not given should be got rid of,'

it was said in reference to this."

■

"When I said:

'Through speaking truth,
lying speech should be got rid of' -

in reference to what was this said?

As to this, householder,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

I am faring along
for getting rid of
and abandoning
those fetters of which lying speech might be a cause; for if I were use lying speech,
not only would self upbraid me
as a result of using lying speech,
but intelligent men (also)
after scrutinising,
would blame me
as a result of using lying speech;
and at the breaking up of the body after dying
a bad bourn would be expected
as a result of using lying speech.

This is indeed a fetter,
this is a hindrance,
that is to say using lying speech.

But for one who refrains from using lying speech
there are not those destructive and consuming cankers
that might arise as a result of using lying speech.'

When I said:

'Through speaking truth,
lying speech should be got rid of,'

it was said in reference to this."

■

"When I said:

'Through unslanderous speech,
slanderous speech should be got rid of' -

in reference to what was this said?

As to this, householder,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'I am faring along
for getting rid of
and abandoning
those fetters of which
slanderous speech might be a cause; for if I were to use slanderous speech,
not only would self upbraid me
as a result of using slanderous speech,
but intelligent men (also)
after scrutinising,
would blame me
as a result of using slanderous speech;

and at the breaking up of the body after dying
a bad bourn would be expected
as a result of using slanderous speech.

This is indeed a fetter,
this is a hindrance,
that is to say using slanderous speech.

But for one who refrains from using slanderous speech
there are not those destructive and consuming cankers
that might arise as a result of using slanderous speech.'

When I said:

'Through unslanderous speech,
slanderous speech should be got rid of,'

it was said in reference to this."

■

"When I said:

'Through non-covetise and greed,
covetise and greed should be got rid of' -

in reference to what was this said?

As to this, householder,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'I am faring along
for getting rid of
and abandoning
those fetters of which

covetise and greed might be a cause; for if I were covetous and greedy,
not only would self upbraid me
as a result of covetise and greed,
but intelligent men (also)
after scrutinising,
would blame me
as a result of covetise and greed;
and at the breaking up of the body after dying
a bad bourn would be expected
as a result of covetise and greed.

This is indeed a fetter,
this is a hindrance,
that is to say covetise and greed.

But for one who refrains from covetise and greed
there are not those destructive and consuming cankers
that might arise as a result of covetise and greed.'

When I said:

'Through non-covetise and greed,
covetise and greed should be got rid of,'

it was said in reference to this."

■

"When I said:

'Through no angry fault-finding,
angry fault-finding should be got rid of' -

in reference to what was this said?

As to this, householder,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'I am faring along
for getting rid of
and abandoning
those fetters of which
angry fault-finding might be a cause; for if I were angry and fault-finding,
not only would self upbraid me
as a result of angry fault-finding,
but intelligent men (also)
after scrutinising,
would blame me
as a result of angry fault-finding;
and at the breaking up of the body after dying
a bad bourn would be expected
as a result of angry fault-finding.

This is indeed a fetter,
this is a hindrance,
that is to say angry fault-finding.

But for one who refrains from angry fault-finding
there are not those destructive and consuming cankers
that might arise as a result of angry fault-finding.'

When I said:

'Through no angry fault-finding,
angry fault-finding should be got rid of,'

it was said in reference to this."

■

"When I said:

'Through no wrathful rage,
wrathful rage should be got rid of' -

in reference to what was this said?

As to this, householder,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'I am faring along
for getting rid of
and abandoning
those fetters of which wrathful rage might be a cause; for if I were wrathful and enraged,
not only would self upbraid me
as a result of wrathful rage,
but intelligent men (also)
after scrutinising,
would blame me
as a result of wrathful rage;
and at the breaking up of the body after dying
a bad bourn would be expected
as a result of wrathful rage.

This is indeed a fetter,
this is a hindrance,
that is to say wrathful rage.

But for one who refrains
from wrathful rage
there are not those destructive and consuming cankers
that might arise as a result of wrathful rage.'

When I said:

'Through no wrathful rage,
wrathful rage should be got rid of,'

it was said in reference to this."

■

"When I said:

'Through no arrogance,
arrogance should be got rid of' -

in reference to what was this said?

As to this, householder,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

I am faring along
for getting rid of
and abandoning
those fetters of which arrogance might be a cause;
for if I were arrogant,
not only would self upbraid me
as a result of arrogance,
but intelligent men (also)
after scrutinising,
would blame me
as a result of arrogance;
and at the breaking up of the body after dying
a bad bourn would be expected
as a result of arrogance.

This is indeed a fetter,
this is a hindrance,
that is to say arrogance.

But for one who refrains
from arrogance
there are not those destructive and consuming cankers
that might arise as a result of arrogance.'

When I said:

'Through no arrogance,
arrogance should be got rid of,'

it was said in reference to this."

[364]"These, householder, are the eight things spoken of in brief, (now) explained in detail,
that, in the discipline for an ariyan,
conduce to the giving up of a vocations.

But not even yet
in the [28] discipline for an ariyan is there an entire giving up in every way
of all avocations."

"But how is it, revered sir,
in the discipline for an ariyan
there is an entire giving up in every way
of all avocations?

It were good, revered sir,
if the Lord were to teach me dhamma as to how,
in the discipline for an ariyan,
there is an entire giving up in every way
of all avocations."

"Well then, householder, listen,
attend carefully
and I will speak."

"Yes, revered sir,"
the householder Potaliya answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"It is, householder,
as if a dog,
overcome by hunger and exhaustion<sup>9</sup> were to happen on a slaughtering place for cows, and the skilled cattle-butcher there
or his apprentice
were to fling him a bone, scraped
and well scraped,
fleshless,
but with a smearing of blood.

What do you think about this, householder?

Could that dog,
gnawing such a bone,
scraped and well scraped,
fleshless,
but with a smearing of blood, appease his hunger and exhaustion?'

"No, revered sir.

What is the reason for this?

That bone, revered sir, is scraped and well scraped,
fleshless,
but although it has a smearing of blood, that dog would be worn out with fatigue or ever he got anything from it."

"Even so, householder,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'Pleasures of the senses
have been likened to a skeleton<sup>10</sup> by the Lord,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.'

And having seen this thus
as it really is
by means of perfect wisdom, having avoided<sup>11</sup> that which is equanimity in face of multiformity,<sup>12</sup>
resting on multiformity,
he develops that equanimity
which is equanimity in face of uniformity,
resting on uniformity,
wherein all graspings
after the material things of the world
are stopped entirely.

And, householder,
it is as if a vulture
or kite
or hawk
seizing a lump of flesh were to fly upwards,
and other vultures,
kites
and hawks
following hard after it were to tear at it and pull it to pieces.<sup>13</sup>

What do you think about this, householder?

If that vulture
or kite
or [29] hawk
were not to let go quickly of that lump of flesh,
would it, from that cause, come to death
or pain like unto death?"

"Yes, revered sir."

"Even so, householder,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'Pleasures of the senses
have been likened to a lump of flesh<sup>14</sup> by the Lord,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.'

And having seen this thus
as it really is
by means of perfect wisdom,
having avoided that which is equanimity in face of multiformity,
resting on multiformity,
he develops that equanimity
which is equanimity in face of uniformity,
resting on uniformity,
wherein all graspings
after the material things of the world
are stopped entirely.

And, householder,
it is as though a man might come along bringing a blazing grass torch<sup>15</sup> against the wind.

What do you think about this, householder?

If that man were not to let go quickly of that blazing grass torch, would it burn his hand or burn his arm or burn another part of his body
so that, from that cause,
he would come to death
or pain like unto death?"

"Yes, revered sir."

"Even so, householder,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'Pleasures of the senses
have been likened by the Lord to a grass torch,<sup>16</sup>
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.'

And having seen this thus
as it really is
by means of perfect wisdom,
having avoided that which is equanimity in face of multiformity,
resting on multiformity,
he develops that equanimity
which is equanimity in face of uniformity,
resting on uniformity,
wherein all graspings
after the material things of the world
are stopped entirely.

And, householder,
it is as if there might be a pit of glowing embers,

deeper than a man's height,
full of embers
that were neither flaming nor smoking,<sup>17</sup>
and a man might come along wanting to live,
not wanting to die,
wanting happiness,
recoiling from pain;
but two strong men,
having grasped hold of his arms, might drag him towards that pit of glowing embers.

What do you think about this, householder?

Would not that man twist his body this way and that?"<sup>18</sup>

"Yes, revered sir.

What is the reason for this?

Revered sir, that man realises:

'If I fall down into this pit of glowing embers, from that cause
I will come to death
or pain like unto death.'

"Even so, householder,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'Pleasures of the senses
have been likened by the Lord to a pit of glowing embers,<sup>19</sup>

of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril!

And having seen this thus
as it really is
by means of perfect wisdom,
having avoided that which is equanimity in face of multiformity,
resting on multiformity,
he develops that equanimity
which is equanimity in face of uniformity,
resting on uniformity,
wherein all graspings
after the material things of the world
are stopped entirely.

[30] And, householder,
it is as if a man might see in a dream delightful parks,
delightful woods,
delightful stretches of level ground and delightful lakes;
but on waking up
could see nothing.

Even so, householder,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'Pleasures of the senses
have been likened by the Lord
to a dream,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.'

And having seen this thus
as it really is
by means of perfect wisdom,
having avoided that which is equanimity in face of multiformity,
resting on multiformity,
he develops that equanimity
which is equanimity in face of uniformity,
resting on uniformity,
wherein all graspings
after the material things of the world
are stopped entirely.

And, householder,
it is as if a man,
having borrowed<sup>20</sup> a loan of wealth, [366]a fashionable<sup>21</sup> vehicle and splendid jewels and ear-ornaments, might go forth into the bazaar, honoured for his loan of wealth, surrounded by it,
so that people having seen him
might say:

'This man is indeed wealthy, and undoubtedly wealthy men enjoy their wealth thus!;

but the veritable owners, wherever they might, see him, might take away what was theirs.

What do you think about this, householder?

Would that man have had enough of being other (than what he is)?"

"Yes, revered sir.

What is the reason for this?

It is, revered sir,
that the veritable owners take away what is theirs."

"Even so, householder,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'Pleasures of the senses
have been likened by the Lord to what is borrowed,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.'

And having seen this thus
as it really is
by means of perfect wisdom,
having avoided that which is equanimity in face of multiformity,
resting on multiformity,
he develops that equanimity
which is equanimity in face of uniformity,
resting on uniformity,
wherein all graspings
after the material things of the world
are stopped entirely.

And, householder,
it is as if in a dense forest thicket not far from a village or a market town there might be a tree
laden with ripe fruit,
but with no fruit fallen to the ground;
and a man might come along

walking about and aiming at fruit,
seeking for fruit,
looking about for fruit;
having plunged into that forest thicket,
he might see that tree
laden with ripe fruit,
and it might occur to him:

'This tree is laden with ripe fruit,
but no fruit has fallen to the ground.

However, I know how to climb a tree.

Suppose that I,
having climbed this tree, should eat as much as I like
and should fill my clothes?

So he, having climbed that tree, might eat as much as he liked and might fill his clothes.<sup>22</sup>

Then a second man might come [31] along walking about and aiming at fruit,
seeking for fruit,
looking about for fruit,
and bringing a sharp axe.

Having plunged into that forest thicket,
he might see that tree
laden with ripe fruit,
and it might occur to him:

'This tree is laden with ripe fruit
but no fruit has fallen to the ground.

Now, I don't know how to climb a tree, so suppose that I,
having cut down this tree at the root,
should eat as much as I like
and should fill my clothes?

So he might cut down this tree at the root.

What do you think about this, householder?

Unless he came down very quickly, would not that tree in falling crush the hand or the foot or another part of the body of that man who had first climbed the tree, [367]so that, from that cause
he might come to death
or to pain like unto death?"

"Yes, revered sir."

"Even so, householder,
an ariyan disciple reflects thus:

'Pleasures of the senses
have been likened by the Lord
to the fruits of a tree,
of much pain,
of much tribulation,
wherein is more peril.'

And having seen this thus
as it really is
by means of perfect wisdom,
having avoided that which is equanimity in face of multiformity,
resting on multiformity,

he develops that equanimity
which is equanimity in face of uniformity,
resting on uniformity,
wherein all graspings
after the material things of the world
are stopped entirely.

This ariyan disciple, householder,
who has come to this matchless purification
through equanimity and mindfulness, recollects a variety of former habitations,
that is to say:

One birth,
two births,
three births,
four births,
five births,
ten births,
twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,
fifty births,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
and many an eon of integration
and many an eon of disintegration
and many an eon of integration-disintegration;
such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I came to be in another state
where such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I arose here.

Thus he remembers divers former abodes in all their modes and detail.

This ariyan disciple, householder,
who has come to this matchless purification
through equanimity and mindfulness,
with the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men, sees beings as they pass hence
or come to be;
he comprehends that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going,
according to the consequences of their deeds,
and he thinks:

Indeed these worthy beings
who were possessed of wrong conduct in body,
who were possessed of wrong conduct of speech,
who were possessed of wrong conduct of thought,
scoffers at the ariyans,
holding a wrong view,

incurring deeds consequent on a wrong view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

But these worthy beings
who were possessed of good conduct in body,
who were possessed of good conduct in speech,
who were possessed of good conduct in thought,
who did not scoff at the ariyans,
holding a right view,
incurring deeds consequent on a right view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

Thus with the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men
he sees beings as they pass hence
or come to be;
he comprehends that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going,
according to the consequences of their deeds.

This ariyan disciple, householder,
who has come to this matchless purification
through equanimity and mindfulness,
by the destruction of the cankers having here-now realised by his own super-knowledge
the freedom of mind

and the freedom through wisdom
that are cankerless,
enters and abides therein.

It is to this extent, householder,
that in the discipline for an ariyan
there is an entire giving up in every way
of all avocations.

What do you think about this, householder?

Do you behold in yourself
a giving up of avocations
such as is, in the discipline for an ariyan, an entire giving up in every way
of all avocations?"

"Who am I, revered sir, that there is an entire giving up
of all [32] avocations
in every way?

I, revered sir,
am far from the entire giving up in every way
of all avocations
according to the discipline for an ariyan.

For hitherto we, revered sir, deemed wanderers belonging to other sects to be superior
although they are inferior;
although they are inferior
we offered them food for superiors;
although they are inferior
we placed them
in places for superiors.

And we, revered sir,
deemed monks to be inferior
although they are superior;
although they are superior
we offered them food for inferiors;
although they are superior
we placed them in places for inferiors.

But now we, revered sir, [368]will know that wanderers belonging to other sects, being inferior,
are inferior;
because they are inferior
we will offer them food for inferiors;
because they are inferior
we will place them in places
for inferiors.

And we, revered sir,
will know that monks,
being superior,
are superior;
because they are superior
we will offer them food for superiors;
because they are superior
we will place them in places for superiors.

Indeed, revered sir,
the Lord has inspired in me a recluse's regard for recluses, a recluse's satisfaction in recluses, a recluse's reverence for recluses.

It is excellent, revered sir,
it is excellent, revered sir.

Revered sir, it is as if one might set upright
what had been upset,
or might disclose what what was covered,
or show the way
to one who had gone astray,
or bring an oil-lamp into the darkness so that those with vision might see material shapes - even so in many a figure has dhamma been made clear by the Lord.

I, revered sir,
am going to the Lord for refuge
and to dhamma
and to the Order of monks.

May the Lord accept me as a lay follower going for refuge
from this day forth
for as long as life lasts."

Discourse to Potaliya
The Fourth

---

<sup>1</sup> MA. iii. 34, Aṅga was a district. Not far north of the waters of the river Mahī, there was Uttarāpa. Aṅguttarāpa mentioned at M. i. 447, Vin. i. 243, Sn. p. 102.

<sup>2</sup> So called because it had many shops and bazaars, MA. iii. 37.

<sup>3</sup> He possibly became the wanderer Potaliya, of A. ii. 100 f.

<sup>4</sup> nivāsa and pāvuraṇa refer to putting on of different garments (or cloths), the former to the loin-cloth or under garment, and the latter to the shoulder-cloth or outer garment. MA. iii. 38 distinguishes between these two cloths (the attire of the ordinary Indian), and says the former had a long fringe.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. D. i. 60.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. M. iii. 29; Vin. iv. 2; D. iü. 232; A. ii. 246, iv. 307.

<sup>7</sup> attā pi māṃ upavadeyya anuvicca viññū garaheyyum; cf. A. i. 57, iii. 255, 267-8, all reading attā pi attānaṃ upavadati. See G.S. i. 52, n. 3 on anuvicca, translated above as "scrutinising," following MA. iii. 40 which explains by tulayitvā pariyogahetvā, having weighed, having scrutinised (or examined).

<sup>8</sup> MA. iii. 40-42 states which single canker arises, or which two or which three arise, out of the total of four, for each one of the eight things so long as these have not been extirpated.

<sup>9</sup> Cf. M. i. 114.

<sup>10</sup> Cf. M. i. 130. For the following things to which pleasures of the senses are likened, see B.D. iii. 22 f. (Vin. iv. 134} and notes.

<sup>11</sup> abkinivajjetvā, as at M. i. 111; D. iii. 113.

<sup>12</sup> Cf. M. iii. 220. "Multiformity" consists of the five sensual qualities, "uniformity" of the four jhānas, MA. iii. 43.

<sup>13</sup> Cf. Vin. iii. 105; S. ii. 255.

<sup>14</sup> Cf. M. i. 145.

<sup>15</sup> Cf. M. i. 128.

<sup>16</sup> Cf. S. ii. 152.

<sup>17</sup> Cf. M. i. 74.

<sup>18</sup> Aa at M. i. 507.

<sup>19</sup> Cf. D. iii. 283; S. iv. 188; A. iv. 224, v. 175; Sn. 396.

<sup>20</sup> Or, begged, yācivā. Trenekner suggests yāceyya, M. i. 574.

<sup>21</sup> poroseyya. P.E.D. rejects the derivation from purisa, as at MA. iii. 44, and says the word is derived from pura, a town. However, the text is corrupt here; see v.l. at M. i. 561, 574.

<sup>22</sup> ucchaṅga, used in a similar sense here and at Vin. i. 225. Probably meaning the man knotted his cloth garment so as to carry the fruit.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
1. Gahapati Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
1. The Division on Householders

55. Discourse to Jīvaka

Jīvaka Sutta

---

[368] [32]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying at Rājagaha in Jīvaka Komārabhacca's<sup>1</sup> Mango Grove.

Then Jīvaka Komāra- [33] bhacca approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to the Lord;

"This is what I have heard, revered sir: that they kill living creatures on purpose for the recluse Gotama, and that the recluse Gotama knowingly makes use of meat

killed on purpose
and specially provided for him.

Those who speak thus, revered sir:

'They kill living creatures on purpose for the recluse Gotama, and the recluse Gotama knowingly makes use of meat
killed on purpose
and specially provided for him' -

now, are these quoting the Lord's own words, revered sir, not misrepresenting the Lord
with what is not fact,
are they explaining in conformity with dhamma, and does no reasoned thesis<sup>2</sup> give occasion for contempt?"<sup>3</sup> [369] "Jivaka, those who speak thus:

'They kill living creatures on purpose for the recluse Gotama,
and the recluse Gotama knowingly makes use of meat
killed on purpose
and specially provided for him' -

these are not quoting my own words, but are misrepresenting me with what is not true,
with what is not fact.

I, Jivaka, say
that in three cases
meat may not be used:

if it is seen,
heard,
suspected
(to have been killed on purpose for a monk).

In these three cases I, Jīvaka, say that meat may not be used.

But I, Jīvaka, say
that in three cases
meat may be used:

if it is not seen,
heard,
suspected
(to have been killed on purpose for a monk).<sup>4</sup>

In these three cases I, Jīvaka, say that meat may be used.

As to this, Jīvaka,
a monk lives depending on a village or market town.<sup>5</sup>

He dwells having suffused the first quarter
with a mind of friendliness,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwells having suffused the whole world everywhere,
in every way,
with a mind of friendliness
that is far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

A householder
or a householder's son,
having approached him,
invites him to a meal on the morrow.

The monk accepts, Jīvaka,
if he so desires.

At the end of that night,
having dressed in the early morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
he approaches [34] the dwelling of that householder
or householder's son;
having approached,
he sits down on the appointed seat,
and the householder
or householder's son
waits on him with sumptuous almsfood.

It does not occur to him:

'Indeed it is good
that a householder
or a householder's son
waits on me with sumptuous almsfood.

O may a householder
or a householder's son
also wait on me in the future with similar sumptuous almsfood' -
this does not occur to him.

He makes use of that almsfood without being ensnared,
entranced
or enthralled by it,

but seeing the peril in it,
wise as to the escape.

What do you think about this,
Jīvaka?

Is that monk
at that time
striving for the hurt of self
or is he striving for the hurt of others or is he striving for the hurt of both?"

"Not this, revered sir."

"Is not that monk
at that time, Jīvaka,
eating food that is blameless?"

"Yes, revered sir.

I had heard this, revered sir:

Sublime is abiding in friendliness.!

The Lord is seen as my witness for this, revered sir, for the Lord is abiding in friendliness."<sup>6</sup>

"Jīvaka, that attachment,
that [370] aversion,
that confusion
through which there might be malevolence,
these have been got rid of by the Tathāgata,
cut off at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump
that can come to no further existence in the future.

If this is the meaning of what you said, Jīvaka,
I agree with you."

"This is the exact meaning of what I said, revered sir."

---

"As to this, Jīvaka,
a monk lives depending on a village
or market town.

He dwells having suffused the first quarter
with a mind of compassion,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwells having suffused the whole world everywhere,
in every way,
with a mind of compassion
that is far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

A householder
or a householder's son,
having approached him,
invites him to a meal on the morrow.

The monk accepts, Jīvaka,
if he so desires.

At the end of that night,
having dressed in the early morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
he approaches the dwelling of that householder
or householder's son;
having approached,
he sits down on the appointed seat,
and the householder
or householder's son
waits on him with sumptuous almsfood.

It does not occur to him:

'Indeed it is good
that a householder
or a householder's son
waits on me with sumptuous almsfood.

O may a householder
or a householder's son
also wait on me in the future
with similar sumptuous almsfood' -
this does not occur to him.

He makes use of that almsfood
without being ensnared,
entranced
or enthralled by it,
but seeing the peril in it,
wise as to the escape.

What do you think about this,
Jīvaka?

Is that monk
at that time
striving for the hurt of self
or is he striving for the hurt of others
or is he striving for the hurt of both?"

"Not this, revered sir."

"Is not that monk
at that time, Jīvaka,
eating food that is blameless?"

"Yes, revered sir.

I had heard this, revered sir:

Sublime is abiding in compassion!

The Lord is seen as my witness for this, revered sir, for the Lord is abiding in compassion."

"Jīvaka, that attachment,
that aversion,
that confusion
through which there might be malevolence,
these have been got rid of by the Tathāgata,
cut off at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump
that can come to no further existence in the future.

If this is the meaning of what you said, Jīvaka,
I agree with you."

"This is the exact meaning of what I said, revered sir."

---

"As to this, Jīvaka,
a monk lives depending on a village
or market town.

He dwells having suffused the first quarter
with a mind of sympathetic joy,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwells having suffused the whole world everywhere,
in every way,
with a mind of sympathetic joy
that is far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

A householder
or a householder's son,
having approached him,
invites him to a meal on the morrow.

The monk accepts, Jīvaka,
if he so desires.

At the end of that night,
having dressed in the early morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
he approaches the dwelling of that householder
or householder's son;

having approached,
he sits down on the appointed seat,
and the householder
or householder's son
waits on him with sumptuous almsfood.

It does not occur to him:

'Indeed it is good
that a householder
or a householder's son
waits on me with sumptuous almsfood.

O may a householder
or a householder's son
also wait on me in the future
with similar sumptuous almsfood' -
this does not occur to him.

He makes use of that almsfood
without being ensnared,
entranced
or enthralled by it,
but seeing the peril in it,
wise as to the escape.

What do you think about this,
Jīvaka?

Is that monk
at that time
striving for the hurt of self
or is he striving for the hurt of others
or is he striving for the hurt of both?"

"Not this, revered sir."

"Is not that monk
at that time, Jīvaka,
eating food that is blameless?"

"Yes, revered sir.

I had heard this, revered sir:

Sublime is abiding in sympathetic joy!

The Lord is seen as my witness for this, revered sir, for the Lord is abiding in sympathetic joy."

"Jīvaka, that attachment,
that aversion,
that confusion
through which there might be malevolence,
these have been got rid of by the Tathāgata,
cut off at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump
that can come to no further existence in the future.

If this is the meaning of what you said, Jīvaka,
I agree with you."

"This is the exact meaning of what I said, revered sir."

---

"As to this, Jīvaka,
a monk lives depending on a village
or market town.

He dwells having suffused the first quarter
with a mind of equanimity,
likewise the second,
likewise the third,
likewise the fourth;
just so above,
below,
across;
he dwells having suffused the whole world everywhere,
in every way,
with a mind of equanimity
that is far-reaching,
wide-spread,
immeasurable,
without enmity,
without malevolence.

A householder
or a householder's son,
having approached him,
invites him to a meal on the morrow.

The monk accepts, Jīvaka,
if he so desires.

At the end of that night,
having dressed in the early morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
he approaches the dwelling of that householder
or householder's son;
having approached,
he sits down on the appointed seat,
and the householder
or householder's son
waits on him with sumptuous almsfood.

It does not occur to him:

'Indeed it is good
that a householder
or a householder's son
waits on me with sumptuous almsfood.

O may a householder
or a householder's son
also wait on me in the future
with similar sumptuous almsfood' -
this does not occur to him.

He makes use of that almsfood
without being ensnared,
entranced
or enthralled by it,
but seeing the peril in it,
wise as to the escape.

What do you think about this,
Jīvaka?

Is that monk
at that time
striving for the hurt of self
or is he striving for the hurt of others
or is he striving for the hurt of both?"

"Not this, revered sir."

"Is not that monk
at that time, Jīvaka,
eating food that is blameless?"

[35] "Yes, revered sir.

I had heard this, revered sir:

Sublime is abiding in equanimity!

The Lord is seen as my witness for this, revered sir, for the Lord is abiding in equanimity."

"Jīvaka, that attachment,
that aversion,
that confusion
through which there might be annoyance, through which there might be dislike, through which there might be repugnance,
these have been got rid of by the Tathāgata,
cut off at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump
that can come to no further existence in the future.

If this is the meaning of what you said, Jīvaka,
I agree [371] with you."

"This is the exact meaning of what I said, revered sir."

"Jīvaka, he who kills a living creature on purpose for a Tathāgata
or a Tathāgata's disciple stores up much demerit in five ways:

In that, when he speaks thus:

'Go and fetch such and such a living creature,' in this first way

he stores up much demerit.

In that, while this living creature is being fetched it experiences pain and distress because of the affliction to its throat<sup>7</sup> - in this second way

he stores up much demerit.

In that, when he speaks thus:

'Go and kill that living creature' - in this third way

he stores up much demerit.

In that, while this living creature is being killed it experiences pain and distress, in this fourth way
he stores up much demerit.

In that, if he proffers to<sup>8</sup> a Tathāgata
or a Tathāgata's disciple what is not allowable,<sup>9</sup> in this fifth way
he stores up much demerit.

He who, Jīvaka, kills a living creature on purpose for a Tathāgata
or a Tathāgata's disciple stores up much demerit in these five ways."

When this had been said, Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to the Lord:

"It is wonderful, revered sir, it is marvellous, revered sir.

Indeed, revered sir,
the monks eat food that is allowable;
indeed, revered sir,
the monks eat food that is blameless.

It is excellent, revered sir,
it is excellent, revered sir.

It is as if, revered sir,
one might set upright what had been upset,
or might disclose what was covered,
or point out the way
to one who had gone astray,
or might bring an oil-lamp into the darkness
so that those with vision might see material shapes -
even so is dhamma made clear in many a figure by the Lord.

I am going to the Lord for refuge,
and to dhamma
and to the Order of monks.

May the Lord accept me as a lay-disciple
going for refuge
from this day forth
for as long as life lasts."

Discourse to Jīvaka:
The Fifth

---

<sup>1</sup> See Vin. i. 71 ff., 269 ff. Also B.D. iv. 381, n. 3. MA. iii. 45 says his name means "Prince-fed."

<sup>2</sup> vādānupāta here; some texts read vādānupāta.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. M. i. 482, ii. 127, 222, iii. 77; A. i. 161; D. i. 161, iii. 115; S. ii. 33, 36, iii. 6, iv. 51, 340, 381, v. 6.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Vin. i. 238, iii. 172.

<sup>5</sup> The next few paragraphs should be compared with A. i. 274 (Sutta 121); there are several interesting variations.

<sup>6</sup> Brahmā mettāvihārī ... bhagavā, hi mettāvihārī. Cf. Sn. 151, Khp. ix.: brahmam etaṃ vihāram idha-m-āhu, sublime is this abiding called here.

<sup>7</sup> galappavedhakena. MA. iii. 51 says: yottena gale bandhitvā kaḍḍhito galena pavedhenta (v.l. paveṭhiyamānena vā): having secured (or, bound) it with a thong (or, strap) round its throat, it is dragged along with agony (or, terror) in its throat.

<sup>8</sup> āsādeti. MA. iii. 51 gives kkādāpetva, having made to eat.

<sup>9</sup> akappiya, such as various kinds of meat named at MA. iii. 51. Other unallowable kinds are given at Vin. i. 218-219.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
1. Gahapati Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
1. The Division on Householders

56. Discourse with Upāli

Upāli Sutta

---

[371] [36]

Thus have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Nālandā in Pāvārika's<sup>1</sup> Mango Grove.

Now at that time Nātaputta the Jain was residing in Nālandā with a large company of Jains.

Then Dīghatapassin<sup>2</sup> the Jain, having walked in Nālandā for almsfood, returning from the alms-gathering after the meal, approached Pāvārika's Mango Grove and the Lord; [372] having approached, he exchanged greetings with the Lord; having conversed in a friendly and courteous way, he stood at a respectful distance.

The Lord spoke thus to Dīghatapassin the Jain as he was standing at a respectful distance:

"There are seats, Tapassin; if you wish, do sit down."

When this had been said, Dīghatapassin the Jain, having taken a low seat, sat down at a respectful distance.

The Lord spoke thus to Dīghatapassin the Jain as he was sitting down at a respectful distance:

"How many (kinds of) deeds, Tapassin, does Nātaputta the Jain lay down for the effecting of an evil deed, for the rolling on of an evil deed?"

"Friend Gotama, it is not the custom of Nātaputta the Jain to lay down 'deed, deed'; friend Gotama, it is the custom of Nātaputta the Jain to lay down 'wrong, wrong.'<sup>3</sup>

"How many (kinds of) wrongs, Tapassin, does Nātaputta the [37] Jain lay down for the effecting of an evil deed, for the rolling on of an evil deed?"

"Friend Gotama, Nātaputta the Jain lays down three (kinds of) wrongs for the effecting of an evil deed, for the rolling on of an evil deed, that is to say wrong of body, wrong of speech, wrong of mind."<sup>4</sup>

"But, Tapassin, is wrong of body one thing, wrong of speech another, wrong of mind another?"

"Friend Gotama, wrong of body is one thing, wrong of speech another, wrong of mind another."

"But, Tapassin, of these three wrongs thus divided, thus particularised, which is the wrong that Nātaputta the Jain lays down as the more blameable in the effecting of an evil deed, in the rolling on of an evil deed?"

Is it wrong of body or is it wrong of speech or is it wrong of mind?"

"Friend Gotama, of these three wrongs thus divided, thus particularised, Nātaputta the Jain lays down that wrong of body is the more blameable in the effecting of an evil deed, in the rolling on of an evil deed; wrong of speech is not like it, wrong of mind is not like it."

"Do you say 'wrong of body,' Tapassin?"

"I say 'wrong of body,' friend Gotama."

"Do you say 'wrong of body,' Tapassin?"

"I say 'wrong of body,' friend Gotama."

"Do you say 'wrong of body,' Tapassin?"

"I say 'wrong of body,' friend Gotama."

In this way did the Lord up to the third time pin down Dīghatapassin the Jain to this point of controversy.

[373] When this had been said, Dīghatapassin the Jain spoke thus to the Lord:

"But, friend Gotama, how many (kinds of) wrongs do you lay down for the effecting of an evil deed, for the rolling on of an evil deed?"

"Tapassin, it is not the custom of a Tathāgata to lay down 'wrong, wrong'; Tapassin, it is the custom for a Tathāgata to lay down 'deed, deed.'"

"But how many (kinds of) deeds do you lay down, friend Gotama, for the effecting of an evil deed, for the rolling on of an evil deed?"

"I, Tapassin, lay down three (kinds of) deeds for the effecting of an evil deed, for the rolling on of an evil deed, that is to say deed of body, deed of speech, deed of mind."

[38] "But, friend Gotama, is deed of body one thing, deed of speech another, deed of mind another?"

"Tapassin, deed of body is one thing, deed of speech another, deed of mind another."

"But, friend Gotama, of these three deeds thus divided, thus particularised, which deed do you lay down as the more blameable in the effecting of an evil deed, in the rolling on of an evil deed?

Is it deed of body or is it deed of speech or is it deed of mind?"

"Tapassin, of these three deeds thus divided, thus particularised, I lay down that deed of mind is the more blameable in the effecting of an evil deed, in the rolling on of an evil deed; deed of body is not like it, deed of speech is not like it."

"Do you say 'deed of mind,' friend Gotama?"

"I say 'deed of mind,' Tapassin."

"Do you say 'deed of mind,' friend Gotama?"

"I say 'deed of mind,' Tapassin."

"Do you say 'deed of mind,' friend Gotama?"

"I say 'deed of mind,' Tapassin."

In this way did Dīghatapassin the Jain, having up to the third time pinned down the Lord to the point of controversy, rising from his seat, approach Nātaputta the Jain.

Now at that time Nātaputta the Jain was sitting down together with a very large company of householders headed by Upāli of Bālaka village.<sup>5</sup>

Nātaputta the Jain saw Dīghatapassin the Jain coming in the distance; having seen him, he spoke thus to Dīghatapassin the Jain.

"Well, where are you coming from, Tapassin, in the heat of the day?"

"I, revered sir, am coming from the presence of the recluse Gotama."

"Now, did you, Tapassin, have any conversation together with the recluse Gotama?"

[374] "Indeed, revered sir, I did have some conversation with the recluse Gotama."

"On what topic, Tapassin, was there some conversation between you and the recluse Gotama?"

Then Dīghatapassin the Jain told Nātaputta the Jain the whole of the conversation he had had with the Lord.

When this had been said, Nātaputta the Jain spoke thus to Dīghatapassin the Jain:

"It is good, it is good, Tapassin, that the recluse Gotama was [39] answered thus by Dīghatapassin the Jain, an instructed disciple who understands aright the teacher's instruction.

For how can an insignificant wrong of mind shine out in comparison with this important<sup>6</sup> wrong of body, since wrong of body itself is the more blameable in the effecting of an evil deed, in the rolling on of an evil deed - wrong of speech is not like it, wrong of mind is not like it."

When this had been said, Upāli the householder spoke thus to Nātaputta the Jain:

"Good, revered sir, is Tapassin, he is good, in that the recluse Gotama was answered thus by the revered Tapassin, an instructed disciple who understands aright the teacher's instruction.

For how can an insignificant wrong of mind shine out in comparison with this important wrong of body since wrong of body itself is the more blameable in the effecting of an evil deed, in the rolling on of an evil deed - wrong of speech is not like it, wrong of mind is not like it.

But, if you please, I am going, revered sir, I will refute the words of the recluse Gotama on this point of controversy.

If the recluse Gotama pins me down as he pinned down the revered Tapassin, then as a strong man<sup>7</sup> who has taken hold of the fleece of a long-fleeced ram, might tug it towards him, might tug it backwards, might tug it forwards and backwards, even so will I, speech by speech, tug the recluse Gotama forwards, tug him backwards, tug him forwards and backwards.

And even as a powerful distiller of spirituous liquor, having sunk his cask for the spirituous liquor in a deep pool of water, taking it by a corner might tug it forwards, might tug it backwards, might tug it forwards and backwards, even so will I, speech by speech, tug the recluse Gotama forwards, tug him backwards, tug him forwards and backwards.

And even as a powerful drunkard of abandoned life, having taken hold of a hair-sieve at the corner, would shake it upwards, would shake it downwards, would toss it about, even so will I, speech by speech, [375] shake the recluse Gotama upwards, shake him downwards, toss him about.

And even as a full-grown elephant, sixty years old, having plunged into a deep tank, plays at the game called the 'merry-washing,' even so methinks will I play the game of 'merry-washing' with the recluse Gotama.

But, if you please, I am going, revered sir, I will refute the words of the recluse Gotama on this point of controversy."

"Go you, householder, refute the words of the recluse Gotama on [40] this point of controversy.

For, householder, either I or Dīghatapassin the Jain or you could refute the words of the recluse Gotama."

When this had been said, Dīghatapassin the Jain spoke thus to Nātaputta the Jain:

"I am not pleased, revered sir, that the householder Upāli should refute the words of the recluse Gotama.

For the recluse Gotama is deceitful, revered sir, he knows the 'enticing device' by which he entices disciples of other sects."<sup>8</sup>

"It is impossible, Tapassin, it cannot come to pass that the householder Upāli should come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama.

But this situation exists - that the recluse Gotama might come to discipleship under the householder Upāli.

Go you, householder, refute the words of the recluse Gotama on this point of controversy.

Either I, householder, could refute the recluse Gotama, or Dīghatapassin the Jain, or you."

And a second time...

And a third time did Dīghatapassin the Jain speak thus to Nātaputta the Jain:

"I am not pleased..."

"Either I, householder, could refute the recluse Gotama, or Dīghatapassin the Jain, or you."

"Very well, revered sir," and the householder Upāli, having answered Nātaputta the Jain in assent, rising from his seat, having greeted Nātaputta the Jain keeping his right side towards him, approached Pāvārika's Mango Grove [376] and the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the householder Upāli spoke thus to the Lord:

"Revered sir, did not Dīghatapassin the Jain come here?"

"Yes, householder, Dīghatapassin the Jain did come here."

"And did you, revered sir, have any conversation with Dīghatapassin the Jain?"

"Indeed, householder, I did have some conversation with Dīghatapassin the Jain."

"But on what topic did you, revered sir, have this conversation with Dīghatapassin the Jain?"

Then the Lord told the householder Upāli the whole of the conversation he had had with Dīghatapassin the Jain.

When this had been said, the householder Upāli spoke thus to the Lord:

"Good, revered sir, is Tapassin, he is good, in that the Lord was answered thus by Dīghatapassin the Jain, an instructed disciple who understands aright the teacher's instruction.

"If you, householder, were to speak as one grounded on the truth, there might be some conversation here."

"I, revered sir, will speak as one grounded on the truth.

Let us have some conversation here."

"What do you think about this, householder?"

There might be a Jain here who, although sick, suffering, very ill, refuses cold water<sup>9</sup> and takes (only) warm water; not getting cold water, he might pass away.

Now, householder, where is it that Nātaputta the Jain lays down that there is uprising for him?"

"Revered sir, there are devas called 'Mind attached.'<sup>10</sup>

He uprises there.

What is the reason for this?

It is, revered sir, that when he passed away he was devoted to mind."

"Householder, householder!

Take care how you explain, householder.

Your earlier (remarks) do not tally with your later, nor your later with your earlier.

And yet these words were spoken by you, householder:

'I, revered sir, will speak as one grounded on the truth.

Let us have some conversation here.'"

"Although, revered sir, the Lord speaks thus, yet wrong of body is the more blameable in the effecting of an evil deed, in the rolling on of an evil deed - wrong of speech is not like it, wrong of mind is not like it."

"What do you think about this, [377] householder?

There might be a Jain here who is controlled by the control of the fourfold watch:<sup>11</sup> he is wholly restrained in regard to water;<sup>12</sup> he is bent on warding off [42] all evil; he has shaken off all evil; he is permeated with the (warding off) of all evil - but while going out or returning he brings many small creatures to destruction.

What result, householder, does Nātaputta the Jain lay down for him?"

"Nātaputta the Jain, revered sir, lays down that, being unintentional, there is no great blame."

"But if he does intend it, householder?"

"It is of great blame, revered sir."

"In what (division<sup>13</sup>), householder does Nātaputta the Jain lay down 'intention'?"

"In that of wrong of mind, revered sir."

"Householder, householder!"

Take care how you explain, householder.

Your earlier (remarks) do not tally with your later, nor your later with your earlier.

And yet these words were spoken by you, householder:

'I, revered sir, will speak as one grounded on the truth.

Let us have some conversation here.'

"Although, revered sir, the Lord speaks thus, yet wrong of body is the more blameable in the effecting of an evil deed, in the rolling on of an evil deed - wrong of speech is not like it, wrong of mind is not like it."

"What do you think about this, householder?"

Is this Nālandā rich and wealthy, crowded and populous?"

"Yes, revered sir, this Nālandā is rich and wealthy, crowded and populous."

"What do you think about this, householder?"

A man might come here with a drawn sword<sup>14</sup> and speak thus:

'In a moment, in a second, I will make all the living creatures in this Nālandā into one heap of flesh, one mass of flesh.'

What do you think about this, householder?

Is that man able in one moment, one second, to make all the living creatures in this Nāḷandā into one heap of flesh, one mass of flesh?"<sup>15</sup>

"Even ten men, revered sir, even twenty, thirty, forty men, even fifty men are not able in one moment, one second, to make all the [43] living creatures in this Nāḷandā into one heap of flesh, one mass of flesh.

How then can one insignificant man shine out at this?"

"What do you think about this, householder?

A recluse or a brahman might come here, one of psychic power and attained to mastery of thought, and he might speak thus:

'I will reduce this Nāḷandā to cinders by one (act of) ill-will of mind.'

What do you think about this, householder?

Is that recluse or brahman who is of psychic power and attained to mastery of thought, able to reduce this Nāḷandā to cinders by one (act of) ill-will of mind?"

[378] "That recluse or brahman, revered sir, by one (act of) ill-will of mind is able to reduce even ten Nāḷandās to cinders, or even twenty, thirty, forty or fifty Nāḷandās.

How then can one insignificant Nāḷandā shine out at this?"

"Householder, householder!

Take care how you explain, householder.

Your earlier (remarks) do not tally with your later, nor your later with your earlier.

And yet these words were spoken by you, householder:

'I, revered sir, will speak as one grounded on the truth.

Let us have some conversation here."

"Although, revered sir, the Lord speaks thus, yet wrong of body is the more blameable in the effecting of an evil deed, in the rolling on of an evil deed - wrong of speech is not like it, wrong of mind is not like it."

"What do you think about this, householder?

Have you heard that the (former) forests of Daṇḍaka,<sup>16</sup> Kālinga,<sup>17</sup> Mejjha<sup>18</sup> and Mātanga<sup>19</sup> became forests again?"

"Yes, revered sir, I have heard that the (former) forests of Daṇḍaka, Kālinga, Mejjha and Mātanga became forests again."

"What do you think about this, householder?

Perhaps you have heard how it was that the (former) forests of Daṇḍaka, Kālinga, Mejjha and Mātanga became forests again?"

"Yes, revered sir, I have heard that through (an act of) ill-will of mind on the part of seers the forests of Daṇḍaka, Kālinga, Mejjha and Mātanga became forests again."

"Householder, householder!

Take care how you explain, householder.

Your earlier (remarks) do not tally with your later, nor your later with your earlier.

And yet these words were spoken by you, householder:

'I, revered sir, will speak as one grounded on the truth.

Let us have some conversation here."

[44] "I, revered sir, was pleased and satisfied<sup>20</sup> with the Lord's first illustration.

But because I wanted to hear the Lord's diversified ways of putting questions,<sup>21</sup> I judged that I must make myself his adversary.

It is excellent, revered sir; revered sir, it is excellent.

As, revered sir, one might set upright what had been upset, or disclose what had been covered, or show the way to one who had gone astray, or bring an oil-lamp into the darkness so that those with vision might see material shapes - even so in many a figure has dhamma been made clear by the Lord.

I, revered sir, am going to the Lord for refuge [379] and to dhamma and to the Order of monks.

May the Lord accept me as a lay-disciple going for refuge from today forth for as long as life lasts."

"Now, householder, make a proper investigation.

Proper investigation is right in the case of well-known men like yourself."<sup>22</sup>

"I, revered sir, am even exceedingly pleased and satisfied with that which the Lord has said to me:

'Now, householder, make a proper investigation ... like yourself.'

For if, revered sir, members of other sects had secured me as a disciple, they would have paraded a banner all round Nālandā, saying:

'The householder Upāli has joined our discipleship.'

But then the Lord spoke to me thus:

'Now, householder, make a proper investigation.

Proper investigation is right in the case of a well-known man like yourself.'

So I, revered sir, for the second time am going to the Lord for refuge and to dhamma and to the Order of monks.

May the Lord accept me as a lay-disciple going for refuge from today forth for as long as life lasts."

"For a long time, householder,<sup>23</sup> your family has been a well-spring to the Jains.

You will bethink you to give alms to those that approach you?"

"I, revered sir, am even exceedingly pleased and satisfied that the Lord speaks to me thus:

'For a long time ... to those that approach you?'

I have heard, revered sir, that the recluse Gotama speaks thus:

'Gifts should be given to me only, not to others should gifts be given.

Gifts should be given to my disciples only, not to the disciples of others should gifts be given.

What is given to me is alone of great fruit, what is given to others is not of great fruit.

What is given to my disciples is alone of great fruit, what is given to disciples of others is not of great fruit.'

But then the Lord urged [45] upon me giving to the Jains also.

Indeed, revered sir, we shall know the right time for that.

So I, revered sir, for the third time am going to the Lord for refuge and to dhamma and to the Order of monks.

May the Lord accept me as a lay-disciple going for refuge from today forth for as long as life lasts."

Then the Lord talked a progressive talk<sup>24</sup> to the householder Upāli, that is to say talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven; he explained the peril, the vanity, the depravity of pleasures of the senses, the advantage in renouncing them.

When the Lord knew that the mind of the householder Upāli [380] was ready, malleable, devoid of the hindrances, uplifted, pleased, then he explained to him that teaching on dhamma which the Awakened Ones have themselves discovered: ill, uprising, stopping, the Way.

And as a clean cloth without black specks will easily take dye, even so, as the householder Upāli was (sitting) there on that very seat, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to him that: whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop.

Then the householder Upāli, as one who had seen dhamma, attained to dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma, who had crossed over doubt, put away uncertainty, who had attained without another's help to full confidence in the Teacher's instruction, spoke thus to the Lord:

"Now, I, revered sir, must be going, I am very busy, there is much to be done."

"You, householder, must now do that for which you think it is the right time."

Then the householder Upāli, having rejoiced in what the Lord had said, having given thanks, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord keeping his right side towards him, approached his own dwelling; having approached, he said to the door-keeper:

"Today, good door-keeper, I am closing the door to men and women Jains; but the door is open to the Lord's monks, nuns, men and women lay-disciples.

If any Jain comes you should speak thus to him:

'Stand still, sir, do not enter.

Today the householder Upāli has come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama; the door is closed to Jain men and women, but the door is open to the Lord's monks, nuns, men and women lay-disciples.

If you, sir, need almsfood, stand still just where you are and they will bring it to you here.'

"Very well, sir," the door-keeper answered the householder Upāli in assent.

Then Dīghatapassin the Jain heard that the householder Upāli [46] had come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama.

Then Dīghatapassin the Jain approached Nātaputta the Jain; having approached he spoke thus to Nātaputta the Jain:

"I have heard, revered sir, that the householder Upāli has come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama."

"This is impossible, Tapassin, it cannot come to pass that the householder Upāli should come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama; but this situation exists: that the recluse Gotama might come to discipleship under the householder Upāli."

[381] And a second time ...

And a third time did Dīghatapassin the Jain speak thus to Nātaputta the Jain:

"I have heard, revered sir, that the householder Upāli has come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama."

"This is impossible, Tapassin, it cannot come to pass that the householder Upāli should come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama; but this situation exists: that the recluse Gotama might come to discipleship under the householder Upāli."

"If you please, revered sir, I am going to find out whether or not the householder Upāli has come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama."

"Do go, Tapassin, and find out whether or not the householder Upāli has come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama."

Then Dīghatapassin the Jain approached the dwelling of the householder Upāli.

The door-keeper saw Dīghatapassin the Jain coming in the distance; seeing him, he spoke thus to Dīghatapassin the Jain:

"Stand still, revered sir, do not enter.

Today the householder Upāli has come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama; the door is closed to Jain men and women, but the door is open to the Lord's monks, nuns, men and women lay-disciples.

If you, revered sir, need almsfood, stand still just where you are and they will bring it to you here."

Having said:

"Friend, I am not in need of almsfood," having turned back again, he approached Nātaputta the Jain; having approached, he spoke thus to Nātaputta the Jain:

"It is quite true, revered sir, that Upāli the householder has come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama.

As to that, I did not agree with you, revered sir, and I said:

"I am not pleased, revered sir, that the householder Upāli should refute the words of the recluse Gotama.

For the recluse Gotama is deceitful, revered sir, he knows the 'enticing device' by which he entices disciples of other sects.'

Now, revered sir, your householder Upāli has been enticed by the recluse Gotama by the 'enticing device.'"

[47] "This is impossible, Tapassin, it cannot come to pass that the householder Upāli should have come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama; but this situation exists: that the recluse Gotama might come to discipleship under the householder Upāli."

And a second time ...

And a third time Dīghatapassin the Jain spoke thus to Nātaputta the Jain:

"It is quite true, revered sir, that the householder Upāli has come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama.

[382] As to that, I did not agree with you, revered sir, and I said:

'I am not pleased, revered sir, that the householder Upāli should refute the words of the recluse Gotama ...'

Now, revered sir, your householder Upāli has been enticed by the recluse Gotama by the 'enticing device.'"

"This is impossible, Tapassin, it cannot come to pass that the householder Upāli should come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama; but this situation exists: that the recluse Gotama might come to discipleship under the householder Upāli.

But if you please, Tapassin, I am going to find out for myself whether or not the householder Upāli has come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama."

Then Nātaputta the Jain together with a great company of Jains approached the dwelling of the householder Upāli.

The door-keeper saw Nātaputta the Jain coming in the distance; seeing him, he spoke thus to Nātaputta the Jain:

"Stand still, revered sir, do not enter.

Today the householder Upāli has come to discipleship under the recluse Gotama; the door is closed to Jain men and women, but the door is open to the Lord's monks, nuns, men and women lay-disciples.

If you, revered sir, need almsfood, stand still just where you are and they will bring it to you here."

"Well then, good door-keeper, approach the householder Upāli; having approached, speak thus to the householder Upāli:

'Revered sir, Nātaputta the Jain is standing outside the porch of the door together with a large company of Jains, and he wishes to see you.'

"Very good, revered sir," and the door-keeper, having answered Nātaputta the Jain in assent, approached the householder Upāli; having approached, he spoke thus to the householder Upāli:

"Revered sir, Nātaputta the Jain ... wishes to see you."

"Well then, good door-keeper, make ready seats in the middle hall with a door."<sup>25</sup>

[48] "Yes, revered sir," and the door-keeper, having answered the householder Upāli in assent, having made ready seats in the middle hall with a door, approached the householder Upāli; having approached, he spoke thus to the householder Upāli:

"Those seats, revered sir, have been made ready in the middle hall with a door.

Do now that for which you think it is the right time."

Then the householder Upāli [383] approached the middle hall with a door; having approached and having sat down there on the chief and best, the choicest and finest seat, he summoned the door-keeper, and said:

"Well now, good door-keeper, approach Nātaputta the Jain; having approached, speak thus to Nātaputta the Jain:

'The householder Upāli, revered sir, says:

"Do come in if you wish, revered sir.'"

"Very good, revered sir," and the door-keeper having answered the householder Upāli in assent, approached Nātaputta the Jain; having approached, he spoke thus to Nātaputta the Jain:

"The householder Upāli, revered sir, says: 'Do come in if you wish, revered sir.'"

Then Nātaputta the Jain together with the large company of Jains approached the middle hall with a door.

Then the householder Upāli, who was there first, saw Nātaputta the Jain coming in the distance; having seen him and gone out to meet him, having with his upper cloth dusted the chief and best, the choicest and finest seat, having taken possession of it, he sat down on it himself; and now when he himself had sat down on the chief and best, the choicest and finest seat, he spoke thus to Nātaputta the Jain:

"There are seats, revered sir; do sit down if you wish."

When this had been said, Nātaputta the Jain spoke thus to the householder Upāli:

"You, householder, are out of your mind; you, householder, are idiotic.

Saying: 'I, revered sir, will refute the recluse Gotama', and having gone (to him), you have returned enmeshed in a great verbal tangle.<sup>26</sup>

Householder, as a man, a gelder, having gone away, might return with removed testicles, or as a man, a gouger, having gone away, might return with removed eyeballs, even so did you, householder, saying, 'I revered sir, will refute the recluse Gotama,' having gone (to him), returned enmeshed in a great verbal tangle.

You, householder, were enticed by the 'enticing device' of the recluse Gotama."

"Auspicious, revered sir, is this 'enticing device,' lovely, revered sir, is this 'enticing device.'

If, revered sir, my dear kith and kin [49] could be enticed by this 'enticing,' for long it would be for the welfare and happiness of my dear kith and kin.

And, revered sir, if all nobles could be enticed by this 'enticing,' for long it would be for the [384] welfare and happiness of all nobles also.

And, revered sir, if all brahmans ...

all merchants ...

all workers could be enticed by this 'enticing,' for long it would be for the welfare and happiness of all workers also.

And, revered sir, if the world, with its devas, its Māras, its Brahmās, creation with its recluses and brahmans, its devas and men, could be enticed by this 'enticing,' for long it would be for the welfare and happiness of this world with its devas its Māras, its Brahmās, of creation with its recluses and brahmans, its devas and men.

Well then, revered sir, I will make you a parable, for by a parable some intelligent persons here understand the meaning of what has been said.<sup>27</sup>

Once upon a time, revered sir, a certain brahman, worn, old, full of years, had a young brahman wife, pregnant and nearing her confinement.

Then, sir, that young brahman woman spoke thus to that brahman:

'Go you, brahman, having bought a young male monkey at a shop, bring him along so that he can be a playmate for my little boy.'

When this had been said, revered sir, that brahman spoke thus to that young brahman woman:

'Wait, my dear, until you have given birth.

If you, my dear, give birth to a little boy, then having bought a young male monkey at that shop, I will bring him along so that he can be a playmate for your little boy.

But if you, my dear, give birth to a little girl, having bought a young female monkey at that shop, I will bring her along so that she can be a playmate for your little girl.' And a second time ...

And a third time that young brahman woman spoke thus to that brahman:

'Go you, brahman, having bought a young male monkey at a shop, bring him along so that he can be a playmate for my little boy.'

Then, revered sir, that brahman, being passionately in love with that young brahman woman, having bought a young male monkey at that shop, and having brought him back, spoke thus to that young brahman woman:

'My dear, this is the young male monkey, bought for you at that shop, [385] and who has come to be a playmate for your little boy.'

When this had been said, revered sir, that young brahman woman said to that brahman:

'Do you go, brahman, and taking that young male monkey, approach Rattapāni, the dyer's son; having approached, speak thus to Rattapāni, the dyer's son:

'Good [50] Rattapāni, I want this young male monkey dyed a daubed yellow colour, thoroughly pressed all round,<sup>28</sup> and made smooth on each side.'

Then, revered sir, that brahman, being passionately in love with that young brahman woman, taking that young male monkey, approached Rattapāni, the dyer's son; having approached, he spoke thus to Rattapāni, the dyer's son:

'Good Rattapāni, I want this young male monkey dyed a daubed yellow colour, thoroughly pressed all round, and made smooth on each side.'

When this had been said, Rattapāni, the dyer's son, spoke thus to that brahman:

'Yes, sir, this young male monkey can take colouring, but he can't take pressing or smoothing.'

Even so, revered sir, is this doctrine<sup>29</sup> of the foolish Jains, for it takes colouring from fools but not from the wise,<sup>30</sup> it does not take (kindly) to examination, it does not take (kindly) to smoothing.

Then, revered sir, after a time that brahman, taking a new pair of garments, approached Rattapāni, the dyer's son; having approached, he spoke thus to Rattapāni, the dyer's son:

'Good Rattapāni, I want this new pair of garments dyed a daubed yellow colour, thoroughly pressed all round, and made smooth on each side.'

When this had been said, Rattapāni, the dyer's son, spoke thus to that brahman:

'Yes, sir, this new pair of garments of yours can take the colouring and it can take the pressing and it can take the smoothing.'

Even so, revered sir, is the doctrine of this Lord, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened One, for it takes its colouring from the wise, not from fools, and it takes (kindly) to examination and it takes (kindly) to smoothing."

"Householder, this company including the rulers know thus: Upāli the householder is a disciple of Nātaputta the Jain.

Householder, whose disciple do we understand you to be?"

When this had been said, the householder Upāli, rising from his seat, having arranged his upper cloth over one shoulder, [386] having saluted the Lord with joined palms, spoke thus to Nātaputta the Jain: "Well then, revered sir, hear whose disciple I am:

Of the wise,<sup>31</sup> whose confusion is gone, whose mental barrenness is split asunder,<sup>32</sup> who has won to victory, [51] Who is without ill,<sup>33</sup> of very even mind, of grown moral habit, of lovely wisdom,
The 'All-within,'<sup>34</sup> the stainless - of this Lord the disciple am I.

Of him who has no doubts, rejoicing, the material things of the world renounced,<sup>35</sup> of joyful sympathy,
Who is a recluse, a human being, in his last body, a man,
The peerless, the dustless - of this Lord the disciple am I.

Of him who is sure, skilled, the leader away,<sup>36</sup> the excellent charioteer,
The matchless, the shining, of no incertitude,<sup>37</sup> bringing light, Breaking pride, the hero<sup>38</sup> - of this Lord the disciple am I.

Of the noblest of men, immeasurable, deep,<sup>39</sup> won to knowledge,<sup>40</sup>
Bringer of security, a knower,<sup>41</sup> on dhamma standing, self-controlled,
Who has gone beyond attachment, who is freed - of this Lord the disciple am I.

Of the supreme one,<sup>42</sup> whose lodgings are remote, who has destroyed the fetters, who is freed,
Who speaks amiably, who is purified, the flag laid low,<sup>43</sup> passionless, Tamed, without impediments<sup>44</sup> - of this Lord the disciple am I.

[52] Of the seventh seer,<sup>45</sup> trust gone,<sup>46</sup> of threefold wisdom, Brahma-attained,<sup>47</sup>

Washen, skilled in the lines,<sup>48</sup> tranquil, who discovered knowledge.

Breaker of the citadel, Sakka<sup>49</sup> - of this Lord the disciple am I.

Of the pure one, whose self is developed, who has attained the attainable,<sup>50</sup> the expounder,

The one with recollection, whose vision is clear,<sup>51</sup> not bent on passion,<sup>52</sup> without hatred, Impassible, attained to mastery - of this Lord the disciple am I.

[53] Of him who has gone to the highest, the meditator, inwardly unobstructed,<sup>53</sup> cleansed,

The unattached, the unaiming,<sup>54</sup> the aloof, the attainer of the highest,

The crossed over, the helper across - of this Lord the disciple am I.

Of the calmed, the one of extensive wisdom, of great wisdom, without greed,<sup>55</sup>

The Tathāgata, the Well-farer, incomparable person, unequalled,

The confident, the accomplished - of this Lord the disciple am I.

Of the cutter off of craving, the Awakened One, obscurity gone,<sup>56</sup> unstained,

Worthy of offerings, the yakkha,<sup>57</sup> the best of persons, beyond measure,<sup>58</sup>

Great, attained to the height of glory - of this Lord the disciple am I."

"But when were these splendours of the recluse Gotama collected<sup>59</sup> by you, householder?"

"Revered sir, it is as if there were a great heap of flowers, of different flowers,<sup>60</sup> [387] which a clever garland-maker or his apprentice might string into a variegated garland; even so, revered sir, this Lord has many splendours, many hundreds of splendours.

And who, revered sir, would not give praise<sup>61</sup> to one deserving praise?"

[54] But because Nātaputta the Jain could not bear the eulogy of the Lord, then and there hot blood issued from his mouth.<sup>62</sup>

Discourse with Upāli: The Sixth

---

<sup>1</sup> He was a merchant who apparently sold mantles (pāvāra) in pairs. Hence he was also called Dussapāvārika, MT. iii. 52; DA. ii. 873; SA. iii. 207.

<sup>2</sup> This name means "The one of long austerity."

<sup>3</sup> daṇḍa, stem of a tree; stick and so penalty. P.E.D. says that in the above passage it is "(fig) a means of frightening, frightfulness, violence, teasing"; and under mano- it suggests "mind-punishment." Chalmers has "infliction"; H. Jacobi "torment" (S.B.E. xxii. p. 7); Neumann "Streich," blow (vol. ii, p. 54, n.). In the present context the word appears to mean affliction, injury, hurt, wrong done. Sometimes of course it means punishment or penalty. Cf. Dhp. 133 paṭidaṇḍa, retaliation, or exchange-blows. See Manu xii, 10: "That man is called a (true) tridaṇḍin in whose mind these three: control over his speech (vāgdaṇḍa), control over his thought (manodaṇḍa) and control over his body (kāyadaṇḍa) are firmly fixed." Here then daṇḍa appears to mean "restraint," which Monier-Williams gives for this passage. MA. iii. 52 says that the Jain idea is that kāya- and vacī-daṇḍa are without citta (present in manodaṇḍa), so that they just stir and sound like trees in the wind.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. SnA 63, Nd. ii. 293 where daṇḍa, a synonym for duccarita, wrong behaviour in body, speech and thought, afflicts and injures and brings to trouble and distress.

<sup>5</sup> Bālakiniyā see D.P.P.N.

<sup>6</sup> olārika, here the opposite of chava, "insignificant"; explained by mahanta, "great," at MA. iii. 55.

<sup>7</sup> As at M. i. 228 for the following similes.

<sup>8</sup> As at A. ii. 190.

<sup>9</sup> MA. iii. 57, "Jains are aware that there are conscious beings" in cold water.

<sup>10</sup> Manosattā; beings who depend on, hang on (laggā, laggitā) mind, MA. iii. 57; satta is here p.p. of sajjati.

<sup>11</sup> See D. i. 57; Dial. i. 75, n. 1. Referred to at S. i. 66. The Buddhist fourfold watch is given at D. iii. 48 f., MA. iii. 58; see K.S. i. 91.

<sup>12</sup> sabba-vāri-vārito. MA. iii. 58 gives two meanings: either vārita-sabba-udaka, he is restrained in regard to all water; or sabbena pāpavāraṇena vārita-pāpo, evil is restrained by the total warding off of evil. DA. i. 168, SA. i. 126-127 omit the second alternative, but speak, of evil in connection with the three remaining "watches," controls or restraints, which read: sabbavāriyuto sabbavāridhuto sabbavāriphuṭo. It would seem that MA. iii. 58 means "the total warding off of evil" of its second alternative to the first clause to include the use of (unfiltered) water, in which there would still be small living things. A.L. Basham, History of the Ājīvīkas, p. 16, translating: "He practices restraint with regard to water, he avoids all sin, by avoiding sin his sins are washed away, he is filled with the sense of all sin avoided," remarks that this is a "doubtful Interpretation on the basis of Buddhaghosa." See also Āyāraṅga Sutta, I. 13 (translation at S.B.E. XXII).

<sup>13</sup> koṭṭhāsa, MA. iii. 58.

<sup>14</sup> ukkhittāsika, as at S. iv. 173.

<sup>15</sup> As at M. i. 404; D. i. 52.

<sup>16</sup> Jā. iii. 463, v. 133 ff., 267; Miln. 130.

<sup>17</sup> Jā. v. 144; Miln. 130.

<sup>18</sup> Jā. iv. 389, v. 267; Miln. 130.

<sup>19</sup> Jā. v. 114, 267; Miln. 130. Also known as Mejjhārañña; cf. Jā. iv. 388f.

<sup>20</sup> Following passage also at D. ii. 352.

<sup>21</sup> pañhapapaṭibhāna, as at M. i. 83.

<sup>22</sup> As at Vin. i. 236; A. iv. 185.

<sup>23</sup> Following passage at Vin. i. 236 f. (Sīha the general). And see Dial. i. 177, n. 3 for further references.

<sup>24</sup> As at Vin. i. 15-16, etc. See B.D. iv. 23, n. 1 for further references.

<sup>25</sup> MA. iii. 93 says that if a house has seven porches the middle one is the fourth; if five porches the middle one is the third; if three porches, then the second porch with a door is called the middle hall with a door. Cf. below, p. 266.

<sup>26</sup> vadasaṅghāṭapaṭimukka. Cf. tanhāsaṅghāṭapaṭimukka at M. i. 271.

<sup>27</sup> As at M. i. 148.

<sup>28</sup> Said of a robe, below, and at S. ii. 282.

<sup>29</sup> vāda.

<sup>30</sup> MA. iii. 95 says that neither the doctrine of the Jains nor another useless way of speaking is liked in the (Mahā) Bhārata and the Rāmāyana, and so on.

<sup>31</sup> dhīra. MA. iii. 96 equates this with paṇḍicca, paṇḍita.

<sup>32</sup> Cf. M. Sta. 16.

<sup>33</sup> anigha. MA. iii. 96 says niddukkha; cf. Jā. iii. 443; PvA. 230; DhA. iii. 454; UdA. 370. A different explanation is given at SnA i. 26.

<sup>34</sup> vessantara, occurring also at It. p. 32 (vissantara). MA. iii. 96 explains as "poised, having crossed the unevenness (v.l. visa, poison) of passion, etc." See Min. Anth. II. 139, n. 1.

<sup>35</sup> vantalokāmisā, as at Dhp. 378. The lokāmisā are identified at MA. iii. 97 with kāmaguṇa, as in the Nivāpa Sutta (M. Sta. 25).

<sup>36</sup> venayika, the averter, or diverter of passions, etc., or as at MA. iii. 97 the one who disciplines beings. Used in a derogatory sense of "the recluse Gotama" at M. i. 140.

<sup>37</sup> nikkaṅkha, as at S. ii. 84.

<sup>38</sup> vīra. MA. iii. 97 reads virīya, energy.

<sup>39</sup> Cf. M. i. 487 where the Tathāgata is deep (or unfathomable) and immeasurable as the great ocean.

<sup>40</sup> monapattassā ti ñāṇaṃ pattassa, MA. iii. 97.

<sup>41</sup> veda. This may mean that he is Knowledge itself. MA. iii. 97 says vedo vuccati ñāṇaṃ.

<sup>42</sup> nāga, supreme in his solitude, far from evil; cf. S. i. 28.

<sup>43</sup> pannadhaja; cf. M. i. 139, A. iii. 84. One whose fight is over.

<sup>44</sup> nippapañca; cf. Dh. 254; M. i. 65.

<sup>45</sup> MA. iii. 97 says that of the six seers (Buddhas) who have arisen since Vipassin, he is the seventh. Cf. Sn. 356; S. i. 192; Thag. 1240. Fur. Dial. i. 277, n. refers us to Dīgha Sutta 14 for a pioneer list of seven Buddhas

"amplified later (Jā. i. 44) by inventing eighteen extra predecessors for Gotama, so that he became the twenty-fifth." Cf. SnA i. 351 and Budv.

<sup>46</sup> Sn. 957. Cf. "Go not by hearsay" in the discourse to the Kālāmas.

<sup>47</sup> Brahmapattassa. Cf. D. iii. 84, It. p. 57, etc., brahmabhūta.

<sup>48</sup> Cf. D. i. 88; A. i. 163; M. ii. 133 where the word padaka occurs among the items of a brahman's knowledge. MA. iii. 98 says, "having supplied the syllables, he is skilled in making verses and lines (pada)." On pada, a line, see B.D. ii. 190 f. where it refers to a line of dhamma; and as such I take it here. But I also suggest that padaka has a reference to the Tathāgata's footprints as in M. Sutta 27.

<sup>49</sup> purindada Sakka. MA. iii. 98 takes these as separate terms, the former meaning the bestower of the gift of dhamma; and the latter "able, strong, capable" (samattha) which of course is one meaning of sakka. But purindada is also an epithet of Sakka, and Sakka = Indra. cf. S. i. 230 where purindada is explained as "giver from town to town." A.K. Coomaraswamy, Hinduism and Buddhism, p. 76 says "insofar as the Buddha's 'life' and deeds are described, it is the doings of Brahma as Agni and Indra that are being retold," and see loc. cit. n. 256, where A.K. C. says that "in M. i. 386 the Buddha seems to be addressed as Indra." At Budv. xvi. 9 the Buddha says that in the time of the Buddha Dhammadassin he was Sakka purindada. See also C.E. Godage, The Place of Indra in Early Buddhism, p. 40: Purindada is a distortion of Vedic Purāṁdara (fort-shatterer), when the clouds were fortresses. To shatter the clouds means to obtain the life-giving rains (cf. MV. I. 102. 7). Siva (Rudra) is Tripurāntaka, he who puts an end to the three towns (built in the earth, the middle space and the firmament by a tyrant-demon, asura). See Indo-Aryan Mythology, vol. I, pp. 34, 248, 353, 376, 379, 384.

<sup>50</sup> pattipatta, as at Sn. 536; It. p. 32. MA. iii. 98, "who has attained those excellent things that must be attained, pattabbā."

<sup>51</sup> Cf. Sn. 349; A. iv. 244, vipassin.

<sup>52</sup> Both P.E.D. and C.P.D. translate anabhinata as above. MA. iii. 98 explains by arahatta.

<sup>53</sup> ananugatantara. MA. iii. 98 refers this to the unobstruction of the mind by the kilesas.

<sup>54</sup> appahīna. No comment at MA. iii. 98. C.P.D. refers the word in this passage to appaṇihita, aimless, not bent on anything; and s.v. appabhīta (not terrified) gives this as Siamese conjecture (?) for the appahīna of this passage. I think the corruption, whatever it is, is due to a confusion of thought between (1) being unattached (to pleasures) and not aiming at them or directing the mind towards them, and (2) not being terrified, because of being aloof from them.

<sup>55</sup> I.e. without greed for the five sensory pleasures.

<sup>56</sup> vītadhūma, without smoke.

<sup>57</sup> spirit, as in Sn. 478, 876, yakkhassa suddhi, "the cleansing of the spirit."

<sup>58</sup> atula, which cannot be weighed, imponderable.

<sup>59</sup> saññūḷha cf. D. ii. 267.

<sup>60</sup> Cf. Miln. 347.

<sup>61</sup> "Splendour" and "praise" are both vaṇṇa.

<sup>62</sup> MA. iii. 99-100 says that he fell down, was taken outside the town on a litter and then on to Pāvā, where he died, for few beings are able to live after discharging blood. According to the tradition here, Nigaṇṭha Nātaputta predeceased Gotama. M. Sta. 104 and D. Sta. 29, 33 all also agree that he died at Pāvā while Gotama was alive, but they do not agree upon where Gotama was at the time of Nātaputta's death.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
1. Gahapati Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
1. The Division on Householders

57. Discourse on the Canine Ascetic

Kukkura-Vatika Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying among the Koḷiyans; the market town of the Koḷiyans was called Haliddavasana.<sup>1</sup>

Then Puṇṇa, a Koḷiyan who was a bovine ascetic,<sup>2</sup> and Seniya who was an unclothed canine ascetic,<sup>3</sup>
approached the Lord;
having approached,
Puṇṇa, the Koḷiyan who was the bovine ascetic, after greeting the Lord,
sat down at a respectful distance.

But Seniya the unclothed canine ascetic, having exchanged greetings with the Lord and conversed in a friendly and courteous way,

sat down at a respectful distance doubling up like a dog.<sup>4</sup>

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Puṇṇa, the Koliyan,
the bovine ascetic,
spoke thus to the Lord:

[55] "Revered sir, this Seniya,
an unclothed canine ascetic,
is a doer of things hard to do -
he eats lying on the ground,
a canine practice
which has been carried out in full by him
for a long time.

What is his bourn,<sup>5</sup> what his future state?"

"Enough, Puṇṇa,
let this be,
do not ask me this."

And a second time Puṇṇa, the Koliyan,
the bovine ascetic,
spoke thus to the Lord:

"Revered sir, this Seniya,
an unclothed canine ascetic,
is a doer of things hard to do -
he eats lying on the ground,
a canine practice
which has been carried out in full by him
for a long time.

What is his bourn, what his future state?"

[And a second time the Lord responded]:

"Enough, Puṇṇa,
let this be,
do not ask me this."

And a third time Puṇṇa, the Koḷiyan,
the bovine ascetic,
spoke thus to the Lord:

"Revered sir, this Seniya,
an unclothed canine ascetic,
is a doer of things hard to do -
he eats lying on the ground,
a canine practice
which has been carried out in full by him
for a long time.

What is his bourn, what his future state?"

"Although I, Puṇṇa,
did not really countenance your (question) and said:
'Enough, Puṇṇa,
let this be,
do not ask me this,'
nevertheless I will explain to you.

Here, Puṇṇa,
someone develops the canine practice completely and constantly, he develops the canine habits<sup>6</sup> completely and constantly, he develops the canine mentality completely and constantly, he develops the canine behaviour<sup>7</sup> completely and constantly.

Having developed the canine practice completely and constantly, having developed the canine habits completely and constantly, having developed the canine mentality completely and constantly, having developed the canine behaviour completely and constantly,

he, on the breaking up of the body after dying, arises in companionship with dogs.

But if he should have a view like this:

'I, through this habit
or practice
or austerity
or chastity,<sup>8</sup> will become a deva<sup>9</sup> or a (lesser) deva'.<sup>10</sup> -

that is a wrong view on his part.

I, Puṇṇa, say that there is one of two bourns for one of wrong view:
either Niraya Hell or animal birth.

So it is, Puṇṇa,
that the canine practice,
on prospering,
leads to companionship with dogs,
on failing,
to Niraya Hell."

When this had been said, Seniya the unclothed canine ascetic cried out and burst into tears.

Then the Lord spoke thus to Puṇṇa, the Koliyan,
the bovine ascetic:

"I did not countenance this (question) of yours, Puṇṇa,
(so) I said:
'Enough, Puṇṇa,
let this be,
do not ask me this.'"

"I, revered sir,
am not crying because the Lord speaks thus about me.

It is, revered sir,
because this canine practice has been carried [56] out in full by me for a long time.

Revered sir, this Puṇṇa, the Koḷiyan
is a bovine ascetic,
and the bovine practice
has been carried out in full by him
for a long time.

What is his bourn, what his future state?"

"Enough, Seniya, let this be, do not ask me this."

And a second time Seniya the unclothed canine ascetic spoke thus to the Lord:

Revered sir, this Puṇṇa, the Koḷiyan
is a bovine ascetic,
and the bovine practice
has been carried out in full by him
for a long time.

What is his bourn, what his future state?"

[And a second time the Lord responded]:

"Enough, Seniya, let this be, do not ask me this."

And a third time Seniya the unclothed canine ascetic spoke thus to the Lord:

Revered sir, this Puṇṇa, the Koḷiyan
is a bovine ascetic,
and the bovine practice

has been carried out in full by him
for a long time.

What is his bourn, what his future state?'

"Although, Seniya, I did not really countenance your (question) and said:

'Enough, Seniya, let this be, do not ask me this,'
nevertheless I will explain to you.

Here, Seniya,
someone develops the bovine practice completely and constantly, he develops the bovine habits completely and constantly, he develops the bovine mentality completely and constantly, he develops the bovine behaviour completely and constantly.

Having developed the bovine practice completely and constantly, having developed the bovine habits completely and constantly, having developed the bovine mentality completely and constantly, having developed the bovine behaviour completely and constantly, he,
on the breaking up of the body after dying, arises in companionship with cattle.

But if he should have a view like this:

'I, through this habit
or practice
or austerity
or chastity,
will become a deva
or a (lesser) deva' -
that is a wrong view on his part.

I, Seniya, say that there is one of two bourns for one of wrong view:
either Niraya Hell or animal birth.

So it is, Seniya,
that the bovine practice,
on prospering,
leads to companionship with cattle,
on failing,
to Niraya Hell."

When this had been said,
Puṇṇa, the Koḷiyan,
the bovine ascetic,
cried out and burst into tears.

Then the Lord spoke thus to Seniya, the unclothed canine ascetic:

"I did not countenance this (question) of yours, Seniya,
(so) I said:
'Enough, Seniya, let this be, do not ask me this.'"

"I, revered sir, am not crying because the Lord speaks thus about me.

It is, revered sir,
because this bovine practice has been carried out in full by me for a long time.

Revered sir, I have trust<sup>11</sup> in the Lord thus:

The Lord is able so to teach dhamma that I might give up this bovine practice, and Seniya the unclothed canine ascetic might give up that canine practice."

"Well then, Puṇṇa, listen,
pay careful attention,
and I will speak."

"Yes, revered sir," Puṇṇa, the Koliyan,
the bovine ascetic,
answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

[57] "Puṇṇa, these four (kinds of) deeds<sup>12</sup> are made known by me, having realised them by my own super-knowledge.

What four?

There is, Puṇṇa,
the deed that is dark,
dark in result.

There is, Puṇṇa,
the deed that is bright,
bright in result.

There is, Puṇṇa,
the deed that is dark and bright,
dark and bright in result.

There is, Puṇṇa,
the deed that is not dark (and) not bright, neither dark nor bright in result, the deed that conduces to the destruction of deeds.<sup>13</sup>

And what, Puṇṇa,
is the deed that is dark,
dark in result?

As to this, Puṇṇa,
someone effects<sup>14</sup> an activity of body<sup>15</sup> that is harmful, he effects an activity of speech that is harmful, he effects an activity of mind that is harmful.

He, having effected an activity of body that is harmful, having effected an activity of speech that is harmful, having effected an activity of mind that is harmful, arises in a world that is harmful.

Because he has arisen in a world that is harmful, harmful sensory impingements assail him.

He, being assailed by harmful sensory impingements, experiences a harmful feeling,
without exception painful, even as do creatures in Niraya Hell.

In this way,<sup>16</sup>Puṇṇa, there is the uprising of a being from what has come to be<sup>17</sup>; he arises according to what he does<sup>18</sup>;
when he has arisen
sensory impingements assail him.

So I speak thus, Puṇṇa,:
Creatures are heirs to deeds.<sup>19</sup>

This, Puṇṇa, is called
the deed that is dark,
dark in result.

And what, Puṇṇa,
is the deed that is bright,
bright in result?

As to this, Puṇṇa,
someone effects an activity of body that is harmless, effects an activity of speech that is harmless, effects an activity of mind that is harmless.

He, having effected an activity of body that is harmless, having effected an activity of speech that is harmless, having effected an activity of mind that is harmless, arises in a world that is harmless.

Because he has arisen in a world that is harmless, harmless sensory impingements assail him.

He, being assailed by harmless sensory impingements, experiences a harmless feeling, without exception pleasant, even as do the Ever-Radiant devas.

In this way, Puṇṇa,
there is the arising of a being from what has come [58] to be;
he arises according to what he does;
when he has arisen
sensory impingements assail him.

So I speak thus, Puṇṇa,:

Creatures are heirs to deeds.

This, Puṇṇa,
is called the deed that is bright,
bright in result.

And what, Puṇṇa,
is the deed that is dark and bright,
dark and bright in result?

As to this, Puṇṇa,
someone effects an activity of body that is harmful and harmless, effects an activity of speech that is harmful and harmless, effects an activity of mind that is harmful and harmless.

He, having effected an activity of body that is harmful and harmless, having effected an activity of speech that is harmful and harmless, having effected an activity of mind that is harmful and harmless, arises in a world that is harmful and harmless.

Because he has arisen in a world that is harmful and harmless, harmful and harmless sensory impingements assail him.

He, being assailed by harmful and harmless sensory impingements, experiences a feeling that is harmful and harmless, partially pleasant and painful, even as do men and some devas and some in the sorrowful state.<sup>20</sup>

In this way, Puṇṇa,
there is the uprising of a being from what has come to be;
he arises according to what he does;
when he has arisen
sensory impingements assail him.

So I speak thus, Puṇṇa,:

Creatures are heirs to deeds.<sup>21</sup>

This, Puṇṇa,
is called the deed that is dark and bright,
dark and bright in result.

And what, Puṇṇa,
is the deed that is not dark (and) not bright,
neither dark nor bright in result,
the deed that conduces to the destruction of deeds?

Where, Puṇṇa,
there is the will<sup>22</sup> to get rid of that deed that is dark,
dark in result,

and the will to get rid of that deed
that is bright,
bright in result,
and the will to get rid of that deed
that is dark and bright,
dark and bright in result,
this, Puṇṇa,
is called the deed that is not dark (and) not bright,
neither dark nor bright in result,
the deed that conduces to the destruction of deeds.

These, Puṇṇa,
are the four (kinds of) deeds made known by me, having realised them by my own super-knowledge."

When this had been said,
Puṇṇa, the Koliyan,
the bovine ascetic, spoke thus to the Lord:

"It is excellent, revered sir,
it is excellent, revered sir.

It is as if, revered sir one might set upright what had been upset,
or might disclose what was covered,
or show the way to one who had gone astray,
or bring an oil-lamp into the darkness
so that those with vision might see material shapes — even so in many a figure has dhamma been made clear by the Lord.

I, revered sir, am going to the Lord for refuge and the dhamma
and to the Order of monks.

May the Lord accept me as a lay-disciple going for refuge from this day forth
for as long as life lasts."

But Seniya the unclothed canine ascetic
spoke thus to the Lord:

"It is excellent, revered sir,
it is excellent, revered sir.

It is as if, revered sir, one might set upright what had been upset,
or might [59] disclose what was covered,
or show the way to one who had gone astray,
or bring an oil-lamp into the darkness
so that those with vision might see material shapes - even so in many a figure has dhamma been made clear by the Lord.

Thus I, revered sir, am going to the Lord for refuge
and to dhamma
and to the Order of monks.

Revered sir, may I receive the going forth in the Lord's presence, may I receive ordination?"

"Seniya, if a former member of another sect wishes for the going forth in this dhamma and discipline,
wishes for ordination,
he undertakes probation for four months<sup>23</sup>;
at the end of the four months the monks, if they so decide,
may let him go forth,
may ordain him into the status of a monk;
but even here differences among individuals are known to me."<sup>24</sup>

"If, revered sir, former members of other sects, wishing for the going forth in this dhamma and discipline,
wishing for ordination,
undertake probation for four months,
and if at the end of the four months
the monks, if they so decide,

let them go forth,
ordain them into the status of a monk,
then will I undertake probation for four years<sup>25</sup>; at the end of the four years
the monks, if they so decide,
may let me go forth,
may ordain me into the status of a monk."

But Seniya, the unclothed canine ascetic, received the going forth in the Lord's presence, he received ordination.<sup>26</sup>

Soon after he was ordained the venerable Seniya, dwelling alone,
aloof,
diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute,
in no long time
having realised here-now
by his own super-knowledge that matchless culmination of the Brahma-faring
for the sake of which young men of family
rightly go forth from home into homelessness,
entering on it,
abided in it.

And he knew:

Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of being such or so.

So was the venerable Seniya one of the perfected ones.

Discourse on the Canine Ascetic:
The Seventh

---

<sup>1</sup> At the time when it was building people wore golden coloured garments, haliddavatthanivatthā, to celebrate the "lunar mansion." Vasana means both a garment and a habitation. The name Haliddavasana occurs also at S. v. 115.

<sup>2</sup> govatika. Having undertaken the "cow-practice," go-vata, putting a horn on his head and tying on a tail, he went about grazing with cows, MA. iii. 100.

<sup>3</sup> kukkuravatika, having undertaken the "dog-practice," he did everything done by a dog. See D. iii. 6-7 for the habits of Korakkhattiya, the unclothed canine ascetic.

<sup>4</sup> MA. iii. 100, like a dog, sunakha, in his master's presence. Having scratched the ground with his two feet he sits down hunched, and greets the Lord by saying, "I will do what a dog does"; then having scratched the ground with his two hands, shaking his head, he says bhun bhun, and doubling in his hands and feet, he sits down like a dog.

<sup>5</sup> gati, going, destination, karmic course.

<sup>6</sup> kukkurasāla. MA. iii. 101 explains as kukkurācāra.

<sup>7</sup> kukkurākappa, in standing, walking, sitting, lying down, baring the teeth on seeing actual dogs.

<sup>8</sup> So explained at MA. iii. 101. Brahmacariya is also the higher life.

<sup>9</sup> A Sakka or Suyāma, etc.

<sup>10</sup> A certain deva in the second or third position. For devaññalāra, cf. S. iv. 180, A. iv. 461.

<sup>11</sup> pasanna, satisfaction, pleasure, approval, appreciation.

<sup>12</sup> See A. ii. 230 ff., and G.S. ii. 238 f.; cf. D. iii. 230, Netti. 98, 159, Asl 89.

<sup>13</sup> On the Jains' mistaken conception of the importance and consequences of this, see M. i. 93.

<sup>14</sup> abhisankharoti. Cf. A. i. 122 f., ii. 230.

<sup>15</sup> kāyasankhāra. Cf. M. i. 301; and see M.L.S. i. Intr. p. xxiv.

<sup>16</sup> This sentence and the next are omitted at A. ii. 230, but occur at A. v. 289 ff.

<sup>17</sup> bhūta bhūtassa upapatti hoti.

<sup>18</sup> Cf. Chānd. Up. 5. 10. 7; Bṛhad. Up. 4. 4. 5.

<sup>19</sup> Cf. A. iii. 72, 186, v. 289.

<sup>20</sup> Cf. M. i. 73, of those of spontaneous uprising.

<sup>21</sup> This paragraph, except the first and last sentences, is quoted at Kvu. 522.

<sup>22</sup> cetanā.

<sup>23</sup> Laid down at Vin. i. 69. See also M. i, 494, 512; D. i. 176; S. ii. 21; Sn. p. 101-102.

<sup>24</sup> One meriting probation but not another, MA. iii. 106; VinA. v. 990. For as SnA. ii. 436 (citing Vin. i. 71) points out, the fire-worshipping matted hair ascetics are exempt from the four months' probation.

<sup>25</sup> The same willingness to undertake probation for four years, instead of the four prescribed months, is manifested e.g. by Vacchagotta at M. i. 494, and Māgandiya at M. i. 512.

<sup>26</sup> MA. iii. 106 says that the Lord thought that Seniya, on account of his keen desire, did not merit probation. But he was not ordained (by the Lord himself) by the eki bhikkhu formula; he was "received" or allowed to go forth by a monk acting on the Lord's instructions, and then brought into the Lord's presence.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
1. Gahapati Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
1. The Division on Householders

58. Discourse to Abhaya

Abhaya-Rāja-Kumāra Sutta

---

[392] [60]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place.

Then Prince Abhaya<sup>1</sup> approached Nātaputta the Jain;
having approached,
having greeted Nātaputta the Jain,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

Nātaputta the Jain spoke thus<sup>2</sup> to Prince Abhaya
as he was sitting down at a respectful distance:

"Come you, Prince,
refute the recluse Gotama
so that a lovely reputation goes forth about you to the effect that the recluse Gotama

of such great psychic power,
of such great majesty,
was refuted by Prince Abhaya."

"But how can I, revered sir,
refute the recluse Gotama
who is of such great psychic power,
of such great majesty?"

"Come you, Prince,
approach the recluse Gotama;
having approached,
speak thus to the recluse Gotama:

'Now, revered sir, could a Tathāgata utter a speech
that is disliked by others,
disagreeable to them?'

If the recluse Gotama
on being questioned by you thus
should answer:

'Prince, a Tathāgata could utter a speech
that is disliked by others,
disagreeable to them,'

then you should speak to him thus:

'But then, where is the difference, revered sir,
between you and an average person?

For an average person
could also utter a speech
that is disliked by others,
disagreeable to them.'

But if the recluse Gotama,
on being questioned thus by you,
should answer:

'Prince, a Tathāgata could not utter a speech [393]that is disliked by others,
disagreeable to them,'

then you should speak to him thus:

'Then how is it, revered sir,
that when Devadatta was told by you:

"Devadatta is doomed to a sorrowful way<sup>3</sup> (after death),
[61] Devadatta is doomed to Niraya Hell, Devadatta is fixed for a kalpa,<sup>4</sup> Devadatta is incurable,"<sup>5</sup>

Devadatta was angry
and displeased with you for these words?'

Prince, the recluse Gotama, on being asked this double-edged question<sup>6</sup> by you will neither be able to spew out nor swallow down<sup>7</sup> (the puzzle).

Just like an iron hook
stuck in a man's throat
that he can neither spew out
nor swallow down,
even so, Prince, the recluse Gotama,
on being asked this double-edged question by you,
will neither be able to spew out nor swallow down (the puzzle)."

"Very well, revered sir,"
and Prince Abhaya
having answered Nātaputta the Jain in assent,
rising from his seat,
having greeted Nātaputta the Jain
keeping his right side towards him,
approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

After looking at the sun, it occurred to Prince Abhaya
as he was sitting down at a respectful distance:

"It is not the right time today to refute the Lord, but tomorrow I,
in my own house,
will refute the Lord,"
and he spoke thus to the Lord:

"Revered sir, may the Lord consent to take a meal with me on the morrow with three others?"<sup>8</sup>

The Lord consented by becoming silent.

Then Prince Abhaya,
having understood the lord's consent,
rising from his seat,
having greeted the Lord,
departed keeping his right side towards him.

Then the Lord,
at the end of that night,

having dressed in the early morning,
taking his bowl and robe, approached Prince Abhaya's dwelling;
having approached,
he sat down on the appointed seat.

Then Prince Abhaya
with his own hand
served and satisfied the Lord with sumptuous solid and soft [62] foods.

Then when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from the bowl, Prince Abhaya, taking a low seat,
sat down at a respectful distance.

Prince Abhaya, sitting down at a respectful distance,
spoke thus to the Lord:

"Now, revered sir,
could a Tathāgata utter a speech disliked by others,
disagreeable to them?"

"Is not this one-sided,<sup>9</sup> Prince?"

"At this point, revered sir, the Jains have lost."<sup>10</sup>

"Why do you speak thus, Prince:

[394] 'At this point, revered sir, the Jains have lost?'"

"Now, I, revered sir, approached Nātaputta the Jain;
having approached,
having greeted Nātaputta the Jain,
I sat down at a respectful distance.

Nātaputta the Jain spoke thus to me, revered sir, as I was sitting down at a respectful distance:

"Come you, Prince,
refute the recluse Gotama
so that a lovely reputation goes forth about you
to the effect that the recluse Gotama
of such great psychic power,
of such great majesty,
was refuted by Prince Abhaya."

"But how can I, revered sir,
refute the recluse Gotama
who is of such great psychic power,
of such great majesty?"

"Come you, Prince,
approach the recluse Gotama;
having approached,
speak thus to the recluse Gotama:

'Now, revered sir, could a Tathāgata utter a speech
that is disliked by others,
disagreeable to them?'

If the recluse Gotama
on being questioned by you thus
should answer:

'Prince, a Tathāgata could utter a speech
that is disliked by others,
disagreeable to them,'

then you should speak to him thus:

'But then, where is the difference, revered sir,
between you and an average person?'

For an average person
could also utter a speech
that is disliked by others,
disagreeable to them.'

But if the recluse Gotama,
on being questioned thus by you,
should answer:

'Prince, a Tathāgata could not utter a speech
that is disliked by others,
disagreeable to them,'

then you should speak to him thus:

'Then how is it, revered sir,
that when Devadatta was told by you:

"Devadatta is doomed to a sorrowful way (after death),
Devadatta is doomed to Niraya Hell,
Devadatta is fixed for a kalpa, Devadatta is incurable,"

Devadatta was angry
and displeased with you for these words?'

Prince, the recluse Gotama,
on being asked this double-edged question by you
will neither be able to spew out
nor swallow down (the puzzle).

Just like an iron hook
stuck in a man's throat
that he can neither spew out
nor swallow down,
even so, Prince, the recluse Gotama,

on being asked this double-edged question by you,
will neither be able to spew out
nor swallow down (the puzzle)."

At that time an innocent little baby boy was lying on its back<sup>11</sup> on Prince Abhaya's knees.

Then the Lord spoke thus to Prince Abhaya:

"What [395] do you think about this, Prince?

If this boy
owing to your carelessness or that of his nurse were to put a stick or stone into his mouth, what would you do for him?"

"I would get it out, revered sir.

And if I, revered sir,
were not able to get it out at once, then taking hold of his head with my left hand, crooking a finger,
I would get it out with my right hand, even though it were with blood.

What is the reason for this?

Revered sir, I have compassion for the boy."

"Even so, Prince,
whatever speech the Tathāgata knows to be not fact,
not true,
not connected with the goal,
and that is not liked by others,

disagreeable to them,
that speech the Tathāgata does not utter.

And whatever speech a Tathāgata knows to be fact,
true,
but not connected with the goal,
and not liked by others,
disagree- [63] able to them,
neither does the Tathāgata utter that speech.

And whatever speech the Tathāgata knows to be fact,
true,
connected with the goal,
but not liked by others,
disagreeable to them,
the Tathāgata is aware of the right time
for explaining that speech.

Whatever speech the Tathāgata knows to be not fact,
not true,
not connected with the goal,
but that is liked by others,
agreeable to them,
that speech the Tathāgata does not utter.

And whatever speech the Tathāgata knows to be fact,
true,
but not connected with the goal,
yet liked by others,
agreeable to them,
neither does the Tathāgata utter that speech.

And whatever speech the Tathāgata knows to be fact,
true,
connected with the goal,
and liked by others,

agreeable to them,
the Tathāgata is aware of the right time
for explaining that speech.

What is the reason for this?

It is, Prince, that the Tathāgata has compassion for creatures."

"Revered sir, if those who are learned nobles and learned brahmans
and learned householders
and learned recluses
approach the Tathāgata
and ask him a question they have constructed - has the Lord already reflected in his mind on this,
thinking:

'Whoever, having approached me, questions me like this,
then, asked thus,
I will answer them thus,
or does (the answer) occur to a Tathāgata immediately?"12

"Well then, Prince,
I will ask you a question in return.

As it may please you,
so may you answer it.

What do you think about this, Prince?

Are you skilled in the various parts of a chariot?"

"Yes, revered sir,
I am skilled in the various parts of a chariot."

"What do you think about this, Prince?

If those who have approached you should ask thus:

'What is the name
of this particular part of the chariot?' would you have already [396] reflected on this in your mind,

thinking:

'If those who have approached me should ask thus,
then I will answer them thus,'

or would (the answer) occur to you immediately?"

"Because, revered sir, I am a renowned charioteer, skilled in the various parts of a chariot, all the particular parts of a chariot are fully known to me, so (the answer) would occur to me immediately."

"Even so, Prince,
if those who are learned nobles
and learned brahmans
and learned householders
and learned recluses
approach the Tathāgata
and ask him a question they have constructed,
(the answer) occurs to the Tathāgata immediately.

What is the reason [64] for this?

It is, Prince, that the constitution of dhamma<sup>13</sup> is fully penetrated by the Tathāgata, and because of his full penetration of the constitution of dhamma

(the answer) occurs to the Tathāgata immediately."

When this had been said,
Prince Abhaya spoke thus to the Lord:

It is excellent, revered sir,
it is excellent, revered sir.

It is as if, one might set upright what had been upset,
or might disclose what was covered,
or point out the way
to one who had gone astray,
or might bring an oil-lamp into the darkness
so that those with vision might see material shapes -
even so is dhamma made clear in many a figure by the the Lord.

I am going to the Lord for refuge,
and to dhamma
and to the Order of monks.

May the Lord accept me
as a lay-follower,
one gone for refuge from today forth
for as long as life lasts."

Discourse to Prince Abhaya:
The Eighth

---

<sup>1</sup> Son of King Bimbisara.

<sup>2</sup> cf. S. iv. 323.

<sup>3</sup> āpāyika, a man in "Misery." These and the following three expressions are also found at Vin. ii. 202, It. p. 85, A. iii. 402, iv. 160, etc. Cf. Vin. Texts iii. 262, n. 3.

<sup>4</sup> kappaṭṭha, endures for an eon in these states (Misery and Hell), incapable of winning out of them to happier births during this eon, kappa.

<sup>5</sup> atekiccha. Mrs. Rhys Davids, G.S. iii. p. xiv refers to atekiccha as having "the fearful implication, possibly monkish, of a Buddhist hell that is unending," or, as MA. iii. 108 says, buddhasahassena, while a thousand Buddhas come and go. Certainly the Hell, for Devadatta, endures as long as the kalpa, but the kalpa, as in Hindu philosophy, is regarded as subject to "involution," absorption, rest, before it evolves or manifests again - and endlessly again. Only the major, almost symbolical events are repeated in each kalpa; the details vary, so after this kalpa Devadatta is no longer doomed to states of misery and Hell.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. Miln. 108, 162; K.S. iv. 229, n., "the horns of a dilemma."

<sup>7</sup> Cf. Miln. 5.

<sup>8</sup> attacattuttho, himself as the fourth, as at M. iii. 145, A. iii. 30. MA. iii. 109 says Abhaya did not ask more in case they quarrelled, nor did he ask them individually lest he was reproached for miserliness, but he compromised by asking three with Gotama as the fourth.

<sup>9</sup> ekamsena. No doubt referring to the two-edged question the Jains planned to ask Gotama so as to trip him up. Cf. ekamsavādo at M. ii. 197.

<sup>10</sup> anassuṃ, are frustrated. MA. iii. 109 says naṭṭhā, lost, destroyed, perished. The meaning is that in view of this counter-question of Gotama's, the Jains are already defeated as the further questions they had devised would now be meaningless.

<sup>11</sup> Cf. A. iii. 6. For the opening phrase, cf. M. i. 324, ii. 24.

<sup>12</sup> ṭhanaso, both on the spot (ṭhānuppattika) and at that moment (tathakhaṇam). It means "without an interval or a cause (of change), at once, immediately, spontaneously, impromptu." P.E.D.

<sup>13</sup> The word dhammadhātu, as the ultimate principle or own-nature, own-being, self-nature, of dhamma occurs also at D. ii. 8. It is explained at MA. iii. 113 as dhammasabhāva. At S. ii. 143, Netti. 64, Vism. 486 it would seem to be used in the sense of mental state considered as an irreducible element, cf. Dhs. 67, 69, Vbh. 87, 89. For a more detailed discussion of the Buddha's "power of immediate response," see A.K. Coomaraswamy, Some Pali Words, H.J.A.S., vol. IV, No. 2, July 1939, p. 188.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
1. Gahapati Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
1. The Division on Householders

59. Discourse on Much to Be Experienced

Bahu-Vedanīya Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattḥī
in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then<sup>1</sup> Five-tools,<sup>2</sup> the carpenter, approached the venerable Udāyin<sup>3</sup>;
having approached,
having greeted the venerable Udāyin,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Fivetools, the carpenter, spoke thus to the venerable Udāyin:

[65] "Now, revered Udāyin, how many feelings are spoken of by the Lord?"

"Three, householder,<sup>4</sup> are the feelings
that are spoken of by the Lord:
pleasant feeling,
painful feeling,
feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant.

These, householder,
are the three feelings
spoken of by the Lord."

"Revered Udāyin,
three feelings are not spoken of by the Lord.

Two feelings are spoken of by the Lord:
pleasant feeling,
painful feeling.

Revered sir, that feeling which is neither painful nor pleasant, that is spoken of by the Lord
as belonging to exquisite happiness."

And a second time the venerable Udāyin spoke thus to Fivetools, the carpenter:

"Three, householder,
are the feelings
that are spoken of by the Lord:
pleasant feeling,
painful feeling,
feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant.

These, householder,
are the three feelings
spoken of by the Lord."

And a second time Fivetools the carpenter spoke thus to the venerable Udāyin:

Two feelings are spoken of by the Lord:
pleasant feeling,
painful feeling.

Revered sir, that feeling which is neither painful nor pleasant,
that is spoken of by the Lord
as belonging to exquisite happiness."

And a third time the venerable Udāyin spoke thus to Fivetools, the carpenter:

"Three, householder,
are the feelings
that are spoken of by the Lord:
pleasant feeling,
painful feeling,
feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant.

These, householder,
are the three feelings
spoken of by the Lord."

And a third time Fivetools the carpenter spoke thus to the venerable Udāyin:

Two feelings are spoken of by the Lord:
pleasant feeling,
painful feeling.

Revered sir, that feeling which is neither painful nor pleasant,
that is spoken of by the Lord
as belonging to exquisite happiness."

So neither was the venerable Udāyin able to convince Fivetools the carpenter, nor was Fivetools the carpenter able to convince the venerable Udāyin.

Now, the venerable Ānanda overheard this conversation between the venerable Udāyin and Fivetools the carpenter.

Then the venerable Ānanda approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

Seated at a respectful distance, the venerable Ānanda told the Lord the whole of the conversation between the venerable Udāyin and Fivetools the [66] carpenter as far as it went.<sup>5</sup>

When this had been said,
the Lord spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda:

"Although, Ānanda, Udāyin's classification<sup>6</sup> was right, Fivetools the carpenter disagreed;
and although Fivetools the carpenter's classification was right, Udāyin disagreed.

Ānanda, two feelings<sup>7</sup> are spoken of by me
according to (one) classification, and three feelings<sup>8</sup> are spoken of by me
according to (one) classification, and five feelings<sup>9</sup> are spoken of by me
according to (one) classification, and six feelings<sup>10</sup> are spoken of by me
according to (one) classification, and eighteen feelings<sup>11</sup> are spoken of by me according to (one) classification, and thirty-six feelings<sup>12</sup> are spoken of by me according to (one) classification, and one hundred and eight feelings<sup>13</sup> are spoken of by me according to (one) classification.

Thus, Ānanda, is dhamma taught by me according to classification.

As dhamma, is taught by me thus, Ānanda, according to classification, of those who will not accede to,
approve of or accept
what has been well said,
well spoken by each other,
this is to be expected:
that they will live wrangling,
quarrelsome,
disputatious,
wounding one another
with the weapons of the tongue.<sup>14</sup>

Thus, Ānanda, is dhamma taught by me according to classification.

As dhamma is taught by me thus, Ānanda, according to classification, of those who will accede to,
approve of
and accept
what has been well said,
well spoken by each other,
this is to be expected:
that they will live

all together on friendly terms and harmonious as milk and water blend, regarding one another with the eye of affection.<sup>15</sup>

Ānanda, there are these five strands of sense-pleasures.<sup>16</sup>

What are the five?

Material shapes cognisable by the eye,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Sounds cognisable by the ear,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Smells cognisable by the nose [67],
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Tastes cognisable by the tongue,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,

enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Touches cognisable by the body,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

These, Ānanda, are the five strands of sense-pleasures.

Whatever happiness,
whatever joy, Ānanda,
arises in consequence
of these five strands of sense-pleasures, it is called
happiness in sense-pleasures.

Whoever, Ānanda, should speak thus:

'This is the highest happiness and joy
that creatures experience' -
this I cannot allow on his part.

What is the reason for this?

There is, Ānanda, another happiness
more excellent and exquisite than that happiness.<sup>17</sup>

And what, Ānanda, is this other happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness?

Here, Ānanda, a monk,
aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
enters and abides in
the first meditation
that is accompanied by initial thought and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness
and is rapturous and joyful.

This, Ānanda, is the other happiness
that is more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

Whoever, Ānanda, should speak thus:

'This is the highest happiness and joy
that creatures experience' -
this I cannot allow on his part.

What is the reason for this?

There is, Ānanda, another happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

And what, Ānanda, is this other happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness?

Here, Ānanda, a monk,
by allaying initial thought and discursive thought, his mind inwardly tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters and abides in
the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,

is born of concentration,
and is rapturous and joyful.

This, Ānanda, is the other happiness
that is more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

Whoever, Ānanda, should speak thus:

'This is the highest happiness and joy
that creatures experience' -
this I cannot allow on his part.

What is the reason for this?

There is, Ānanda, another happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

And what, Ānanda, is this other happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness?

Here, Ānanda, a monk,
by the fading out of rapture,
dwells with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious,
and experiences in his person
that joy of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,'
and he enters on
and abides in
the third meditation.

This, Ānanda, is the other happiness
that is more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

Whoever, Ānanda, should speak thus:

'This is the highest happiness and joy
that creatures experience' -
this I cannot allow on his part.

What is the reason for this?

There is, Ānanda, another happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

And what, Ānanda, is this other happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness?

Here, Ānanda, a monk,
by getting rid of happiness and [68] by getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,
enters on
and abides in
the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

This, Ānanda, is the other happiness
that is more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

Whoever, Ānanda, should speak thus:

'This is the highest happiness and joy
that creatures experience' -
this I cannot allow on his part.

What is the reason for this?

There is, Ānanda, another happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

And what, Ānanda, is this other happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness?

Here, Ānanda, a monk,
by passing quite beyond perception of material shapes,
by the going down of perception of sensory reactions,
by not attending to perception of variety,
thinking:
'Ether is unending,'
enters on
and abides in the plane of infinite ether.

This, Ānanda, is the other happiness
that is more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

Whoever, Ānanda, should speak thus:

'This is the highest happiness and joy
that creatures experience' -
this I cannot allow on his part.

What is the reason for this?

There is, Ānanda, another happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

And what, Ānanda, is this other happiness
more excellent and exquisite

than that happiness?

Here, Ānanda, a monk,
by passing quite beyond the plane of infinite ether,
thinking:
'Consciousness is unending,'
enters on
and abides in
the plane of infinite consciousness.

This, Ānanda, is the other happiness
that is more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

Whoever, Ānanda, should speak thus:

'This is the highest happiness and joy
that creatures experience' -
this I cannot allow on his part.

What is the reason for this?

There is, Ānanda, another happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

And what, Ānanda, is this other happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness?

Here, Ānanda, a monk,
by passing quite beyond the plane of infinite consciousness,
thinking:
'There is not anything,'
enters on
and abides in
the plane of no-thing.

This, Ānanda, is the other happiness
that is more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

Whoever, Ānanda, should speak thus:

'This is the highest happiness and joy
that creatures experience' -
this I cannot allow on his part.

What is the reason for this?

There is, Ānanda, another happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

And what, Ānanda, is this other happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness?

Here, Ānanda, a monk,
by passing quite beyond the plane of no-thing,
enters on
and abides in
the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception.

This, Ānanda, is the other happiness
that is more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

Whoever, Ānanda, should speak thus:

'This is the highest happiness and joy
that creatures experience' -
this I cannot allow on his part.

What is the reason for this?

There is, Ānanda, another happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

And what, Ānanda, is this other happiness
more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness?

Here, Ānanda, a monk,
by passing quite beyond the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception,
enters on
and abides in
the stopping of perception and feeling.

This, [69] Ānanda, is the other happiness
that is more excellent and exquisite
than that happiness.

But the situation occurs, Ānanda,
when wanderers belonging to other sects may speak thus:

'The recluse Gotama speaks of the stopping of perceiving and feeling, and lays down that this belongs to happiness.

Now what is this,
now how is this?'

Ānanda, wanderers belonging to other sects
who speak thus
should be spoken to thus:

'Your reverences, the Lord does not lay down that it is only pleasant feeling that belongs to happiness; for, your reverences, the Tathāgata lays down that whenever,
wherever,

whatever happiness is found it belongs to happiness.'

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, the venerable Ānanda rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse on Much to be Experienced:
The Ninth

---

<sup>1</sup> As at S. iv. 223 ff.

<sup>2</sup> See K.S. iv. 149, n. 2. Pañcakaṅga also found at M. ii. 23, iii. 144. His five tools are enumerated at MA. iii. 114 and SA. iii. 79.

<sup>3</sup> MA. iii. 114 calls him paṇḍita-Udāyitthera, the learned Elder Udāyin.

<sup>4</sup> S. iv. 223 f. reads thapati, carpenter, for Majjhima's gahapati, householder.

<sup>5</sup> yāvatako, cf. M. i. 374.

<sup>6</sup> pariyāya, explained by kāraṇa at MA. iii. 114.

<sup>7</sup> Bodily and mental, MA. iii. 114 quoting S. iv. 231.

<sup>8</sup> The three beginning with pleasant (feeling), MA. iii. 114 quoting S. iv. 232.

<sup>9</sup> The five indriyas, beginning with that which is pleasant, MA. iii. 114 quoting S. iv. 232; cf. also S. v. 207.

<sup>10</sup> Six sensory impingements, by way of the doors (of the senses), beginning with the eye, MA. iii. 114 quoting S. iv. 232.

<sup>11</sup> The six ways of attending to material shape founded on happiness, the six founded on grief, the six founded on indifference (or, equanimity).

<sup>12</sup> The six forms of happiness connected with the household life, the six connected with renunciation; the six forms of misery connected with the household life, the six with renunciation; the six "indifferences" of a householder, the six of renunciation, MA. iii. 114 quoting S. iv. 232.

<sup>13</sup> In the past, the future and in the present: each thirty-six feelings. Cf. the 18, 30 and 108 "thoughts" at A.

<sup>14</sup> Cf. Ud. 67, etc.

<sup>15</sup> As at M. i. 206.

<sup>16</sup> As at M. i. 85, 92, 454.

<sup>17</sup> Cf. M. i. 247.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
1. Gahapati Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
1. The Division on Householders

60. Discourse on the Sure

Apaṇṇaka Sutta

---

[400] [69]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord, walking on tour among the Kosalans together with a large Order of monks,<sup>1</sup> arrived at the Brahman village of the Kosalans named Sālā. The Brahman householders of Sālā heard:

"It is said that the recluse Gotama, the son of the Sakyans, gone forth from the Sakyan family, and walking on tour among the Kosalans [401] together with a large Order of monks, has reached Sālā, and that a lovely reputation has gone forth about the Lord Gotama thus:

'The Lord is perfected, wholly Self-awakened, endowed with (right) knowledge and conduct, well-farer, knower of the worlds, incomparable charioteer of men to be tamed, teacher of devas and men, the Awakened One, the Lord. He makes known this world with the devas, with Māra, with Brahmā, creation with its recluses and Brahmans, its devas and men, having realised them by his own super-knowledge. He teaches dhamma that is lovely at the [70] beginning, lovely in the middle, lovely at the ending, with the spirit and the letter; he proclaims the Brahmā-faring wholly fulfilled, quite purified. It were good to see perfected ones like this."

Then the Brahman householders of Sālā approached the Lord; some, having approached, having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance; some exchanged greetings with the Lord and having conversed in a friendly and courteous way, sat down at a respectful distance; some, having saluted the Lord with joined palms, sat down at a respectful distance; some, having made known their names and clans in the Lord's presence, sat down at a respectful distance; some, becoming silent, sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord spoke thus to the Brahman householders of Sālā:

"Have you, householders, some satisfactory teacher in whom your faith is grounded?"

"We have no satisfactory teacher, revered sir, in whom our faith is grounded."

"If you, householders, have no satisfactory teacher, then taking up this sure<sup>2</sup> dhamma you should practise it. For, householders, sure is dhamma; rightly undertaken, it will long be for your welfare and happiness. And what, householders, is this sure dhamma?"

There are, householders, some recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and are of these views<sup>3</sup>:

"There is no (result of) gift, there is no (result of) offering, no (result of) sacrifice; there is no fruit or ripening of deeds well done or ill done; there is not this world, there is not a world beyond; there is no (benefit from serving) mother or father; there are no spontaneously arising beings; there are not in the world recluses and Brahmans who are faring rightly, proceeding rightly, and who proclaim this world and a world beyond, having realised them by their own super-knowledge."

But, householders, there are [402] some recluses and Brahmans who speak in direct opposition to these recluses and Brahmans, and who say this:

'There is (result of) gift, there is (result of) offering, there is (result of) sacrifice; there is fruit and ripening of deeds well done and ill done; there is this world, there is a world beyond; there is (benefit from serving) mother and father; there are spontaneously uprising beings; there are in the world recluses and Brahmans who are faring rightly, proceeding rightly, and who proclaim this world and a world beyond, [71] having realised them by their own super-knowledge.'

What do you think about this, householders?

Do not these recluses and Brahmans speak in direct opposition to one another?"<sup>4</sup> "Yes, revered sir."

"As to this, householders, of those recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and are of these views: 'There is no (result of) gift ... having realised them by their own super-knowledge,' this is to be expected for them:

Having laid aside these three good things: right conduct of body, right conduct of speech, right conduct of thought, and taking up these three bad things: wrong conduct of body, wrong conduct of speech, wrong conduct of thought, they practise them.

What is the reason for this? It is that these worthy recluses and Brahmans do not see the peril in wrong things, the vanity, the defilement, nor the advantage, allied to purity, of renouncing them for the good things.

And because there is indeed a world beyond, the view of anyone that there is not a world beyond is a false view of his.

As there is indeed a world beyond, if anyone has the conception that there is not a world beyond, it is a false conception of his.

As there is indeed a world beyond, if anyone utters the speech: 'There is not a world beyond,'

it is a false speech of his.

As there is indeed a world beyond, if anyone says that there is not a world beyond, he makes mock of those perfected ones who are knowers of a world beyond.

As there is indeed a world beyond, if he convinces others that there is not a world beyond, that convincing of his is against true dhamma, and because of that convincing which is against true dhamma, he is exalting himself and disparaging others.

Indeed, before his good morality is got rid of, bad morality is set up.

And this false view, false conception, false speech, the mocking of the ariyans, the convincing which is against true dhamma, the exalting of oneself, the disparaging of others — these are a variety of evil, unskilled states that arise thus because of false view.

[403] Hereupon,<sup>5</sup> householders, an intelligent man reflects thus:

'If there is not a world beyond, this worthy individual at the breaking up of the body will make himself safe;<sup>6</sup> but if there is a world beyond, this worthy individual at the breaking up of the body after dying, will arise in a sorrowful way, a bad bourn, the downfall, Niraya Hell. But if it be granted that there is not a world beyond, if this is a true speech of these recluses and Brahmans, [72] then the worthy individual is condemned here and now by intelligent persons who say:

'Of bad moral habit is the individual, of false view, he holds the theory of "There is not".<sup>7</sup> But if there is indeed a world beyond, thus is there defeat<sup>8</sup> in two ways for this worthy individual: inasmuch as he is condemned here and now by intelligent persons, and inasmuch as at the breaking up of the body after dying he will arise in a sorrowful way, a bad bourn, the downfall, Niraya Hell.

Thus this sure dhamma has been undertaken imperfectly by him, he has applied himself one-sidedly,<sup>9</sup> he is neglecting the skilled stance.<sup>10</sup>

Hereupon, householders, of those recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and are of these views:

'There is (result of) gift,... having realised them by their own super-knowledge,' this is to be expected of them:

Having laid aside these three bad things:
wrong conduct of body,
wrong conduct of speech,
wrong conduct of thought,
and taking up these three good things:
right conduct of body,
right conduct of speech,
right conduct of thought,
they practise them.

What is the reason for this?

It is that these worthy recluses and Brahmans see the peril, the vanity, the defilement in wrong things, and the advantage, allied to purity, of renouncing them for states that are good.

And because there is indeed a world beyond, the view of anyone that there is a world beyond is a right view of his.

As there is indeed a world beyond, if anyone has the conception<sup>11</sup> that there is a world beyond it is a right conception<sup>12</sup> of his.

As there is indeed a world beyond, if anyone utters the speech:
'There is a world beyond,'
it is a right speech of his.

As there is indeed a world beyond, if anyone says that there is a world beyond, he does not make mock of those perfected ones who are knowers of the world beyond.

As there is indeed a world beyond, if he convinces others that there is a world beyond, [404] that convincing of his is according to true dhamma, and because of this convincing which is in accordance with true dhamma, he does not exalt just himself, he does not disparage others.

Indeed, before his bad morality is got rid of, good morality is set up.

And this right view,
right conception,
right speech,
this non-mocking of the ariyans,
the convincing which is in accordance with true dhamma,
the non-exalting of self,
the non-disparaging of others — [73] these are a variety of good states that arise because of right view.

Hereupon, householders, an intelligent man reflects thus:

'If there is a world beyond, this worthy individual at the breaking up of the body after dying will arise in a good bourn, a heaven world.

But if it be granted that there is not a world beyond, if this is a true speech of these recluses and Brahmans, then this worthy individual is praised here and now by intelligent persons who say:

'Of good moral habit is the individual, of right view, he holds the theory of
"There is."<sup>13</sup>

But if there is indeed a world beyond, thus is there victory<sup>14</sup> in two ways for this worthy individual:
inasmuch as he is praised here and now by intelligent persons, and inasmuch as at the breaking up of the body after dying he will arise in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

Thus this sure dhamma has been undertaken perfectly by him, he has applied himself two-sidedly,<sup>15</sup> he is neglecting the unskilled stance.

There are, householders, some recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and are of these views:<sup>16</sup>

'From doing,<sup>17</sup> from making (another) do,
from mutilating,
from making (another) mutilate,
from threatening,
from making (another) threaten,
from causing grief,
from tormenting,
from torturing,
from making (another) torture,
from making onslaught on creatures,
from taking what is not given,
from house-breaking,
from plundering,
from robbery,
from waiting in ambush,
from going after other men's wives,
from lying speech —
from acting (thus) evil is not done.

If anyone with a discus having an edge sharp as a razor should make the creatures of this earth into one mass of flesh,
into one heap of flesh,
from that source there is not evil,
there is not the perpetuating<sup>18</sup> of evil.

And if anyone should go to the south bank of the Ganges<sup>19</sup> slaying and striking,
mutilating,
making (others) mutilate,
threatening,

making (others) threaten,
from that source there is not evil,
there is not the perpetuating of evil.

And if he should go to the north bank of the Ganges<sup>20</sup> giving, [74] making (others) give,
offering,
making (others) offer,
from that source there is not merit,
there is not the perpetuating of merit.

There is no merit from giving,
from taming oneself,
from restraining oneself,
from truth-speaking,
there is not the perpetuating of merit.'

Householders, some recluses and Brahmans speak in direct opposition to these recluses and Brahmans, [405] they speak thus:

'From doing, from making (another) do ... from lying ... from acting (thus) evil is done.

If any one with a discus having an edge sharp as a razor should make the creatures of this earth into one heap of flesh, one mass of flesh,
from that source there is evil,
there is the perpetuating of evil.

And if anyone should go to the south bank of the Ganges slaying and
striking...
from that source there is evil,
there is the perpetuating of evil.

And if he should go to the north bank of the Ganges giving,
making (others) give ...

from that source there is merit,
there is the perpetuating of merit.

There is merit from giving,
from taming oneself,
from restraining oneself,
from truth-speaking,
there is the perpetuating of merit.'

What do you think about this, householders?

Do not these recluses and Brahmans speak in direct opposition to one another?"

"Yes, revered sir."

"Hereupon, householders, of those recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and hold these views:

'From doing, from making (another) do ...
there is not the perpetuating of merit,'
this is to be expected for them:

Having laid aside these three good things:
right conduct of body,
right conduct of speech,
right conduct of thought,
and taking up these three bad things:
wrong conduct of body,
wrong conduct of speech,
wrong conduct of thought,
they practise them.

What is the reason for this?

It is that these worthy recluses and Brahmans do not see the peril in wrong things,

the vanity,
the defilement,
nor the advantage,
allied to purity,
of renouncing them for the good things.

And because there is indeed effective action,<sup>21</sup> the view of anyone that there is not effective action is a false view of his.

As there is indeed effective action, if anyone has the conception that there is not effective action it is a false conception of his.

As there is indeed effective action,
if anyone utters the speech:
'There is not effective action,'
it is a false speech of his.

As there is indeed effective action, if anyone says there is not effective action he is making a mock of those perfected ones who profess effective action.<sup>22</sup>

As there is indeed effective action, if he convinces others that there [75] is not effective action, that convincing of his is against true dhamma, and because of that convincing which is against true dhamma,
he is exalting himself and disparaging others.

Indeed, before his good morality is got rid of,
bad morality is set up.

[406] And this false view,
false conception,
false speech,
the mocking of the ariyans,
the convincing which is against true dhamma,
the exalting of oneself,

the disparaging of others — these are a variety of evil, wrong states that arise because of false view.

Hereupon, householders, an intelligent man reflects thus:

'If there is not effective action, this worthy individual at the breaking up of the body will make himself safe;
but if there is effective action, this worthy individual at the breaking up of the body after dying will arise in a sorrowful way,
a bad bourn,
the downfall,
Niraya Hell.

But if it be granted that there is not effective action, if this is a true speech of these worthy recluses and Brahmans, then the worthy individual is condemned here and now by intelligent persons who say:
"Of bad moral habit is the individual,
of false view,
he professes ineffective action."<sup>23</sup>

But if there is indeed effective action, there is thus defeat in two ways for this worthy individual:
inasmuch as he is condemned here and now by intelligent persons, and inasmuch as at the breaking up of the body after dying he will uprise in a sorrowful way,
a bad bourn,
the downfall,
Niraya Hell.

This sure dhamma has thus been undertaken imperfectly by him,
he has applied himself one-sidedly,
he is neglecting the skilled stance.

Hereupon, householders, those recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and hold these views:

'From doing, from making (another) do ... there is the perpetuation of merit,'
this is to be expected for them:

Having laid aside these three bad things:
wrong conduct of body,
wrong conduct of speech,
wrong conduct of thought,
and taking up these three good things:
right conduct of body,
right conduct of speech,
right conduct of thought,
they practise them.

What is the reason for this?

It is that these worthy recluses and Brahmans see the peril in wrong things,
the vanity,
the defilement,
and the advantage,
allied to purity,
of renouncing them for states that are good.

And because there is indeed effective action, the view of anyone that [76] there is effective action is a right view of his.

And as there is indeed effective action,
if anyone has the conception that there is effective action, it is a right conception of his.

And as there is indeed effective action,
if anyone utters the speech:
'There is effective action,'
it is a right speech of his.

And as there is indeed effective action,
if anyone says that there is effective action, he is not making a mock of those perfected ones who hold the theory of effective action.

As there is indeed effective action,
if he convinces others that there is effective action, that convincing of his is according to true dhamma, [407] and because of this convincing which is in accordance with true
dhamma,
he is not exalting himself, he is not disparaging others.

Indeed before his bad morality is got rid of,
good morality is set up.

And this right view,
right conception,
right speech,
the non-mocking of the ariyans,
the convincing which is in accordance with true dhamma,
the non-exalting of self,
the non-disparagement of others — these are a variety of good states which arise because of right view.

Hereupon, householders, an intelligent man reflects thus:

'If there is effective action, this worthy individual at the breaking up of the body after dying will arise
in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

But if it be granted that there is not effective action,
if this is a true speech of these worthy recluses and Brahmans, then this worthy individual is praised here and now by intelligent persons
who say:

'Of good moral habit is the individual,

of right view,
he professes effective action.

If there is indeed effective action, thus is there victory in two ways for this worthy individual:
inasmuch as he is praised here and now by intelligent persons,
and inasmuch as at the breaking up of the body after dying he will arise in
a good bourn,
in a heaven world.

Thus this sure dhamma has been undertaken perfectly by him,
he has applied himself two-sidedly,
he is neglecting the unskilled stance.

There are, householders, some recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and are of these views:24

'There is no cause,
no reason for the defilement of creatures,
creatures are defiled without cause,
without reason.

There is no cause,
no reason for the purification of creatures,
creatures are purified without cause,
without reason.

There is not strength,
there is not energy,
there is not human vigour,
there is not human effort;
all creatures,25
all breathing things,
all beings,
[77] all living things
are without power,

without strength,
without energy,
bent<sup>26</sup> by fate,<sup>27</sup> chance,<sup>28</sup> and nature<sup>29</sup>, they experience pleasure and pain<sup>30</sup> amid the six classes.<sup>31</sup>

But, householders, there are some recluses and Brahmins who speak in direct opposition to these recluses and Brahmins, and who say this:

'There is cause,
there is reason for the defilement of creatures, creatures are defiled with cause, with reason.

There is cause,
there is reason for the purification of creatures, creatures are purified with cause,
with reason.

There is strength,
there is energy,
there is human vigour,
there is human effort;
all creatures,
all breathing things,
all beings,
all living things are not (so) without power,
without strength,
without energy
that they are bent by fate, chance
and nature,

that they experience pleasure and pain amid the six classes.

What do you think about this, householders?

[408] Do not these recluses and Brahmans speak in direct opposition to one another?"

"Yes, revered sir."

"Hereupon, householders, those recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and are of these views:

'There is no cause, there is no reason ...
amid the six classes,'

this is to be expected for them:

Having laid aside the three good things:
right conduct of body,
right conduct of speech,
right conduct of thought,
and taking up these three bad things:
wrong conduct of body,
wrong conduct of speech,
wrong conduct of thought,
they practise them.

What is the reason for this?

It is that these worthy recluses and Brahmans do not see the peril in wrong things,
the vanity,
the defilement,
nor the advantage,
allied to purity,
in renouncing them for the good things.

And because there is indeed cause, the view of anyone that there is not cause is a [78] false view of his.

As there is indeed cause,
if anyone has the conception that there is not cause it is a false conception of his.

As there is indeed cause,
if anyone utters the speech:
'There is not cause,'
it is a false speech of his.

As there is indeed cause,
if anyone says there is not cause, he makes mock of those perfected ones who profess that there is cause.

As there is indeed cause,
if he convinces others that there is not cause, this convincing of his is against true dhamma, and because of this convincing which is against true dhamma,
he is exalting himself and disparaging others.

Indeed, before his good morality is got rid of,
bad morality is set up.

And this false view,
false conception,
false speech,
the mocking of the ariyans,
the convincing which is against true dhamma,
the exalting of oneself,
the disparaging of others —
these are a variety of evil, wrong states that arise thus because of false view.

Hereupon, householders,
an intelligent man reflects thus:

'If there is not cause, this worthy individual at the breaking up of the body will make himself safe;
but if there is cause,
this worthy individual at the breaking up of the body after dying
will arise in a sorrowful way,
a bad bourn,
the downfall,
Niraya Hell.

But if it be granted that there is not cause,
if this is a true speech of these recluses and Brahmans, then this worthy individual is condemned here and now by intelligent persons who say:
"Of bad moral habit is the individual,
of false view,
he professes that there is not cause."

But if there is indeed cause, thus there is defeat in two ways for this worthy individual:
[409] inasmuch as he is condemned here and now by intelligent persons, and inasmuch as on the breaking up of the body after dying he will arise in a sorrowful way,
a bad bourn,
the downfall,
Niraya Hell.

This sure dhamma has thus been imperfectly undertaken by him,
he has applied himself one-sidedly,
he is neglecting the skilled stance.

Hereupon, householders,
those recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and are of these views:
'There is cause, there is reason ...
amid the six classes,'
this is to be expected for them:

Having laid aside these three bad things:
wrong conduct of body,
wrong conduct of speech,
wrong conduct of thought,
and taking up these three good things:
right conduct of body,
right conduct of speech,
right conduct of thought,
they practise them.

What is the reason for this?

It is that these worthy recluses and Brahmans see the peril in wrong things,
the vanity,
the defilement,
the advantage,
allied to purity,
of renouncing them for good states.

And because there is indeed cause, the view of anyone that there is cause is a right view of his.

As there is indeed cause,
if anyone has the conception that there is cause it is a right conception of his.

[79] As there is indeed cause,
if anyone utters the speech:
'There is cause,'
it is a right speech of his.

As there is indeed cause,
if anyone says that there is cause, he does not make mock of those perfected ones who hold the theory of cause.

As there is indeed cause,
if he convinces others that there is cause, this convincing of his is in accordance with true dhamma, and because of this convincing which is in accordance with true dhamma,
he does not exalt himself,
does not disparage others.

Indeed, before his bad morality is got rid of,
good morality is set up.

And this right view,
right conception,
right speech,
the non-mocking of the ariyans,
the convincing which is in accordance with true dhamma,
the nonexalting of self,
the non-disparaging of others — these are a variety of good states that arise because of right view.

Hereupon, householders, an intelligent man reflects thus:

'If there is indeed cause,
this worthy individual at the breaking up of the body after dying will arise in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

But if it be granted that there is not cause,
if this is a true speech of these worthy recluses and Brahmans, then this worthy individual is praised here and now by intelligent persons
who say:

'Of good moral habit is the individual,
of right view,
he professes that there is cause.'

If there is indeed [410] cause,
thus is there victory in two ways for this worthy individual:

inasmuch as he is praised here and now by intelligent persons,
and inasmuch as on the breaking up of the body after dying he will arise in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

Thus this sure dhamma has been undertaken perfectly by him,
he has applied himself two-sidedly,
he is neglecting the unskilled stance.

There are, householders, some recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and are of this view:

'There is not formlessness throughout.'<sup>32</sup>

But, householders, there are some recluses and Brahmans who are in direct opposition to these recluses and Brahmans, and who say this:

'There is formlessness throughout.'

What do you think about this, householders?

Do not these recluses and Brahmans speak in direct opposition to one another?"

"Yes, revered sir."

"Hereupon, householders, an intelligent man reflects thus:

'Those worthy recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and are of this view:
"There is not formlessness throughout" — this is not seen by [80] me.

And those worthy recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and are of this view:

"There is formlessness throughout" —
this is not known by me.

And if I, not knowing, not seeing,
were to take up one side and define it, saying:
"This is the truth, all else is falsehood," this would not be suitable in me.

If this is a true saying of these worthy recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and are of this view:
"There is not formlessness throughout,"
then this situation occurs that surely my uprising will be there where are those devas that have form and are made by mind.<sup>33</sup>

But if this is a true saying of those worthy recluses and Brahmans
who speak thus and are of this view:
"There is formlessness throughout,"
then this situation occurs
that surely my uprising will be there
where are those devas that are formless, made from perceiving.<sup>34</sup>

Concerning what has form, taking up the stick is to be seen,
and taking up the sword, quarrel,
dispute,
contention,
strife,
slander,
lying speech.<sup>35</sup>

But there is not this in what is formless throughout.'

So, by reflecting thus, he is one faring along precisely for the disregard of material shapes, for detachment (concerning them)
and for their stopping.

There are, householders, some recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and are of this view:

'There is not the stopping of becomings<sup>36</sup> throughout.'

But, householders, there are some recluses and Brahmans who speak in direct opposition to those recluses and Brahmans and who say this:

'There is [411] the stopping of becomings throughout.'

What do you think about this, householders?

Do not these recluses and Brahmans speak in direct opposition to one another?

"Yes, revered sir."

"Hereupon, householders, an intelligent man reflects thus:

'Those worthy recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and are of this view:
"There is not the stopping of becomings throughout" —
this is not seen by me.

But those worthy recluses and Brahmans who speak thus and are of this view:

"There is the stopping of [81] becomings throughout" —
this is not known by me.

And if I, not knowing, not seeing,
were to take up one side and define it, saying:

"This is the truth,
all else is falsehood" —
this would not be suitable in me.

If this is a true saying of those worthy recluses and Brahmins who speak thus and are of this view:

"There is not the stopping of becomings throughout,"
then this situation occurs
that surely my uprising will be there where are those devas who are formless, made from perceiving.

But if this is a true saying of those worthy recluses and Brahmins who speak thus and are of this view:

"There is the stopping of becomings throughout,"
then this situation occurs:
that I will attain nibbana here-now.

If this is a true saying of those worthy recluses and Brahmins who speak thus and are of this view:

"There is not the stopping of becomings throughout," this view of theirs is close to attachment, close to the fetters,
close to delight,
close to cleaving,
close to grasping.

But if this is a true saying of those worthy recluses and Brahmins who speak thus and are of this view:

"There is the stopping of becomings throughout," this view of theirs is close to detachment, close to the absence of the fetters,
close to the absence of delight,
close to the absence of cleaving, close to the absence of grasping.<sup>37</sup>

Through reflecting thus he is one faring along precisely for the disregard of becomings, for detachment (concerning them),
and for their stopping.

Householders, there are these four kinds of persons existing in the world.<sup>38</sup>

What four?

Here, householders,
some person is a tormentor of self,
intent on the practice of self-torment.

Here, householders,
some person is a tormentor of others,
intent on the practice of tormenting others.

Here, householders,
some person is both a self-tormentor, intent on the practice of tormenting self,
and a tormentor of others,
intent on the practice of tormenting others.

Here, householders,
some person is neither a self-tormentor intent on the practice of self-torment,
nor a tormentor of others
intent on the practice of tormenting others.

He, [412] neither a self-tormentor nor a tormentor of others, is here-now allayed, quenched, [82] become cool, an experiencer of bliss that lives with self Brahmā-become.

And which, householders, is the self-tormentor,
intent on the practice of self-torment?

In this case, householders,
some person comes to be unclothed,
flouting life's decencies, licking his hands (after meals)... (as in the Kandarakasutta<sup>39</sup>)...

Thus in many a way does he live intent on the practice of mortifying and tormenting his body.

Householders, this person is called a self-tormentor, intent on the practice of self-torment.

And which, householders, is the tormentor of others, intent on the practice of tormenting others?

In this case, householders, some person is a cattle-butcher,<sup>40</sup> or pig-killer, fowler ... or one of those others who follow a bloody calling.

This is the person, householders, who is called a tormentor of others, intent on the practice of tormenting others.

And which, householders, is the person who is a self-tormentor, intent on the practice of self-torment, and also a tormentor of others, intent on the practice of tormenting others?

In this case, householders, some person is a noble anointed king or a very rich Brahman ... <sup>41</sup> ...

Those who are called his slaves or messengers or workpeople, they, scared of danger, with tearful faces and crying, set about their preparations.

This, householders, is called the person who is a self-tormentor, intent on the practice of self-torment and also a tormentor of others, intent on the practice of tormenting others.

And which, householders, is the person who is neither a self-tormentor intent on the practice of self-torment,
nor a tormentor of others
intent on the practice of tormenting others,
and who,
neither a self-tormentor
nor a tormentor of others,
is here-now allayed,
quenched,
become cool,
an experiencer of bliss
that lives with self Brahmā-become?

In this case, householders,
a Tathāgata arises in the world<sup>42</sup>...
[413] ... Destroyed is birth, brought to a close the Brahmā-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of being such or so.

This, householders, is called the person who is neither a self-tormentor, not intent on the practice of tormenting self,
nor a tormentor of others,
not intent on the practice of tormenting others,
and who,
neither a self-tormentor
nor a tormentor of others,
is here-now allayed,
quenched,
become cool,
an experiencer of bliss
that lives with self Brahmā-become."

[83] When this had been said, the Brahman householders of Sālā spoke thus to the Lord:

"Excellent, good Gotama; good Gotama, it is excellent.

It is as if, good Gotama,
one might set upright what had been upset... even so in many a figure has dhamma been made clear by the good Gotama.

We are going to the revered Gotama for refuge
and to dhamma
and to the Order of monks.

May the good Gotama accept us as lay-disciples going for refuge from this day forth
for as long as life lasts."

---

<sup>1</sup> Down to where the Lord begins to speak is the same as at M. i. 285.

<sup>2</sup> apaṇṇaka. Cf. A. i. 113, ii. 76 (apaṇṇakatā paṭipadā), and see notes at G.S. i. 97, ii. 85.

<sup>3</sup> As at M. i. 287.

<sup>4</sup> As at D. i. 1.

<sup>5</sup> MA. iii. 117 "among the views of those recluses and Brahmans."

<sup>6</sup> sotthim attāna-karissati. MA. iii. 117 does not explain. Cf. M. i. 353.

<sup>7</sup> natthikavāda, a "there-is-not-ist."

<sup>8</sup> kaliggaha, the losing throw at dice.

<sup>9</sup> Intent on his own theory.

<sup>10</sup> thāna, occasion, situation, position.

<sup>11</sup> sa<sup>o</sup>kappeti.

<sup>12</sup> sammā-sa<sup>o</sup>kappa. See table of attempts to translate this word at Mrs. Rhys Davids, Sakya, p. 85.

<sup>13</sup> He is an Affirmationist, a "there-is-ist," atthikavāda.

<sup>14</sup> kaṭaggaha, the winning throw at dice.

<sup>15</sup> MA. iii. 118, intent on his own theory and that of others.

<sup>16</sup> As at M. i. 516; S. iii. 208; at D. i. 52 attributed to Pūraṇa Kassapa.

<sup>17</sup> MA. iii. 118, "with the hand."

<sup>18</sup> āgama, the handing down, tradition; cf. āgatūgama as at Vin. iv. 158: one to whom the tradition has been handed down.

<sup>19</sup> People here are rough and cruel, MA. iii. 119.

<sup>20</sup> People here have faith and are believing, devoted to the Buddha, dhamma and the Order.

<sup>21</sup> kiriya, doing, fulfilment, so a complete act, i.e. act and its effect(s).

<sup>22</sup> kiriyavāda.

<sup>23</sup> akiriyavāda. Cf. D. i. 53, akiriyaṃ vyākasi, and A. i. 286 where the view n'atthi kammaṃ n'atthi kiriyaṃ n'atthi viriyaṃ is ascribed to Makkhali Gosāla. See also E. J. Thomas, Hist. Bud. Thought, p. 72. A. K. Coomaraswamy, Some Pali Words, H.J.A.S., vol. 4, No. 2, p. 119 appears to confuse akiriya with akarṇiya.

<sup>24</sup> Also given at S. iii. 210. At D. i. 63 they are ascribed to Makkhali Gosāla.

<sup>25</sup> MA. iii. 120 = DA. i. 161 says creatures, sattā, are camels, oxen, donkeys, etc.; "breathers," pāṇā, are those who have one or two faculties; beings, bhūtā, are those enclosed in eggs or membraneous sheaths; living things, jīvā, are rice, wheat, etc. See Dial. i. 71, n. 2.

<sup>26</sup> pariṇatā, also meaning changed, ripened, matured.

<sup>27</sup> niyati, a word, as used by Makkhali Gosāla, implying determination, necessity. See B. M. Barua, Pre-Buddhistic Indian Philosophy, p. 310; and A. L. Basham, History and Doctrines of the Ājīvikas, p. 224.

<sup>28</sup> sa°gati, meeting together, here of events over which the being has no power or control, see B. M. Barua, op. cit., p. 311; Basham, op. cit., p. 225.

<sup>29</sup> bhāva=sabhāva, MA. iii. 120, character, nature, disposition. See Barua, op. cit., p. 311; Basham, op. cit., p. 226.

<sup>30</sup> See comment at Sūtrakṛtyāṅga, I. i. 2. 4. Of beings. The divisions to which GoSālā's expression has reference are of colours: black, blue (or green), red, yellow, white, and intensely white. Typical members of the classes are given at MA. iii. 121. Cf. D. iii. 250; A. iii. 383; G.S. iii. 273, and see B. M. Barua, op. cit. p. 309.

<sup>31</sup> Of beings. The divisions to which Gosāla's expression has reference are of colours: black, blue (or green), red, yellow, white, and intensely white. Typical members of the classes are given at MA. iii. 121. Cf. D. iii. 250; A. iii. 383; G.S. iii. 273, and see B. M. Barua, op. cit. p. 309.

<sup>32</sup> n'atthi sabbaso āruppa ti. MA. iii. 122 says there is not a Brahmā-world that is formless throughout (or in every way).

<sup>33</sup> manomayā. MA. iii. 122 explains by jhānacittarnayā, made by thought in meditation.

<sup>34</sup> saññāmayā. MA. iii. 122 says arūpajjhānasaññāya saññāmayā, made by perception in the perception in the meditation on formlessness.

<sup>35</sup> Sequence as at M. i. 110.

<sup>36</sup> MA. iii. 123 says that bhavanirodha (the stopping of becoming or becomings) is nibbāna, as does S. ii. 117, A. v. 9. I take bhava, in bhavanirodha, as a plural to fit the plural bhavānaṃ at the end of this clause, see p. 81 below. Reference is no doubt intended to the three becomings, kāma-bhava, rūpa- and arūpa-bhava.

<sup>37</sup> Cf. M. i. 498.

<sup>38</sup> As in the Kandaraka Sutta, M. Sta. No. 51. MA. iii. 124 says that the five types of persons who hold the views: There is not, there is no efficient action, there is no cause, there is not formlessness, there is not stopping — become as it were three persons here; and the five who hold the opposite views of There is, etc., become as it were one person, namely the fourth kind. It must therefore be supposed that Bu. thought of the first group as comprising tormentors of self, of others and of both. The second "group" held the right views and are non-tormentors.

<sup>39</sup> M. i. 342.

<sup>40</sup> M. i. 343.

<sup>41</sup> M. i. 343-344.

<sup>42</sup> M. i. 344-349.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
2. Bhikkhu Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
2. The Division on Monks

61. Discourse on an Exhortation to Rāhula at Ambalaṭṭhika

Ambalaṭṭhikā-Rāhul'ovāda Sutta

---

[414] [87]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the squirrels' feeding place.

At that time the venerable Rāhula<sup>2</sup> was staying at Ambalaṭṭhikā.

Then the Lord,
emerging from solitary meditation towards evening,
approached Ambalaṭṭhikā.
and the venerable Rāhula.

Then the venerable Rāhula saw the Lord coming in the distance;
seeing him,

he made ready a seat
and water for (washing) the feet.

The Lord sat down on the seat made ready;
as he was sitting down
he bathed his feet.

And the venerable Rāhula,
having greeted the Lord,
sat down at a respectful distance.

Then the Lord,
having put a little quantity of water that was left over into a water-vessel,
addressed the venerable Rāhula,
saying:

"Do you, Rāhula,
see this little quantity of water that is left over and that is put into the water-vessel?"

"Yes, revered sir."

"Even so, Rāhula,
little is the recluseship of those who have no shame at intentional lying."

Then the Lord,
having thrown away that little quantity of water, addressed the venerable Rāhula,
saying:

"Do you, Rāhula,
see this little quantity of water that has been thrown away?"

"Yes, revered sir."

"Even so, Rāhula,
thrown away is the recluseship
of those who have no shame at intentional lying."

Then the Lord,
having overturned that water-vessel,
addressed the venerable Rāhula,
[88] saying:

"Do you, Rāhula, see this water-vessel that has been overturned?"

"Yes, revered sir."

"Even so, Rāhula,
overturned is the recluseship
of those who have no shame at intentional lying."

Then the Lord,
having turned upright that water-vessel,
addressed the venerable Rāhula,
saying:

"Do you, Rāhula,
see this water-vessel that is empty,
void?"

"Yes, revered sir."

"Even so, Rāhula,
void and empty is the recluseship
of those who have no shame at intentional lying."

Rāhula, it is like<sup>3</sup> a king's bull-elephant whose tusks are as long as a plough-pole,<sup>4</sup> massive,<sup>5</sup> finely bred,<sup>6</sup> whose home is the battle-field,<sup>7</sup>

and who, when going forth to battle, uses<sup>8</sup> his forelegs,
uses his hindlegs,
uses the forepart of his body,
uses the hindpart of his body,
uses his head,
uses his ears,
uses his tusks
and uses his tail,
[415] protecting only his trunk.<sup>9</sup>

Thereupon it occurs to the mahout:

'This king's bull-elephant whose tusks are as long as a plough-pole massive,
finely bred,
whose home is the battle-field,
and who, when going forth to battle,
uses his forelegs,
uses his hindlegs,
uses the forepart of his body,
uses the hindpart of his body,
uses his head,
uses his ears,
uses his tusks
and uses his tail,
protects only his trunk.

This king's bull-elephant
has not thrown away his life!<sup>10</sup>

But when, Rāhula,
the king's bull-elephant
whose tusks are as long as a plough-pole
massive,
finely bred,
whose home is the battle-field,
and who, when going forth to battle,
uses his forelegs,
uses his hindlegs,
uses the forepart of his body,
uses the hindpart of his body,
uses his head,
uses his ears,
uses his tusks
and uses his tail,
and uses his trunk,
it thereupon occurs to the mahout:

'This king's bull-elephant
whose tusks are as long as a plough-pole
massive,
finely bred,
whose home is the battle-field,
and who, when going forth to battle,
uses his forelegs,
uses his hindlegs,
uses the forepart of his body,
uses the hindpart of his body,
uses his head,
uses his ears,
uses his tusks
and uses his tail,
and uses his trunk.

This king's bull-elephant
has thrown away his life, there is nothing to be done now for the king's bull-elephant.'

Even so, Rāhula,
of anyone for whom there is no shame at intentional lying,
of him I say that there is no evil he cannot do.

Wherefore, for you, Rāhula,

'I will not speak a lie, even for fun'<sup>11</sup> -

this is how you must train yourself, Rāhula.

"What do you think about this, Rāhula?"

What is the purpose of a mirror?"

"Its purpose is reflection, revered sir."

"Even so, Rāhula,
a deed is to be done with the body (only) after [89] repeated reflection;
a deed is to be done with speech (only) after repeated reflection
a deed is to be done with the mind (only) after repeated reflection.

---

If you, Rāhula, are desirous of doing a deed with the body, you should reflect on that deed of your body,
thus:

'That deed which I am desirous of doing with the body is a deed of my body
that might conduce to the harm of self
and that might conduce to the harm of others
and that might conduce to the harm of both;
this deed of body is unskilled,
its yield is anguish,
its result is anguish.'

If you, Rāhula, reflecting thus,
should find:

'That deed which I am desirous of doing with the body
is a deed of my body
that might conduce to the harm of self
and that might conduce to the harm of others
and that might conduce to the harm of both;
this deed of body is unskilled,
its yield is anguish,
its result is anguish.'

- a deed of body like this, Rāhula, is certainly<sup>12</sup> not to be done by you.

■

[416] But if you, Rāhula, while reflecting thus,
should find:

'That deed which I am desirous of doing with the body
is a deed of my body
that would conduce neither to the harm of self
nor to the harm of others
nor to the harm of both;
this deed of body is skilled,

its yield is happy,
its result is happy'

- a deed of body like this, Rāhula, may be done by you.

■

While you, Rāhula, are doing this deed with the body, you should reflect thus
on this self-same deed of body:

'Is this deed that I am doing with the body
a deed of my body
that is conducing to the harm of self
and to the harm of others
and to the harm of both?

Is this deed of body unskilled,
its yield anguish,
its result anguish?'

If you, Rāhula, while reflecting thus should find:

'This deed that I am doing with the body
is a deed of my body
that is conducing to the harm of self
and to the harm of others
and to the harm of both;
this deed of body is unskilled,
its yield is anguish,
its result is anguish'

-you, Rāhula, should avoid a deed of body like this.

■

But if you, Rāhula, while reflecting thus,
should find:

'This deed that I am doing with the body is a deed of my body that is not conducing to the harm of self
nor to the harm of others
nor to the harm of both;
this deed of body is skilled,
its yield is happy,
its result is happy'

-you, Rāhula, could repeat<sup>13</sup> a deed of body like this.

■

And when you, Rāhula, have done a deed with the body you should reflect on this self-same deed of body thus:

'Was this deed that I did with the body
a deed of my body
that conduced to the harm of self
and to the harm of others
and to the harm of both?

[90] Was this an unskilled deed of body,
its yield anguish,
its result anguish?

If you, Rāhula, while reflecting thus,
should find:

'This deed that I did with the body
was a deed of my body
that conduced to the harm of sel
and to the harm of others
and to the harm of both;
this deed of body was unskilled,

its yield anguish,
its result anguish'

-such a deed of your body, Rāhula, should be confessed,
disclosed,
declared to the Teacher
or to intelligent Brahma-farers
so that, confessed,
disclosed
and declared,
it would induce restraint in the future.

[417]But if you, Rāhula,
while reflecting thus, should find:

'This deed that I did with the body
was a deed of my body
that conduced neither to the harm of self
nor to the harm of others
nor to the harm of both;
it was a skilled deed of body,
its yield happy,
its result happy'

- because of it you, Rāhula, may abide in zest and rapture
training yourself day and night in states that are skilled.

---

If you, Rāhula, are desirous of doing a deed with the speech, you should reflect on that deed of your speech,

thus:

'That deed which I am desirous of doing with the speech is a deed of my speech
that might conduce to the harm of self
and that might conduce to the harm of others
and that might conduce to the harm of both;
this deed of speech is unskilled,
its yield is anguish,
its result is anguish.'

If you, Rāhula, reflecting thus,
should find:

'That deed which I am desirous of doing with the speech
is a deed of my speech
that might conduce to the harm of self
and that might conduce to the harm of others
and that might conduce to the harm of both;
this deed of speech is unskilled,
its yield is anguish,
its result is anguish.'

- a deed of speech like this, Rāhula,
is certainly not to be done by you.

■

But if you, Rāhula, while reflecting thus,
should find:

'That deed which I am desirous of doing with the speech
is a deed of my speech
that would conduce neither to the harm of self
nor to the harm of others
nor to the harm of both;
this deed of speech is skilled,

its yield is happy,
its result is happy'

- a deed of speech like this, Rāhula, may be done by you.

■

While you, Rāhula, are doing this deed with the speech,
you should reflect thus
on this self-same deed of speech:

'Is this deed that I am doing with the speech a deed of my speech
that is conducing to the harm of self
and to the harm of others
and to the harm of both?

Is this deed of speech unskilled,
its yield anguish,
its result anguish?'

If you, Rāhula, while reflecting thus should find:

'This deed that I am doing with the speech
is a deed of my speech
that is conducing to the harm of self
and to the harm of others
and to the harm of both;
this deed of speech is unskilled,
its yield is anguish,
its result is anguish'

-you, Rāhula, should avoid a deed of speech like this.

■

But if you, Rāhula, while reflecting thus,
should find:

'This deed that I am doing with the speech is a deed of my speech that is not conducing to the harm of self
nor to the harm of others
nor to the harm of both;
this deed of speech is skilled,
its yield is happy,
its result is happy'

-you, Rāhula, could repeat a deed of speech like this.

■

And when you, Rāhula, have done a deed with the speech you should reflect on this self-same deed of speech thus:

'Was this deed that I did with the speech a deed of my speech
that conduced to the harm of self
and to the harm of others
and to the harm of both?

Was this an unskilled deed of speech,
its yield anguish,
its result anguish?

If you, Rāhula, while reflecting thus,
should find:

'This deed that I did with the speech
was a deed of my speech
that conduced to the harm of sel
and to the harm of others
and to the harm of both;
this deed of speech was unskilled,

its yield anguish,
its result anguish'

-such a deed of your speech, Rāhula, should be confessed,
disclosed,
declared to the Teacher
or to intelligent Brahma-farers
so that, confessed,
disclosed
and declared,
it would induce restraint in the future.

But if you, Rāhula,
while reflecting thus, should find:

'This deed that I did with the speech
was a deed of my speech
that conduced neither to the harm of self
nor to the harm of others
nor to the harm of both;
it was a skilled deed of speech,
its yield happy,
its result happy'

- because of it you, Rāhula, may abide in zest and rapture
training yourself day and night
in states that are skilled.

---

If you, Rāhula, are desirous of doing a deed with the mind, you should reflect on that deed of your mind,

thus:

'That deed which I am desirous of doing with the mind is a deed of my mind
that might conduce to the harm of self
and that might conduce to the harm of others
and that might conduce to the harm of both;
this deed of mind is unskilled,
its yield is anguish,
its result is anguish.'

If you, Rāhula, reflecting thus,
should find:

'That deed which I am desirous of doing with the mind
is a deed of my mind
that might conduce to the harm of self
and that might conduce to the harm of others
and that might conduce to the harm of both;
this deed of mind is unskilled,
its yield is anguish,
its result is anguish.'

- a deed of mind like this, Rāhula,
is certainly not to be done by you.

■

But if you, Rāhula, while reflecting thus,
should find:

'That deed which I am desirous of doing with the mind
is a deed of my mind
that would conduce neither to the harm of self
nor to the harm of others
nor to the harm of both;
this deed of mind is skilled,

its yield is happy,
its result is happy'

- a deed of mind like this, Rāhula, may be done by you.

■

While you, Rāhula, are doing this deed with the mind,
you should reflect thus
on this self-same deed of mind:

'Is this deed that I am doing with the mind
a deed of my mind
that is conducing to the harm of self
and to the harm of others
and to the harm of both?

Is this deed of mind unskilled,
its yield anguish,
its result anguish?'

If you, Rāhula, while reflecting thus should find:

'This deed that I am doing with the mind
is a deed of my mind
that is conducing to the harm of self
and to the harm of others
and to the harm of both;
this deed of mind is unskilled,
its yield is anguish,
its result is anguish'

-you, Rāhula, should avoid a deed of mind like this.

■

But if you, Rāhula, while reflecting thus,
should find:

'This deed that I am doing with the mind is a deed of my mind that is not conducing to the harm of self
nor to the harm of others
nor to the harm of both;
this deed of mind is skilled,
its yield is happy,
its result is happy'

-you, Rāhula, could repeat a deed of mind like this.

■

And when you, Rāhula, have done a deed with the mind you should reflect on this self-same deed of mind thus:

'Was this deed that I did with the mind
a deed of my mind
that conduced to the harm of self
and to the harm of others
and to the harm of both?

Was this an unskilled deed of mind,
its yield anguish,
its result anguish?

If you, Rāhula, while reflecting thus,
should find:

'This deed that I did with the mind
was a deed of my mind
that conduced to the harm of sel
and to the harm of others
and to the harm of both;
this deed of mind was unskilled,

its yield anguish,
its result anguish'

-such a deed of your mind, Rāhula, should be confessed,
disclosed,
declared to the Teacher
or to intelligent Brahma-farers
so that, confessed,
disclosed
and declared,
it would induce restraint in the future.

But if you, Rāhula,
while reflecting thus, should find:

'This deed that I did with the mind
was a deed of my mind
that conduced neither to the harm of self
nor to the harm of others
nor to the harm of both;
it was a skilled deed of mind,
its yield happy,
its result happy'

- because of it you, Rāhula, may abide in zest and rapture
training yourself day and night
in states that are skilled.

---

[420]All those recluses and brahmans, Rāhula, who in the long past

purified a deed of body, purified a deed of speech, purified a deed of mind,
did so (only) after repeated reflection.

And all those recluses and brahmans, Rāhula, who in the distant future will purify a deed of body, will purify a deed of speech, will purify a deed of mind, will do so (only) after repeated reflection.

And all those recluses and brahmans, Rāhula, who in the present
are purifying a deed of body, are purifying a deed of speech, are purifying a deed of mind, are doing so (only) after repeated reflection.

Wherefore, Rāhula, thinking:

'We will purify a deed of body
after repeated reflection, we will purify a deed of speech
after repeated reflection, we will purify a deed of mind
after repeated reflection'

- this is how you must train yourself, Rāhula."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, the venerable Rāhula rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse on an Exhortation to Rāhula at Ambalaṭṭhikā:
The First

---

<sup>1</sup> This Discourse is mentioned in the Bhābrū Rock Edict of Asoka as among those that all monks, nuns, men and women lay followers should hear often and reflect upon.

<sup>2</sup> See DPPN., s.v. Ambalatṭhikā-Rāhulovāda Suttaṃ, MA. iii. 126 and AA. i. 258 say that at this time Rāhula had been a sāmaṇera for seven years. At A. i. 24 he is called chief of those anxious for training. His verses are at Thag. 295-298.

<sup>3</sup> As at M. i. 450.

<sup>4</sup> As at Vin. i. 353.

<sup>5</sup> Explained at MA. iii. 127 as abhivadḍhito ārohasampanno.

<sup>6</sup> abhijāta as at A. iii. 158, also of a king's elephant.

<sup>7</sup> A. iii. 158.

<sup>8</sup> kammaṃ karoti, with the instrumental case.

<sup>9</sup> He puts it in his mouth, MA. iii. 128.

<sup>10</sup> Literally, the life of the king's bull-elephant has not been thrown away (or, abandoned, given up, apariccattam).

<sup>11</sup> MA. iii. 125 says he (the Buddha) thought that young boys say things both proper and improper, and are called piyamusāvādā (fond of lying) for they say they saw something when they did not, or did not see it when they did.

<sup>12</sup> sasakkam, as at M. i. 514. MA. iii. 128 explains by eka-sena = surely, definitely, certainly.

13 anupadajjeyyāsi. MA. iii. 128 gives upathambheyyāsi punappuna- kareyyāsi.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
2. Bhikkhu Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
2. The Division on Monks

62. Greater Discourse on an Exhortation to Rāhula

Mahā-Rāhul'ovāda Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī in the Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Sāvattthī for almsfood.

The venerable Rāhula, [421] having also dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe followed close after the Lord.

Then the Lord, having looked round, addressed the venerable Rāhula, saying:

"Whatever, Rāhula, is material shape, past, future, present, subjective or objective, gross or subtle, low or excellent, distant or near,

all material shape should be seen as it really is by means of perfect intuitive wisdom thus:

'This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.'

"Only material shape, Lord, only material shape, Wellfarer?"

"Material shape, Rāhula, and feeling, Rāhula,
and perception, Rāhula, and the habitual tendencies, Rāhula, and consciousness, Rāhula."

Then the venerable Rāhula thought:

"Who indeed today, when he has been exhorted with an exhortation face-to-face with the Lord, could enter a village for almsfood?"

And turning back from there, he sat down cross-legged at the root of a tree,
holding his back erect
and arousing mindfulness in front of him.

Then the venerable Sāriputta saw the venerable Rāhula sitting down cross-legged at the root of the tree, holding his back erect and arousing mindfulness in front of him;
and seeing him, he addressed the venerable Rāhula, saying:

"Develop the (mind-) development<sup>1</sup> that is mindfulness on in-breathing and out-breathing, Rāhula.

Mindfulness on in-breathing and out-breathing, Rāhula, if developed and made much of
is of great fruit, of great advantage."

Then the venerable [92] Rāhula, emerging from solitary meditation towards evening, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord,

he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Rāhula spoke thus to the Lord:

"Revered sir, how if mindfulness on in-breathing and out-breathing is developed and made much of is it of great fruit, of great advantage?"

"Whatever,<sup>2</sup> Rāhula, is hard, solid, is internal, referable to an individual and derived therefrom, that is to say:

the hair of the head, the hair of the body, nails, teeth, skin, flesh, sinews, bones, marrow of the bones, kidney, heart, liver, pleura, spleen, lungs, intestines, mesentery, stomach, excrement, or whatever other thing is hard, solid, is internal, referable to an individual and derived therefrom, this, Rāhula, is called the internal element of extension.

Whatever is an internal element of extension and whatever is an external element of extension, just these are the element of extension.

By means of perfect intuitive wisdom it should be seen of this as it really is,
thus:

This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.

[422] Having seen it thus as it really is by means of perfect intuitive wisdom,

he disregards the element of extension,
he cleanses his thought of the element of extension.

And what, Rāhula, is the liquid element?

The liquid element may be internal, it may be external.

And what, Rāhula, is the internal liquid element?

Whatever is liquid, fluid, is internal, referable to an individual and derived therefrom, that is to say:

bile, phlegm, pus, blood, sweat, fat, tears, serum, saliva, mucus, synovial fluid, urine or whatever other thing is liquid, fluid, is internal, referable to an individual and derived therefrom, this, Rāhula, is called the internal liquid element.

Whatever is an internal liquid element and whatever is an external liquid element, just these are the liquid element.

By means of perfect intuitive wisdom it should be seen of this as it really is, thus:

This is not mine,

this am I not,

this is not my self.

Having seen this thus as it really is by means of perfect intuitive wisdom, he disregards the liquid element, he cleanses his thought of the liquid element.

And what, Rāhula, is the element of heat?

The heat element may be internal, it may be external.

And what, Rāhula, is the [93] internal heat element?

Whatever is heat, warmth, is internal, referable to an individual and derived therefrom, such as by whatever one is vitalised, by whatever one is consumed, by whatever one is burnt up, and by whatever one has munched, drunk, eaten and tasted that is properly transformed (in digestion), or whatever other thing is heat, warmth, is internal, referable to an individual and derived therefrom, this, Rāhula, is called the internal heat element.

Whatever is an internal element of heat and whatever is an external element of heat,
just these are the element of heat.

By means of perfect intuitive wisdom it should be seen of this as it really is,
thus:

This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.

Having seen this thus as it really is by means of perfect intuitive wisdom,
he disregards the heat element,
he cleanses his thought of the heat element.

And what, Rāhula, is the element of motion?

The element of motion may be internal, it may be external.

And what, Rāhula, is the internal element of motion?

Whatever is motion, wind, is internal, referable to an individual and derived therefrom, such as winds going upwards, winds going downwards, winds in the abdomen, winds in the belly, winds that shoot across the several limbs, in-breathing, out-breathing, or whatever other thing is motion, wind, is internal, referable to an individual and derived therefrom, this, Rāhula, is called the internal element of motion.

Whatever is an internal element of motion and whatever is an external element of motion, just these are the element of motion.

By means of perfect intuitive wisdom it should be seen of this as it really is,
thus:

This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.

Having seen this thus as it really is [423] by means of perfect intuitive wisdom,
he disregards the element of motion,
he cleanses his thought of the element of motion.

And what, Rāhula, is the element of space?<sup>3</sup>

The element of space may be internal, it may be external.

And what, Rāhula, is the internal element of space?

Whatever is space, spacious, is internal, referable to an individual and derived therefrom, such as the auditory and nasal orifices, the door of the mouth and that by which one swallows what is munched, drunk, eaten and tasted, and where this remains, and where it passes out of (the body) lower down, or whatever other thing is space, spacious, is internal, referable to an [94] individual and derived therefrom, this, Rāhula, is called the internal element of space.

Whatever is an internal element of space and whatever is an external element of space, just these are the element of space.

By means of perfect intuitive wisdom it should be seen of this as it really is, thus:

This is not mine,
this am I not,
this is not my self.

Having seen this thus as it really is by means of perfect intuitive wisdom, he disregards the element of space, he cleanses his thought of the element of space.

Develop the (mind-) development that is like the earth,<sup>4</sup> Rāhula.

For, from developing the (mind-) development that is like the earth, Rāhula, agreeable and disagreeable sensory impressions that have arisen,

taking hold of your thought,
will not persist.

As, Rāhula, people cast what is clean on to the earth and what is unclean and, ordure and urine and spittle and pus and blood, and yet the earth is not troubled thereby nor worried or disgusted, even so do you, Rāhula, develop the (mind-) development that is like the earth.

For, from developing the (mind-) development that is like the earth, Rāhula, agreeable and disagreeable sensory impressions that have arisen,
taking hold of your thought,
will not persist.

Develop the (mind-) development that is like water, Rāhula.

For, from developing the (mind-) development that is like water, Rāhula, agreeable and disagreeable sensory impressions that have arisen,
taking hold of your thought,
will not persist.

As, Rāhula, people wash what is clean in water and what is unclean and wash away ordure and urine and spittle and pus and blood, and yet the water is not troubled thereby nor worried or disgusted, [424] even so do you, Rāhula, develop the (mind-) development that is like water.

For, from developing ...
will not persist.

Develop the (mind-) development that is like fire,<sup>5</sup> Rāhula.

For, from developing the (mind-) development that is like fire, Rāhula, agreeable and disagreeable sensory impressions that have arisen,
taking hold of your thought,
will not persist.

As, Rāhula, fire burns what is clean and what is unclean and ordure and urine and spittle and pus and blood, and yet the fire is not troubled thereby nor [95] worried or disgusted, even so do you, Rāhula, develop the (mind-) development that is like fire.

For, from developing ...
will not persist.

Develop the (mind-) development that is like wind, Rāhula.

For, from developing the (mind-) development that is like wind, Rāhula, agreeable and disagreeable sensory impressions that have arisen,
taking hold of your thought,
will not persist.

As, Rāhula, the wind blows upon what is clean and what is unclean and upon ordure and urine and spittle and pus and blood, and yet the wind is not troubled thereby nor worried or disgusted, even so do you, Rāhula, develop the (mind-) development that is like wind.

For from developing ...
will not persist.

Develop the (mind-) development that is like air, Rāhula.

For, from developing the (mind-) development that is like air, Rāhula,
agreeable and disagreeable sensory impressions that have arisen,
taking hold of your thought,
will not persist.

As, Rāhula, the air does not repose anywhere, even so do you, Rāhula, develop the (mind-) development that is like air.

For, from developing the (mind-) development that is like air, Rāhula,
agreeable and disagreeable sensory impressions that have arisen,
taking hold of your thought,
will not persist.<sup>6</sup>

Develop the (mind-) development that is friendliness,<sup>7</sup> Rāhula.

For, from developing the (mind-) development that is friendliness, Rāhula, that which is malevolence will be got rid of.

Develop the (mind-) development that is compassion, Rāhula.

For, from developing the (mind-) development that is compassion, Rāhula, that which is harming will be got rid of.

Develop the (mind-) development that is sympathetic joy, Rāhula.

For, from developing the (mind-) development that is sympathetic joy, Rāhula, that which is dislike<sup>8</sup> will be got rid of.

Develop the (mind-) development that is equanimity, Rāhula.

For, from developing the (mind-) development that is equanimity, Rāhula, that which is sensory reaction will be got rid of.

Develop the (mind-) development that is [96] on the foul, Rāhula.

For, from developing the (mind-) development that is on the foul, Rāhula, that which is attachment will be got rid of.<sup>9</sup>

Develop the (mind-) development that is perception of impermanence, Rāhula.

[425] For, from developing the (mind-) development that is perception of impermanence, Rāhula, that which is the conceit, 'I am'<sup>10</sup> will be got rid of.

Develop the (mind-) development that is mindfulness of in-breathing and out-breathing, Rāhula.

Mindfulness of in-breathing and out-breathing, Rāhula,
is of great fruit, of great advantage.

And how, Rāhula, if mindfulness of in-breathing and out-breathing is developed,
how, if it is made much of,
is it of great fruit, of great advantage?

As to this, Rāhula, a monk who is-forest-gone<sup>11</sup>
or gone to the root of a tree
or gone to an empty place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding his back erect,
arousing mindfulness in front of him.

Mindful he breathes in,
mindful he breathes out.

Breathing in a long (breath) he comprehends,
'I am breathing in a long (breath)';
or breathing out a long (breath) he comprehends,
'I am breathing out a long (breath)';
or breathing in a short (breath) he comprehends,
'I am breathing in a short (breath)';
or breathing out a short (breath) he comprehends,
'I am breathing out a short (breath).'

He trains himself thinking:
'I shall breathe in experiencing the whole body';
he trains himself thinking:
'I shall breathe out experiencing the whole body.'
He trains himself thinking:
'I shall breathe in tranquillising the activity of the body';
he trains himself thinking:
'I shall breathe out tranquillising the activity of the body.'

He trains himself thinking:

'I shall breathe in experiencing rapture';

he trains himself thinking:

'I shall breathe out experiencing rapture.'

He trains himself thinking:

'I shall breathe in ... out experiencing happiness

... shall breathe in ... out experiencing the activity of thought ...

tranquillising the activity of thought ...

experiencing thought ...

rejoicing in thought ...

concentrating thought ...

freeing thought.'

He trains himself thinking:

'I shall breathe in ... out beholding impermanence

... beholding dispassion

... beholding stopping

... beholding casting away.'

[97] Mindfulness of in-breathing and out-breathing if developed thus,

Rāhula,

if made much of thus,

is of great fruit, of great advantage.

When, Rāhula, mindfulness of in-breathing and out-breathing has been developed thus,

[426] has been made much of thus,

then those which are the last in-breaths and out-breaths are also stopped only when they are known, not when they are unknown."<sup>12</sup>

Thus spoke the Lord. Delighted, the venerable Rāhula rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Greater Discourse on an Exhortation to Rāhula: The Second

---

<sup>1</sup> bhāvanarū bhāvehi.

<sup>2</sup> Down to the end of "the element of motion," cf. M. Sta. 28. For notes, see M.L.S. i. 231 ff. Cf. A. ii. 164, and see G.S. ii. 171, n. 1.

<sup>3</sup> ākāśadhātu does not occur in Sta. 28, but in Stas. 112, 115, 140 viññāṇadhātu is added to the five mentioned above, as also at D. iii. 247, A. i. 176. See also Dhs. 638.

<sup>4</sup> Earth, water, fire, wind, ākāśa are in Pali the same for the words rendered above respectively: extension, liquid (or cohesion), heat, motion, space. For a note on ākāśa, see above, p. 17, n. 1. Cf. Thag. 1014 where Sāriputta says of himself that he is like earth, water, fire in that he is neither attached to nor revolted by (sensory impingements); and A. iv. 394 f. where he tells the Lord that he abides with his mind like the first four of these elements.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Miln. 385.

<sup>6</sup> These last two sentences are quoted at Miln. 388.

<sup>7</sup> For this and the following five kinds of mental development, cf. the six nissarānīyā dhātuyo (elements from which there is escape) at D. iii. 247-250, a passage which shows interesting similarities as well as variations in respect of the six "developments" of the M. passage above.

<sup>8</sup> arati. aversion, fretting. MA. iii. 140 explains arati as arati pantasenāsanesu c'eva adkikusalesu dhammesu ca ukkaṇṭhitā (aversion from, or dislike of, remote lodgings as well as longing for (fretting after) highly skilled dhammā (items, mental states?).

<sup>9</sup> Cf. A. iv. 46.

<sup>10</sup> asmimāna; cf. M. i. 139. It is the pride due to thinking, 'I am in material shapes, and so on.'

<sup>11</sup> With the following cf. M. i. 56. All the terms, to the end of this Discourse, are explained in Vism., Ch. VIII.

<sup>12</sup> Vism. 291 f. gives some explanation of the meaning of ye pi te carimakā assāsapassāsā te pi veditā va nirujjhanti no aviditā.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
2. Bhikkhu Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
2. The Division on Monks

63. Lesser Discourse to Māluṅkya (Putta)

Cūḷa Māluṅkya Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattḥī
in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then a reasoning of mind arose to the venerable Māluṅkyāputta<sup>2</sup> as he was meditating in solitary seclusion,
thus:

"Those (speculative) views that are not explained,
set aside
and ignored by the Lord:

The world is eternal,
the world is not eternal,
the world is an ending thing,

the world is not an ending thing;
the life-principle is the same as the body,
the life-principle is one thing,
the body another;
the Tathāgata<sup>3</sup> is after dying,
the Tathāgata is not after dying,
the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying,
the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying -
the Lord does not explain these to me.

That the Lord does not explain these to me
does not please me,
does not satisfy me,
so I, having approached the Lord,
will question him on the matter.

If [98] the Lord will explain to me
either that the world is eternal
or that the world is not eternal
or that the world is an ending thing,
or that the world is not an ending thing;
that the life-principle is the same as the body,
or that the life-principle is one thing,
the body another;
that the Tathāgata is after dying,
or that the Tathāgata is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying,
then will I fare the Brahma-faring under the Lord.

But if the Lord will not explain to me
either that the world is eternal
or that the world is not eternal
or that the world is an ending thing,
or that the world is not an ending thing;
that the life-principle is the same as the body,

or that the life-principle is one thing,
the body another;
that the Tathāgata is after dying,
or that the Tathāgata is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying, then will I, disavowing the training,
revert to secular life."

Then the venerable Mālunkyāputta,
emerging from solitary meditation towards evening,
approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance,
the venerable Mālunkyāputta spoke thus to the Lord:

"Now, revered sir, as I was meditating in solitary seclusion, a reasoning of mind arose to me thus:

'Those (speculative) views that are not explained,
set aside,
ignored by the Lord:

The world is eternal,
the world is not eternal,
the world is an ending thing,
the world is not an ending thing;
the life-principle is the same as the body,
the life-principle is one thing,
the body another;
the Tathāgata is after dying,
the Tathāgata is not after dying,
the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying,

the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying -
the Lord does not explain these to me.

That the Lord does not explain these to me
does not please me,
does not satisfy me,
so I, having approached the Lord,
will question him on the matter.

If the Lord will explain to me
either that the world is eternal
or that the world is not eternal
or that the world is an ending thing,
or that the world is not an ending thing;
that the life-principle is the same as the body,
or that the life-principle is one thing,
the body another;
that the Tathāgata is after dying,
or that the Tathāgata is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying,
then will I fare the Brahma-faring under the Lord.

But if the Lord will not explain to me
either that the world is eternal
or that the world is not eternal
or that the world is an ending thing,
or that the world is not an ending thing;
that the life-principle is the same as the body,
or that the life-principle is one thing,
the body another;
that the Tathāgata is after dying,
or that the Tathāgata is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying,

then will I, disavowing the training,
revert to secular life."

---

If the Lord knows that the world is eternal, let the Lord explain to me
that the world is eternal.

If the Lord knows that the world is not eternal, let the Lord explain to me that the world is not eternal.

If the Lord does not know whether the world is eternal or whether the world is not eternal,
then, not knowing,
not seeing,
this would be honest,
namely to say:

'I do not know,
I do not see.'

■

If the Lord knows that the world is an ending thing,
let the Lord explain to me that the world is an ending thing.

If the Lord knows that the world is not an ending thing, let the Lord explain to me that the world is not an ending thing.

If the Lord does not know whether the world is an ending thing or whether the world is not an ending thing,
then, not knowing,

not seeing,
this would be honest,
namely to say:

'I do not know,
I do not see.'

■

If the Lord knows that the life-principle is the same as the body, let the Lord explain to me
that the life-principle is the same as the body.

If the Lord knows that the life-principle is one thing,
the body another,
let the Lord explain to me that the life-principle is one thing,
the body another.

If the Lord does not know whether the life-principle is the same as the body or whether the life-principle is one thing,
the body another,
then, not knowing,
not seeing,
this would be honest,
namely to say:

'I do not know,
I do not see.'

■

If the Lord knows that the Tathāgata is after dying, let the Lord explain to me
that the Tathāgata is after dying.

If the Lord knows that the Tathāgata is not after dying, let the Lord explain to me that the Tathāgata is not after dying.

If the Lord knows that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying, let the Lord explain to me that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying.

If the Lord knows that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying, let the Lord explain to me that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying.

If the Lord does not know that the Tathāgata is after dying,
or that the Tathāgata is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying,
then, not knowing,
not seeing,
this would be honest,
namely to say:

'I do not know,
I do not see.'

"But did I ever speak thus to you, Mālun̄kyāputta:

'Come you, Mālun̄kyāputta, fare the Brahma-faring under me
and I will explain to you
either that the world is eternal
or that the world is not eternal
or that the world is an ending thing,
or that the world is not an ending thing;
that the life-principle is the same as the body,
or that the life-principle is one thing,
the body another;
that the Tathāgata is after dying,
or that the Tathāgata is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying?'"

"No, revered sir."

"Or did you speak thus to me:

'I, revered sir, will fare the Brahma-faring under the Lord
if the Lord will explain to me
either that the world is eternal
or that the world is not eternal
or that the world is an ending thing,
or that the world is not an ending thing;
that the life-principle is the same as the body,
or that the life-principle is one thing,
the body another;
that the Tathāgata is after dying,
or that the Tathāgata is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying?'"

"No, revered sir."

"So it is agreed, Māluṅkyāputta, that neither did I say:

'Come you, Māluṅkyāputta, fare the Brahma-faring under me
and I will explain to you
either that the world is eternal
or that the world is not eternal
or that the world is an ending thing,
or that the world is not an ending thing;
that the life-principle is the same as the body,
or that the life-principle is one thing,
the body another;
that the Tathāgata is after dying,
or that the Tathāgata is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying,

[99] and that neither did you say:

'I, revered sir, will fare the Brahma-faring under the Lord
if the Lord will explain to me
either that the world is eternal
or that the world is not eternal
or that the world is an ending thing,
or that the world is not an ending thing;
that the life-principle is the same as the body,
or that the life-principle is one thing,
the body another;
that the Tathāgata is after dying,
or that the Tathāgata is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying!.'

This being so, foolish man, who are you that you are disavowing?<sup>4</sup>

Whoever, Māluṅkyāputta, should speak thus:

'I will not fare the Brahma-faring under the Lord until the Lord explains to me whether the world is eternal
or whether the world is not eternal
or whether the world is an ending thing,
or whether the world is not an ending thing;
whether the life-principle is the same as the body,
or that the life-principle is one thing,
the body another;
or whether the Tathāgata is after dying,
or that the Tathāgata is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying
- this man might pass away, Māluṅkyāputta,
or ever this was explained to him by the Tathāgata.

Mālunkyāputta, it is as if a man were pierced by an arrow that was thickly smeared with poison and his friends and relations, his kith and kin,
were to procure a physician and surgeon.<sup>5</sup>

He might speak thus:

'I will not draw out this arrow until I know of the man who pierced me whether he is a noble or brahman
or merchant or worker.'

He might speak thus:

'I will not draw out this arrow until I know the name and clan of the man who pierced me.'

He might speak thus:

'I will not draw out this arrow
until I know of the man who pierced me whether he is tall or short or middling in height.'

He might speak thus:

'I will not draw out this arrow
until I know of the man who pierced me whether he is black or deep brown or golden skinned.'

He might speak thus:

'I will not draw out this arrow
until I know of the man who pierced me to what village
or market town
or town
he belongs.'

He might speak thus:

'I will not draw out this arrow until I know of the bow from which I was pierced whether it was a spring-bow<sup>6</sup> or a cross-bow.'

He might speak thus:

'I will not draw out this arrow until I know of the bow-string from which I was pierced whether it was of swallow-wort or of reed or sinew
or hemp
or a tree.'<sup>7</sup> He might speak thus:

'I will not draw out this arrow until I know of the shaft by which I was pierced whether it was of reeds of this kind or that.'<sup>8</sup>

He [100] might speak thus:

'I will not draw out this arrow until I know of the shaft from which I was pierced what kind of feathers it had:

whether those of a vulture or heron
or hawk
or peacock
or some other bird.<sup>9</sup>

He might speak thus:

'I will not draw out this arrow
until I know of the shaft from which I was pierced with what kind of sinews it was encased:
whether those of a cow or buffalo
or deer
or monkey.'<sup>10</sup>

He might speak thus:

'I will not draw out this arrow until I know of the arrow by which I was pierced whether it was an (ordinary) arrow or some other kind of arrow.'<sup>11</sup>

Mālun̄kyāputta, this man might pass away or ever this was known to him.

In the same way, Malun̄kyaputta, whoever should speak thus:

'I will not fare the Brahma-faring under the Lord
until the Lord explains to me
whether the world is eternal
or whether the world is not eternal
or whether the world is an ending thing,
or whether the world is not an ending thing;
whether the life-principle is the same as the body,

or that the life-principle is one thing,
the body another;
or whether the Tathāgata is after dying,
or that the Tathāgata is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying
- this man might pass away, Māluṅkyāputta,
or ever this was explained to him by the Tathāgata.

---

The living of the Brahma-faring, Māluṅkyāputta, could not be said to depend on the view
that the world is eternal.

Nor could the living of the Brahma-faring, Māluṅkyāputta,
be said to depend on the view that the world is not eternal.

Whether there is the view that the world is eternal or whether there is the view that the world is not eternal,
there is birth,
there is ageing,
there is dying,
there are grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
the suppression<sup>12</sup> of which I lay down here and now.

■

The living of the Brahma-faring, Māluṅkyāputta,
could not be said to depend on the view
that the world is an ending thing.

Nor could the living of the Brahma-faring, Māluṅkyāputta,
be said to depend on the view that the world is not an ending thing.

Whether there is the view that the world is an ending thing or whether there is the view that the world is not an ending thing,
there is birth,
there is ageing,
there is dying,
there are grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
the suppression of which I lay down here and now.

■

The living of the Brahma-faring, Māluṅkyāputta,
could not be said to depend on the view
that the life-principle is the same as the body.

Nor could the living of the Brahma-faring, Māluṅkyāputta,
be said to depend on the view
that the life-principle is one thing,
the body another.

Whether there is the view that the life-principle is the same as the body or whether there is the view that the life-principle is one thing,
the body another,
there is birth,
there is ageing,

there is dying,
there are grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
the suppression of which I lay down here and now.

■

The living of the Brahma-faring, Māluṅkyāputta,
could not be said to depend on the view
that the Tathāgata is after dying.

Nor could the living of the Brahma-faring, Māluṅkyāputta,
be said to depend on the view that the Tathāgata is not after dying.

Nor could the living of the Brahma-faring, Māluṅkyāputta,
be said to depend on the view that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying.

Nor could the living of the Brahma-faring, Māluṅkyāputta,
be said to depend on the view that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying.

Whether there is the view that the Tathāgata is after dying,
or that the Tathāgata is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying,
or that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying,
there is birth,
[101] there is ageing,
there is dying,
there are grief,
sorrow,
suffering,

lamentation
and despair,
the suppression of which
I lay down here and now.

Wherefore, Māluṅkyāputta, understand as not explained
what has not been explained by me,
and understand as explained
what has been explained by me.

And what, Māluṅkyāputta, has not been explained by me?

That the world is eternal has not been explained by me, Māluṅkyāputta; that the world is not eternal has not been explained by me, Māluṅkyāputta; that the world is an ending thing has not been explained by me, Māluṅkyāputta;
that the world is not an ending thing has not been explained by me, Māluṅkyāputta;
that the life-principle is the same as the body, has not been explained by me, Māluṅkyāputta;
that the life-principle is one thing,
the body another has not been explained by me, Māluṅkyāputta;
that the Tathāgata is after dying, has not been explained by me, Māluṅkyāputta;
that the Tathāgata is not after dying has not been explained by me, Māluṅkyāputta;
that the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying has not been explained by me, Māluṅkyāputta;
that the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying has not been explained by me, Māluṅkyāputta.

And why, Māluṅkyāputta, has this not been explained by me?

It is because it is not connected with the goal, is not fundamental to the Brahma-faring, and does not conduce to turning away from,

nor to dispassion,
stopping,
calming,
super-knowledge,
awakening nor to nibbāna.

Therefore it has not been explained by me, Māluṅkyāputta.

And what has been explained by me, Māluṅkyāputta?

'This is anguish'
has been explained by me, Māluṅkyāputta.

'This is the arising of anguish'
has been explained by me.

'This is the stopping of anguish'
has been explained by me.

'This is the course leading to the stopping of anguish'
has been explained by me.

And why, Māluṅkyāputta, has this been explained by me?

It is because it is connected with the goal, is fundamental to the Brahma-faring, and conduces to turning away from,
to dispassion,
stopping,
calming,
super-knowledge,
awakening
and nibbāna.

Therefore it has been explained by me.

Wherefore, Mālunkyāputta, understand as not explained what has not been explained by me,
and understand as explained
what has been explained by me."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, the venerable Mālunkyāputta rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Lesser Discourse to Malunkya(putta):
The Third

---

<sup>1</sup> Referred to at Miln. 144.

<sup>2</sup> Two sets of verses are ascribed to him in Thag: 399-404 (ver. 404 speaking of drawing out the arrow, or dart, salla, see below, p. 99), and 794-817. For further references see DPPN.

<sup>3</sup> MA. iii. 141 explains Tathāgata by satta, being; cf. MA. ii. 117. At UdA. 340 Tathāgata is explained by atta.

<sup>4</sup> As at D. iii. 3. Ko santo kaṃ paccācikkhasi might also mean; being whom what are you disavowing?

<sup>5</sup> As at M. ii. 216, 256.

<sup>6</sup> This is a tentative translation of cāpa; cf. capala, wavering, trembling, quivering. The word cāpātikhīṇā occurs at Dhp. 156.

<sup>7</sup> khīrapañṇim, Eulotropis gigantea, a tree whose leaves contain milky sap, as the Pali name indicates.

<sup>8</sup> Two kinds are mentioned: yadi vā kaccham yadi vā ropimam. On the two kinds of kaccha mentioned at MA. iii. 142 (mountain and river) cf. SnA 33. Ropimam is explained at MA. iii. 142 as: making an arrow (or, reed) taken from a thicket of (sara-) reeds.

<sup>9</sup> A specific kind of bird is mentioned, sithilahanu.

<sup>10</sup> semhāra, meaning conjectural, PED; but MA. iii. 142 gives makkata.

<sup>11</sup> Together with salla a usual word for arrow or dart, the text mentions five other kinds: khurappa, vekaṇḍa, nārāca, vacchadanta, karavīrapatta. Not one is commented upon at MA. iii. 142.

<sup>12</sup> nighāta, the destruction, overthrow, striking down.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
2. Bhikkhu Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
2. The Division on Monks

64. Greater Discourse to Māluṅkya (Putta)

Mahā Māluṅkya Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattḥī
in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered One," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Do you, monks, remember that I taught you about the five fetters binding to the lower (shore)?"

When this had been said,
the venerable Mālunkyāputta spoke thus to the Lord:

"Yes, I, revered sir, remember that the Lord taught that there are five fetters binding to the lower (shore)."

"But do you, Mālunkyāputta, remember it as it was spoken by me when I taught you about the five fetters binding to the lower (shore)?"

---

"I, revered sir, remember that the Lord taught that false view of own body<sup>1</sup>
is a fetter binding to the lower (shore).

I, revered sir, remember
that perplexity
is a fetter binding to the lower (shore).

I, revered sir, remember that clinging to rites and customs
is a fetter binding to the lower (shore).

I, revered sir, remember that desire for sense-pleasures
is a fetter binding to the lower (shore).

I, revered sir, remember
that malevolence
is a fetter binding to the lower (shore).

It is thus that I, revered sir, remember
the five fetters binding to the lower (shore) as taught by the Lord."

---

"And about whom do you, Māluṅkyāputta, remember that I thus taught the five fetters binding to the lower (shore)?

Would not wanderers belonging to other sects chide<sup>2</sup> you with the simile of the baby?<sup>3</sup>

For, Māluṅkyāputta,
if there were not 'own body'
for an innocent baby boy lying on his back, whence could there arise for him the view of 'own body'?

A leaning to the view of 'own body' indeed lies latent in him.

■

Māluṅkyāputta, if there were not 'things'<sup>4</sup>
for an innocent baby boy lying on his back, [103] whence could there arise for him perplexity about things!

A leaning to perplexity indeed lies latent in him.

■

Māluṅkyāputta, if there were not 'habits'<sup>5</sup>
for an innocent baby boy lying on his back,

whence could there arise for him clinging to rites and customs?

A leaning to clinging to rites and customs indeed lies latent in him.

■

Māluṅkyāputta, if there were not 'sense-pleasures'
for an innocent baby boy lying on his back,
whence could there arise for him desire for sense-pleasures
among the sense-pleasures?

A leaning to attachment to sense-pleasures indeed lies latent in him.

■

Māluṅkyāputta, if there were not 'beings'
for an innocent baby boy lying on his back,
whence could there arise for him malevolence towards beings?

A leaning to malevolence indeed lies latent in him.

Now, Māluṅkyāputta,
would not wanderers belonging to other sects chide you with this simile of the baby?"

---

When this had been said, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord:

"Lord, this is the time, Well-farer, this is the time that the Lord might teach (us) about the five fetters binding to the lower (shore).

When the monks have heard the Lord they will remember."

"Well then, Ānanda, listen,
attend carefully,
and I will speak."

"Yes, revered sir,"
the venerable Ānanda answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Herein, Ānanda, an uninstructed ordinary person, taking no count of the pure ones,
unskilled in the dhamma of the pure ones,
untrained in the dhamma of the pure ones;
taking no count of the true men,
unskilled in the dhamma of the true men,
untrained in the dhamma of the true men, lives with his mind obsessed by false view as to 'own body,' overcome by false view as to 'own body,' and he does not comprehend the escape,<sup>6</sup>
as it really is,
from the false view of 'own body'
that has arisen.

That false view of his of 'own body,' resistant,

not dispelled,
is a fetter binding to the lower (shore).

■

He lives with his mind obsessed
by perplexity
overcome by perplexity,
and he does not comprehend the escape,
as it really is,
from perplexity
that has arisen.

That perplexity
resistant,
not dispelled,
is a fetter binding to the lower (shore).

■

He lives with his mind obsessed
by clinging to rites and customs overcome by clinging to rites and customs,
and he does not comprehend the escape,
as it really is,
from clinging to rites and customs
that has arisen.

That clinging to rites and customs,
resistant,
not dispelled,
is a fetter binding to the lower (shore).

■

He lives with his mind obsessed
by attachment to sense-pleasures

overcome by attachment to sense-pleasures,
and he does not comprehend the escape,
as it really is,
from attachment to sense-pleasures
that has arisen.

That attachment to sense-pleasures,
resistant,
not dispelled,
is a fetter binding to the lower (shore).

■

He lives with his mind obsessed
by malevolence
overcome by malevolence,
and he does not comprehend the escape,
as it really is,
from malevolence
that has arisen.

That malevolence,
resistant,
not dispelled,
is a fetter binding to the lower (shore).

But, Ānanda,
an instructed disciple of the pure ones,
taking count [104] of the pure ones,
skilled in the dhamma of the pure ones,
trained in the dhamma of the pure ones;
taking count of the true men,
skilled in the dhamma of the true men, trained in dhamma of the true men, does not live with his mind obsessed
by false view as to 'own body,'

overcome by false view as to 'own body,'
and he comprehends the escape,
as it really is,
from the false view of 'own body'
that has arisen.

That false view of his of 'own body'
is got rid of
with the leaning<sup>7</sup> towards it.

■

He does not live with his mind obsessed
by perplexity
overcome by perplexity,
and he comprehends the escape,
as it really is,
from perplexity
that has arisen.

That perplexity,
is got rid of
with the leaning towards it.

■

He does not live with his mind obsessed
by clinging to rites and customs
overcome by clinging to rites and customs,
and he comprehends the escape,
as it really is,
from clinging to rites and customs
that has arisen.

That clinging to rites and customs,
is got rid of
with the leaning towards it.

■

He does not live with his mind obsessed
by attachment to sense-pleasures
overcome by attachment to sense-pleasures,
and he comprehends the escape,
as it really is,
from attachment to sense-pleasures
that has arisen.

That attachment to sense-pleasures,
is got rid of
with the leaning towards it.

■

He does not live with his mind obsessed
by malevolence
overcome by malevolence,
and he comprehends the escape,
as it really is,
from malevolence
that has arisen.

That malevolence,
is got rid of
with the leaning towards it.

■

Whatever, Ānanda, is the way, whatever the course
for getting rid of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore) - that one could know
or see
or get rid of
the five fetters binding to the lower (shore)

irrespective of that way, that course -
this situation does not occur.

Just as this situation does not occur, Ānanda, that without having cut off the bark of a great,
stable
and pithy tree,
without having cut out the softwood, there can be no cutting out of the pith,<sup>8</sup>
even so, Ānanda,
whatever is the way,
whatever the course
for getting rid of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore) -
that one could know
or see
or get rid of
the five fetters binding to the lower (shore)
irrespective of this way, this course -
this situation does not occur.

But, Ānanda, whatever is the way,
whatever the course
for getting rid of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore) -
that one could know
or see
or get rid of
the five fetters binding to the lower (shore)
because of that way,
that course -
this situation occurs.

Just as this situation occurs, Ānanda, that having cut off the bark

of a great,
stable
and pithy tree,
having cut out the softwood,
there can be a cutting out of the pith,
even so, Ānanda,
whatever is the way,
whatever the course
for getting rid of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore) -
that one could know
or see
or get rid of
the five fetters binding to the lower (shore)
because of this way,
this course -
this situation occurs.

It is as if, Ānanda, the river Ganges were full of [105] water, overflowing,
so that a crow could drink from it,
and a feeble man should come along, thinking:

'Having cut across the stream of the river Ganges using my arms, I am going safely beyond,'

yet he would not be able,
having cut across the stream of the river Ganges
and using his arms,
to go safely beyond.

Even so, Ānanda,
whoever while dhamma is being taught to him for the stopping of 'own body' does not rejoice,

is not pleased
and composed,
he is not freed,<sup>9</sup> even as this is to be understood of that feeble man.

But, Ānanda, if the river Ganges were full of water,
overflowing,
so that a crow could drink from it,
and a strong man should come along, thinking:

'Having cut across the stream of the river Ganges, using my arms,
I am going safely beyond,'
he would be able,
having cut across the stream of the river Ganges
and using his arms,
to go safely beyond.

Even so, Ānanda, whoever while dhamma is being taught to him for the stopping of 'own body' rejoices,
is pleased
and composed,
he is freed,
even as this is to be understood of that strong man.

And what, Ānanda, is the way, what the course for getting rid of these five fetters binding to the lower (shore)?

Here, Ānanda, a monk,
by aloofness from 'clinging',<sup>10</sup> by getting rid of unskilled states of mind, by allaying every bodily impropriety,

aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
enters and abides in the first meditation
which is accompanied by initial thought
and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness
and is rapturous and joyful.

Whatever is there of material shape,
feeling,
perception,
the habitual tendencies,
consciousness -
he beholds these things as impermanent,
suffering,
as a disease,
an imposthume,
a dart,
a misfortune,
an affliction,
as other,
as decay,
empty,
not-self.<sup>11</sup>

He [106] turns his mind from these things;<sup>12</sup>
and when he has turned his mind from these things he focuses his mind on the deathless element,
thinking:

'This is the real,<sup>13</sup> this the excellent,<sup>14</sup>
that is to say
the tranquillising of all the activities,
the casting out of all clinging,
the destruction of craving,

dispassion,
stopping,
nibbāna.<sup>15</sup>

If he is steadfast therein,
he achieves destruction of the cankers;
if he does not achieve destruction of the cankers,
then through his attachment to dhamma,
his delight in dhamma,
through his utter destruction
of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore),
he is of spontaneous uprising,
one who attains nibbāna there,
not liable to return from that world.

This, Ānanda, is the way,
this the course
for getting rid of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore).

■

And again, Ānanda, a monk,
by allaying initial and discursive thought,
with the mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters and abides in the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration
and is rapturous and joyful

Whatever is there of material shape,
feeling,
perception,
the habitual tendencies,
consciousness -
he beholds these things as impermanent,

suffering,
as a disease,
an imposthume,
a dart,
a misfortune,
an affliction,
as other,
as decay,
empty,
not-self.

He turns his mind from these things;
and when he has turned his mind from these things
he focuses his mind on the deathless element,
thinking:

'This is the real,
this the excellent,
that is to say
the tranquillising of all the activities,
the casting out of all clinging,
the destruction of craving,
dispassion,
stopping,
nibbāna.'

If he is steadfast therein,
he achieves destruction of the cankers;
if he does not achieve destruction of the cankers,
then through his attachment to dhamma,
his delight in dhamma,
through his utter destruction
of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore),
he is of spontaneous uprising,
one who attains nibbāna there,
not liable to return from that world.

This, Ānanda, is the way,
this the course
for getting rid of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore).

■

And again, Ānanda, a monk,
by the fading out of rapture,
dwells with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious,
and experiences in his person
that joy of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,'
and he enters on
and abides in
the third meditation.

Whatever is there of material shape,
feeling,
perception,
the habitual tendencies,
consciousness -
he beholds these things as impermanent,
suffering,
as a disease,
an imposthume,
a dart,
a misfortune,
an affliction,
as other,
as decay,
empty,
not-self.

He turns his mind from these things;
and when he has turned his mind from these things

he focuses his mind on the deathless element,
thinking:

'This is the real,
this the excellent,
that is to say
the tranquillising of all the activities,
the casting out of all clinging,
the destruction of craving,
dispassion,
stopping,
nibbāna.'

If he is steadfast therein,
he achieves destruction of the cankers;
if he does not achieve destruction of the cankers,
then through his attachment to dhamma,
his delight in dhamma,
through his utter destruction
of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore),
he is of spontaneous uprising,
one who attains nibbāna there,
not liable to return from that world.

This, Ānanda, is the way,
this the course
for getting rid of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore).

■

And again, Ānanda, a monk
by getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,
enters on
and abides in

the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

Whatever is there of material shape,
feeling,
perception,
the habitual tendencies,
consciousness -
he beholds these things as impermanent,
suffering,
as a disease,
an imposthume,
a dart,
a misfortune,
an affliction,
as other,
as decay,
empty,
not-self.

He turns his mind from these things;
and when he has turned his mind from these things
he focuses his mind on the deathless element,
thinking:

'This is the real,
this the excellent,
that is to say
the tranquillising of all the activities,
the casting out of all clinging,
the destruction of craving,
dispassion,
stopping,
nibbāna.'

If he is steadfast therein,
he achieves destruction of the cankers;
if he does not achieve destruction of the cankers,
then through his attachment to dhamma,
his delight in dhamma,
through his utter destruction
of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore),
he is of spontaneous uprising,
one who attains nibbāna there,
not liable to return from that world.

This, Ānanda, is the way,
this the course
for getting rid of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore).

■

And again, Ānanda, a monk
by wholly transcending perception of material shapes,
by the going down of perception due to sensory impressions,
by not attending to perception of variety,
thinking:
'Ether is unending,'
enters on
and abides in the plane of infinite ether.

Whatever is there of material shape,
feeling,
perception,
the habitual tendencies,
consciousness -
he beholds these things as impermanent,
suffering,
as a disease,
an imposthume,
a dart,

a misfortune,
an affliction,
as other,
as decay,
empty,
not-self.

He turns his mind from these things;
and when he has turned his mind from these things
he focuses his mind on the deathless element,
thinking:

'This is the real,
this the excellent,
that is to say
the tranquillising of all the activities,
the casting out of all clinging,
the destruction of craving,
dispassion,
stopping,
nibbāna.'

If he is steadfast therein,
he achieves destruction of the cankers;
if he does not achieve destruction of the cankers,
then through his attachment to dhamma,
his delight in dhamma,
through his utter destruction
of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore),
he is of spontaneous uprising,
one who attains nibbāna there,
not liable to return from that world.

This, Ānanda, is the way,
this the course
for getting rid of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore).

■

And again, Ānanda, a monk
by wholly transcending the plane of infinite ether,
thinking:
'Consciousness is unending,'
enters on
and abides in
the plane of infinite consciousness.

Whatever is there of material shape,
feeling,
perception,
the habitual tendencies,
consciousness -
he beholds these things as impermanent,
suffering,
as a disease,
an imposthume,
a dart,
a misfortune,
an affliction,
as other,
as decay,
empty,
not-self.

He turns his mind from these things;
and when he has turned his mind from these things
he focuses his mind on the deathless element,
thinking:

'This is the real,
this the excellent,
that is to say
the tranquillising of all the activities,

the casting out of all clinging,
the destruction of craving,
dispassion,
stopping,
nibbāna.'

If he is steadfast therein,
he achieves destruction of the cankers;
if he does not achieve destruction of the cankers,
then through his attachment to dhamma,
his delight in dhamma,
through his utter destruction
of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore),
he is of spontaneous uprising,
one who attains nibbāna there,
not liable to return from that world.

This, Ānanda, is the way,
this the course
for getting rid of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore).

■

And again, Ānanda, a monk,
by wholly transcending the plane of infinite consciousness,
thinking:
'There is no thing,'
enters on
and abides in
the plane of no-thing.

Whatever is there of material shape,
feeling,
perception,
the habitual tendencies,
consciousness -

he beholds these things as impermanent,
suffering,
as a disease,
an imposthume,
a dart,
a misfortune,
an affliction,
as other,
as decay,
empty,
not-self.

He turns his mind from these things;
and when he [107] has turned his mind from these things
he focuses his mind on the deathless element,
thinking:

'This is the real,
this the excellent,
that is to say
the tranquillising of all the activities,
the casting out of all clinging,
the destruction of craving,
dispassion,
stopping,
nibbāna.'

If he is steadfast therein,
he achieves destruction of the cankers;
if he does not achieve destruction of the cankers,
then through his attachment to dhamma,
his delight in dhamma,
through his utter destruction
of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore),
he is of spontaneous uprising,

one who attains nibbāna there,
not liable to return from that world.

This, Ānanda, is the way,
this the course
for getting rid of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore).

■

"If this, revered sir, is the way,
this the course
for getting rid of the five fetters binding to the lower (shore), then how is it that some monks here are those who have freedom of mind while others are those who have freedom through intuitive wisdom?"<sup>16</sup>

"As to this, I, Ānanda, say that there is a difference in their faculties."<sup>17</sup>

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, the venerable Ānanda rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Greater Discourse to Mālunkyā(putta)
The Fourth

---

<sup>1</sup> sakkāya. Cf. M. i 300.

<sup>2</sup> iminā taruṇūpamena upārambhena upārambhissanti (the last word so corrected at M. i. 574 from upārambhismti of the text, and so reading at M. i. 433).

<sup>3</sup> Cf. M. i 459.

<sup>4</sup> dhammā, things, phenomena; mental states, objects or contents of thought or consciousness.

<sup>5</sup> sīlā.

<sup>6</sup> MA. iii. 144 says that the escape from false view is nibbāna.

<sup>7</sup> sānsayā. MA. iii. 144 says, in effect, that the fetter and the "leaning" are the same.

<sup>8</sup> MA. iii. 145 says cutting off the bark is like attaining, cutting out the softwood is like insight, cutting out the pith is like the Way.

<sup>9</sup> Cf. M. i. 186, where the na vimuccati of above reads adhimuccati, is set on, intent on, and which Trenckner says (M. i. 566) he should have adopted here. But I think na vimuccati (and vimuccati a little lower) are certainly right here, for to cross over is to be freed. Moreover at M. i. 186 adhimuccati is part of the sequence of verbs all referring to the same subject, whereas above na vimuccati is not. Thus the compilers were right to vary the last of the four verbs in these two contexts however much the first three are identical.

<sup>10</sup> upadhi is the basis, attachment or bond tying one to birth and continued existence.

<sup>11</sup> As at M. i. 600; A. iv. 422-423; cf. A. ii. 128, and for notes on this paragraph see G.S. iv. 284, 286. It is said at MA. iii. 146 that the suffering-mark is sixfold, the impermanence-mark twofold (with 'decay,' palokata) and the not-self-mark threefold; other, empty, not-self.

<sup>12</sup> MA. iii. 146, from the five khandhas all of which have the threefold mark.

<sup>13</sup> santa is both 'real' and 'peace.'

<sup>14</sup> As at M. ii. 235, 263; A. iv. 423, v. 8, 110, 320, 322, 354 ff.

<sup>15</sup> As at M. i. 136.

<sup>16</sup> MA. iii. 147-8; If when a monk goes after calm, one-pointedness of mind is to the forefront - this monk is called freed in mind; but if wisdom is to the forefront - such a monk is called freed through wisdom. When one goes after insight, if wisdom is to the forefront, such a monk is called freed through wisdom; if his one-pointedness of mind is to the forefront, he is called freed in mind. The two chief disciples attained arahantship with calm and insight to the forefront; Sāriputta was freed through wisdom and Moggallāna was freed in mind.

<sup>17</sup> indriya. On the various groups, see P.E.D. The Comy. here does not explain. Cf. M. i. 453.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
2. Bhikkhu Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
2. The Division on Monks

65. Discourse to Bhaddāli

Bhaddāli Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī
in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

While he was [108] there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Revered One," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"I, monks, partake of my food at one session.<sup>1</sup>

Partaking of my food at one session,
I, monks, am aware of good health
and of being without illness and of buoyancy

and strength
and living in comfort.

Come, do you too, monks, partake of your food at one session.

Partaking of your food at one session,
you too, monks, will be aware of good health,
of being without illness, of buoyancy
and strength
and living in comfort."

When this had been said,
the venerable Bhaddāli spoke thus to the Lord:

"I, revered sir, am not capable<sup>2</sup> of eating my food at one session;
revered sir, if I ate my food at one session,
I might have scruples,<sup>3</sup>
I might have misgivings."

"Well then, you, Bhaddāli, having eaten one portion there where you were invited, having taken another portion away, might eat that too;
so could you, Bhaddāli, eating thus, keep yourself going."

"I, revered sir, am not capable of eating in this fashion; even eating so, revered sir,
I might have scruples,
I might have misgivings."

Then the venerable Bhaddāli, while a rule of training was being laid down by the Lord,<sup>4</sup> while the Order of monks was undertaking the training, made known his inability.

Then the venerable Bhaddāli did not see the Lord face to face for an entire three months because he was one who did not carry out in full
the training under the Teacher's instruction.

Now at that time a number of monks were making up robe-material for the Lord,
and they said:

"When the Lord's robe-material is settled,<sup>5</sup> he will set out on a three months tour."

Then the venerable Bhaddāli approached these monks;
having approached,
he exchanged greetings with these monks;
having conversed in a [109] friendly and courteous way,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

These monks spoke thus to the venerable Bhaddāli
as he was sitting down at a respectful distance:

"Reverend Bhaddāli,
this robe-material is being made up for the Lord.

When the robe-material is settled, the Lord will set out on a three months tour.

Please, reverend Bhaddāli, pay careful attention to this opportunity,<sup>6</sup> lest later it is more difficult for you."

"Yes, your reverences," and the venerable Bhaddāli, having answered these monks in assent,

approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance,
the venerable Bhaddāli spoke thus to the Lord:

"Revered sir, a transgression has overcome me, foolish,
misguided
and wrong that I was,
inasmuch as I made known an inability when a rule of training was being laid down by the Lord and when the Order of monks was undertaking the training.

Revered sir, may the Lord acknowledge the transgression
as a transgression
for the sake of restraint in the future,"

"Indeed, Bhaddāli, a transgression overcame you, foolish,
misguided
and wrong that you were,
inasmuch as while a rule of training was being laid down by me and while the training was being undertaken by the Order of monks, you made known your inability.

At that time
this was not realised by you, Bhaddāli:

The Lord is staying near Sāvattthī and the Lord will know of me that the monk named Bhaddāli
is not one that carries out in full
the training under the Teacher's instruction.<sup>7</sup>

At that time
this was not realised by you, Bhaddāli.

Nor at that time
was this realised by you, Bhaddāli:

A number of monks
who have come to Sāvattthī for the rains will also know of me
that the monk named Bhaddāli
is not one that carries out in full
the training under the Teacher's instruction.

At that time
this was not realised by you, Bhaddāli.

Nor at that time
was this realised by you, Bhaddāli:

A number of nuns
who have come to Sāvattthī for the rains
will also know of me
that the monk named Bhaddāli
is not one that carries out in full
the training under the Teacher's instruction.

At that time
this was not realised by you, Bhaddāli.

Nor at that time
was this realised by you, Bhaddāli:

A number of layfollowers who are living in Sāvattthī
will also know of me
that the monk named Bhaddāli
is not one that carries out in full
the training under the Teacher's instruction.

At that time
this was not realised by you, Bhaddāli.

Nor at that time
was this realised by you, Bhaddāli:

A number of women layfollowers who are living in Sāvattthī
will also know of me
that the monk named Bhaddāli
is not one that carries out in full
the training under the Teacher's instruction.

At that time
this was not realised by you, Bhaddāli.

Nor at that time
was this realised by you, [110] Bhaddāli:

A number of recluses and brahmans belonging to other sects who have come to Sāvattthī for the rains will also know of me
that the monk named Bhaddāli
is not one that carries out in full
the training under the Teacher's instruction.

At that time
this was not realised by you either Bhaddāli.

---

"Revered sir, a transgression has overcome me, foolish,
misguided
and wrong that I was,

inasmuch as I made known an inability
when a rule of training was being laid down by the Lord
and when the Order of monks was undertaking the training.

Revered sir, may the Lord acknowledge the transgression
as a transgression
for the sake of restraint in the future,"

"Indeed, Bhaddāli,
a transgression overcame you,
foolish,
misguided
and wrong that you were,
inasmuch as while a rule of training was being laid down by me
and while the training was being undertaken by the Order of monks, you made known your inability.

What do you think about this, Bhaddāli?

There might be a monk here, freed both ways<sup>8</sup>
to whom I might speak thus:

'Come you, monk,
be a causeway for me across the mire.'

Would he make a causeway of himself<sup>9</sup>
or would he twist his body in another (direction),
or would he say 'No'?"

"Not this, revered sir."

"What do you think about this, Bhaddāli?"

There might be a monk here, freed through intuitive wisdom
to whom I might speak thus:

'Come you, monk,
be a causeway for me across the mire.'

Would he make a causeway of himself
or would he twist his body in another (direction),
or would he say 'No'?"

"Not this, revered sir."

"What do you think about this, Bhaddāli?"

There might be a monk here, a mental realiser<sup>10</sup>
to whom I might speak thus:

'Come you, monk,
be a causeway for me across the mire.'

Would he make a causeway of himself
or would he twist his body in another (direction),
or would he say 'No'?"

"Not this, revered sir."

"What do you think about this, Bhaddāli?"

There might be a monk here,
won to view
to whom I might speak thus:

'Come you, monk,
be a causeway for me across the mire.'

Would he make a causeway of himself
or would he twist his body in another (direction),
or would he say 'No'?"

"Not this, revered sir."

"What do you think about this, Bhaddāli?"

There might be a monk here, freed through faith
to whom I might speak thus:

'Come you, monk,
be a causeway for me across the mire.'

Would he make a causeway of himself
or would he twist his body in another (direction),
or would he say 'No'?"

"Not this, revered sir."

"What do you think about this, Bhaddāli?"

There might be a monk here, who strives after dhamma
to whom I might speak thus:

'Come you, monk,
be a causeway for me across the mire.'

Would he make a causeway of himself
or would he twist his body in another (direction),
or would he say 'No'?"

"Not this, revered sir."

"What do you think about this, Bhaddāli?"

There might be a monk here, who strives after faith,<sup>11</sup>
to whom I might speak thus:

'Come you, monk,
be a causeway for me across the mire.'

Would he make a causeway of himself
or would he twist his body in another (direction),
or would he say 'No'?"

"Not this, revered sir."

"What do you think about this, Bhaddāli?"

At that time were [111] you, Bhaddāli, freed both ways or freed through intuitive wisdom or a mental realiser or one that had won to view or one freed through faith or one striving after dhamma or one striving after faith?"

"Not this, revered sir."

"At that time were not you, Bhaddāli, empty,
void,
fallen short?"<sup>12</sup>

"Yes, revered sir.

---

"Revered sir, a transgression has overcome me, foolish,
misguided

and wrong that I was,
inasmuch as I made known an inability
when a rule of training was being laid down by the Lord
and when the Order of monks was undertaking the training.

Revered sir, may the Lord acknowledge the transgression
as a transgression
for the sake of restraint in the future,"

"Indeed, Bhaddāli,
a transgression overcame you,
foolish,
misguided
and wrong that you were,
inasmuch as while a rule of training was being laid down by me
and while the training was being undertaken by the Order of monks, you made known your inability.

But since you, Bhaddāli, see the transgression
as a transgression
and confess it according to the rule,<sup>13</sup> we acknowledge it for you.

For, Bhaddāli, in the discipline for an ariyan, this is growth:
whoever, seeing a transgression
as a transgression,
confesses according to the rule,
he comes to restraint in the future.

Herein, Bhaddāli,
some monk is not one that carries out<sup>14</sup> in full the Teacher's instruction.

It occurs to him:

'Suppose I were to resort to a remote lodging -
to a forest,
to the root of a tree,
a mountain slope,
a wild place,
a hill cave,
a cemetery,
a woodland thicket,
the open air,
a heap of straw -
I should probably realise conditions of further-men, the excellent knowledge and insight befitting the ariyans.'

So he resorts to a remote lodging -
to a forest,
to the root of a tree,
a mountain slope,
a wild place,
a hill cave,
a cemetery,
a woodland thicket,
the open air,
a heap of straw.

As he is staying aloof in this way
the Teacher upbraids him, and when they have examined him his learned fellow Brahma-farers upbraid him, and devatās upbraid him, and the self upbraids the self.

He, upbraided by the Teacher, and upbraided by his learned fellow Brahina-farers after they have examined him, and upbraided by devatās, and the self upbraided by the self,

does not realise conditions of further-men,
the excellent knowledge and insight befitting the ariyans.

What is [112] the reason for this?

It is thus, Bhaddāli,
since he is not one that carries out in full
the training under the Teacher's instruction.<sup>15</sup>

But, Bhaddāli, there is some monk here who fully carries out the training under the Teacher's instruction.

It occurs to him:

'If I were to resort to a remote lodging -
to a forest,
to the root of a tree,
a mountain slope,
a wild place,
a hill cave,
a cemetery,
a woodland thicket,
the open air,
a heap of straw,
I should probably realise conditions of further-men,
the excellent knowledge and insight befitting the ariyans.'

So he resorts to a remote lodging -
to a forest,
to the root of a tree,
a mountain slope,
a wild place,
a hill cave,
a cemetery,
a woodland thicket,

the open air,
a heap of straw.

As he is staying aloof in this way neither the Teacher upbraids him, nor, after they have examined him, do his learned fellow Brahma-farers upbraid him, nor do devotās upbraid him, nor does the self upbraid the self.

He, neither upbraided by the Teacher, nor upbraided by his learned fellow Brahma-farers after they have examined him, nor upbraided by devatās, nor the self upbraided by the self, realises conditions of further-men,
the excellent knowledge and insight befitting the ariyans.

He, aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
enters and abides in the first meditation
which is accompanied by initial thought
and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness
and is rapturous and joyful.

What is the reason for this?

It is thus, Bhaddāli,
for one who fully carries out the training
under the Teacher's instruction.

And again, monks, a monk,
by allaying initial and discursive thought,
his mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters on

and abides in
the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration
and is rapturous and joyful.

What is the reason for this?

It is thus, Bhaddāli,
for one who fully carries out the training
under the Teacher's instruction.

And again, monks, a monk,
by the fading out of rapture,
dwells with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious,
and experiences in his person
that joy of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,'
and he enters on
and abides in
the third meditation.

What is the reason for this?

It is thus, Bhaddāli,
for one who fully carries out the training
under the Teacher's instruction.

And again, monks, a monk
by getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,
enters on
and abides in
the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish [113] nor joy,

and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

What is the reason for this?

It is thus, Bhaddāli,
for one who fully carries out the training
under the Teacher's instruction.

---

Thus with the mind thus composed,
quite purified,
quite clarified,<sup>16</sup>
without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable,
stable,
immovable,
he directs his mind
to the knowledge and recollection of former habitations.

He recollects a variety of former habitations, thus:

One birth,
two births,
three births,
four births,
five births,
ten births,
twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,
fifty births,

a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
and many an eon of integration
and many an eon of disintegration
and many an eon of integration-disintegration:

'Such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so I was nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I came to be in another state
where I was such a one by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so I was nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I arose here.'

Thus he recollects divers former habitations
in all their modes and detail.

■

With the mind composed thus,
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable,

stable,
immovable,
he directs his mind
to the knowledge of the passing hence
and the arising of beings.

With the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men,
he sees beings as they pass hence
or come to be;
he comprehends that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going,
according to the consequences of deeds,
and thinks:

'Indeed these worthy beings
who were possessed of wrong conduct in body,
speech
and thought,
scoffers at the ariyans,
holding a wrong view,
incurring deeds consequent on a wrong view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

But these worthy beings
who were possessed of good conduct in body,
speech
and thought,

who did not scoff at the ariyans,
holding a right view,
incurring deeds consequent on a right view -
these at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a good bourn,
a heaven world.'

Thus with the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men
does he see beings as they pass hence,
as they arise;
he comprehends that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going
according to the consequences of deeds.

■

With the mind composed thus,
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable,
stable,
immovable,
he directs his mind
to the knowledge of the destruction of the cankers.

He comprehends as it really is:

'This is anguish',
'this is the arising of anguish',

'this is the stopping of anguish',
'this is the course leading to the stopping of anguish'.

He comprehends as it really is:

'These are the cankers',
'this is the arising of the cankers',
'this is the stopping of the cankers',
'this is the course leading to the stopping of the cankers'.

Knowing thus,
seeing thus,
his mind is freed from the canker of sense-pleasures
and his mind is freed from the canker of becoming
and his mind is freed from the canker of ignorance.

In freedom the knowledge comes to be:

'I am freed';
and he comprehends:

'Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of being such or so.'

What is the reason for this?

It is thus, Bhaddāli,
for one who fully carries out the training
under the Teacher's instruction."

When this had been said,
the venerable Bhaddāli spoke thus to the Lord:

"What is the cause, revered sir,
what the reason

why they constantly<sup>17</sup> take action<sup>18</sup> against some monk here?

What is the [114] cause, revered sir,
what the reason
why they do not constantly take similar action against some other monk here?"

"As to this, Bhaddāli,
some monk is a constant offender,
full of offences.<sup>19</sup>

On being spoken to by the monks
he shelves the question
by asking another,
he answers off the point,
he evinces anger
and ill-will
and discontent,<sup>20</sup>
he does not conduct himself properly,
is not subdued,
does not mend his ways,<sup>21</sup>
and does not say:

'What can I do to please the Order?'

Therefore, Bhaddāli, it occurs to the monks:

'This monk, your reverences,
is a constant offender,
full of offences.

On being spoken to by the monks
he shelves the question
by asking another,
he answers off the point,

he evinces anger
and ill-will
and discontent,
he does not conduct himself properly,
is not subdued,
does not mend his ways,
and does not say:

'What can I do to please the Order?'

It were good if the venerable ones were to investigate this monk
in such a way
that this legal question of his
should not be settled quickly.'

So, Bhaddāli,
the monks investigate this monk
in such a way
that this legal question of his
is not settled quickly.

■

But, Bhaddāli,
some monk is a constant offender,
full of offences.

He, on being spoken to by the monks
does not shelve the question
by asking another,
he does not answer off the point,
he does not evince anger
and ill-will
and discontent,
he conducts himself properly,
is subdued,

mends his ways,
and he says:

'What can I do to please the Order?

Therefore, Bhaddāli,
it occurs to the monks:

'This monk, your reverences, is a constant offender,
full of offences.

He, on being spoken to by the monks
does not shelve the question
by asking another,
he does not answer off the point,
he does not evince anger
and ill-will
and discontent,
he conducts himself properly,
is subdued,
mends his ways,
and he says:

'What can I do to please the Order?

It were good if the venerable ones were to investigate this monk
in such a way
that this legal question of his
should be settled quickly.'

So, Bhaddāli,
the monte investigate this monk
in such a way
that this legal question of his
is settled quickly.

■

Then, Bhaddāli, some monk here is an occasional offender, he is not full of offences.

But he, on being spoken to by the monks shelves the question
by asking another,
he answers off the point,
he evinces anger
and ill-will
and discontent,
he does not conduct himself properly,
is not subdued,
does not mend his ways,
and does not say:

'What can I do to please the Order?'

Therefore, Bhaddāli, it occurs to the monks:

This monk, your reverences, is an occasional offender,
he is not full of offences.

But he, on being spoken to by the monks
shelves the question
by asking another,
he answers off the point,
he evinces anger
and ill-will
and discontent,
he does not conduct himself properly,
is not subdued,
does not mend his ways,
and does not say:

'What can [115] I do to please the Order?'

It were good if the venerable ones
were to investigate this monk
in such a way
that this legal question of his
should not be settled quickly.'

So, Bhaddāli,
the monks investigate this monk
in such a way
that this legal question of his
is not settled quickly.

■

But, Bhaddāli, some monk is an occasional offender,
he is not full of offences.

He, on being spoken to by the monks
does not shelve the question
by asking another,
he does not answer off the point,
he does not evince anger
and ill-will
and discontent,
he conducts himself properly,
is subdued,
mends his ways,
and he says:

'What can I do to please the Order?

Therefore, Bhaddāli, it occurs to the monks:

This monk, your reverences,
is an occasional offender,
he is not full of offences.

He, on being spoken to by the monks
does not shelve the question
by asking another,
he does not answer off the point,
he does not evince anger
and ill-will
and discontent,
he conducts himself properly,
is subdued,
mends his ways,
and he says:

'What can I do to please the Order?

It were good if the venerable ones were to investigate this monk
in such a way
that this legal question of his
should be settled quickly.'

So, Bhaddāli,
the monte investigate this monk
in such a way
that this legal question of his
is settled quickly.

■

In this connection, Bhaddāli, some monk is going along with only a little faith, with only a little regard.<sup>22</sup>

Therefore, Bhaddāli, it occurs to the monks:

'This reverend monk
is going along with only a little faith,
only a little regard.

If we constantly take action against this monk,
be careful lest even that little faith of his,
even that little regard,
deteriorate.'

Bhaddāli, it is like a man with only one eye<sup>23</sup> - his friends and acquaintances,
his kith and kin
would take care of that one eye so that that one eye of his did not deteriorate,
thinking:

'Take care lest that one eye of his deteriorates.'

Even so, Bhaddāli,
some monk goes along
with only a little faith,
only a little regard.

Therefore, Bhaddāli, it occurs to the monks:

'This reverend monk
is going along with only a little faith,
only a little regard.

If we constantly take action against this monk,
be careful lest even that little faith of his,
even that little regard,
deteriorate.'

This, Bhaddāli, is the cause,
this the reason
why they constantly take action against some monk here.

But, Bhaddāli, this is the cause,
this the reason

why they do not constantly take similar action against some (other) monk here."

"What is the cause, revered sir,
what the reason
why there were formerly fewer rules of training but more monks who were established in profound knowledge?

And what is the cause, revered sir,
what the reason
why there are now more rules of training but fewer monks who are established in profound knowledge?"

[116] "It is thus, Bhaddāli:

When beings are deteriorating, when true dhamma is vanishing away, there are more rules of training and fewer monks established in profound knowledge.

Not until some conditions which cause cankers appear here in the Order<sup>24</sup> does the Teacher, Bhaddāli, lay down a rule of training for disciples.<sup>24</sup>

But when, Bhaddāli,
some conditions which cause cankers appear here in the Order, then the Teacher lays down a rule of training for disciples
so as to ward off
those very conditions which cause cankers.

Not until the Order has arrived at greatness,<sup>25</sup> Bhaddāli, do some conditions which cause cankers
appear here in the Order.

But when, Bhaddāli,
the Order has arrived at greatness, then some conditions which cause cankers

appear here in the Order, and then the Teacher lays down a rule of training for disciples
so as to ward off
those very conditions which cause cankers.

■

Not until the Order has arrived at the height of gain,<sup>26</sup> Bhaddāli,
do some conditions which cause cankers
appear here in the Order.

But when, Bhaddāli,
the Order has arrived at the height of gain, then some conditions which cause cankers
appear here in the Order,
and then the Teacher lays down a rule of training for disciples
so as to ward off
those very conditions which cause cankers.

■

Not until the Order has arrived at the height of fame,<sup>27</sup> Bhaddāli, do some conditions which cause cankers
appear here in the Order.

But when, Bhaddāli,
the Order has arrived at the height of fame,
then some conditions which cause cankers
appear here in the Order,
and then the Teacher lays down a rule of training for disciples
so as to ward off
those very conditions which cause cankers.

■

Not until the Order has arrived at much learning,<sup>28</sup> Bhaddāli, do some conditions which cause cankers

appear here in the Order.

But when, Bhaddāli,
the Order has arrived at much learning,
then some conditions which cause cankers
appear here in the Order,
and then the Teacher lays down a rule of training for disciples
so as to ward off
those very conditions which cause cankers.

■

Not until the Order has arrived at long standing,<sup>29</sup> Bhaddāli, do some conditions which [117] cause cankers
appear here in the Order.

But when, Bhaddāli,
the Order has arrived at long standing,
then some conditions which cause cankers
appear here in the Order,
and then the Teacher lays down a rule of training for disciples
so as to ward off
those very conditions which cause cankers.

■

You were few at the time when I, Bhaddāli, taught you the disquisition on dhamma - the Parable of the Thoroughbred Colt.

Do you, Bhaddāli, remember?"

"No, revered sir."

"To what cause
do you attribute this, Bhaddāli?"

"It is that I, revered sir,
for a long time
was not one who carried out in full
the training under the Teacher's instruction."

"This was not the only cause or reason, Bhaddāli.

For, for a long time, Bhaddāli, I have known your mind with my mind
(and I knew):

While dhamma is being taught by me this foolish man does not listen to dhamma with ready ear, applying himself,
paying attention,
concentrating with all his mind.<sup>30</sup>

However, I, Bhaddāli, will teach you the disquisition on dhamma -
the Parable of the Thoroughbred Colt.

Listen to it,
attend carefully,
and I will speak."

"Yes, revered sir,"
the venerable Bhaddāli answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Bhaddāli, as a skilled horse-trainer,<sup>31</sup> having received a beautiful thoroughbred, first of all makes it get used to the training in respect of wearing the bit;
while it is getting used to the training
in respect of wearing the bit,

whatever the contortions,
capers,
struggles<sup>32</sup>
while it is getting used to a training
it was not used to before,
yet because of the continual training,
the gradual training
it is brought to perfection<sup>33</sup> in that respect.

■

When, Bhaddāli, the beautiful thoroughbred [118] is perfected<sup>34</sup> in that respect
by the continual training,
the gradual training,
the horse-trainer makes it get used to a further training in respect of wearing the harness.

While it is getting used to the training
in respect of wearing the harness,
whatever the contortions,
capers,
struggles
while it is getting used to a training
it was not used to before,
yet because of the continual training,
the gradual training
it is brought to perfection in that respect.

■

When, Bhaddāli, the beautiful thoroughbred is perfected in that respect
by the continual training,
the gradual training,
the horse-trainer makes it get used to a further training in respect of going straight on<sup>35</sup>.

While it is getting used to the training in respect of going straight on,
whatever the contortions,
capers,
struggles
while it is getting used to a training
it was not used to before,
yet because of the continual training,
the gradual training
it is brought to perfection in that respect.

■

When, Bhaddāli, the beautiful thoroughbred is perfected in that respect
by the continual training,
the gradual training,
the horse-trainer makes it get used to a further training in respect of (running in) a circle<sup>36</sup>.

While it is getting used to the training in respect of (running in) a circle,
whatever the contortions,
capers,
struggles
while it is getting used to a training
it was not used to before,
yet because of the continual training,
the gradual training
it is brought to perfection in that respect.

■

When, Bhaddāli, the beautiful thoroughbred is perfected in that respect
by the continual training,
the gradual training,

the horse-trainer makes it get used to a further training in respect of its hoofs<sup>37</sup>.

While it is getting used to the training in respect of its hoofs,
whatever the contortions,
capers,
struggles
while it is getting used to a training
it was not used to before,
yet because of the continual training,
the gradual training
it is brought to perfection in that respect.

■

When, Bhaddāli, the beautiful thoroughbred is perfected in that respect
by the continual training,
the gradual training,
the horse-trainer makes it get used to a further training in respect of galloping.

While it is getting used to the training in respect of wearing galloping,
whatever the contortions,
capers,
struggles
while it is getting used to a training
it was not used to before,
yet because of the continual training,
the gradual training
it is brought to perfection in that respect.

■

When, Bhaddāli, the beautiful thoroughbred is perfected in that respect
by the continual training,
the gradual training,
the horse-trainer makes it get used to a further training in respect of neighing<sup>38</sup>.

While it is getting used to the training in respect of neighing,
whatever the contortions,
capers,
struggles
while it is getting used to a training
it was not used to before,
yet because of the continual training,
the gradual training
it is brought to perfection in that respect.

■

When, Bhaddāli, the beautiful thoroughbred is perfected in that respect
by the continual training,
the gradual training,
the horse-trainer makes it get used to a further training in respect of the "royal trick,"<sup>39</sup>.

While it is getting used to the training in respect of wearing the "royal trick," whatever the contortions,
capers,
struggles
while it is getting used to a training
it was not used to before,
yet because of the continual training,
the gradual training
it is brought to perfection in that respect.

■

When, Bhaddāli, the beautiful thoroughbred is perfected in that respect
by the continual training,
the gradual training,
the horse-trainer makes it get used to a further training in respect of the "royal acrobatic feat"40.

While it is getting used to the training in respect of wearing the "royal acrobatic feat", whatever the contortions,
capers,
struggles
while it is getting used to a training
it was not used to before,
yet because of the continual training,
the gradual training
it is brought to perfection in that respect.

■

When, Bhaddāli, the beautiful thoroughbred is perfected in that respect
by the continual training,
the gradual training,
the horse-trainer makes it get used to a further training in respect of matchless speed.

While it is getting used to the training
in respect of matchless speed,
whatever the contortions,
capers,
struggles
while it is getting used to a training
it was not used to before,
yet because of the continual training,

the gradual training
it is brought to perfection in that respect.

■

When, Bhaddāli, the beautiful thoroughbred is perfected in that respect
by the continual training,
the gradual training,
the horse-trainer makes it get used to a further training in respect of matchless swiftness.

While it is getting used to the training
in respect of matchless swiftness,
whatever the contortions,
capers,
struggles
while it is getting used to a training
it was not used to before,
yet because of the continual training,
the gradual training
it is brought to perfection in that respect.

■

When, Bhaddāli, the beautiful thoroughbred is perfected in that respect
by the continual training,
the gradual training,
the horse-trainer makes it get used to a further training in respect of matchless manners.

While it is getting used to the training
in respect of matchless manners,
whatever the contortions,
capers,
struggles
while it is getting used to a training
it was not used to before,

yet because of the continual training,
the gradual training
it is brought to perfection in that respect.

When, Bhaddāli, the beautiful thoroughbred is perfected in each respect, the horse-trainer provides it further with a gloss and shine.<sup>41</sup>

Bhaddāli, a beautiful thoroughbred, when endowed with these ten qualities,<sup>42</sup> becomes worthy of a king, a royal treasure,
and it is reckoned as an attribute of royalty.

Even so, Bhaddāli,
if a monk is endowed with ten qualities,
he is worthy of offerings,
worthy of hospitality,
worthy of gifts,
to be saluted with joined palms,
an unsurpassed field of merit for the world.

With what ten?

Herein, Bhaddāli, a monk is endowed with an adept's right view, he is endowed with an adept's right thought, he is endowed with an adept's [119] right speech, he is endowed with an adept's right action, he is endowed with an adept's right mode of livelihood, he is endowed with an adept's right endeavour, he is endowed with an adept's right mindfulness, he is endowed with an adept's right concentration, he is endowed with an adept's right knowledge, he is endowed with an adept's right freedom.

Bhaddāli, if a monk is endowed with these ten qualities,
he is worthy of offerings,
worthy of hospitality,
worthy of gifts,
to be saluted with joined palms,
an unsurpassed field of merit for the world."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, the venerable Bhaddāli rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse to Bhaddāli:
The Fifth

---

<sup>1</sup> As at M. i. 124.

<sup>2</sup> na ussahāmi, I am not able, or, I do not dare.

<sup>3</sup> kukkucca is scrupulous doubting, doubting whether one is doing right. Bhaddāli says he wonders if he could or could not fare the Brahma-faring for the whole of his life if he ate thus. He had been a crow in a former birth, and because crows are great eaters he had the nickname of Mahāchātaka, Great Eater, MA. iii. 148 f.

<sup>4</sup> According to MA. iii. 149 this was the rule forbidding eating at the wrong time (given at Vin. iv. 85).

<sup>5</sup> niṭṭhita. See Vin. iii. 195 ff., and B.D. ii. 4, n. 5.

<sup>6</sup> desaka. MA. iii. 149 has the v.l. dosaka and explains by okāsa aparādha, occasion (permission) and fault.

<sup>7</sup> Quoted at DA. 32, VA. i. 107, UdA. 19, Asl. 57.

<sup>8</sup> See M. i. 477 (and below, p. 151). This and the other six terms (freed through intuitive wisdom down to the one who strives after faith) occur also at M. i. 477-479 and at A. i. 73-74, iv. 10; D. iii. 105, 253-254; Pug. 14-15; and with three others at A. v. 23.

<sup>9</sup> saṅkameyya. Cf. Jā. iii. 373, attānaṃ saṅkamaṃ katvā.

<sup>10</sup> kāyasakkhin. See M. i. 478. Cf. A. i. 118 f. on this and the next two terms, and where it is said it is difficult to decide which is the most excellent. MA. iii. 189 = AA. ii. 190 says the kāyasakkhin first attains jhāna and later realises stopping and nibbana. M. i. 478 = Pug. 14, 73 describes him as "a person who abides having attained the (eight) Deliverances kāyena (through mind? while in the body?) and some of whose cankers are destroyed if he has seen by means of right wisdom. "He should be compared with the person who is freed both ways and the one freed by means of wisdom.

<sup>11</sup> Cf. the strivers after dhamma and after faith at M. i. 226.

<sup>12</sup> MA. iii. 152 says "empty and void because of lack of inner development of the qualities of ariyans."

<sup>13</sup> Cf. Vin. i. 315, ii. 126, 192, iv. 18-19, etc. See PTC. s.v. accaya.

<sup>14</sup> Probably, sikkhāya, the training, should be inserted here as it occurs in all the corresponding passages in this Discourse.

<sup>15</sup> Cf. S. v. 378.

<sup>16</sup> For this passage, down to 'there is no more of being such or so,' see above, p. 12 ff.

<sup>17</sup> pavayha pavayha, urgent, pressing, constantly. MA. iii. 153 says: Having constantly reproved him for even trifling faults. Cf. M. iii. 118.

<sup>18</sup> kāraṇa-karonti. This probably means the juridical action that the Saṅgha (Order) has power to employ. Similarly below, adhikarāṇa, "legal question"

refers only to the four types of these that the Samgha is able to deal with. They are treated of in detail at Vin. ii. 88 ff., and come under "ecclesiastical" jurisdiction only, having nothing to do with a secular court of justice.

<sup>19</sup> āpattibākula, as at Vin. i. 321, 330, 332.

<sup>20</sup> Cf. M. i. 99, 250; Vin. iv. 135.

<sup>21</sup> As at Vin. i. 49.

<sup>22</sup> pema, affection or regard.

<sup>23</sup> Lit., "like the eye of one man."

<sup>24</sup> Cf. Vin. iii. 10.

<sup>25</sup> mahalta, a considerable size. MA. iii. 165-156 says that when the Order has become large, mahantabhāva, then the lodgings do not suffice for the elders, those of middle standing and the newly ordained monks. So conditions causing cankers arise in regard to the lodgings. The rules of training laid down for an Order attained to largeness are (1) "whatever monk should lie down to sleep with one who is not ordained, there is a pācittiya offence" (Pāc. 5. Vin. iv. 16), and (2) "Whatever nun should ordain every year, there is a pācittiya. ... (3) Whatever nun should ordain two (probationers) la one year, there is a pācittiya offence" (Nuns' Pāc. 72,73, Vin. iv. 336, 337).

<sup>26</sup> lābhagga. Vin. iii. 10 reads lābhaggamahatta; see B.D. i. 19, n. 1. The conditions causing cankers to arise when the Order has arrived at the height of gains or acquisitions are controlled by Pāc. 41 (Vin. iv. 92, cited at MA. iii. 156): "Whatever monk should with his own hand give solid or soft food to an unclothed ascetic or to a male or female wanderer, there is a pācittiya offence."

<sup>27</sup> yasagga. Not at Vin. iii. 10. For this stage in the Order's deterioration the 51st Pāc. (Vin. iv. 110) was laid down: "in drinking strong drinks and intoxicants, there is a pācittiya offence," cited at MA. iii. 156. Cf. lābhagga-yasaggappattā of the Bodhisatta's mother at Jā. i. 51.

<sup>28</sup> At this stage there are misunderstandings, and people explain the Teacher's instruction by what is against dhamma and against vinaya. MA. iii. 156 cites Vin. iv. 135-139, which include the "perverse or wrong views" ascribed to the monk Aritṭha and the novice Kandaka (Pāc. 68, 70).

<sup>29</sup> rattaññuta. Here, as in the other cases, the reference is to the members of the Order rather than to the Order as a whole. So, here the meaning is "when those who have gone forth for a long time know how many nights it is since they first went forth." MA. iii. 157 refers to Upasena Vaṅganta-putta's offence in ordaining his pupil when he himself was only of one year's standing - he had seen monks being ordained when they were less than ten years' standing. So, "One of less than ten years' standing should not be ordained" (Vin. i. 59), and "One should not be ordained by an ignorant, inexperienced (monk) ... I allow monks to be ordained by an experienced, capable (monk) if they are of ten years' standing or of more than ten years' standing" (Vin. i. 60). As MA. iii. 157 remarks two rules of training are laid down to cover the time of reaching "long-standing."

<sup>30</sup> Cf. M. i. 325.

<sup>31</sup> Cf. M. iii. 2.

<sup>32</sup> Cf. M. i. 234 for these words where they are applied to Saccaka the Jain because of his inconsistent statements.

<sup>33</sup> parinibbāyati, or, is perfected, perfectly trained, dompted or extinguished in regard to its former restlessness, etc.

<sup>34</sup> parinibbuta.

<sup>35</sup> anukkama. MA. iii. 166 appears to explain that the trainer gives the four feet a hit with a knife so that the horse raises them. Childers, s.v. anukkama, gives "regular succession, order." The idea seems to be that the horse is trained to raise all its four feet the same distance from the ground.

<sup>36</sup> maṇḍale, in a ring or circle. MA. iii. 158 says that if someone is sitting on the horse's back he can pick up a weapon that has fallen to the ground; for the sake of doing this he makes the horse go in a circle. Cf. Mhvs. xxiii. 73 where a horse was made to gallop maṇḍale, "in a circle."

<sup>37</sup> khurakāya. The horse is trained to go along on the tips of its hoofs so that no sound is heard, MA. iii. 159.

<sup>38</sup> Important in battle.

<sup>39</sup> rājaguṇa. P.E.D. says "a trick of a circus horse"; according to MA. iii. 159 it is some trick of plunging into water.

<sup>40</sup> rājavaṁsa. Cf. vaṁsa ... ghaṭikā at D. i. 6.

<sup>41</sup> vaṇṇiya ca valiya ca. Meaning is not clear. The Comy, says nothing.

<sup>42</sup> Three at A. i. 244; four at A. ii. 113. Cf. A. i. 284, ii. 116, 170.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
2. Bhikkhu Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
2. The Division on Monks

66. Discourse on the Simile of the Quail

Laṭukikopama Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Aṅguttarāpa.

Āpaṇa<sup>1</sup> was the name of a market town in Aṅguttarāpa.

Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
entered Āpaṇa for almsfood.

When he had walked for alms-food
and was returning from the almsgathering after the meal, he approached a forest-thicket
for the day-sojourn.

When he had plunged into that forest-thicket,
he sat down at the root of a tree

for the day-sojourn.

And the venerable Uāyin also,
having dressed in the morning,
and taking his bowl and robe,
entered Āpaṇa for almsfood.

When he had walked for almsfood
and was returning from the almsgathering after the meal, he approached that same forest-thicket
for the day-sojourn.

When he had plunged into that forest-thicket,
he sat down at the root of a tree
for the day-sojourn.

Then while the venerable Uāyin was in private seclusion a reasoning arose in his mind thus:

[120] "Indeed our Lord is a remover
of many painful things, indeed our Lord is a bringer
of many pleasant things,
indeed our Lord is a remover
of many unskilled things,
indeed our Lord is a bringer of many skilled things."<sup>2</sup>

Then the venerable Uāyin, emerging from his seclusion towards evening,
approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance,
the venerable Udayin spoke thus to the Lord:

"While I, revered sir, was in private seclusion, a reasoning arose in my mind thus:

'Indeed our Lord is a remover
of many painful things,
indeed our Lord is a bringer
of many pleasant things,
indeed our Lord is a remover
of many unskilled things,
indeed our Lord is a bringer
of many skilled things.'

We, revered sir, used to eat in the evening and in the morning
and during the day -
at a wrong time.<sup>3</sup>

Revered sir, the Lord at that time addressed the monks, saying:

'Please do you, monks,
give up eating at this wrong time,
during the day.'

I was depressed because of this, revered sir,
I was sorry,
and thought:

'The Lord speaks of our giving up that sumptuous food,
solid and soft,
which the believing householders give us during the day -
at the wrong time,
and the Well-farer speaks of our rejecting it.'

Those of us, revered sir, who look to the Lord with regard
and respect
and modesty
and fear of blame,
gave up such food as this (given) during the day, at the wrong time.

Then we, revered sir, used to eat in the evening
as well as in the morning.

It was at this time that the Lord addressed the monks,
saying:

'Please do you, monks, give up eating at this wrong time, during the night.'

I was depressed because of this, revered sir,
I was sorry,
and thought:

'The Lord speaks of our giving up that which is reckoned as the more sumptuous of these two meals,
and the Well-farer speaks of our rejecting it.'

Once upon a time, revered sir,
a certain man,
having obtained some curry during the day,
spoke thus:

'Come, let us put this aside, and in the evening

we will enjoy it all together.'

All cooking, revered sir, is at night, there is little during the day.

But those of us, revered sir,
who look to the Lord with regard
and respect
and modesty
and fear of blame,
gave up such food as this (given) at night,
at the wrong time.

Once upon a time, revered sir, when the monks were walking for almsfood in the dense darkness of the night,<sup>4</sup> they would walk into a pool at the entrance to a village, and they would fall into the dirty pool near [121] the village, and they would blunder into a thorny hedge,
and they would blunder into a sleeping cow, and they would meet with young men,<sup>5</sup> both those who had committed a crime and those who had not,
and women would solicit them<sup>6</sup> against true dhamma.

Once upon a time I, revered sir, used to walk for almsfood in the dense darkness of the night, and a certain woman saw me during a lightning flash as she was washing a bowl,<sup>7</sup> and terrified at seeing me, she uttered a scream of horror:

'How terrible for me,
indeed there is a demon after me.'<sup>8</sup>

This said,
I, revered sir, said to this woman:

'Sister, I am not a demon,
I am a monk standing for almsfood.'

She said,

'The monk's father must be dead, the monk's mother must be dead'<sup>9</sup> - it were better for you, monk, to have your belly cut out with a sharp butcher's knife than to walk for almsfood for the sake of your belly
in the dense darkness of the night.'

When I remember this, revered sir, it occurs to me:

'Indeed our Lord is a remover
of many painful things,
indeed our Lord is a bringer
of many pleasant things,
indeed our Lord is a remover
of many unskilled things,
indeed our Lord is a bringer
of many skilled things.'

"But even so, Uāyin,
some foolish persons here,
on being told by me:

'Give this up,'

Speak thus:

'But what of this trifling insignificant matter?

This recluse lays too much emphasis on (exertion).'<sup>10</sup>

But they do not give it up and they cause dissatisfaction
to be nursed against me
and against those monks who desire the training.

This<sup>11</sup> becomes for them,<sup>12</sup> Uāyin, a strong bond,
a stout bond,
a solid bond,
a bond that does not rot away,
a thick log of wood.<sup>13</sup>

Uāyin, as a quail,
a little hen bird,<sup>14</sup> because she is caught in a trap of creepers, comes<sup>15</sup> to slaughter there or to captivity
or dying;
so that, Uāyin, if any one should say:

'That quail,
a little hen bird,
because she is caught in a trap of creepers comes to slaughter there
or to captivity,
or dying,
yet for her it is a bond of no strength, [122] a weak bond,
a bond that rots away,
a pithless bond' -

would anyone speaking thus, Uāyin,
be speaking rightly?"

"No, revered sir.

That quail,
a little hen bird, revered sir,
because she is caught in a trap of creepers,
comes to slaughter there
or to captivity,
or dying,
since for her it is a strong bond,
a stout bond,
a solid bond,
a bond that does not rot away,
a thick log of wood."

"Even so, Uāyin,
some foolish persons here,
on being told by me,

'Give this up,'

speak thus:

'But what of this trifling insignificant matter!

This recluse lays too much emphasis on (exertion),'

and they do not give it up
and they cause dissatisfaction
to be nursed against me
and against those monks who desire the training.

This is for them, Uāyin,
a strong bond,
a stout bond,

a solid bond,
a bond that does not rot away,
a thick log of wood.

But, Uāyin,
some young men of family here,
on being told by me,

'Give this up,'

speaking thus:

'But what of this trifling insignificant matter to be given up and of whose giving up
the Lord speaks to us,
and of whose rejection
the Well-farer speaks to us?'

And they give it up
and they do not cause dissatisfaction
to be nursed against me
or against those monks who desire the training.

These, giving that up,
are unconcerned,
unruffled,
dependent on others,
with a mind become as a wild creature's.<sup>16</sup>

This for them, Uāyin,
is a bond of no strength,
a weak bond,
a bond that rots away,
a pithless bond.

Uāyin, it is like<sup>17</sup> a king's bull-elephant
whose tusks are as long as a plough-pole,

who is massive,
finely bred,
whose home is the battle-field and who, if bound with a stout leather bond,<sup>18</sup> having easily twisted his body,
having burst those bonds
tearing them asunder,
goes away as he pleases.

Now, Uāyin, if anyone should speak thus:

'That king's bull-elephant
whose tusks are as long as a plough-pole,
who is massive,
finely bred,
whose home is the battle-field
and who, if bound with a stout leather bond,
having easily twisted his body,
having burst those bonds
tearing them asunder,
goes away as he pleases;
yet for him it was a strong bond,
a stout bond,
a solid bond,
a bond that does not rot away,
a thick log of wood' -
would anyone speaking thus, Uāyin,
be speaking rightly?"

"No, revered sir.

That king's bull-elephant, revered sir
whose tusks are as long as a plough-pole,
who is massive,
finely bred,
whose home is the battle-field

and who, if bound with a stout leather bond,
having easily twisted his body,
having burst those bonds
tearing them asunder,
goes away as he pleases;
because for [123] him it is a bond of no strength,
a weak bond,
a bond that rots away,
a pithless bond."

"Even so, Uāyin,
some young men of family here,
on being told by me,

'Give this up,'
speak thus:

'But what of this trifling insignificant matter to be given up
and of whose giving up
the Lord speaks to us
and of whose rejection
the Well-farer speaks to us?'

And they give it up
and they do not cause dissatisfaction
to be nursed against me
or against those monks who desire the training.

These, giving that up,
are unconcerned,
unruffled,
dependent on others,
with a mind become as a wild creature's.

This for them, Uāyin,
is a weak bond,
a bond of no strength,

a bond that rots away,
a pithless bond.

And, Uāyin,
it is like a man,
poor,
needy,
destitute,<sup>19</sup> who has one little tumbledown<sup>20</sup> hovel,<sup>21</sup> open to the crows,
unlovely to see,
one tumbledown pallet,
unlovely to see,
his grain and store-room in one jar,
unlovely to see,
his one wife
unlovely to see.

He might see a monk in a monastery,
his hands and feet properly washed,
who, after eating a delicious meal,
was sitting in the cool shade
intent on the higher thought.

It might occur to him:

'Indeed, recluship is pleasant,
indeed recluship is healthy.

Suppose that I,
having cut off my hair and beard,
having donned saffron robes,
should go forth from home into homelessness?'

But he might not be able to bring himself to give up his one little tumbledown hovel

open to the crows,
unlovely to see,
one tumbledown pallet,
unlovely to see,
his grain and store-room in one jar,
unlovely to see,
his one wife
unlovely to see,
and to go forth from home
into homelessness,
having cut off his hair and beard
and having donned saffron robes.

Now, Uāyin,
if anyone should speak thus:

'That man, bound by those bonds is unable,
giving up his one little tumbledown hovel his one little tumbledown hovel
open to the crows,
unlovely to see,
one tumbledown pallet,
unlovely to see,
his grain and store-room in one jar,
unlovely to see,
his one wife
unlovely to see,
to go forth from home into homelessness,
having cut off his hair and beard
and having donned saffron robes, because for him
it is a bond of no strength,
a weak bond,
a bond that rots away,

a pithless bond -
would anyone speaking thus, Uāyin,
be speaking rightly?"

"No, revered sir.

That man,
bound by those bonds,
is not able to give up
his one little tumbledown hovel
open to the crows,
unlovely to see,
one tumbledown pallet,
unlovely to see,
his grain and store-room in one jar,
unlovely to see,
his one wife
unlovely to see,
to go forth from home into homelessness,
having cut off his hair and beard
and having donned saffron robes, because for him it is a strong bond,
a stout bond,
a solid bond,
a bond that does not rot away,
a thick log of wood."

"Even so, Uāyin,
some foolish persons here,
on being told by me,
[124] 'Give this up,'

speak thus:

'But what of this trifling insignificant matter?

This recluse lays too much emphasis on (exertion).'

And they do not give it up
and they cause dissatisfaction
to be nursed against me
and against those monks who desire the training.

This is for them, Uāyin,
a strong bond,
a stout bond,
a solid bond,
a bond that does not rot away,
a thick log of wood.

"And, Uāyin,
it is like a householder
or his son,
rich,
of great wealth,
of great possessions,
with a mass of abundant gold ornaments,<sup>22</sup> a mass of abundant corn,
a mass of abundant fields,
with a mass of abundant raiment,
with a mass of abundant wives,
a mass of abundant men slaves,
a mass of abundant women slaves.

He might see a monk in a monastery,
his hands and feet properly washed,
who, after eating a delicious meal,
was sitting in the cool shade
intent on the higher thought.

It might occur to him:

'Indeed recluship is pleasant,
indeed recluship is healthy.

Suppose that I,
having cut off my hair and beard,
having donned saffron robes,
should go forth from home into homelessness?

And he might be able to bring himself to give up his mass of abundant gold ornaments, his mass of abundant corn,
a mass of abundant fields,
with a mass of abundant raiment,
with a mass of abundant wives,
a mass of abundant men slaves,
a mass of abundant women slaves
and to go forth from home into homelessness,
having cut off his hair and beard
and having donned saffron robes.

If anyone should speak thus, Uāyin:

'That householder
or his son,
bound by those bonds,
is able to give up his mass of abundant gold ornaments,
his mass of abundant corn,
a mass of abundant fields,
with a mass of abundant raiment,
with a mass of abundant wives,
a mass of abundant men slaves,
a mass of abundant women slaves
and having cut off his hair and beard
and having donned saffron robes,
to go forth from home into homelessness, because for him it was a strong bond,
a stout bond,
a solid bond,

a bond that does not rot away,
a thick log of wood' -
would any one speaking thus, Uāyin, be speaking rightly?"

"No, revered sir.

That householder
or householder's son,
revered sir,
bound by those bonds,
is able to give up his mass of abundant gold ornaments,
his mass of abundant corn,
a mass of abundant fields,
with a mass of abundant raiment,
with a mass of abundant wives,
a mass of abundant men slaves,
a mass of abundant women slaves
and having cut off his hair and beard
and having donned saffron robes,
to go forth from home into homelessness, because for him that was a bond of no strength,
a weak bond,
a bond that rots away,
a pithless bond."

"Even so, Uāyin,
some young men of family here,
on being told by me,

'Give this up,'
speak thus:

'But what of this trifling insignificant [125] matter to be given up
and of whose giving up
the Lord speaks to us

and of whose rejection
the Well-farer speaks to us?

And they give it up
and they do not cause dissatisfaction
to be nursed against me
or against those monks who desire the training.

These, giving that up,
are unconcerned,
unruffled,
dependent on others,
with a mind become as a wild creature's.

This for them, Uāyin,
is a bond of no strength,
a weak bond,
a bond that rots away,
a pithless bond.

---

Uāyin, these four types of persons are found existing in the world.

What four?

As to this, Uāyin,
a certain person is faring along towards the getting rid of clinging,<sup>23</sup> towards the casting out of clinging.

But while he is faring along
towards the getting rid of clinging,

towards the casting out of clinging, memories and thoughts<sup>24</sup> belonging to clinging beset him.

He gives in to them,
he does not get rid of them,
he does not dispel them,
he does not make an end of them, he does not send them to destruction.

I, Uāyin, say that this person is fettered,<sup>25</sup>
not unfettered.

What is the reason for this?

Differences in faculties
in this person
are known to me, Uāyin.

■

And here, Uāyin,
some person is faring along
towards the getting rid of clinging,
towards the casting out of clinging.

But while he is faring along
towards the getting rid of clinging,
towards the casting out of clinging,
memories and thoughts belonging to clinging
beset him.

He does not give in to them,
he gets rid of them,
he dispels them,

he makes an end of them,
he sends them to destruction.

But I say that this person is also fettered, Uāyin,
not unfettered.

What is the reason for this?

Differences in faculties
in this person
are known to me, Uāyin.

■

And some person here, Uāyin, is faring along
towards the getting rid of clinging,
towards the casting out of clinging.

While he is faring along
towards the getting rid of clinging,
towards the casting out of clinging,
from confusion in mindfulness
memories and thoughts belonging to clinging at times beset him.

Slow, Uāyin,
is the arising of mindfulness,
and then he gets rid of it quickly,
dispels it,
makes an end of it,
sends it to destruction.

Udayin, it is as if a man were to let two or three drops of water fall into an iron pot that had been heated all day long.

Slow, Uāyin,
is the falling of the drops of water, but they would be quickly destroyed and consumed.

Even so, Uāyin,
some person here is faring along
towards the getting rid [126] of clinging,
towards the casting out of clinging.

While he is faring along
towards the getting rid of clinging,
towards the casting out of clinging,
from confusion in mindfulness
memories and thoughts belonging to clinging
at times beset him.

Slow, Uāyin,
is the arising of mindfulness,
and then he gets rid of it quickly,
dispels it,
makes an end of it,
sends it to destruction.

I, Uāyin, say that this person is also fettered,
not unfettered.

What is the reason for this?

Differences in faculties
in this person
are known to me, Uāyin.

But some person here, Uāyin,
thinking,

'Clinging is the root of anguish,' and having understood it so,

he is without clinging,
freed by the destruction of clinging.

I, Uāyin, say that this person is unfettered, not fettered.

What is the reason for this?

Differences in faculties
in this person
are known to me, Uāyin.

---

There are these five strands of sense-pleasures,<sup>26</sup> Uāyin.

What five?

What are the five?

Material shapes cognisable by the eye,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Sounds cognisable by the ear,
agreeable,
pleasant,

liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Smells cognisable by the nose,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Tastes cognisable by the tongue,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

Touches cognisable by the body,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasures,
alluring.

These, Uāyin, are the five strands of sense-pleasures.

Whatever happiness,
whatever joy, Uāyin,
arises in consequence
of these five strands of sensepleasures,
it is called

a happiness of sense-pleasures that is a vile happiness, the happiness of an average person, an unariyan happiness.

It should not be pursued,
developed
or made much of.

I say of this happiness
that it is to be feared.

In this connection, Uāyin, a monk,
aloof from the pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
enters and abides in the first meditation
which is accompanied by initial thought
and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful.

And again, monks, a monk,
by allaying initial and discursive thought,
his mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters on
and abides in
the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration
and is rapturous and joyful.

And again, monks, a monk,
by the fading out of rapture,
dwells with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious,

and experiences in his person
that joy of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,'
and he enters on
and abides in
the third meditation.

And again, monks, a monk
by getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,
enters on
and abides in
the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

This is called the happiness of renunciation, the happiness of aloofness, the happiness of tranquillity, the happiness of self-awakening.<sup>27</sup>

It should be pursued,
developed
and made much of.

I say of this happiness
that it is not to be feared.

---

[127] As to this, Uāyin, a monk,
aloof from the pleasures of the senses,

aloof from unskilled states of mind,
enters and abides in the first meditation
which is accompanied by initial thought
and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness,
and is rapturous and joyful.

I, Uāyin, say
that this is in the unstable.<sup>28</sup>

And what is in the unstable there?

That very initial and discursive thought that is not stopped there - this is in the unstable there.

■

As to this, Uāyin, a monk,
by allaying initial and discursive thought,
his mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters on
and abides in
the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration
and is rapturous and joyful.

I, Uāyin, say
that this too is in the unstable.

And what is in the unstable there?

That very rapture and joy that are not stopped there - these are in the unstable there.

■

As to this, Uāyin, a monk,
by the fading out of rapture,
dwells with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious,
and experiences in his person
that joy of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,'
and he enters on
and abides in
the third meditation.

I, Uāyin, say
that this too is in the unstable.

And what is in the unstable there?

That very happiness in equanimity
that is not stopped there -
this is in the unstable there.

As to this, Uāyin, a monk,
by getting rid of joy,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,
enters on
and abides in
the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

I, Uāyin, say that this is in the stable.

---

As to this, Uāyin, a monk,

by allaying initial and discursive thought,
his mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters on
and abides in
the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration
and is rapturous and joyful.

I, Uāyin, say,

'This is not enough,'

I say,

'Get rid of it,'

I say,

'Transcend it.'

And what, Uāyin,
is its transcending?

As to this, Uāyin, a monk,
by allaying initial and discursive thought,
his mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters on
and abides in
the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,

is born of concentration
and is rapturous and joyful.

This is its transcending.

But I, Uāyin, again say,

'This is not enough,'

I say,

'Get rid of it,'

I say,

'Transcend it.'

And what, Uāyin,
is its transcending?

As to this, Uāyin, a monk,
by the fading out of rapture,
dwells with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious,
and experiences in his person
that joy of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,'
and he enters on
and abides in
the third meditation.

This is its transcending.

But I, Uāyin, again say,

'This is not enough,'

I say,

'Get rid of it,'

I say,

'Transcend it.'

And what, Uāyin,
is its transcending?

As to this, Uāyin, a monk,
by getting rid of happiness,
by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,
enters on
and abides in
the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

This is its transcending.

But I, Uāyin, again say,

'This is not enough,'

I say,

'Get rid of it,'

I say,

'Transcend it.'

And what, Uāyin,
is its transcending?

As to this, Uāyin, a monk,
by wholly transcending perception of material shapes,
by the going down of perception of sensory reactions,
by not attending to perception of variety,
thinking:
'Ether is unending,'
enters on
and abides in the plane [128] of infinite ether.

This is its transcending.

But I, Uāyin, again say,

'This is not enough,'

I say,

'Get rid of it,'

I say,

'Transcend it.'

And what, Uāyin,
is its transcending?

As to this, Uāyin, a monk,
by wholly transcending the plane of infinite ether,
thinking:
'Consciousness is unending,'
enters on
and abides in
the plane of infinite consciousness.

This is its transcending.

But I, Uāyin, again say,

'This is not enough,'

I say,

'Get rid of it,'

I say,

'Transcend it.'

And what, Uāyin,
is its transcending?

As to this, Uāyin, a monk,
by wholly transcending the plane of infinite consciousness,
thinking:

'There is not anything,'
enters on
and abides in
the plane of no-thing.

This is its transcending.

But I, Uāyin, again say,

'This is not enough,'

I say,

'Get rid of it,'

I say,

'Transcend it.'

And what, Uāyin,
is its transcending?

As to this, Uāyin, a monk,
by wholly transcending the plane of no-thing,
enters on
and abides in
the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception.

This is its transcending.

But I, Uāyin, again say,

'This is not enough,'

I say,

'Get rid of it,'

I say,

'Transcend it.'

And what, Uāyin,
is its transcending?

As to this, Uāyin, a monk,
by wholly transcending the plane of neither-perception-nor-non-perception,
enters on
and abides in
the stopping of perception and feeling.

This is its transcending.

It is for this that I, Uāyin, speak even of the getting rid of the plane of neither-perception-nor non-perception.

Now do you, Uāyin,
see any fetter,
minute or massive,

of the getting rid of which I have not spoken to you?"<sup>29</sup>

"No, revered sir."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, the venerable Uāyin
rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse on the Simile of the Quail:
The Sixth

---

<sup>1</sup> Potaliya Suita, M. i. 359, was preached here.

<sup>2</sup> Quoted at Kvu. 528.

<sup>3</sup> See Vin. iv. 85, and B.D. ii. 335, n, Pāc. 37 makes it an offence to eat after noon has passed until the next sunrise. See M. i. 474.

<sup>4</sup> rattandhakāratimisāya; cf. D. iii. 85, Pug. 30.

<sup>5</sup> MA. iii. 164 explains māṇava, as is often the case, by cora, thief.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. Pāc. 6 (Vin. iv. 17 ff.).

<sup>7</sup> Quoted at DA. 34.

<sup>8</sup> As at Vin. ii. 115.

<sup>9</sup> bhikkhussa ātu māri bhikkhussa mātu māri. According to Trenckner (M. i. 567) the text "no doubt purports to make the woman speak a sort of patois."

<sup>10</sup> adhisallikhati; as at A. i. 236. See G.S. i. 217, n. 1, and Neumann, vol. i. 22, n. MA. iii. 165 explains by atisallekhati ativāyama karoti.

<sup>11</sup> This trifling matter.

<sup>12</sup> The foolish people.

<sup>13</sup> thūla kaḷiṅgara. MA. iii. 166 says it is like a great piece of wood tied to their throats. cf. S. ii. 268, Dhp. 41.

<sup>14</sup> Cf. D. i. 91.

<sup>15</sup> āgameti = upeti, MA. iii. 166.

<sup>16</sup> As at Vin. ii. 184. See B.D. v. 259 for notes.

<sup>17</sup> As at M. i. 414.

<sup>18</sup> Cf. A. ii. 33; S. iii. 85.

<sup>19</sup> These three terms at M. ii. 178, A. iii. 351-2.

<sup>20</sup> As at M. i. 80.

<sup>21</sup> agāraka. MA. iii. 167 says khuddakageha, little house.

<sup>22</sup> nikkhagaṇa.

<sup>23</sup> upadhi, a residual basis remaining for a new birth.

<sup>24</sup> sarasāṅkappa, as at M. iii. 89, 132, S. iv. 70, 190.

<sup>25</sup> saṃyutta.

<sup>26</sup> As at M. i. 85.

<sup>27</sup> These four 'happinesses,' sukha, occur also at A. iv. 341-342.

<sup>28</sup> iñjitasmiṃ, what can be stirred or moved. cf. S. i. 109: there is no instability in the wholly freed Buddhas. Cf. also S. iv. 202, Sn. 750.

<sup>29</sup> Quoted at MA. ii. 109 in explanation of "even (right) states of mind are to be got rid of," as said at end of the Parable of the Raft.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
2. Bhikkhu Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
2. The Division on Monks

67. Discourse at Cātumā

Cātuma Sutta

---

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Cātumā in the Myrobalan Grove.

Now at that time at least five hundred [129] monks,<sup>1</sup> with Sāriputta and Moggallāna<sup>2</sup> at their head had arrived at Cātumā to see the Lord, and there was a loud noise, a great noise
as these incoming monks were exchanging greetings
with the resident monks, while lodgings were being prepared and bowls and robes were being put away.

Then the Lord addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying:

"What, Ānanda, is this loud noise, this great noise,
which seems like that of fisherfolk when hauling in a catch?"

"Revered sir, these monks, at least five hundred,
with Sāriputta and Moggallāna at their head
have arrived at Cātumā to see the Lord, and while the incoming monks
are exchanging greetings
with the resident monks,
while lodgings are being prepared
and bowls and robes are being put away, there is a loud noise,
a great noise."

"Well then, Ānanda,
in my name summon these monks,
saying:

"The Teacher is summoning the venerable ones."

"Yes, revered sir,"
and the venerable Ānanda,
having answered the Lord in assent,
approached these monks;
having approached,
he spoke thus to these monks:

"The Teacher is summoning the venerable ones."

"Yes, your reverence,"
and these monks,
having answered the venerable Ānanda in assent,
approached the Lord;
having approached,

having greeted the Lord,
they sat down at a respectful distance.

The Lord spoke thus to these monks
as they were sitting down at a respectful distance:

"Do not you, monks, think that the loud noise, the great noise
is like that of fisherfolk
when hauling in a catch?"

"Revered sir, at least five hundred monks with Sāriputta and Moggallāna at their head
have arrived at Cātumā to see the Lord,
and while the incoming monks
are exchanging greetings
with the resident monks,
while lodgings are being prepared
and bowls and robes are being put away,
there is a loud noise,
a great noise."

"Go away, monks,
I dismiss you,
you should not stay near me."

"Very well, revered sir,"
and these monks
having answered the Lord in assent,
having greeted the Lord
keeping their right sides towards him, having packed away their lodgings,
departed
taking their bowls and robes.

[130] Now at that time the Sakyans of Cātumā were assembled in the conference hall
on some business or other.

The Sakyans of Cātumā saw these monks coming in the distance;
having seen them,
they approached these monks;
having approached,
they spoke thus to these monks:

"Now, where are you, venerable ones, going?"

"Friends, the Order of monks has been dismissed by the Lord."

"Well then, venerable ones, sit down for a moment;
perhaps we could reconcile the Lord."

"Very well, friends," these monks answered the Sakyans of Cātumā in assent.

Then the Sakyans of Cātumā approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
they sat down at a respectful distance.

As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, the Sakyans of Cātumā spoke thus to the Lord:

"Revered sir,
let the Lord rejoice the Order of monks,
let the Lord greet the Order of monks.

Revered sir,
even as the Order of monks

was helped previously by the Lord,
so let the Lord help the Order of monks now.

There are here,<sup>3</sup> revered sir,
new monks, not long gone forth,
quite recently come into this dhamma and discipline.

Not getting a chance to see the Lord,
there may be faltering<sup>4</sup> for them, there may be vicissitudes.<sup>5</sup>

Even, revered sir,
as there may be faltering and vicissitudes
for young seeds
if they do not get water,
even so, revered sir,
there are here new monks,
not long gone forth,
quite recently come into this dhamma and discipline;
if they do not get a chance to see the Lord,
there may be faltering for them,
there may be vicissitudes.

And even, revered sir,
as there may be faltering,
as there may be vicissitudes
for a young calf
that does not see its mother,
so, revered sir,
there are here new monks,
not long gone forth,
quite recently come into this dhamma and discipline.

Not seeing the Lord,
there may be faltering for them,
there may be vicissitudes.

Revered sir,
let the Lord rejoice the Order of monks,
let the Lord greet the Order of monks.

Revered sir,
even as the Order of monks
was helped previously by the Lord,
so let the Lord help the Order of monks now."

Then Brahmā Sahampati,<sup>6</sup> knowing by mind
the reasoning in the Lord's mind, as a strong man might stretch forth his bent arm or [131] might bend back his outstretched arm, even so, vanishing from the Brahma-world he appeared before the Lord.

Then Brahmā Sahampati, arranging his outer robe over one shoulder, saluting the Lord with joined palms,
spoke thus to the Lord:

"Revered sir,
let the Lord rejoice the Order of monks,
let the Lord greet the Order of monks.

Revered sir,
even as the Order of monks
was helped previously by the Lord,
so let the Lord help the Order of monks now.

There are here, revered sir,
new monks, not long gone forth,
quite recently come into this dhamma and discipline.

Not getting a chance to see the Lord,
there may be faltering for them,

there may be vicissitudes.

Even, revered sir,
as there may be faltering and vicissitudes
for young seeds
if they do not get water,
even so, revered sir,
there are here new monks,
not long gone forth,
quite recently come into this dhamma and discipline;
if they do not get a chance to see the Lord,
there may be faltering for them,
there may be vicissitudes.

And even, revered sir,
as there may be faltering,
as there may be vicissitudes
for a young calf
that does not see its mother,
so, revered sir,
there are here new monks,
not long gone forth,
quite recently come into this dhamma and discipline.

Not seeing the Lord,
there may be faltering for them,
there may be vicissitudes.

Revered sir,
let the Lord rejoice the Order of monks,
let the Lord greet the Order of monks.

Revered sir,
even as the Order of monks
was helped previously by the Lord,
so let the Lord help the Order of monks now."

The Sakyans of Cātumā and Brahmā Sahampati were able to reconcile the Lord by the analogy of the seeds and the analogy of the young<sup>7</sup> (calf).

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great addressed the monks,
saying:

"Arise, your reverences, pick up your bowls and robes, the Lord has been reconciled by the Sakyans of Cātumā and by Brahmā Sahampati with the analogy of the seeds and the analogy of the young (calf)."

"Yes, your reverence,"
and these monks,
having answered the venerable Moggallāna the Great in assent,
rising from their seats,
taking their bowls and robes,
approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
they sat down at a respectful distance.

The Lord spoke thus to the venerable Sāriputta
as he was sitting down at a respectful distance:

"What did you, Sāriputta, think when the Order of monks was dismissed by me?"

"When the Order of monks was dismissed by the Lord,
I, revered sir, thought:

'The Lord is now unconcerned, he will abide intent on abiding in ease here and now.'<sup>8</sup>

We too,
unconcerned now,
will abide intent on abiding in ease here and now.'"

"Do you wait, Sāriputta,
do you wait, Sāriputta.

Sāriputta, never let such a thought arise in you again."<sup>9</sup>

Then the Lord addressed the venerable Moggallāna the Great, saying:

"What did you, Moggallāna, think
when the Order of monks was dismissed by me?"

"When the Order of monks was dismissed by the Lord,
I, revered sir, thought:

'The Lord is now unconcerned, he will abide intent on [132] abiding in ease here and now, I and the venerable Sāriputta will now lead the Order of monks.'"

"It is good, Moggallāna,
it is good.

For either I, Moggallāna, could lead the Order of monks, or Sāriputta and Moggallāna."<sup>10</sup>

Then the Lord addressed the Order of monks, saying:

"Monks, these four perils for one going down to the water"<sup>11</sup> are to be expected.

What four?

Peril of waves,
peril of crocodiles,<sup>12</sup>
peril of whirlpools,
peril of fierce fishes.<sup>13</sup>

These are the four perils to be expected for one going down to the water.

Similarly, monks,
four perils are to be expected for some persons here who have gone forth
from home into homelessness
in this dhamma and discipline.

What four?

Peril of waves,
peril of crocodiles,
peril of whirlpools,
peril of fierce fishes.

And what, monks,
is the peril of waves?

Here, monks, some young man of family,
gone forth from home
into homelessness through faith,
thinks:

'Although I am oppressed by birth,
ageing,

dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
oppressed by anguish,
overcome by anguish,
yet perhaps some ending
of this whole mass of anguish
may be seen.'

His fellow Brahma-farers exhort and instruct him who has thus gone forth:

'Thus should you go out,
thus should you return, thus should you look in front, thus should you look round, thus should you bend out (your arm), thus should you bend it back, thus should you carry your outer cloak, your bowl
and robe.'

If it occurs to him:

'While I was formerly in the household state, we used to exhort and instruct others, but these who seem like our sons, who seem like our grandsons, think that they should exhort and instruct us' - then, disavowing the training, he returns to the low life of the world.

This one, monks,
who disavows the training and returns to the low life of the world is called
one who is scared by the peril of waves.

'The peril of waves,' monks, is a synonym for angry wrath.<sup>14</sup>

■

And what, monks, is the peril of crocodiles?

Here, monks, some young man of family
who has gone forth from home
into homelessness through faith,
thinks:

'Although I am oppressed by birth,
ageing,
dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
oppressed by anguish,
overcome by anguish,
[133]yet perhaps some ending
of this whole mass of anguish
may be seen.'

His fellow Brahma-farers exhort and instruct him who has thus gone forth:

'This can be eaten<sup>15</sup> by you, this cannot be eaten by you,
this can be partaken of by you, this cannot be partaken of by you, this can be savoured by you, this cannot be savoured by you,
this can be drunk by you,
this cannot be drunk by you;
you should eat what is allowable, you should not eat what is not allowable, you should partake of what is allowable, you should not partake of what is not allowable, you should savour what is allowable, you should not savour what is not allowable, you should drink what is allowable, you should not drink what is not allowable;
you should eat at the right time, you should not eat at the wrong time, you should partake of at the right time, you should not partake of at the wrong time, you should savour at the right time, you should not savour at the wrong time, you should drink at the right time, you should not drink at the wrong time.'

If it occurs to him

'Formerly when I was in the household state we ate what we liked,
we did not eat what we did not like,
we partook of what we liked,
we did not partake of what we did not like,
we savoured what we liked,
we did not savour what we did not like,
we drank what we liked,
we did not drink what we did not like;

we ate what was allowable and we ate what was not allowable, we partook of what was allowable and we partook of what was not allowable, we savoured what was allowable and we savoured what was not allowable, we drank what was allowable and we drank what was not allowable; we ate at the right time and we ate at the wrong time, we partook of at the right time and we partook of at the wrong time, we savoured at the right time and we savoured at the wrong time, we drank at the right time and we drank at the wrong time.

But when those householders who have faith give us sumptuous foods,
solid and soft,
at a wrong time,
during the day,
it seems as if they are putting restraint over the mouth'<sup>16</sup>- and disavowing the training,
he returns to the low life of the world.

This one, monks,
who disavowing the training,
returns to the low life of the world,
is called
one who is scared by the peril of crocodiles.

'The peril of crocodiles,' monks, is a synonym for gluttony.

■

And what, monks, is the peril of whirlpools?

Here, monks, some young man of family
who has gone forth from home
into homelessness [134] through faith,
thinks;

'I am oppressed by birth,
ageing,
dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
oppressed by anguish,
overcome by anguish,
yet perhaps some ending
of this whole mass of anguish
may be seen.'

He, gone forth thus,
having dressed in the morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
enters a village or market town for almsfood unguarded as to his body, unguarded as to his speech,<sup>17</sup> mindfulness not set up,
the sense-organs uncontrolled.

He there sees a householder
or a householder's son
indulging in
and provided with
the five strands of sense-pleasures,
and finding delight in them.

If it occurs to him;

'Formerly while we were in the household state, indulging in
and provided with
the five strands of sense-pleasures, we found delight in them.

As there is wealth in my home, it is possible both to enjoy wealth and to do meritorious things,' he, disavowing the training,

returns to the low life of the world.

This one, monks who,
disavowing the training,
returns to the low life of the world,
is called
one who is scared of the peril of whirlpools.

'The peril of whirlpools,' monks, is a synonym for the five strands of sense-pleasures.

■

And what, monks, is the peril of fierce fishes?

Here, monks, some young man of family
who has gone forth from home
into homelessness through faith,
thinks:

'I am oppressed by birth,
ageing,
dying,
by grief,

sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,
oppressed by anguish,
overcome by anguish,
yet perhaps some ending
of this whole mass of anguish
may be seen.'

He, gone forth thus,
having dressed in the morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
enters a village or a market town for almsfood unguarded in his body, unguarded in his speech,
mindfulness not set up,
the sense-organs uncontrolled.

He sees a woman there<sup>18</sup> who is improperly dressed or improperly clothed.

When he has seen that woman
who is improperly dressed
or improperly clothed,
passion corrupts his mind, and with his mind corrupted by passion,
disavowing the training
he returns to the low life of the world.

This one, monks,
who disavowing the training,
returns to the low life of the world,
is called
one who is scared by the peril of fierce fishes.

'The peril of fierce fishes,' monks, is a synonym for women.

These monks, are the four perils to be expected for some persons here who have gone forth from home into homelessness
in this dhamma and discipline."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse at Cātumā:
The Seventh

---

<sup>1</sup> This passage also occurs at Ud. 24-25, where Yasoja is at the head of 500 monks, but the episode is there placed at Sāvattihī, These monks were perhaps only recently ordained, and that is why the two chief disciples were in charge of them. MA. iii. 172 speaks of them as kulaputtā, as though hardly recognising their passage to monk's status. But with this compare the first speech ascribed to the Lord in the next Discourse where he refers to those who have gone forth both as young men of family and as monks.

<sup>2</sup> No epithet 'venerable' here.

<sup>3</sup> cf. S. iii. 91.

<sup>4</sup> aññathatta, "otherness." See M. i. 448 ("depression"), ii. 61, and S. iii. 91-92.

<sup>5</sup> vipariṇāma, change, falling away.

<sup>6</sup> The persuasions of Brahmā Sahampati and the Sakyans of Cātumā are referred to at Miln. 209 f.

<sup>7</sup> taruṇūpama, as at M. i. 432, of a young baby.

<sup>8</sup> Except for the tense, these words are identical with Devadatta's at Vin. ii. 188.

<sup>9</sup> According to MA. iii. 176, the Elder did not know his duty (bhārabhāva), which was, as was Moggallāna's, to the Order of monks - as shown by the latter's answer; therefore he was commended for it. It is not often that Sāriputta is rebuked by Gotama, but see M. ii. 195, and Intr. p. xxvi.

<sup>10</sup> At D. ii. 100, Gotama tells Ānanda that it does not occur to a Tathāgata: 'I will lead the Order of monks.' At Vin. ii. 188 he tells Devadatta he would not hand over (na niṅsajjeyyam) the Order of monks even to Sāriputta and Moggallāna. See Intr. p. xxvii. [Ed. where she goes into various speculations about the significance of her erroneous understanding.]

<sup>11</sup> Cf. A. ii. 123 ff.

<sup>12</sup> Referred to at Thig. 502.

<sup>13</sup> Referred to among the many perils or fears, bhaya, at Miln. 196.

<sup>14</sup> Another synonym for this is given at M. i. 144.

<sup>15</sup> khāditabbam, referring to eating solid food, and bhuñjitabbam (partake of) to eating soft food.

<sup>16</sup> mukhāvaraṇam karonti. Āvaraṇa is a prohibition, interdiction, obstruction, covering.

<sup>17</sup> A. ii. 125 inserts (rightly) arakkhitena cittena, unguarded as to his thought.

<sup>18</sup> cf. S. ii. 231, 271; A. iii. 95.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
2. Bhikkhu Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
2. The Division on Monks

68. Discourse at Naḷakapāna

Naḷakapāna Sutta

---

[462] [135]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying among the Kosalans near Naḷakapāna<sup>2</sup> in the Judas-tree Grove.<sup>3</sup>

Now at that time
many well known young men of family had gone forth from home into homelessness through faith in the Lord: the venerable Anuruddha<sup>4</sup>
and the venerable Nandiya
and the venerable Kimbila and the venerable Bhagu<sup>5</sup> and the venerable Kuṇḍadhāna<sup>6</sup> and the venerable Revata
and the venerable Ānanda,
and many other well known young men of family.

Now at that time
the Lord [463] was sitting in the open surrounded by an Order of monks.

Then the Lord addressed the monks concerning these young men of family,
saying:

"Those young men of family, monks,
who have gone forth from home into homelessness through faith in me -
I hope, monks,
that these monks are finding delight in the Brahma-faring?"

When he had spoken thus,
these monks became silent.

And a second time the Lord addressed the monks concerning these young men of family,
saying:

"Those young men of family, monks,
who have gone forth from home
into homelessness through faith in me -
I hope, monks,
that these monks are finding delight in the Brahma-faring?"

And a second time
when he had spoken thus,
these monks became silent.

And a third time the Lord addressed the monks concerning these young men of family,
saying:

"Those young men of family, monks,
who have gone forth from home

into homelessness through faith in me -
I hope, monks,
that these monks are finding delight in the Brahma-faring?"

And a third time
when he had spoken thus,
these monks became silent.

And a third time these monks became silent.

Then it occurred to the Lord:

"Now, suppose that I were to question these young men of family themselves?"

Then the Lord addressed the venerable Anuruddha,
saying:

"I hope that you, Anuruddhas,<sup>7</sup> are finding delight in the Brahma-faring?"

"Certainly we, revered sir,
are finding delight in the Brahma-faring."

[136]

"It is good, it is good, Anuruddhas.

This is fitting in you, Anuruddhas, who are young men of family gone forth from home
into homelessness through faith,
that you should find delight in the Brahma-faring.

Yet while you, Anuruddhas,
possessed of radiant youth,
in the prime of your lives,

with coal-black hair,
might be enjoying the pleasures of the senses, you, Anuruddhas,
although possessed of radiant youth,
in the prime of your lives,
with coal-black hair,
have nevertheless gone forth from home
into homelessness.

But you, Anuruddhas, are neither those that have gone forth from home into homelessness on the suggestion of kings<sup>8</sup> nor are you those who have gone forth
from home into homelessness on the suggestion of thieves
nor are you those who have gone forth
from home into homelessness because of debt
nor are you those who have gone forth
from home into homelessness through fear,<sup>9</sup> nor are you those who have gone forth
from home into homelessness because of having lost the means of livelihood.

Yet was it not with the thought:

'Although I am oppressed by birth,
ageing,
dying,
by grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation
and despair,

oppressed by anguish,
overcome by anguish,
yet perhaps some ending
of this whole mass of anguish
may be seen,'

that you, Anuruddhas, have gone forth from home into homelessness
through faith?"

"Yes, revered sir."

"And when, Anuruddhas,
a young man of family has gone forth thus,
what is there to be done by him?"

Anuruddhas,
aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
if he does not win joy and happiness or something more peaceful than that,<sup>10</sup> then coveting persists in obsessing his mind, and malevolence persists in obsessing his mind, and sloth and torpor persists in obsessing his mind, and restlessness and worry persists in obsessing his mind, and doubt persists in obsessing his mind, [464]and discontent persists in obsessing his mind, and apathy persists in obsessing his mind.

Aloof, Anuruddhas, from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
he does not win joy and happiness or something more peaceful than that.

■

Anuruddhas, aloof from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,

if he wins joy and happiness and something more peaceful than that,
then coveting does not persist in obsessing his mind, and [137] malevolence does not persist in obsessing his mind, and sloth and torpor does not persist in obsessing his mind, and restlessness and worry does not persist in obsessing his mind, and doubt does not persist in obsessing his mind, and discontent does not persist in obsessing his mind, and apathy does not persist in obsessing his mind.

Aloof, Anuruddhas,
from pleasures of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
he wins joy and happiness and something more peaceful than that.

■

What do you think about me, Anuruddhas?

That those cankers which have to do with the defilements,<sup>11</sup>
with again-becoming,
which are fearful,
whose result is anguish,
making for birth,
ageing
and dying
in the future -
that these have not been got rid of
by the Tathāgata,
and that therefore the Tathāgata, having considered,<sup>12</sup> pursues one thing;
having considered,
endures another thing;

having considered,
avoids another thing;
having considered,
controls another thing?"<sup>13</sup>

"We, revered sir, do not think this of the Lord, that those cankers which have to do with the defilements,
with again-becoming,
which are fearful,
whose result is anguish,
making for birth,
ageing
and dying
in the future -
that these have not been got rid of
by the Tathāgata,
and that therefore the Tathāgata,
having considered,
pursues one thing;
having considered,
endures another thing;
having considered,
avoids another thing;
having considered,
controls another thing.

We, revered sir, think this of the Lord, that those cankers that have to do with the defilements,
with again-becoming,
which are fearful,
whose result is anguish,
making for birth,
ageing
and dying
in the future -
that these have been got rid of by the Tathāgata, and that therefore the Tathāgata,

having considered,
pursues one thing;
having considered,
endures another thing;
having considered,
avoids another thing;
having considered,
controls another thing."

"It is good,
it is good, Anuruddhas.<sup>14</sup>

Those cankers of the Tathāgata that had to do with the defilements,
with again-becoming,
which are fearful,
whose result is anguish,
making for birth,
ageing
and dying
in the future -
these have been got rid of,
cut off at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump
that can come to no further existence in the future.

Even, Anuruddhas, as a palm-tree whose crown is cut off can come to no further growth, so, Anuruddhas, those cankers of the Tathāgata
that had to do with the defilements,
with again-becoming,
which are fearful,
whose result is anguish,
making for birth,

ageing
and dying
in the future -
these have been got rid of,
cut off at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump
that can come to no further existence in the future.

Therefore the Tathāgata,
having considered,
pursues one thing;
having considered,
endures another thing;
having considered,
avoids another thing;
having considered,
controls another thing."

■

[138] What do you think about this, Anuruddhas?

Beholding what special purpose does the Tathāgata explain the uprisings in which are disciples who have deceased and passed away,
saying:

'Such a one has uprisen in one,
such a one has uprisen in another'?" 15

[465]"Things for us, Lord,
are rooted in the Lord,
have the Lord for conduit,
the Lord for arbiter.

It were good indeed, Lord,
if the meaning of this speech of the Lord's
were explained;
having heard the Lord,
monks would remember."<sup>16</sup>

"Anuruddhas, the Tathāgata does not have the purpose<sup>17</sup> of defrauding people
nor the purpose of cajoling people nor the purpose of gains,
honour,
fame
and material advantages,
nor the thought:

'Let people know me thus'<sup>18</sup> when he explains
the uprisings in which are disciples
who have deceased and passed away,
saying:

'Such a one has arisen in one, such a one has arisen in another.'

But there are, Anuruddhas, young men of family
who have faith
and are of great enthusiasm,<sup>19</sup> of great joyousness
and who, having heard this,
focus their minds on suchness.<sup>20</sup>

Anuruddhas, this will be for their weal and happiness
for a long time.

■

In this case, Anuruddhas, a monk hears:

'The monk so and so has passed away;
it is declared by the Lord that he is established in profound knowledge.'

If a venerable one
has himself seen
or has heard by hearsay that the venerable one
was of such moral habit
and that the venerable one was of such mentality<sup>21</sup>
and that the venerable one
was of such wisdom
and that the venerable one
was such an abider
and that the venerable one
was freed thus,
he, while recollecting his faith
and moral habit
and learning
and giving up
and wisdom,
focusses his mind on suchness.

It is thus, Anuruddhas,
that there is abiding in comfort for a monk.

■

In this case, Anuruddhas, a monk hears:

'The monk so and so has passed away;
it is declared by the Lord
that by the utter destruction

of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore), he is of spontaneous generation,
one that has attained nibbāna there,
not liable to return from that world.'

If a venerable one
has himself seen
or has heard [139] by hearsay
that the venerable one
was of such moral habit
and that the venerable one
was of such mentality
and that the venerable one
was of such wisdom
and that the venerable one
was such an abider
and that the venerable one
was freed thus,
he, while recollecting his faith
and moral habit
and learning
and giving up
and wisdom,
focusses his mind on suchness.

It is thus, Anuruddhas,
that there is abiding in comfort for a monk.

■

In this case, Anuruddhas, a monk hears:

'The monk so and so has passed away;
it is declared by the Lord
that by the utter destruction of the three fetters,
by the reduction of attachment,

aversion
and confusion,
he is a once-returner
who, having come back once only to this world,
will make an end of anguish.'

If a venerable one
has himself seen
or has heard by hearsay
that the venerable one
was of such moral habit
and that the venerable one
was of such mentality
and that the venerable one
was of such wisdom
and that the venerable one
was such an abider
and that the venerable one
was freed thus,
he, while recollecting his faith
and moral habit
and learning
and giving up
and wisdom,
focusses his mind on suchness.

[466] It is thus, Anuruddhas,
that there is abiding in comfort for a monk.

■

In this case, Anuruddhas, a monk hears:

'The monk so and so has passed away;
it is declared by the Lord
that by the utter destruction of the three fetters

he is a stream-attainer,
not liable to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.'

If a venerable one
has himself seen
or has heard by hearsay
that the venerable one
was of such moral habit
and that the venerable one
was of such mentality
and that the venerable one
was of such wisdom
and that the venerable one
was such an abider
and that the venerable one
was freed thus,
he, while recollecting his faith
and moral habit
and learning
and giving up
and wisdom,
focusses his mind on suchness.

It is thus, Anuruddhas,
that there is abiding in comfort for a monk.

---

In this case, Anuruddhas, a nun hears:

'The nun so and so has passed away;
it is declared of her by the Lord that she is established in profound knowledge.'

If that sister has herself seen
or has heard by hearsay
that the sister
was of such moral habit
and that the sister
was of such mentality
and that the sister
was of such wisdom
and that the sister
was such an abider
and that the sister
was freed thus,
she, while recollecting her faith
and moral habit
and learning
and giving up
and wisdom,
focusses her mind on suchness.

It is thus, Anuruddhas,
that there is abiding in comfort for a nun.

■

In this case, Anuruddhas, a nun hears:

'The nun so and so has passed away;
it is declared of her by the Lord
that by the utter destruction
of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore),
she is of spontaneous generation,
one that has attained nibbāna there,
not liable to return from that world.'

If that sister has herself seen
or has heard by hearsay
that the sister
was of such moral habit
and that the sister
was of such mentality
and that the sister
was of such wisdom
and that the sister
was such an abider
and that the sister
was freed thus,
she, while recollecting her faith
and moral habit
and learning
and giving up
and wisdom,
focusses her mind on suchness.

It is thus, Anuruddhas,
that there is abiding in comfort for a nun.

■

In this case, Anuruddhas, a nun hears:

'The nun so and so has passed away;
it is declared of her by the Lord
that by the utter destruction of the three fetters,
by the reduction of attachment,
aversion,
confusion,
she is a once-returner
who, having come back once only to this world,
will make an end of anguish.'

If that sister has herself seen
or has heard by hearsay
that the sister
was of such moral habit
and that the sister
was of such mentality
and that the sister
was of such wisdom
and that the sister
was such an abider
and that the sister
was freed thus,
she, while recollecting her faith
and moral habit
and learning
and giving up
and wisdom,
focusses her mind on suchness.

It is thus, Anuruddhas,
that there is abiding in comfort for a nun.

■

In this case, Anuruddhas, a nun hears:

'The nun so and so has passed away;
it is declared of her by the Lord
that by the utter [140] destruction of the three fetters
she is a stream-attainer,
not liable to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.'

[467]If that sister has herself seen
or has heard by hearsay

that the sister
was of such moral habit
and that the sister
was of such mentality
and that the sister
was of such wisdom
and that the sister
was such an abider
and that the sister
was freed thus,
she, while recollecting her faith
and moral habit
and learning
and giving up
and wisdom,
focusses her mind on suchness.

It is thus, Anuruddhas,
that there is abiding in comfort for a nun.

---

In this case, Anuruddhas, a layfollower hears:

'The layfollower so and so has passed away;
it is declared of him by the Lord
that by the utter destruction
of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore),
he is of spontaneous generation,
one that has attained nibbāna there,
not liable to return from that world.'

If that layfollower has himself seen
or has heard by hearsay

that the layfollower
was of such moral habit
and that the layfollower
was of such mentality
and that the layfollower
was of such wisdom
and that the layfollower
was such an abider
and that the layfollower
was freed thus,
she, while recollecting his faith
and moral habit
and learning
and giving up
and wisdom,
focusses his mind on suchness.

It is thus, Anuruddhas,
that there is abiding in comfort for a layfollower.

■

In this case, Anuruddhas, a layfollower hears:

'The layfollower so and so has passed away;
it is declared of him by the Lord
that by the utter destruction of the three fetters,
by the reduction of attachment,
aversion,
confusion,
he is a once-returner
who, having come back once only to this world,
will make an end of anguish.'

If that layfollower has himself seen
or has heard by hearsay

that the layfollower
was of such moral habit
and that the layfollower
was of such mentality
and that the layfollower
was of such wisdom
and that the layfollower
was such an abider
and that the layfollower
was freed thus,
she, while recollecting his faith
and moral habit
and learning
and giving up
and wisdom,
focusses his mind on suchness.

It is thus, Anuruddhas,
that there is abiding in comfort for a layfollower.

■

In this case, Anuruddhas, a layfollower hears:

'The layfollower so and so has passed away;
it is declared of him by the Lord
that by the utter destruction of the three fetters,
he is a stream-attainer,
not liable to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.'

If that layfollower has himself seen
or has heard by hearsay
that the layfollower
was of such moral habit

and that the layfollower
was of such mentality
and that the layfollower
was of such wisdom
and that the layfollower
was such an abider
and that the layfollower
was freed thus,
she, while recollecting his faith
and moral habit
and learning
and giving up
and wisdom,
focusses his mind on suchness.

It is thus, Anuruddhas,
that there is abiding in comfort for a layfollower.

---

In this case, Anuruddhas, a laywoman follower hears,
'The laywoman follower so and so has passed away;
it is declared of her by the Lord
that by the utter destruction
of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore),
she is of spontaneous generation,
one that has attained nibbāna there,
not liable to return from that world.'

If that sister has herself seen
or has heard by hearsay
that the sister
was of such moral habit

and that the sister
was of such mentality
and that the sister
was of such wisdom
and that the sister
was such an abider
and that the sister
was freed thus,
she, while recollecting her faith
and moral habit
and learning
and giving up
and wisdom,
focusses her mind on suchness.

It is thus, Anuruddhas,
that there is abiding in comfort for a laywoman follower.

■

[468]In this case, Anuruddhas, a laywoman follower hears,
'The laywoman follower so and so has passed away;
it is declared of her by the Lord
that by the utter destruction of the three fetters,
by the reduction of attachment,
aversion,
confusion,
she is a once-returner
who, having come back once only to this world,
will make an end of anguish.'

If that sister has himself seen
or has heard by hearsay
that the sister
was of such moral habit
and that the sister

was of such mentality
and that the sister
was of such wisdom
and that the sister
was such an abider
and that the sister
was freed thus,
she, while recollecting her faith
and moral habit
and learning
and giving up
and wisdom,
focusses her mind on suchness.

It is thus, Anuruddhas,
that there is abiding in comfort for a laywoman follower.

■

In this case, Anuruddhas, a laywoman follower hears,
'The laywoman follower so and so has passed away;
it is declared of her by the Lord
that by the utter destruction of the three fetters,
she is a stream-attainer,
not liable to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.'

If that sister has himself seen
or has heard by hearsay
that the sister
was of such moral habit
and that the sister
was of such mentality
and that the sister
was of such wisdom

and that the sister
was such an abider
and that the sister
was freed thus,
she, while recollecting her faith
and moral habit
and learning
and giving up
and wisdom,
focusses her mind on suchness.

It is thus, Anuruddhas,
that there is abiding in comfort for a laywoman follower.

The Tathāgata, Anuruddhas, does not have the purpose of de- [141] frauding people
nor the purpose of cajoling people
nor the purpose of gains,
honour,
fame
and material advantages,
nor the thought:
'Let people know me thus'
when he explains the uprising in which are disciples
who have deceased and passed away,
saying:
'Such and such a one has uprisen in one,
such a one has uprisen in another.'

But there are, Anuruddhas,
young men of family
who have faith
and are of great enthusiasm,
of great joyousness,

and who, having heard this,
focus their minds on suchness.

Anuruddhas, this will be for their weal and happiness
for a long time,"

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, the venerable Anuruddha rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse at Naḷakapāna:
The Eighth

---

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Jā. No, 20 which describes how the Bodhisatta, as a monkey, taught his followers to drink water through a hollow reed; referred to as MA. iii. 178.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. A. v. 122, 125.

<sup>3</sup> Palāsamna. MA. iii. 180 says that palāsa is kiṃsuka, "strange." P.E.D. gives Butea frondosa. The Palāsa jātika is at Jā. iii. 23. Cf. also the simile of the kiṃsuka at S. iv. 193.

<sup>4</sup> For some of the following names see M. i. 205, 212, iii. 166; Vin. ii. 128.

<sup>5</sup> His verses are at Thag. 271-274. See Vin. i. 360.

<sup>6</sup> His verses are at Thag. 16. He has a place among the etad aggās at A. i. 24.

<sup>7</sup> For use of plural, Anuruddhā, see M.L.S. i. 257, n. 4.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. Iti. § 91; S. iii. 93; Miln. 32. If a king or thieves to whom someone has done a wrong catch him, they say: 'If you will go forth, you can be free,'

MA. iii. 180.

<sup>9</sup> If he is seared by a certain peril or fear (bhaya) - of a king and so forth, he goes forth. SA. ii. 302 gives the "perils" as those regarding kings, thieves, hunger, illness and debt.

<sup>10</sup> MA. iii. 181 says that if at this stage he does not win joy and so on, then he does not win the more peaceful happiness of the two following jhāna and the four ways.

<sup>11</sup> As at M. i. 250.

<sup>12</sup> sankhāya, as at A. ii. 143.

<sup>13</sup> Cf. M. i. 7 for these ways of dealing with the cankers. These four phrases are used in connection with the four apassena at D. iii. 224.

<sup>14</sup> This paragraph also at M. i. 250.

<sup>15</sup> Cf. D. ii. 200.

<sup>16</sup> As at M. i. 310.

<sup>17</sup> Cf. Iti. § 35, 36; A. ii. 20.

<sup>18</sup> MA. iii. 182, "the multitude will know me thus, a lovely report will go forth about me among the multitude."

<sup>19</sup> ulāravedā, MA. iii. 182 saying mahantatuṭṭhino.

<sup>20</sup> tathattāya, the state of being so; but possibly here meaning that they imitate the monks who have died.

<sup>21</sup> evam dhammo. Here dhamma, between sīla and paññā, seems to take the place of the more usual samādhi or citta, and so means having (right) mental objects.

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
2. Bhikkhu Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
2. The Division on Monks

69. Discourse on Gulissāni

Gulissāni Sutta

---

[469] [141]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the squirrels' feeding place.

At that time a monk named Gulissāni,
forest-gone,
uncouth in his habits,
had arrived in the midst of an Order
on some business or other.

Thereupon the venerable Sāriputta addressed the monks concerning the monk Gulissāni,
saying:

"Your reverences, a monk who is forest-gone
and who comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order, should be deferential
and respectful
towards his fellow Brahma-farers.

If, your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order, and is not deferential
and respectful
towards his fellow Brahma-farers,
there will be those who speak about him and say:

'What is the good of this venerable one
who is forest-gone
and who lives alone in the forest
doing as he pleases but who is not deferential
and respectful
towards his fellow Brahma-farers? -

there will be those who speak about him.

Therefore a monk who is forest-gone
and who has come back to an Order
and is staying with [142] an Order
should be deferential
and respectful
towards his fellow-Brahma-farers.

■

Your reverences, a monk who is forest-gone
and who comes back to an Order

and is staying with an Order, should be skilled about the seats,
thinking:

'I will sit down
not encroaching on<sup>1</sup> (the space intended for)
monks who are elders,
nor will I keep newly ordained monks from a seat.'<sup>2</sup>

If, your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order,
and is not skilled about the seats,
there will be those who speak about him and say:

'What is the good of this venerable one
who is forest-gone
and who lives alone in the forest doing what he pleases but who does not even know the rule about decent conduct? -

there will be those who speak about him.

Therefore a monk who is forest-gone
and who has come back to an Order
and is staying with an Order
should be skilled about the seats.

■

Your reverences, a monk who is forest-gone
and who comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order,

should not enter a village too early nor return<sup>3</sup> during the day.

If, your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order, and enters a village too early
and returns during the day,
there will be those who speak about him and say:

'What is the good of this venerable one
who is forest-gone
and who lives alone in the forest
doing as he pleases but who enters a village too early
and returns during the day' -

there will be those who speak about him.

Therefore a monk who is forest-gone
and who comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order
should not enter a village too early and should not return during the day.

■

Your reverences, a monk who is forest-gone
and who comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order should not [470] call upon families before a meal
or after a meal.<sup>4</sup>

If, your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone

comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order, and calls upon families
before a meal
or after a meal,
there will be those who will speak about him and say:

'Is not this walking at a wrong time frequently practised by this venerable one
who is forest-gone,
living alone in the forest
doing as he pleases,
and does not he also boast about it
to one who is in the Order?' -

there will be those who speak about him.

[143] Therefore a monk who is forest-gone
and who comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order should call upon families neither before a meal nor after a meal.

■

Your reverences, a monk who is forest-gone
and who comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order, should not be proud or inconsiderate.<sup>5</sup>

If, your reverences, a monk who is forest-gone
comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order, is proud and inconsiderate,
there will be those who speak about him and say:

'Is not this pride and inconsiderateness frequently practised by this venerable one
who is forest-gone,
living alone in a forest
doing as he pleases,
and does not he also boast about it
to one who is in the Order? -

there will be those that speak about him.

Therefore a monk who is forest-gone
and who comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order should not be proud and inconsiderate.

■

Your reverences, a monk who is forest-gone
comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order, should not be scurrilous or of loose talk.<sup>5</sup>

If, your reverences, a monk who is forest-gone
comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order, is scurrilous and of loose talk,
there will be those who speak about him and say:

'What is the good of this venerable one
who is forest-gone,
living alone in a forest
doing as he pleases,
but who is scurrilous
and of loose talk?' -

there will be those who speak about him.

Therefore a monk who is forest-gone
and who comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order should not be scurrilous or of loose talk.

■

Your reverences, a monk who is forest-gone
comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order, should be of pleasant speech,<sup>6</sup> a friend of the lovely.<sup>6</sup>

If, your reverences, a monk who is forest-gone
comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order, is of wrong speech,<sup>7</sup> a friend of the evil,<sup>6</sup>
there will be those who speak about him and say:

'What is the good of this venerable one
who is forest-gone,
living alone in a forest
doing as he pleases,
but who is of wrong speech, a friend of the evil?' -

there will be those who speak about him.

Therefore a monk who is forest-gone
comes back to an Order
and is staying with an Order, should be of pleasant speech, a friend of the lovely.

■

Your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
should be guarded as to the doors of his sense-organs.

If, your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
is not guarded as to the doors of his sense-organs,
there will be those who speak about him and say:

'What is the good of this venerable one
who is forest-gone,
living alone [144] in a forest
doing as he pleases,
[471]but who is not guarded as to the doors of his sense-organs?' -

there will be those who speak about him.

Therefore a monk who is forest-gone
should be guarded as to the doors of his sense-organs.

■

Your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
should be moderate in eating.

If, your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
is not moderate in eating,
there will be those who speak about him and say:

'What is the good of this venerable one
who is forest-gone,
living alone in a forest
doing as he pleases,
but who is not moderate in eating?' -

there will be those who speak about him.

Therefore a monk who is forest-gone
should be moderate in eating.

■

Your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
should be intent on vigilance.

If, your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
is not intent on vigilance,
there will be those who speak about him and say:

'What is the good of this venerable one
who is forest-gone,
living alone in a forest
doing as he pleases,
but who is not intent on vigilance?' -

there will be those who speak about him.

Therefore a monk who is forest-gone
should be intent on vigilance.

■

Your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
should be put forth energy.

If, your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
is lazy,
there will be those who speak about him and say:

'What is the good of this venerable one
who is forest-gone,
living alone in a forest
doing as he pleases,
but who is lazy?' -

there will be those who speak about him.

Therefore a monk who is forest-gone should put forth energy.

■

Your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
should arouse mindfulness.

If, your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
is of muddled mindfulness,
there will be those who speak about him and say:

'What is the good of this venerable one
who is forest-gone,
living alone in a forest
doing as he pleases,
but who is of muddled mindfulness?' -

there will be those who speak about him.

Therefore a monk who is forest-gone
should arouse mindfulness.

■

Your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone

should have concentration.

If, your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
has not concentration,
there will be those who speak about him and say:

'What is the good of this venerable one
who is forest-gone,
living alone in a forest
doing as he pleases,
but who has not concentration?' -

there will be those who speak about him.

Therefore a monk who is forest-gone
should have concentration.

■

Your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
should have wisdom.

If, your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone
is poor in wisdom,
there will be those who [472] speak about him and say:

'What is the [145] good of this venerable one
who is forest-gone,
living alone in a forest
doing as he pleases,
but who is poor in wisdom?' -

there will be those who speak about him.

Therefore a monk who is forest-gone
should have wisdom.

■

Your reverences, earnest study<sup>8</sup> in Further-Dhamma, in Further-Discipline<sup>9</sup> should be made by a monk
who is forest-gone.

Your reverences,
there are those who will question
a monk who is forest-gone on Further-Dhamma
and Further-Discipline.

If, your reverences,
a monk who is forest-gone,
on being asked a question on Further-Dhamma,
on Further-Discipline,
does not succeed (in answering it),
there will be those who speak about him and say:

'What is the good of this venerable one
who is forest-gone,
living alone in a forest
doing as he pleases,
but who, on being asked a question on Further-Dhamma,
on Further-Discipline,
does not succeed (in answering it)? -

there will be those who speak about him.

Therefore earnest study should be made in Further-Dhamma, in Further-Discipline
by a monk who is forest-gone.

■

Your reverences, earnest study
should be made by a monk who is forest-gone concerning those that are the peaceful Deliverances<sup>10</sup>
and are incorporeal
having transcended material shapes.

There are, your reverences,
those who will question a monk who is forest-gone about those that are the peaceful Deliverances
and are incorporeal
having transcended material shapes.

If, your reverences, a monk who is forest-gone, on being asked a question about those that are the peaceful Deliverances
and are incorporeal
having transcended material shapes,
does not succeed (in answering it)
there will be those who speak about him and say:

'What is the good of this venerable one
who is forest-gone,
living alone in a forest
doing as he pleases,
but who,
on being asked a question about those that are the peaceful Deliverances
and are incorporeal
having transcended material shapes,
does not succeed (in answering it)? -

there will be those who speak about him.

Therefore earnest study should be [146] made by a monk who is forest-gone concerning those that are the peaceful Deliverances

and are incorporeal
having transcended material shapes.

■

Your reverences, earnest study
in states of further-men
should be made by a monk who is forest-gone.

There are, your reverences,
those who will question a monk who is forest-gone about states of further-men.

If, your reverences, a monk who is forest-gone, on being asked a question about states of further-men,
does not succeed (in answering it),
there will be those who speak about him and say:

'What is the good of this venerable one
who is forest-gone,
living alone in a forest
doing as he pleases,
but who does not even know the goal for the sake of which he has gone forth? -

there will be those who speak about him.

Therefore earnest study
in states of further-men
should be made by a monk who is forest-gone."

This said, the venerable Moggallāna the Great spoke thus to the venerable Sāriputta:

"Reverend Sāriputta,
are these things to be taken up and practised only by a monk who is forest-gone or [473] also by one staying near a village?"

"These things, reverend Moggallāna, are certainly to be taken up and practised
by a monk who is forest-gone, all the more<sup>1</sup> by one staying near a village."

Discourse on Gulissāni:
The Ninth

---

<sup>1</sup> Vin. iv. 43; cf. Vin. ii. 88.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Vin. i. 47.

<sup>3</sup> I.e. to the monastery. See Pācittiya 85 (Vin. iv. 164 ff.), and Nuns' Pācittiya 17 (Vin. iv. 274).

<sup>4</sup> See Pācittiya 46 (Vin. iv. 99 f.).

<sup>5</sup> Cf. M. i. 32.

<sup>6</sup> See M. i. 43.

<sup>7</sup> dubbaca can also mean "difficult to speak to," see Vin. iii. M. i. 43.

<sup>8</sup> yoga, earnest application, a closing in on a subject until, in modern parlance, you have made it yours, are at one with it, "yoked" to it.

<sup>9</sup> abhidhamma abhivinaya; cf. A. i. 288 ff. MA. iii. 185 takes these as the Pīṭakas; to the former it specially adds the Dhammahadayavibhaṅga (Vbh. 401). See Asl. p. 24: abhidhamme duppaṭipanno dhammacittam atidhāvanto acinteyyāni pi cinteti, tato cittavikkhepaṃ pāpuṇāti; translated at Expos. i. 31: "The bhikkhu who is ill-trained in the Abhidhamma makes his mind run to excess in metaphysical abstractions and thinks of the unthinkable. Consequently he gets mental distraction."

<sup>10</sup> See the eight vimokha at D. ii. 70, 71; also below, p. 152 ff.

<sup>11</sup> pag-eva, also meaning "much less," and a fortiori. It might here mean "in consequence also," suggesting that the village dweller should emulate the one who practises the austerity, dhutaṅga, of the forest dweller, since this was the original type of austere mode of living.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
2. Bhikkhu Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
2. The Division on Monks

70. Discourse at Kīṭāgiri

Kīṭāgiri Sutta

---

[473][146]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was walking on tour in Kāsi together with a large Order of monks.

While he was there the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

"I, monks, do not eat a meal at night.

Not eating a meal at night,
I, monks, am aware of good health<sup>1</sup>
and of being without illness
and of buoyancy and strength
and living in comfort.

Come, do you too, monks, not eat a meal at [147] night.

Not eating a meal at night, you too, monks, will be aware of good health
and of being without illness
and of buoyancy and strength
and living in comfort."

"Yes, revered sir," these monks answered the Lord in assent.

Then the Lord, walking on tour in Kāsi, in due course arrived at Kīṭāgiri, a market town in Kāsi.

Then the Lord stayed at Kīṭāgiri, the market town in Kāsi.

Now at that time
the monks named Assaji and Punabbasuka<sup>2</sup> were residing in Kīṭāgiri.

Then several monks approached the monks Assaji and Punabbasuka; having approached, they spoke thus to them:

"The Lord, your reverences, does not eat a meal at night,
nor does the Order of monks;
and because, your reverences, they do not eat a meal at night they are aware of good health
and of being without illness
and of buoyancy and strength
and living in comfort.

Come, do you too, your reverences,
not eat a meal at night.

Not eating a meal at night, you too, your reverences,
will be aware of good health
and of being without illness

and of buoyancy and strength
and living in comfort."

When this had been said,
the monks Assaji and Punabbasuka spoke thus to these monks:

"We, your reverences,
eat in the evening
as well as in the morning
and during the day -
at the wrong time.<sup>3</sup>

But although we eat in the evening
as well as in the morning
and during the day -
at the wrong time -
we are aware of good health
and of being without illness
and of buoyancy and strength
and living in comfort.

Why should we,
giving up the things of the present,<sup>4</sup> run after those of the future?<sup>5</sup>

We will eat in the evening
as well as in the morning
and during the day -
at the wrong time."

So because these monks were unable to convince the monks Assaji and Punabbasuka,
they approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
they sat down at a respectful distance.

As they were sitting down at a respectful distance,
these monks spoke [148] thus to the Lord:

"Now we, revered sir,
approached the monks Assaji and Punabbasuka;
having approached,
we spoke thus to the monks Assaji and Punabbasuka:

"The Lord, your reverences, does not eat a meal at night,
nor does the Order of monks;
and because, your reverences, they do not eat a meal at night
they are aware of good health
and of being without illness
and of buoyancy and strength
and living in comfort.

Come, do you too, your reverences,
not eat a meal at night.

Not eating a meal at night, you too, your reverences,
will be aware of good health
and of being without illness
and of buoyancy and strength
and living in comfort."

When this had been said,
the monks Assaji and Punabbasuka spoke thus to these monks:

"We, your reverences,
eat in the evening
as well as in the morning
and during the day -
at the wrong time.

But although we eat in the evening
as well as in the morning
and during the day -

at the wrong time -
we are aware of good health
and of being without illness
and of buoyancy and strength
and living in comfort.

Why should we,
giving up the things of the present,
run after those of the future?

We will eat in the evening
as well as in the morning
and during the day -
at the wrong time."

It is because we, revered sir, were not able to convince the monks Assaji and Punabbasuka that we are telling this matter to the Lord."

Then the Lord summoned a certain monk, saying:

"Come you, monk,
in my name summon the monks Assaji and Punabbasuka, saying:

'The Teacher is summoning the venerable ones.'"

"Yes, revered sir,"
and this monk, having answered the Lord in assent, approached the monks Assaji and Punabbasuka;
having approached,
he spoke thus to the monks Assaji and Punabbasuka:

"The Teacher is summoning the venerable ones."

"Yes, your reverence,"
and the monks Assaji and Punabbasuka, having answered that monk in assent,

approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
they sat down at a respectful distance.

As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord spoke thus to the monks Assaji and Punabbasuka:

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that several monks, having approached you, spoke thus:

"The Lord, your reverences, does not eat a meal at night,
nor does the Order of monks;
and because, your reverences, they do not eat a meal at night
they are aware of good health
and of being without illness
and of buoyancy and strength
and living in comfort.

Come, do you too, your reverences,
not eat a meal at night.

Not eating a meal at night, you too, your reverences,
will be aware of good health
and of being without illness
and of buoyancy and strength
and living in comfort."

It is said that when this had been said, monks, you spoke thus to those monks:

"We, your reverences,
eat in the evening
as well as in the morning
and during the day -
at the wrong time.

But although we eat in the evening
as well as in the morning
and during the day -
at the wrong time -
we are aware of good health
and of being without illness
and of buoyancy and strength
and living in comfort.

Why should we,
giving up the things of the present,
run after those of the future?

We will eat in the evening
as well as in the morning
and during the day -
at the wrong time."
"Yes, revered sir."

"Did you, monks, ever understand that dhamma was taught thus by me:

Whatever an individual experiences - be it pleasant or [149] painful or neither painful nor pleasant - unskilled states decline in him, skilled states grow much?"

"No, revered sir."

"Did not you, monks, understand that dhamma was taught thus by me:

For anyone here feeling a pleasant feeling of one kind<sup>6</sup> unskilled states<sup>7</sup> grow much,
skilled states decline, but for anyone here feeling a pleasant feeling of another kind<sup>6</sup> unskilled states decline,

skilled states grow much;
for anyone here feeling a painful feeling of one kind
unskilled states grow much,
skilled states decline, but for anyone here feeling a painful feeling of another kind
unskilled states decline,
skilled states grow much;
for anyone here feeling a feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant of one kind
unskilled states grow much,
skilled states decline, but for anyone here feeling a feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant of another kind
unskilled states decline,
skilled states grow much."

"Yes, revered sir."

"It is good, monks."

---

If this, monks, had not been understood by me,
if it had not been seen,
known,
realised,
apprehended by means of wisdom that:

For anyone here feeling a pleasant feeling of one kind
unskilled states grow much,
skilled states decline -
could I, monks, not understanding it thus, say:

Get rid of pleasant feeling of this kind<sup>8</sup> -
and would this have been suitable in me, monks?"

"No, revered sir."

"But, monks, since this has been understood by me,
seen,
known,
realised
and apprehended by means of wisdom that:

For anyone here feeling a pleasant feeling of one kind
unskilled states grow much,
skilled states decline -
therefore I say:

Get rid of pleasant feeling of this kind.

And if this, monks, had not been understood by me,
if it had not been seen,
known,
realised,
apprehended by means of wisdom that:

For anyone here feeling a pleasant feeling of another kind
unskilled states decline,
skilled states grow much -
could I, monks, not understanding it thus, say:

Entering on pleasant feeling of this (other) kind,<sup>9</sup>
abide in it -
and would this have been suitable in me, monks?"

"No, revered sir."

[150] "But, monks, since this has been understood by me, seen, known, realised and apprehended by means of wisdom that:

For anyone here feeling a pleasant feeling of this other kind
unskilled states decline,
skilled states grow much-therefore I say:

Entering on pleasant feeling of this (other) kind,
abide in it.

---

And if this, monks, had not been understood by me,
if it had not been seen,
known,
realised,
apprehended by means of wisdom that:

For anyone here feeling a painful feeling of one kind
unskilled states grow much,
skilled states decline -
could I, monks, not understanding it thus, say:

Get rid of painful feeling of this kind -
and would this have been suitable in me, monks?"

"No, revered sir."

"But, monks, since this has been understood by me,
seen,
known,
realised
and apprehended by means of wisdom that:

For anyone here feeling a painful feeling of one kind
unskilled states grow much,

skilled states decline -
therefore I say:

Get rid of painful feeling of this kind.

And if this, monks, had not been understood by me,
if it had not been seen,
known,
realised,
apprehended by means of wisdom that:

For anyone here feeling a painful feeling of another kind
unskilled states decline,
skilled states grow much -
could I, monks, not understanding it thus, say:

Entering on painful feeling of this (other) kind,
abide in it -
and would this have been suitable in me, monks?"

"No, revered sir."

"But, monks, since this has been understood by me, seen, known, realised and apprehended by means of wisdom that:

For anyone here feeling a painful feeling of this other kind
unskilled states decline,
skilled states grow much-therefore I say:

Entering on painful feeling of this (other) kind,
abide in it.

---

And if this, monks, had not been understood by me,
if it had not been seen,
known,
realised,
apprehended by means of wisdom that:

For anyone here feeling a neither painful nor pleasant feeling of one kind
unskilled states grow much,
skilled states decline -
could I, monks, not understanding it thus, say:

Get rid of neither painful nor pleasant feeling of this kind -
and would this have been suitable in me, monks?"

"No, revered sir."

"But, monks, since this has been understood by me,
seen,
known,
realised
and apprehended by means of wisdom that:

For anyone here feeling a neither painful nor pleasant feeling of one kind
unskilled states grow much,
skilled states decline -
therefore I say:

Get rid of neither painful nor pleasant feeling of this kind.

And if this, monks, had not been understood by me,
if it had not been seen,
known,
realised,
apprehended by means of wisdom that:

For anyone here feeling a neither painful nor pleasant feeling of another kind

unskilled states decline,
skilled states grow much -
could I, monks, not understanding it thus, say:

Entering on neither painful nor pleasant feeling of this (other) kind,
abide in it -
and would this have been suitable in me, monks?"

"No, revered sir."

"But, monks, since this has been understood by me, seen, known, realised and apprehended by means of wisdom that:

For anyone here feeling a neither painful nor pleasant feeling of this other kind
unskilled states decline,
skilled states grow much-therefore I say:

[477]Entering on neither painful nor pleasant feeling of this (other) kind,
abide in it.

---

I, monks, do not say of all monks
that there is something to be done through diligence;
yet, I, monks, do not say of all monks that there is not something to be done through diligence.

Monks, those monks who are perfected ones, canker-waned,
who have lived the life,
done what there was to be done,
laid down the burden,
who have attained their own goal,

the fetters of becoming utterly destroyed, who are freed by right profound knowledge, of monks such as these I do not say, monks,
that there is something to be done through diligence.

What is the reason for this?

It has (already) been done [151] by these through diligence, these could not become negligent.

But, monks, those monks who are learners, not attained to perfection,<sup>10</sup> but who live striving for the incomparable security from the bonds, of monks such as these I say, monks,
that there is something to be done through diligence.

What is the reason for this?

Even while these venerable ones are resorting to suitable lodgings, associating with lovely friends,
and are themselves controlling their sense-organs, having realised here and now by their own super-knowledge that matchless goal of the Brahma-faring
for the sake of which young men of family
rightly go forth from home into homelessness,
entering on it,
they could abide in it.

So I, monks, beholding this fruit of diligence for these monks,
say that there is something to be done through diligence.

Monks, there are the seven (types of) persons existing in the world.

What seven?<sup>11</sup>

The one who is freed both ways, the one freed by means of intuitive wisdom, the mental realiser,

the one won to view,
the one freed by faith,
the striver after dhamma, the striver after faith.

And which, monks, is the person who is freed both ways?<sup>12</sup>

As to this, monks,
some person is abiding, having apprehended<sup>13</sup> with the [152] person<sup>14</sup> those peaceful Deliverances<sup>15</sup> which are incorporeal<sup>16</sup> having transcended material shapes;<sup>17</sup> and having seen by means of wisdom
his cankers are utterly destroyed.

This, monks, is called the person who is freed both ways.

I, monks, do not say of this monk
that there is something to be done through diligence.

What is the reason for this?

It has been done by him through diligence,
he could not become negligent.

And which, monks, is the person who is freed by means of intuitive wisdom?

As to this, monks,
some person is abiding
without having apprehended with the person
those peaceful Deliverances

which are incorporeal
having transcended material shapes;
yet, having seen by means of wisdom
his cankers are utterly destroyed.<sup>18</sup>

This, monte, is called the person who is freed by means of intuitive wisdom.

I, monks, do not say of this monk
that there is something to be done through diligence.

What is the reason for this?

It has been done by him through diligence,
he could not become negligent.

And which, monks, is the person who is a mental-realiser?<sup>19</sup>

As to this, monks,
some person is abiding,
having apprehended with the person
those peaceful Deliverances
which are incorporeal
having transcended material shapes;
and having seen by means of wisdom
some (only) of his cankers are utterly destroyed.

This, monks, is called the person who is a mental-realiser.

I, monks, say of this monk
that there is something to be done through diligence.

What is [153] the reason for this?

Even while this venerable one is resorting to suitable lodgings,
associating with lovely friends,
and is himself controlling his sense-organs,
having realised here and now
by his own super-knowledge
that matchless goal of the Brahma-faring
for the sake of which young men of family
rightly go forth from home into homelessness, entering on it he might abide in it.

So I, monks, beholding this fruit of diligence for this monk,
say that there is something to be done through diligence.

And which, monks, is the person who has won to view?<sup>20</sup>

As to this, monks, some person is abiding
without having apprehended with the person
those peaceful Deliverances
which are incorporeal
having transcended material shapes;
yet, having seen by means of wisdom
some of his cankers are utterly destroyed,
and those things proclaimed by the Tathāgata are fully seen by him through intuitive wisdom and fully practised.<sup>21</sup>

This, monks, is called the person who has won to view.

I, monks, say of this monk
that there is something to be done through diligence.

What is the reason for this?

Even while this venerable one is resorting to suitable lodgings,
associating with lovely friends,
and is himself controlling his sense-organs,

having realised here and now
by his own super-knowledge
that matchless goal of the Brahma-faring
for the sake of which young men of family
rightly go forth from home into homelessness, entering on it he might abide in it.

So I, monks, beholding this fruit of diligence for this monk,
say that there is something to be done through diligence.

And which, monks, is the person who is freed by faith?<sup>22</sup>

As to this, monks, some person is abiding
without having apprehended with the person
those peaceful Deliverances
which are incorporeal
having transcended material shapes;
yet, having seen by means of wisdom
some of his cankers are utterly destroyed, and his faith in the Tathāgata is settled, genuine,
established.<sup>23</sup>

This, monks, is called the person who is freed through faith.

I, monks, say of this monk
that there is something to be done through diligence.

What is the reason for this?

Even while this venerable one is resorting to suitable lodgings,
associating with lovely friends,
and is himself controlling his sense-organs,
having realised here and now
by his own super-knowledge
that matchless goal of the Brahma-faring

for the sake of which young men of family
rightly go forth from home into homelessness, entering on it he might abide in it.

So I, monks, beholding this fruit of diligence for this monk,
say that there is something to be done through diligence.

And which, monks, is the person who is striving for dhamma?<sup>24</sup>

[154] As to this, monks, some person is abiding
without having apprehended with the person
those peaceful Deliverances
which are incorporeal
having transcended material shapes;
but (although) he has seen by means of wisdom, his cankers are not (yet) utterly destroyed;
and those things proclaimed by the Tathāgata are (only) moderately approved of<sup>25</sup> by him by means of intuitive wisdom, although he has these states, namely the faculty of faith,
the faculty of energy,
the faculty of mindfulness,
the faculty of concentration,
the faculty of wisdom.<sup>26</sup>

This, monks, is called the person who is striving for dhamma.

I, monks, say of this monk
that there is something to be done through diligence.

What is the reason for this?

Even while this venerable one is resorting to suitable lodgings,
associating with lovely friends,
and is himself controlling his sense-organs,

having realised here and now
by his own super-knowledge
that matchless goal of the Brahma-faring
for the sake of which young men of family
rightly go forth from home into homelessness, entering on it he might abide in it.

So I, monks, beholding this fruit of diligence for this monk,
say that there is something to be done through diligence.

And which, monks, is the person striving after faith?<sup>27</sup>

As to this, monks, some person is abiding without having apprehended with the person
those peaceful Deliverances
which are incorporeal
having transcended material shapes;
yet, having seen by means of wisdom
his cankers are not utterly destroyed; but if he has enough faith in the Tathāgata, enough regard,<sup>28</sup> then he will have these things, that is to say the faculty of faith,
the faculty of energy,
the faculty of mindfulness,
the faculty of concentration,
the faculty of wisdom.

This, monks, is called the person who is striving after faith.

I, monks, say of this monk that there is something to be done through diligence.

What is the reason for this?

Even while this venerable one is resorting to suitable lodgings,
associating with lovely friends,
and is himself controlling his sense-organs,
having realised here and now
by his own super-knowledge
that matchless goal of the Brahma-faring
for the sake of which young men of family
rightly go forth from home into homelessness, entering on it he might abide in it.

So I, monks, beholding this fruit of diligence for this monk,
say that there is something to be done through diligence.

I, monks, do not say that the attainment of profound knowledge comes straightaway;
nevertheless, monks,
the attainment of profound knowledge comes by a gradual training, a gradual doing,
a gradual course.

[480]And how, monks, does the attainment of profound knowledge come by means of a gradual training, a gradual [155] doing,
a gradual course?

As to this, monks,
one who has faith draws close;<sup>29</sup> drawing close, he sits down near by;<sup>30</sup> sitting down near by, he lends ear; lending ear, he hears dhamma;
having heard dhamma, he remembers it; he tests the meaning of the things he has borne in mind;
while testing the meaning the things are approved of;

there being approval of the things desire<sup>31</sup> is born; with desire born
he makes an effort;
having made the effort
he weighs it up;
having weighed it up
he strives;
being self-resolute
he realises with his person the highest truth itself and, penetrating it by means of wisdom, he sees.<sup>32</sup>

But, monks, had there not been that faith, there would not have been, monks, that drawing close;
there would not have been, monks, that sitting down near by;
there would not have been, monks, that lending ear;
there would not have been, monks, that hearing of dhamma;
there would not have been, monks, that remembering of dhamma;
there would not have been, monks, that testing of the meaning;
there would not have been, monks, that approval of the things;
there would not have been, monks, that desire;
there would not have been, monks, that effort;
there would not have been, monks, that striving.

Monks, you are on a wrong track, you are on a false track, monks.

How very far, monks, have not these foolish persons strayed from this dhamma and discipline.

There is a fourfold exposition, monks, the meaning of which,

when it is recited,
an intelligent man could soon understand by means of wisdom.

I will recite it to you, monks, you will understand it from me."

"Who are we, revered sir, and who are the knowers of dhamma?"

"Monks, even a teacher who sets store on material things,<sup>33</sup> is an heir to material things, and lives in association with material things - why, even to him,
this kind of higgling and haggling does not apply, [156] that (his followers) will or will not do this or that according as they like it or not.

So what has this to do with the Tathāgata who lives dissociated from material things?

For a disciple who has faith in the Teacher's instruction and lives in unison with it, monks, it is a principle<sup>34</sup> that:

'The Teacher is the Lord, a disciple am I;
the Lord knows,
I do not know.'<sup>35</sup>

For a disciple who has faith in the Teacher's instruction
and lives in unison with it, monks, [481] the Teacher's instruction is a furthering in growth,<sup>36</sup> giving strength.<sup>37</sup>

For a disciple who has faith in the Teacher's instruction
and lives in unison with it, monks, it is a principle that:

'Gladly<sup>38</sup> would I be reduced to skin and sinews and bone and let my body's flesh and blood<sup>39</sup> dry up if there came to be a vortex of energy so that that which is not (yet) won might be won by human strength, by human energy,
by human striving.'

For a disciple who has faith in the Teacher's instruction
and lives in unison with it, monks, one of two fruits is to be expected:
profound knowledge here and now, or, if there is any basis (for rebirth remaining),
the state of no-return."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

---

<sup>1</sup> As at M. i. 437.

<sup>2</sup> Two of the six sectarian leaders of groups of monks; names of the six leaders given at MA. iii. 186-7, Jā. ii. 387. These two, whose headquarters were at Kīṭāgiri, are mentioned at e.g. Vin. ii. 9 ff., 171, iii. 81, 178 f. See B.D. i. 314, n. 2.

<sup>3</sup> See M. i. 448 (above, p. 120).

<sup>4</sup> sandiṭṭhika, what can be seen and realised, a word used in the usual description of dhamma.

<sup>5</sup> kālika, involving time, so: not immediate. MA. iii. 187 explains as anāgate kāle pattaḅbam ānisaṅsam, advantages to be obtained at a future time. The opposite, akālika, is another word used in the usual description of dhamma.

<sup>6</sup> evarūpa.

<sup>7</sup> dhammā.

<sup>8</sup> Reference is here being made to the six types of pleasure of the worldly life; cf. S. iv. 232; Vbh. 381.

<sup>9</sup> The pleasant states not to be got rid of are the six ways of getting pleasure through renunciation, S. iv. 232.

<sup>10</sup> As at M. i. 4.

<sup>11</sup> As at M. i. 439. Cf. Vism. 659 where these seven "ariyan persons" are given in a different order.

<sup>12</sup> ubhatobhāgavimutta. Cf. M. i. 439; D. ii. 71; A. i. 74, iv. 453; Pug. 14, 72, 73. At MA. iii. 188, DA. ii. 514, iii. 889 it is said that he is freed rūpakāyaio (from the body, or, class, kāya = nikāya, of material shape, i.e. body) through the incorporeal attainments, and nāmakāyato (from the class of mind, mental aggregates) through the Way. This kind of freedom is therefore from nāma and rūpa, also the view of SnA ii. 594, AA. iv. 207. It does not mean "freed through heart and intellect" as sometimes stated, e.g. Fur. Dial. i. 313. MA. iii. 188, DA. iii. 889 say: emerging one by one from the four incorporeal attainments, having mastered the (volitional) activities (saṅkhārā: of body, speech and thought), emerging from the cessation of the four attainments of arahantship, he has attained arahantship and is a non-returner - in this way it is fivefold. DA. ii. 514 says: emerging from the planes of infinite ether and so on, he has attained arahantship and is a non-returner, and emerging from cessation he has attained arahantship. It is fivefold DA. ii. 514 also cites Sn. 1074, which speaks of nāmakāya-vimvutto, freed from the class of "name" (mind), or, freed from name and body? This explanation, attributed to Cūḷa-Sumana, an Elder of Ceylon, and recorded at DA. ii. 514, is supposed to be the most authoritative interpretation.

<sup>13</sup> phasaitvā, with v. 11. phusitvā, phussitvā; at MA. i. 162 it is said nāmakāyena phusitvā; pāpūñitvā adhigantvā ti vuttam hoti, having apprehended with (through, or while in) the psycho-physical compound (taking kāyo as equal to rūpa), having mastered, having won. Cf. A. ii. 87, etc.

<sup>14</sup> kāyena, which would appear to mean the rūpakāya and the nāmakāya, see p. 151, n. 3 above, and SnA ii. 594.

<sup>15</sup> These number eight, see D. ii. 70-71. At MA. i. 162 it is said that "peaceful" (or "calm," santa) is because there is peace in regard to the factors, aṅga, as well as in regard to the object of meditation; while vimokkha means freed from opposing dhammā and intent on the object of meditation or thought.

<sup>16</sup> In respect of the object of thought and resultant (thought) they are devoid of material shapes, MA. i. 162.

<sup>17</sup> Having transcended (or, passed beyond) in the jhāna on material spheres, MA. i. 162.

<sup>18</sup> Pug. 14, 73; quoted at MA. iii. 188, DA. ii. 512; cf. A. iv. 453.

<sup>19</sup> kāyasakkhin. See M. i. 439, Pug. 14, 73. At MA. iii. 189 it is said that he realises that which is apprehended; whoever first realises a jhāna-realisation afterwards realises stopping, nibbāna. So, having begun with stream-attainment, he goes on to arahantship. Cf. A. iv. 451 and AA. iv. 206 which says "because the first jhāna is realised by means of this nāmakāya, therefore in this way (pariyāyena) he is called a kāyasakkhin." For kāya, meaning the three mental factors (presumably referring to the khandhas of feeling, perception and the saṅkhāras, as at Dhs. 40) see P. Purity, 806, n. 2, and Expos. i. 199.

<sup>20</sup> ditṭhipatta. MA. iii. 189 quotes M. ii. 38 = Pug. 15 = 43 ff. which are all passages that speak of comprehending the four Truths of anguish as they really are.

<sup>21</sup> Pug. 15. See A. iv. 363 on the power, bala, of wisdom.

<sup>22</sup> See Sn. 1146: by faith you shall be free.

<sup>23</sup> Pug. 15 differs, giving the same interpretation for this person as for the preceding, while saying that they differ.

<sup>24</sup> dhammānusārin. Pug. 15 again differs. Cf. M. i. 142; S. iii. 225, 228. He and the next are stream-attainers. MA. iii. 190 = DA. 890 says dhammo ti paññā, dhamma is wisdom.

<sup>25</sup> Matteso nijjhānaṃ khamanti; cf. S. iii. 228, v. 377; A. iv. 241.

<sup>26</sup> On these five faculties, or cardinal virtues, see S. v. 199.

<sup>27</sup> Pug. 15 differs. Cf. M. i. 142.

<sup>28</sup> Cf. S. v. 377.

<sup>29</sup> MA. iii. 193 says that "he goes near (or, into the presence of) a teacher." The following passage also occurs at M. ii. 173.

<sup>30</sup> payirupāsati, can also mean to pay respects to someone, to visit someone. MA. iii, 193 = 426 says "he sits down in the presence of," santike. Cf. AA. ii. 196.

<sup>31</sup> chanda. MA. iii. 193 calls this desire for what is skilled, kusalachanda.

<sup>32</sup> Cf. A. ii. 115. At MA. iii. 193 it is said that "he realises the truth of nibbāna nāmakāyena, by means of the class of name; and that 'by means of wisdom' means he sees, having pierced by means of the wisdom of the Way which is connected with nāmakāya." Kāyena, "with the person", would seem to mean the very opposite of "through the medium of his bodily senses" as at Fur. Dial. i. 338.

<sup>33</sup> That is, a teacher who is "outside" the Buddhist fold.

<sup>34</sup> anudhamma, a (right) method; in accordance with dhamma.

<sup>35</sup> Here, according to MA. iii. 194: "The Lord knows the advantages in eating only once a day; I do not. But, because of my faith, I will eat only one meal a day, giving up eating three times daily."

<sup>36</sup> rumhantya.

<sup>37</sup> ojavant; MA. iii. 194 says sinehavant.

<sup>38</sup> As at A. i. 50; S. ii. 28.

<sup>39</sup> MA. iii. 194 says that thus the application to the skin, sinews, bones, and the flesh and blood constitutes a fourfold energy. But the "fourfold exposition" is more likely to refer to the disciple who has faith. Nor is there anything here about the four truths (MA. iii. 193).

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
3. Paribbājaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
3. The Division on Wanderers

71. Discourse to Vacchagotta on the Threefold Knowledge

Tevijja-Vacchagotta Sutta

---

[481] [159]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Vesālī
in the Great Grove in the hall of the Gabled House.

Now at that time the wanderer Vacchagotta<sup>1</sup> was living in Ekapuṇḍarīka,<sup>2</sup> the wanderers' park.

Then the Lord,
having dressed in the morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
entered Vesālī for almsfood.

But it occurred to the Lord:

"It is still too early to walk for almsfood in Vesālī.

Suppose I were to approach Ekaṇḍarīka, the wanderers' park, and Vacchagotta the wanderer?"

Then the Lord approached Ekaṇḍarīka, the wanderers' park, and Vacchagotta the wanderer.

The wanderer Vacchagotta saw the Lord coming in the distance and seeing him,
he spoke thus to the Lord:

"Revered sir, let the Lord come;
revered sir, there is a welcome for the Lord;
revered sir, it is long since the Lord made the opportunity to come here; revered sir, let the Lord sit down, this is the appointed seat."

The Lord sat down on the appointed seat,
and Vacchagotta the wanderer, [482]having taken a low seat,
sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance,
the wanderer Vacchagotta spoke thus to the Lord:

"Revered sir, I have heard:

"The recluse Gotama is all knowing,<sup>3</sup>
all seeing;
he claims all-embracing knowledge-and-vision,
saying:

"Whether I am walking
or standing still or asleep

or awake,
knowledge-and-vision is permanently
and continuously before me."

Revered sir, those who speak thus:

'The recluse Gotama is all knowing,
all seeing;
he claims all-embracing knowledge-and-vision,
saying:

[160] "Whether I am walking
or standing still or asleep
or awake,
knowledge-and-vision is permanently
and continuously before me." - revered sir, I hope that these<sup>4</sup> are speaking of the Lord in accordance with what has been said and are not misrepresenting the Lord

with what is not fact,
but are explaining in accordance with dhamma, and that no one of his fellow dhamma-men,
of this way of speaking,
gives grounds for reproach?"

"Vaceha, those who speak thus:

'The recluse Gotama is all knowing,
all seeing;
he claims all-embracing knowledge-and-vision,
saying:

"Whether I am walking
or standing still or asleep

or awake,
knowledge-and-vision is permanently
and continuously before me." -

these are not speaking of me
in accordance with what has been said, but they are misrepresenting me with what is untrue, not fact."

"Expounding in what way, revered sir, would we be speaking
in accordance with what has been said, and would not be misrepresenting the Lord
with what is not fact,
but would be explaining in accordance with dhamma so that no fellow dhamma-man, of the same way of speaking,
could give grounds for reproach?"

"Vaccha, expounding:

'The recluse Gotama is a threefold-knowledge man,' [483]you would be one who speaks in accordance with what has been said by me, you would not be misrepresenting me

with what is not fact,
you would be explaining in accordance with dhamma,
and no fellow dhamma-man
of this way of speaking
could give grounds for reproach.

For I, Vaccha,
whenever I please
recollect a variety of former habitations,
that is to say:

One birth,
two births,
three births,
four births,
five births,
ten births,
twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,
fifty births,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
and many an eon of integration
and many an eon of disintegration
and many an eon of integration-disintegration:

'Such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so I was nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I came to be in another state
where I was such a one by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so I was nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I arose here.'

Thus I recollect divers former habitations in all their modes and detail.<sup>5</sup>

■

And I, Vaccha, whenever I please,
with the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men,
see beings as they pass hence
or come to be;
I comprehend that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going,
according to the consequences of deeds,
and thinks:

'Indeed these worthy beings
who were possessed of wrong conduct in body,
speech
and thought,
scoffers at the ariyans,
holding a wrong view,
incurring deeds consequent on a wrong view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

But these worthy beings
who were possessed of good conduct in body,
speech
and thought,

who did not scoff at the ariyans,
holding a right view,
incurring deeds consequent on a right view -
these at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a good bourn,
a heaven world.'

Thus with the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men
I see beings as they pass hence,
as they arise;
I comprehend that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going
according to the consequences of deeds.

■

And I, Vaccha, by the destruction of the cankers, having realised here and now
by my own super-knowledge
the freedom of mind
and the freedom through wisdom
that are cankerless,
entering thereon,
abide therein.

Vaccha, expounding
that the recluse Gotama is a threefold-knowledge man, you would be one who speaks in accordance with what has been said by me, you would not be misrepresenting me
with what is not fact,

you would be explaining in accordance with dhamma,
and no [161] fellow dhamma-man
of this way of speaking
could give grounds for reproach."

When this had been said, Vacchagotta the wanderer spoke thus to the Lord:

"Good Gotama, is there any householder who, not getting rid of the householder's fetter(s),<sup>6</sup>
at the breaking up of the body
is an end-maker of ill?"

"There is not any householder, Vaccha, who,
not getting rid of the householder's fetter(s), at the breaking up of the body
is an end-maker of ill."

"But is there, good Gotama, any householder who,
not getting rid of the householder's fetter(s), at the breaking up of the body attains heaven?"

"Not just one hundred, Vaccha, nor two hundred,
nor three,
four or five hundred,
but far more are those householders who,
not getting-rid of the householder's fetter(s), at the breaking up of the body attain heaven."

"Now, good Gotama,
is there any Naked Ascetic who
at the breaking up of the body
is an end-maker of ill?"

"There is not, Vaccha, any Naked Ascetic who
at the breaking up of the body
is an end-maker of ill."

"But is there then, good Gotama,
any Naked Ascetic who
at the breaking up of the body attained heaven?"

"Although I, Vaccha, recollect ninety-one eons,<sup>7</sup> I do not know of any Naked Ascetic who attained heaven, except one;
and he professed kamma, he professed operative kamma."<sup>8</sup>

[162] "This being so, good Gotama, that fold of the sects<sup>9</sup> is empty even in regard to attaining heaven."

"This being so, Vaccha, that fold of the sects
is empty even in regard to attaining heaven."

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, the wanderer Vacchagotta rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Discourse to Vaeehagotta on the Threefold Knowledge:
The First

---

<sup>1</sup> Cf. A. i. 160; S. iii. 257 ff., iv. 391 ff. Verses are ascribed to him at Thag. 112. His spiritual evolution is told in this and the two following Discourses, and very briefly at ThagA. i. 235.

<sup>2</sup> MA. iii. 195 = DA. ii. 416 says puṇḍarīka is a white mango tree. A solitary one (eka) grew in this wanderers' park. This park is not to be confused with the ekapuṇḍarīka uyyāna of M. i. 252.

<sup>3</sup> Said of Nātaputta at M. i. 92-93.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. A. i. 161, ii. 31, iii. 4; S. ii. 33, 36, iii. 6.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. M. i. 22.

<sup>6</sup> Probably meaning his wife, children and servants.

<sup>7</sup> At D. ii. 2 Gotama is reputed to say that the Buddha Vipassin arose in the world ninety-one eons, kappa, ago. This context mentions six Buddhas preceding Gotama; of these Vipassin is the first. I suggest that our M. passage may have a hidden reference to the fact that Gotama's recollection of his previous lives, or "habitations," goes back to Vipassin's time; and that, since from D. ii. 2 and M. i. 483 it does not appear to go back to the times of the other Buddhas who preceded Vipassin, is perhaps contributory evidence that the number of these was of later growth; see e.g. E.J. Thomas, Life of Buddha, p. 27. See Intr. p. xvii.

<sup>8</sup> so p'āsi kammavādī kiriyavādī. MA. iii, 196 says that if he was the former he could not avoid being the latter. A.L. Basham, Hist. of the Ājīvikas, p. 135 says he was in consequence of these views "not an orthodox follower of Makkhali Gosāla." Cf. Vin. i. 71: kammavādinō ete kiriyavādinō, said of the matted hair ascetics who, for this very reason, were to be privileged not to undergo the prescribed four months' probation for members of other sects before they were ordained as monks. Cf. also A. i, 287. [but ?]

<sup>9</sup> tithāyatana, as at Vin. i. 60, 69, ii. 279, iv. 217; A. i. 173. See B.D. iii. 167, n. 2.

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
3. Paribbājaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
3. The Division on Wanderers

72. Discourse to Vacchagotta on Fire

Aggi-Vacchagotta Sutta

---

[483] [162]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Sāvattḥī
in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then the wanderer Vacchagotta approached the Lord;
[484] having approached,
he exchanged greetings with the Lord;
having conversed in a friendly and courteous way,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the wanderer Vaeehagotta spoke thus to the Lord:

"Now, good Gotama,
is the revered Gotama of this view:

"The world is eternal,<sup>1</sup>
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

"The world is eternal,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood."

■

"Then good Gotama,
is the revered Gotama of this view:

"The world is not eternal,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

"The world is not eternal,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood."

■

"Now, good Gotama,
is the revered Gotama of this view:

"The world is an ending thing,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

'The world is an ending thing,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood.'

■

[163] "Then, good Gotama,
is the revered Gotama of this view:

'The world is not an ending thing,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

'The world is not an ending thing,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood.'

■

"Now, good Gotama,
is the revered Gotama of this view:

'The life-principle and the body are the same,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

'The life-principle and the body are the same,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood.'

■

"Then, good Gotama, is the revered Gotama of this view:

'The life-principle is one thing,
the body another,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

'The life-principle is one thing,
the body another,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood.'

■

"Now, good Gotama, is the revered Gotama of this view:

'The Tathāgata is after dying,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

'The Tathāgata is after dying,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood.'

■

"Then, good Gotama, is the revered Gotama of this view:

'The Tathāgata is not after dying,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

'The Tathāgata is not after dying,
this is indeed the truth,

all else is falsehood."

■

"Now, good Gotama, is the revered Gotama of this view:

"The Tathāgata both is
and is not after dying,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

[485] "I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

"The Tathāgata both is
and is not after dying,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood."

"

■

"Then, good Gotama, is the revered Gotama of this view:

"The Tathāgata neither is
nor is not after dying,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

"The Tathāgata neither is
nor is not after dying,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood."

---

"Now, good Gotama,
the revered Gotama,
on being asked:

"Now, good Gotama,
is the revered Gotama of this view:

'The world is eternal,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

says:

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

'The world is eternal,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood.'"

■

"On being asked:

"Then good Gotama,
is the revered Gotama of this view:

'The world is not eternal,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

says:

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

'The world is not eternal,
this is indeed the truth,

all else is falsehood."

■

"On being asked:

"Now, good Gotama,
is the revered Gotama of this view:

'The world is an ending thing,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

says:

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

'The world is an ending thing,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood.'"

■

"On being asked:

"Then, good Gotama,
is the revered Gotama of this view:

'The world is not an ending thing,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

says:

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

'The world is not an ending thing,
this is indeed the truth,

all else is falsehood."

■

"On being asked:

"Now, good Gotama,
is the revered Gotama of this view:

'The life-principle and the body are the same,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?

says:

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

'The life-principle and the body are the same,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood.'"

■

"On being asked:

"Then, good Gotama, is the revered Gotama of this view:

'The life-principle is one thing,
the body another,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

says:

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

'The life-principle is one thing,
the body another,

this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood."

■

"On being asked:

"Now, good Gotama, is the revered Gotama of this view:

'The Tathāgata is after dying,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

says:

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

'The Tathāgata is after dying,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood.'"

■

"On being asked:

"Then, good Gotama, is the revered Gotama of this view:

'The Tathāgata is not after dying,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

says:

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

'The Tathāgata is not after dying,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood.'"

■

"On being asked:

"Now, good Gotama, is the revered Gotama of this view:

"The Tathāgata both is
and is not after dying,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

says:

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

"The [164] Tathāgata both is
and is not after dying,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood."

"

■

"On being asked:

"Then, good Gotama, is the revered Gotama of this view:

"The Tathāgata neither is
nor is not after dying,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood'?"

says:

"I, Vaccha, am not of this view:

'The Tathāgata neither is
nor is not after dying,
this is indeed the truth,
all else is falsehood.'

---

What is the peril
the revered Gotama beholds that he thus does not approach any of these (speculative) views?"

"Vaccha, to think that 'the world is eternal' - this is going to a (speculative) view,<sup>2</sup>
holding a view,
the wilds of views,
the wriggling of views,
the scuffling of views,
the fetter of views;
it is accompanied by anguish,
distress,
misery,
fever;
it does not conduce
to turning away from,
nor to dispassion,
stopping,
calming,
super-knowledge,
awakening,
nor to nibbāna.

Vaccha, to think that
'the world is not eternal' -
this is going to a (speculative) view,
holding a view,
the wilds of views,
the wriggling of views,
the scuffling of views,
the fetter of views;
it is accompanied by anguish,
distress,
misery,
fever;
it does not conduce
to turning away from,
nor to dispassion,
stopping,
calming,
super-knowledge,
awakening,
nor to nibbāna.

Vaccha, to think that
'the world is an ending thing' -
this is going to a (speculative) view,
holding a view,
the wilds of views,
the wriggling of views,
the scuffling of views,
the fetter of views;
it is accompanied by anguish,
distress,
misery,
fever;
it does not conduce
to turning away from,
nor to dispassion,

stopping,
calming,
super-knowledge,
awakening,
nor to nibbāna.

Vaccha, to think that
'the world is not an ending thing' -
this is going to a (speculative) view,
holding a view,
the wilds of views,
the wriggling of views,
the scuffling of views,
the fetter of views;
it is accompanied by anguish,
distress,
misery,
fever;
it does not conduce
to turning away from,
nor to dispassion,
stopping,
calming,
super-knowledge,
awakening,
nor to nibbāna.

Vaccha, to think that
'the life-principle and the body are the same' -
this is going to a (speculative) view,
holding a view,
the wilds of views,
the wriggling of views,
the scuffling of views,
the fetter of views;
it is accompanied by anguish,

distress,
misery,
fever;
it does not conduce
to turning away from,
nor to dispassion,
stopping,
calming,
super-knowledge,
awakening,
nor to nibbāna.

Vaccha, to think that
'the life-principle is one thing, the body another' -
this is going to a (speculative) view,
holding a view,
the wilds of views,
the wriggling of views,
the scuffling of views,
the fetter of views;
it is accompanied by anguish,
distress,
misery,
fever;
it does not conduce
to turning away from,
nor to dispassion,
stopping,
calming,
super-knowledge,
awakening,
nor to nibbāna.

Vaccha, to think that
'the Tathāgata is after dying' -
this is going to a (speculative) view,

holding a view,
the wilds of views,
the wriggling of views,
the scuffling of views,
the fetter of views;
it is accompanied by anguish,
distress,
misery,
fever;
it does not conduce
to turning away from,
nor to dispassion,
stopping,
calming,
super-knowledge,
awakening,
nor to nibbāna.

[486]Vaccha, to think that
'the Tathāgata is not after dying' -
this is going to a (speculative) view,
holding a view,
the wilds of views,
the wriggling of views,
the scuffling of views,
the fetter of views;
it is accompanied by anguish,
distress,
misery,
fever;
it does not conduce
to turning away from,
nor to dispassion,
stopping,
calming,
super-knowledge,

awakening,
nor to nibbāna.

Vaccha, to think that
'the Tathāgata both is and is not after dying' -
this is going to a (speculative) view,
holding a view,
the wilds of views,
the wriggling of views,
the scuffling of views,
the fetter of views;
it is accompanied by anguish,
distress,
misery,
fever;
it does not conduce
to turning away from,
nor to dispassion,
stopping,
calming,
super-knowledge,
awakening,
nor to nibbāna.

Vaccha, to think that
'the Tathāgata neither is nor is not after dying' -
this is going to a (speculative) view,
holding a view,
the wilds of views,
the wriggling of views,
the scuffling of views,
the fetter of views;
it is accompanied by anguish,
distress,
misery,
fever;

it does not conduce
to turning away from,
nor to dispassion,
stopping,
calming,
super-knowledge,
awakening,
nor to nibbāna.

I, Vaccha, beholding that this is a peril, thus do not approach
any of these (speculative) views."

---

"But does the good Gotama have any (speculative) view?"

"Vaccha, going to 'speculative view' - this has been got rid of
by the Tathāgata.

But this, Vaccha, has been seen by the Tathāgata:

'Such is material shape,
such is the arising of material shape,
such the going down of material shape;

such is feeling,
such is the arising of feeling,
such the going down of feeling;

such is perception,
such is the arising of perception,

such the going down of perception;

such are the habitual tendencies, such is the arising of the habitual tendencies, such the going down of the habitual tendencies;

such is consciousness,
such is the arising of consciousness, such the going down of consciousness.'

Therefore I say
that by the destruction, dispassion,
stopping,
giving up,
casting out of all imaginings,<sup>3</sup> all supposings,
all latent pride that [165]
'I am the doer, mine is the doer,'
a Tathāgata is freed without clinging."

"But, good Gotama, where does a monk arise whose mind is freed thus?"

'Arise,' Vaccha, does not apply."

"Well then, good Gotama, does he not arise?"

"Does not arise,' Vaccha, does not apply."

"Well then, good Gotama, does he both arise and not arise?"

"Both arises and does not arise,' Vaccha, does not apply."

"Well then, good Gotama, does he neither arise nor not arise?"

"Neither arises nor does not arise,' Vaccha, does not apply."

"But, good Gotama, on being asked:

"But, good Gotama, where does a monk arise whose mind is freed thus?"

you say:

'Arise,' Vaccha, does not apply."

"But, good Gotama, on being asked:

"Well then, good Gotama, does he not arise?"

you say:

"Does not arise,' Vaccha, does not apply."

"But, good Gotama, on being asked:

"Well then, good Gotama, does he both arise and not arise?"

you say:

"Both arises and does not arise,' Vaccha, does not apply."

"But, good Gotama, on being asked:

"Well then, good Gotama, does he neither arise nor not arise?"

you say:

"Neither arises nor does not arise,' Vaccha, does not apply."

[487] I am at a loss on this point, good Gotama, I am bewildered,

and that measure of satisfaction I had from former conversation with the good Gotama - even that have I now lost."

"You ought to be at a loss, Vaccha, you ought to be bewildered.

For, Vaccha, this dhamma is deep, difficult to see,
difficult to understand,
peaceful,
excellent,
beyond dialectic,
subtle,
intelligible to the wise;
but it is hard for you
who are of another view, another allegiance,
another objective,
of a different observance, and under a different teacher.<sup>4</sup>

Well then, Vaccha,
I will now question you in return.

Answer as it pleases you.

What do you think about this, Vaccha?

If a fire were blazing in front of you would you know:

"This fire is blazing in front of me'?"

"Good Gotama, if a fire were blazing in front of me I should know:

'This fire is blazing in front of me.'

"But if, Vaccha, someone were to question you thus:

'This fire that is blazing in front of you - what is the reason that this fire is blazing?' -

what would you, Vaccha, reply when questioned thus?"

"If, good Gotama,
someone were to question me thus:

'This fire that is blazing in front of you -
what is the reason that this fire is [166] blazing?' -

I, good Gotama,
on being questioned thus
would reply thus:

'This fire that is blazing in front of me - this fire is blazing because of a supply<sup>5</sup> of grass and sticks.'

"If that fire that was in front of you, Vaccha, were to be quenched,<sup>6</sup>
would you know:

'This fire that was in front of me
has been quenched'?"

"If, good Gotama,
that fire that was in front of me were to be quenched,
I would know:

This fire that was in front of me
has been quenched."

"But if someone were to question you thus, Vaccha:

'That fire that was in front of you and that has been quenched - to which direction has that fire gone from here, to the east
or west
or north
or south?

On being questioned thus,
what would you, Vaccha, reply?"

"It does not apply, good Gotama.

For, good Gotama, that fire blazed
because of a supply of grass and sticks, yet from having totally consumed this and from the lack of other fuel, being without fuel
it is reckoned to be quenched."

"Even so, Vaccha,
that material shape
by which one recognising the Tathāgata might recognise him -
that material shape
has been got rid of
by the Tathāgata,
cut off at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump
that can come to no further existence

and is not liable to arise again
in the future.

Freed from denotation by material shape
is the Tathāgata, Vaccha,
he is deep,
immeasurable,
unfathomable as is the great ocean.

'Arises' does not apply,
'does not arise' does not apply,
[488] 'both arises and does not arise' does not apply,
'neither arises nor does not arise' does not apply.

■

"That feeling
by which one recognising the Tathāgata
might recognise him -
that feeling
has been got rid of
by the Tathāgata,
cut off at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump
that can come to no further existence
and is not liable to arise again
in the future.

Freed from denotation by feeling
is the Tathāgata, Vaccha,
he is deep,
immeasurable,
unfathomable as is the great ocean.

'Arises' does not apply,
'does not arise' does not apply,

'both arises and does not arise' does not apply,
'neither arises nor does not arise' does not apply.

■

"That perception
by which one recognising the Tathāgata
might recognise him -
that perception
has been got rid of
by the Tathāgata,
cut off at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump
that can come to no further existence
and is not liable to arise again
in the future.

Freed from denotation by perception
is the Tathāgata, Vaccha,
he is deep,
immeasurable,
unfathomable as is the great ocean.

'Arises' does not apply,
'does not arise' does not apply,
'both arises and does not arise' does not apply,
'neither arises nor does not arise' does not apply.

■

"Those habitual tendencies
by which one recognising the Tathāgata
might recognise him -
those habitual tendencies have been got rid of
by the Tathāgata,
cut off at the root,

made like a palm-tree stump
that can come to no further existence
and is not liable to arise again
in the future.

Freed from denotation by habitual tendencies
is the Tathāgata, Vaccha,
he is deep,
immeasurable,
unfathomable as is the great ocean.

'Arises' does not apply,
'does not arise' does not apply,
'both arises and does not arise' does not apply,
'neither arises nor does not arise' does not apply.

■

"That consciousness
by which one recognising the Tathāgata
might recognise him -
that consciousness
has been got rid of
by the Tathāgata,
cut off at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump
that can come to no further existence
and is not liable to arise again
in the future.

Freed from denotation by consciousness
is the Tathāgata, Vaccha,
he is deep,
immeasurable,
unfathomable as is the great ocean.

'Arises' does not apply,
'does not arise' does not apply,
'both arises and does not arise' does not apply,
'neither arises nor does not arise' does not apply.

When this had been said, the wanderer Vacchagotta spoke thus to the Lord:

"Good Gotama, it is like a great sāl-tree not far from a village or market town whose branches and foliage might be dis- [167] solved because of their impermanence,
whose bark and young shoots might be dissolved, whose softwood might be dissolved, so that after a time
the branches and foliage gone, the bark and young shoots gone, the softwood gone,
clear of them
it would be established on the pith.<sup>7</sup>

It is excellent, good Gotama,
excellent, good Gotama.

It is as if, good Gotama,
one might set upright what had been upset,
or might disclose what was covered,
or point out the way
to one who had gone astray,
or might [489] bring an oil-lamp into the darkness
so that those with vision might see material shapes -
even so is dhamma made clear
in many a figure by the good Gotama.

I am going to the revered Gotama for refuge,
and to dhamma
and to the Order of monks.

May the revered Gotama accept me
as a lay-follower,
one gone for refuge from today forth
for as long as life lasts."

Discourse to Vacchagotta on Fire:
The Second

---

<sup>1</sup> cf. S. iv. 391 ff., where Vacchagotta is recorded to put all the following questions to Moggallāna; cf. S. iii. 257 ff.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. M. i. 8, 431. Since the Tathāgata knows and comprehends, he does not hold any speculative view; see below. In this paragraph I have mostly translated ditṭhi as view, but speculative view is meant.

<sup>3</sup> maññita. MA. iii. 198 gives three: craving, false views, pride, as does SA. ii. 363. Vbh. 390 gives nine. cf. S. iv. 21-22.

<sup>4</sup> As at M. ii. 43; D. i. 87, iii. 36.

<sup>5</sup> upādāna, fuel, supply; grasping, attachment.

<sup>6</sup> nibbāyeyya, were to be extinguished, put out, quenched.

<sup>7</sup> suddho assa sāre patitṭhito, as at M. i. 31-32. Cf. M. Stas 20, 30; also M. i. 434.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
3. Paribbājaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
3. The Division on Wanderers

73. Greater Discourse to Vacchagotta

Mahā-Vacchagotta Sutta

---

[489] [167]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place.

Then the wanderer Vacchagotta approached the Lord;
having approached,
he exchanged greetings with the Lord;
having conversed in a friendly and courteous way,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance,
the wanderer Vacchagotta spoke thus to the Lord:

"It is a long time since I had a conversation with the good Gotama.<sup>1</sup>

It were good if the revered Gotama were to teach me in brief what is skilled and what is unskilled."

"I, Vaccha, could teach you what is skilled and what is unskilled [168] in brief; and I, Vaccha, could teach you what is skilled and what is unskilled in full.

But I, Vaccha, will teach you what is skilled and what is unskilled in brief.

Listen to it,
attend carefully,
and I will speak."

"Yes, sir,"the wanderer Vacchagotta answered the Lord in assent.

The Lord spoke thus:

"Greed, Vaccha, is unskill, absence of greed is skill.

Aversion, Vaccha, is unskill, absence of aversion is skill.

Confusion, Vaccha, is unskill, absence of confusion is skill.

These are the three things that are unskilled, Vaccha, the three that are skilled.

Then, Vaccha, onslaught on creatures<sup>2</sup> is unskill, restraint from onslaught on creatures is skill.

Taking what has not been given, Vaccha, is unskill, restraint from taking what has not been given is skill.

Wrong conduct in regard to sense-pleasures, Vaccha, is unskill, restraint from wrong conduct in regard to sense-pleasures is skill.

Lying speech, Vaccha, is unskill,
restraint from lying speech is skill.

Slandorous speech, Vaccha, [490] is unskill,
restraint from slanderous speech is skill.

Harsh speech, Vaccha, is unskill,
restraint from harsh speech is skill.

Frivolous chatter, Vaccha, is unskill, restraint from frivolous chatter is skill.

Covetousness, Vaccha, is unskill, absence of covetousness is skill.

Malevolence, Vaccha, is unskill, absence of malevolence is skill.

Wrong view, Vaccha, is unskill, right view is skill.<sup>3</sup>

These are the ten things that are unskilled, Vaccha, and the ten that are skilled.

When craving, Vaccha, has been got rid of by a monk,
cut off at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump
that can come to no further existence in the future, he is a monk who is a perfected one,
canker-waned,
who has lived the life,
done what was to be done,
laid down the burden,
attained his own goal,
the fetters of becoming quite destroyed, freed by right profound knowledge."

"Let be the good Gotama.

Has the good Gotama even one monk
who is a disciple
and who, by the destruction of the cankers, having realised here and now
by his own super-knowledge
the freedom of mind
and the freedom through intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
entering on them is abiding in them?"

"Not merely a hundred, Vaccha,
nor two hundred,
three hundred,
four hundred
nor five hundred,
but far more are those monks,
disciples of mine,
who, by the destruction of the cankers,
having realised here and now
by their own super-knowledge
the freedom of [169] mind
and the freedom through intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
entering on them are abiding in them."

"Let be the good Gotama,
let be the monks.

But has the good Gotama even one nun
who is a disciple
and who, by the destruction of the cankers, having realised here and now by her own super-knowledge
the freedom of mind

and the freedom through intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
entering on them
is abiding in them?"

"Not merely a hundred, Vaccha, nor two,
three,
four or five hundred,
but far more are those nuns,
disciples of mine,
who, by the destruction of the cankers, having here and now realised
by their own super-knowledge
the freedom of mind
and the freedom through intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
entering on them
are abiding in them."

"Let be the good Gotama,
let be the monks,
let be the nuns.

But has the good Gotama even one layfollower
who is a disciple,
a householder clothed in white,
a Brahma-farer
who, by the utter destruction of the five fetters binding to this lower (shore)
is of spontaneous uprising,
one who has attained Nibbāna there
and is not liable to return from that world?"

"Not merely a hundred, Vaccha, nor two,

three,
four or five hundred,
but far more are those layfollowers,
disciples of mine,
householders clothed in white,
Brahma-farers,
who by the utter destruction of the five fetters
binding to this lower (shore), [491] are of spontaneous uprising,
those who have attained Nibbāna there and are not liable to return from that world." "Let be the good Gotama, let be the monks,
let be the nuns,
let be the lay-followers
who are householders clothed in white,
Brahma-farers.

But has the good Gotama even one layfollower
who is a disciple,
a householder clothed in white,
and who, (though) an enjoyer of sense-pleasures,
is a doer of the instruction,
one who accepts the exhortation,
who has crossed over doubt
and, perplexity gone,
fares in the Teacher's instruction,
won to conviction,
not relying on others?"<sup>4</sup>

"Not merely a hundred, Vaccha,
nor two,
three,
four or five hundred,
but far more are these layfollowers,
disciples of mine,
householders clothed in white,

and who, (though) enjoyers of sense-pleasures
are doers of the instruction,
those who accept the exhortation,
who have crossed over doubt
and, perplexity gone,
fare in the Teacher's instruction,
won to conviction,
not relying on others."

[170] "Let be the good Gotama,
let be the monks,
let be the nuns,
let be the layfollowers
who are householders clothed in white,
Brahma-farers,
let be the layfollowers
who are householders clothed in white,
enjoyers of sense-pleasures.

But has the good Gotama even one woman layfollower
who is a disciple,
a householder clothed in white,
a Brahma-farer
who, by the utter destruction of the five fetters
binding to this lower (shore),
is of spontaneous uprising,
one who has attained Nibbāna there
and is not liable to return from that world?"

"Not merely a hundred, Vaccha,
nor two,
three,
four or five hundred,
but many more are those women layfollowers,
disciples of mine,
householders clothed in white,

Brahma-farers
who, by the utter destruction of the five fetters
binding to this lower (shore),
are of spontaneous uprising,
those who have attained Nibbāna there and are not liable to return from that world."

"Let be the good Gotama,
let be the monks,
let be the nuns,
let be the lay-followers
who are householders clothed in white,
Brahma-farers,
let be the layfollowers
who are householders clothed in white,
enjoyers of sense-pleasures, let be the women layfollowers
who are householders clothed in white,
Brahma-farers.

But has the good Gotama even one woman layfollower
who is a disciple,
a householder clothed in white,
and who, (though) an enjoyer of sense-pleasures,
is a doer of the instruction,
one who accepts the exhortation,
who has crossed over doubt
and, perplexity gone,
fares in the Teacher's instruction,
won to conviction,
not relying on others?"

"Not merely a hundred, Vaccha,
nor two,
three,
four or five hundred,

but many more are those women layfollowers,
disciples of mine,
householders clothed in white,
and who, (though) enjoyers of sense-pleasures,
are doers of the instruction,
those who accept the exhortation,
who have crossed over doubt
and, perplexity gone,
fare in the Teacher's instruction,
won to conviction,
not relying on others."

"If, good Gotama, the revered Gotama had himself undertaken this dhamma but the monks had not undertaken it, [492] then this Brahma-faring would have been incomplete as to this factor.

But because the revered Gotama has undertaken this dhamma and the monks have undertaken it as well, so is this Brahma-faring complete as to this factor.

If, good Gotama, the revered Gotama had himself undertaken this dhamma and the monks had undertaken it as well, but not the nuns,
then this Brahma-faring would have been incomplete as to this factor.

But because the revered Gotama has undertaken this dhamma and the monks and the nuns have undertaken it as well, so is this Brahma-faring complete as to this factor.

If, good [171] Gotama, the revered Gotama had himself undertaken this dhamma
and the monks
and the nuns had undertaken it as well, but not the layfollowers who are householders clothed in white,
Brahma-farers,
then this Brahma-faring would have been incomplete as to this factor.

But because the revered Gotama has undertaken this dhamma
and the monks
and the nuns
and the layfollowers who are householders clothed in white, Brahma-farers,
have undertaken it as well,
so is this Brahma-faring complete as to this factor.

If, good Gotama, the revered Gotama had himself undertaken this dhamma
and the monks
and the nuns
and the layfollowers who are householders clothed in white, Brahma-farers,
had undertaken it as well,
but not the layfollowers who are householders clothed in white,
enjoyers of sense-pleasures,
then this Brahma-faring would have been incomplete as to this factor.

But because the revered Gotama has undertaken this dhamma,
and the monks
and the nuns
and the layfollowers who are householders clothed in white, Brahma-farers,
and the layfollowers who are householders clothed in white,
enjoyers of sense-pleasures,
have undertaken it as well,
so is this Brahma-faring complete as to this factor.

If, good Gotama, the revered Gotama had himself undertaken this dhamma
and the monks
and the nuns
and the layfollowers who are householders clothed in white, Brahma-farers,
had undertaken it as well,
and the layfollowers who are householders clothed in white,
enjoyers of sense-pleasures,

had undertaken it as well, but not the women lay followers who are householders clothed in white,
Brahma-farers,
[493] then this Brahma-faring would have been incomplete as to this factor.

But because the revered Gotama has undertaken this dhamma,
and the monks
and the nuns
and the layfollowers who are householders clothed in white, Brahma-farers,
and the layfollowers who are householders clothed in white,
enjoyers of sense-pleasures,
and the women layfollowers who are householders clothed in white,
Brahma-farers,
have undertaken it as well,
so is this Brahma-faring complete as to this factor.

If, good Gotama, the revered Gotama had himself undertaken this dhamma
and the monks
and the nuns
and the layfollowers who are householders clothed in white, Brahma-farers,
had undertaken it as well,
and the layfollowers who are householders clothed in white,
enjoyers of sense-pleasures,
had undertaken it as well, the women layfollowers who are householders clothed in white, Brahmafarers, had undertaken it as well, but not the women layfollowers who are householders clothed in white,
enjoyers of sense-pleasures, then the Brahma-faring would have been incomplete as to this factor.

But because the revered Gotama has undertaken this dhamma,
and the monks
and the nuns
and the layfollowers who are householders clothed in white,

Brahma-farers,
and the layfollowers who are householders clothed in white,
enjoyers of sense-pleasures,
and the women layfollowers who are householders clothed in white,
Brahma-farers,
[172] and the women layfollowers who are householders clothed in white,
enjoyers of sense-pleasures,
have undertaken it as well,
so is this Brahma-faring complete as to this factor.

Good Gotama, as the river Ganges,<sup>5</sup> sliding towards the sea, tending towards the sea, inclining towards the sea, stands knocking at<sup>6</sup> the sea, even so this company of the good Gotama, comprising householders and those that have gone forth,<sup>7</sup> sliding towards Nibbāna, tending towards Nibbāna, inclining towards Nibbāna, stands knocking at Nibbāna.

It is excellent, good Gotama,
excellent, good Gotama.

It is as if, good Gotama,
one might set upright what had been upset,
or disclose what had been covered,
or might show the way to one that had gone astray,
or bring an oil-lamp into the darkness
so that those with vision might see material shapes -
even so in many a figure is dhamma made clear by the revered Gotama.

I am going to the revered Gotama for refuge
and to dhamma
and to the Order of monks.

May I receive the going forth in the good Gotama's presence,
may I receive ordination."

[494] "Vaccha, if a former member of another sect<sup>8</sup> wishes for the going forth in this dhamma and discipline,
wishes for ordination,
he undertakes probation for four months;
at the end of the four months the monks,
if they so decide,
may let him go forth,
may ordain him into the status of a monk;
but even here differences among individuals are known to me."

"If, revered sir, former members of other sects, desiring the going forth in this dhamma and discipline, desiring ordination,
undertake probation for four months,
and at the end of the four months
the monks, if they so decide,
let them go forth,
ordain them into the status of a monk,
then will I undertake probation for four years;
at the end of the four years the monks,
if they so decide,
may let me go forth,
may ordain me into the status of a monk.

"But the wanderer Vacchagotta received the going forth in the Lord's presence,
he received ordination.

Not long after the venerable Vacchagotta was ordained, half a month after he was ordained,
he approached the Lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance,
the venerable Vacchagotta spoke thus to the Lord:

[173] "Revered sir, I have attained as much as can be attained by a learner's knowledge,
a learner's lore.<sup>9</sup>

Let the Lord teach me some further dhamma"<sup>10</sup>

"Well then, do you, Vaccha, develop two things further:
calm and vision.

If these two things:
calm and vision,
are developed further, Vaccha, they will conduce to the penetration of a variety of elements.<sup>11</sup>

If you, Vaccha, should wish like this:

'May I experience<sup>12</sup> the various forms of psychic power:
having been one may I be manifold, having been manifold may I be one;
manifest or invisible
may I go unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain
as if through air;
may I plunge into the earth and shoot up again

as if in water;
may I walk upon the water
without parting it
as if on the ground;
sitting cross-legged,
may I travel through the air
like a bird on the wing;
with my hand
may I rub and stroke
this moon and sun
although they are of such mighty power and majesty;
and even as far as the Brahma-world may I have power in respect of my person' - you will achieve what may be realised here and there<sup>13</sup> so long as there is the objective.<sup>14</sup>

If you, Vaccha, should wish like this:

'May I, [495] with the purified deva-hearing
surpassing that of men, hear both (kinds of) sounds -
deva-like ones and human ones,
whether they be far or near' -
you will achieve what may be realised here and there,
so long as there is the objective.

If you, Vaccha, should wish like this:

<sup>ed1</sup>May I know intuitively by mind
the minds of other beings,
of other individuals,
so that I may know intuitively of a mind that is full of attachment that it is full of attachment;
or of a mind that is without attachment that it is without of attachment so that I may know intuitively of a mind that is full of aversion

that it is full of aversion;
or of a mind that is without aversion
that it is without aversion so that I may know intuitively of a mind that is full of confusion,
that it is full of confusion;
or of a mind that is without confusion
that it is without confusion or that I may know intuitively of a mind that is contracted that it is contracted;
or of a mind that is distracted that it is distracted;
or of a mind that has become great that it has become great;
or of a mind that has not become great
that it has not become great, or of a [174] mind with (some other mental state) superior to it that it has (some other mental state) superior to it, or of a mind that has no (other mental state) superior to it that it has no (other mental state) superior to it, or of a mind that is composed that it is composed, or of a mind that is not composed that it is not composed, or of a mind that is freed that it is freed, or of a mind that is not freed that it is not freed' -
you will achieve what may be realised here and there,
so long as there is the objective.

If you, Vaccha, should wish like this:

'May I recollect (my) manifold former habitations, that is to say one birth, two births,
three ... four... five ... ten ... twenty... thirty ... forty... fifty ... a hundred ... a thousand ...
a hundred thousand births,
many an eon of integration,
many an eon of disintegration,
many an eon of integration-disintegration;
such a one was I by name,

having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I came to be in another state
where such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so was I nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this I arose here.

Thus I recollect (my) divers former habitations
in all their modes and detail' -
you will achieve what may be realised here and there,
so long as there is the objective.

[496] If you, Vaccha, should wish like this:

'With the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men,
may I behold beings as they pass hence
or come to be - mean, excellent, comely, ugly,
in a good bourn,
in a bad bourn
according to the consequences of deeds;
may I comprehend:

Indeed these worthy beings were possessed of wrong conduct in body, speech and thought,

they were scoffers at the ariyans,
holding a wrong view,
incurring deeds consequent on a wrong view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,
the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

But these worthy beings
who were possessed of right conduct
in body, speech and thought,
who were not scoffers at the ariyans,
holding a right view,
incurring deeds consequent on a right view -
these at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a good bourn,
a heaven world.

Thus with the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men
may I behold beings as they pass hence,
as they come to be,
may I comprehend that they are mean, excellent, comely, ugly,
in a good bourn,
in a bad bourn
according to the consequences of deeds' -
you will achieve what may be realised here and there,
so long as there is the objective.

[175] If you, Vaccha, should wish like this:

'By the destruction of the cankers,
having realised here and now
by my own super-knowledge
the freedom of mind

and the freedom through intuitive wisdom
that are cankerless,
entering thereon,
may I abide therein' -
you will achieve what may be realised here and there,
so long as there is the objective."

Then the venerable Vacchagotta,
having rejoiced in what the Lord had said,
having given thanks,
rising from his seat,
having greeted the Lord,
departed keeping his right side towards him.

Then the venerable Vacchagotta, having soon realised here and now through his own super-knowledge that incomparable goal of the Brahma-faring
for the sake of which young men of family
rightly go forth from home into homelessness,
entering on it,
abided in it.

And he understood:

Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close is the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of being such or so.

And the venerable Vacchagotta became one of the perfected ones.<sup>15</sup>

Now at that time a number of monks were going to see the Lord.

The venerable Vacchagotta saw these monks coming in the distance;
having seen them,
he approached these monks;

having approached,
he spoke thus to these monks:

[497] "But now, where are you venerable ones going?"

"We are going to see the Lord, your reverence."

"Well then, in my name let the venerable ones salute the Lord's feet with their heads, saying,
'Revered sir, the monk Vacchagotta salutes the Lord's feet with his head,' and then say:

'The Lord is waited on<sup>16</sup> by me, the Well-farer is waited on by me.'"

"Yes, your reverence," these monks answered the venerable Vacchagotta in assent.

Then these monks approached the lord;
having approached,
having greeted the Lord,
they sat down at a respectful distance.

As they were sitting down at a respectful distance
these monks spoke thus to the Lord:

"Revered sir, the venerable Vacchagotta salutes the Lord's feet with his head and speaks thus:

'The Lord is waited on by me,
the Well-farer is waited on by me.'"

"Monks, by a reasoning of mind I already knew the mind of the monk Vacchagotta:
of threefold knowledge is the monk Vacchagotta, of great psychic power, of great majesty.

And devatās also [176] told me this matter:<sup>17</sup>

Of threefold knowledge is the monk Vaeehagotta, revered sir, he is of great psychic power, of great majesty."<sup>18</sup>

Thus spoke the Lord.

Delighted, these monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said.

Greater Discourse to Vacchagotta:
The Third

---

<sup>1</sup> MA. iii. 190-200 points out that the two foregoing Discourses were spoken to him, also the Avyāvata Saṃyutta (S. iv. 391 ff.) and a discourse in the Ang. (A. v. 193). While it is reasonably clear that the two foregoing Discourses were in fact spoken to Vacchagotta before this "Greater" one, we have no idea of the length of time that separated any of them.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. M. i. 285-286; D. i. 4.

<sup>3</sup> This sentence is quoted at Kvm. 505.

<sup>4</sup> As at M. i. 235.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. S. v. 39-40.

<sup>6</sup> āhacca tiṭṭhati, stands knocking or striking at. Cf. S. ii. 43, 45, 58, 80, amatadvāram āhacca tiṭṭhati.

<sup>7</sup> parisā sagahaṭṭhapabbajitā; cf. Vin. i. 115.

<sup>8</sup> As at M. i. 391, 512.

<sup>9</sup> vijjā. MA. iii. 201 quotes Dhs. 1016, 1400, kataime ca dhammā sekhā? and says non-returning was attained.

<sup>10</sup> uttariṃ dhammaṃ.

<sup>11</sup> dhātu.

<sup>12</sup> With the following cf. M. i. 34.

<sup>13</sup> tatra tatr'eva sakkhibhabbatam pāpuṇissasi.

<sup>14</sup> sati sati āyatlane, quoted at DA. 125. MA. iii. 202, iv. 146 explain by kāraṇe. Cf. Jā. i. 251, anāyatane akāraṇe. Āyatana seems almost to be cause, right object, objective, inducement or sufficient reason. Same expression is used at M. iii. 96, A. iii. 27.

<sup>15</sup> His verse is at Thag. 112.

<sup>16</sup> pariciṇṇa; cf. S. iv. 57; Thag. 178, 604, 687, 792, 891.

<sup>17</sup> MA. iii. 202 explains by tesaṃ guṇānaṃ lābhī devatā; devatās are the recipients of (or, are possessed of, or, are psychically intuitive of) these qualities; cf. DA. 120. It is possible that in such contexts devatā stands for a mental or psychical faculty.

---

<sup>ed1</sup> Ms. Horner abbreviates here and mixes up the order. I have used her vocabulary but reinstated the full text in the proper order according to the Pali here and everywhere else this list occurs in the Pali.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
3. Paribbājaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
3. The Division on Wanderers

74. Discourse To Dīghanakha

Dīghanakha Sutta

---

[497] [176]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Rājagaha on Mount Vulture Peak in the Boar's Cave.<sup>2</sup>

Then the wanderer Dīghanakha<sup>3</sup> approached the Lord;
having approached, he exchanged greetings with the Lord;
having conversed in a friendly and courteous way, he stood at a respectful distance.<sup>4</sup>

As he was standing at a respectful distance,
the wanderer Dīghanakha spoke thus to the Lord:

"I, good Gotama, speak thus,
I am of this view:
All<sup>5</sup> is not pleasing to me."

"This view of yours, Aggivessana:<sup>6</sup>
All is not pleasing to me
— does this view of yours not please you?"

[177] "If this view were pleasing to me, good Gotama, this would be like it too,
that [498] would be like it too."<sup>7</sup>

"Now, Aggivessana, when those,
the majority in the world, speak thus:
'This would be like it too,
that would be like it too'
— they do not get rid of that very view, and they take up another view."<sup>8</sup>

Now, Aggivessana, when those,
the minority in the world, speak thus:
'This would be like it too,
that would be like it too'
— they get rid of that very view and do not take up another view.

There are, Aggivessana,
some recluses and brahmans who speak thus
and are of this view:
'All is pleasing to me.'

There are, Aggivessana,
some recluses and brahmans who speak thus
and are of this view:
'All is not pleasing to me.'

There are, Aggivessana,
some recluses and brahmans who speak thus
and are of this view:

'Part is pleasing to me,
part is not pleasing to me.'

As to this, Aggivessana,
those recluses and brahmans who speak thus
and are of this view:

'All is pleasing to me'
— this view of theirs
is close to<sup>9</sup> attachment,
close to the fetters,
close to delight,
close to cleaving,
close to grasping.

As to this, Aggivessana,
those recluses and brahmans who speak thus
and are of this view:

'All is not pleasing to me'
— this view of theirs
is close to detachment,
close to the absence of fetters,
close to the absence of delight,
close to the absence of cleaving,
close to the absence of grasping."

When this had been said,
the wanderer Dīghanakha spoke thus to the Lord:
"The good Gotama is complimentary to my view, the good Gotama is very complimentary to my view."

"As to this, Aggivessana,
those recluses and brahmans who speak thus
and are of this view:
'Part is pleasing to me,
part is not pleasing to me'
— that which in this view is pleasing to them is close to attachment,

close to the fetters
close to delight,
close to cleaving,
close to grasping.
But that which in this view is not pleasing to them
is close to detachment,
close to the absence of fetters
close to the absence of delight,
close to the absence of cleaving,
close to the absence of grasping.

Concerning those recluses and brahmans, Aggivessana,
who speak thus and are of this view:

'All is pleasing to me,'

if a learned man be there who reflects thus:

'If I were to express this view of mine:

"All is pleasing to me,"

and, obstinately holding to it and adhering to it,<sup>10</sup>

were to say:

"This is indeed the truth,

all else is falsehood"

— there would be for me dispute with two (view-holders):

both with whatever recluse or brahman speaks thus

and is of this view:

"All [178] is not pleasing to me,"

and with whatever recluse or brahman speaks thus

and [499] is of this view:

"Part is pleasing to me,

part is not pleasing to me"

— there would be dispute for me with these two.

If there is dispute there is contention;

if there is contention there is trouble;

if there is trouble there is vexation.'<sup>11</sup>

So he, beholding this dispute and contention
and trouble and vexation for himself, gets rid of that very view
and does not take up another view.

Thus is the getting rid of these views, thus is the casting out of these views.

As to this, Aggivessana,
those recluses and brahmans who speak thus
and are of this view:

'All is not pleasing to me'

— if a learned man be there who reflects thus:

'If I were to express this view of mine that:

"All is not pleasing to me,"

and, obstinately holding to it and adhering to it,

were to say:

"This is the very truth,

all else is falsehood,"

there would be for me dispute with two (view-holders):

both with whatever recluse or brahman speaks thus

and is of this view:

"All is pleasing to me,"

and with whatever recluse or brahman speaks thus

and is of this view:

"Part is pleasing to me,

part is not pleasing to me"

— there would be dispute for me with these two.

If there is dispute there is contention;
if there is contention there is trouble;
if there is trouble there is vexation.'

So he, beholding this dispute and contention
and trouble and vexation for himself,
gets rid of that very view
and does not take up another view.

As to this, Aggivessana,
those recluses and brahmans who speak thus
and are of this view:
'Part is pleasing to me,
part is not pleasing to me'
— if a learned man be there who reflects thus:
'If I were to express this view of mine:
"Part is pleasing to me,
part is not pleasing to me,"
and, obstinately holding to it
and adhering to it,
were to say:
"This is the very truth,
all else is falsehood,"
there would be for me dispute with two (view-holders):
both with whatever recluse or brahman speaks thus
and is of this view:
"All is pleasing to me,"
and with whatever recluse or brahman speaks thus
and is of this view:
"All is not pleasing to me"
— there would be dispute for me with these two.

If there is dispute there is contention;
if there is contention there is trouble;
if there is trouble there is vexation.'

So he, beholding this dispute and contention
and trouble and vexation for himself,
gets rid of that very view
and does not take up another view.

[500] [179] But this body, Aggivessana, which has material shape,
is made up of the four great elements, originating from mother and father, nourished on gruel and sour milk, of a nature to be constantly rubbed away, pounded away,
broken up and scattered,<sup>12</sup> should be regarded as impermanent,
suffering,
as a disease,
an imposthume,
a dart,
a misfortune,
an affliction,
as other,
as decay,
empty,
not-self.<sup>13</sup>

When he regards this body as impermanent,
suffering,
as a disease,
an imposthume,
a dart,
a misfortune,
an affliction,
as other,
as decay,
empty,
not-self,
whatever in regard to body is desire for body, affection for body,

subordination to body,
this is got rid of.

There are these three feelings, Aggivessana:
pleasant feeling,
painful feeling,
feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant.

At the time, Aggivessana, when one feels a pleasant feeling,
at that time
one feels neither a painful feeling nor does one feel a feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant.

At the time, Aggivessana, when one feels a painful feeling,
at that time
one feels neither a pleasant feeling
nor does one feel a feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant.

At the time, Aggivessana, when one feels a feeling that is neither painful nor pleasant,
at that time
one feels neither a pleasant feeling nor does one feel a painful feeling.

Pleasant feelings, Aggivessana, are impermanent,
compounded,
generated by conditions,
liable to destruction,
liable to decay,
liable to fading away,
liable to stopping.<sup>14</sup>

And painful feelings, Aggivessana,
are impermanent,
compounded,
generated by conditions,
liable to destruction,
liable to decay,
liable to fading away,
liable to stopping.

And, Aggivessana, feelings that are neither painful nor pleasant, Aggivessana,
are impermanent,
compounded,
generated by conditions,
liable to destruction,
liable to decay,
liable to fading away,
liable to stopping.

Seeing it thus, Aggivessana, an instructed disciple of the ariyans turns away from pleasant feelings and he turns away from painful feelings and he turns away from feelings that are neither painful nor pleasant; turning away he is dispassionate, being dispassionate he is freed,<sup>15</sup>
in freedom
the knowledge comes to be that he is freed
and he comprehends:
'Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close is the Brahma-faring,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of being such or so.'

A monk whose mind is freed thus, Aggivessana, does not concur with [180] anyone, he does not dispute with anyone.<sup>16</sup> He makes use of the common phrases of the world without adhering to them."<sup>17</sup>

Now at that time the venerable Sāriputta [501] was standing behind the Lord,
fanning the Lord.

Then it occurred to the venerable Sāriputta:
"The Lord speaks to us
of getting rid of these things and those by means of super-knowledge,<sup>18</sup>
the Well-farer speaks to us of casting out these things and those by means of super-knowledge."

While the venerable Sāriputta was reflecting on this,
his mind was freed from the cankers without clinging.
But to the wanderer Dīghanakha there arose the stainless, spotless vision of dhamma, that whatever is of the nature to arise all that is of the nature to stop.

Then the wanderer Dīghanakha, having seen dhamma,
attained dhamma,,
known dhamma,
plunged into dhamma,
having crossed over doubt,
having put away uncertainty, attaining without another's help to full confidence in the Teacher's instruction,<sup>19</sup>
spoke thus to the Lord:

"It is excellent, good Gotama,
excellent, good Gotama.
It is, good Gotama,
as if one might set upright
what had been upset,
or might disclose
what had been covered,
or point out the Way
to one who had gone astray, or might bring an oil-lamp into the darkness
so that those with vision might see material shapes
— even so in many a figure
has dhamma been made clear by the good Gotama.
I am going to the revered Gotama for refuge
and to dhamma,
and to the Order of monks.

May the revered Gotama accept me as a layfollower going for refuge from today forth
for as long as life lasts."

Discourse to Dīghanakha: The Fourth

---

<sup>1</sup> Cf. DA. 418,882, DhA. i. 96. SA. i. 122, ii. 63, 234, etc., where this Sutta is referred to as Vedanāpariggahana Suttanta.

<sup>2</sup> This cave, Sākarakhatā, is also mentioned at S. v. 233. SA. iii. 249 gives the same account of it as does MA. iii. 203.

<sup>3</sup> Sāriputta's nephew.

<sup>4</sup> MA. iii. 203 says that he stood at a respectful distance because the Elder (Sāriputta) was standing fanning the Lord, as below p. 180.

<sup>5</sup> MA. iii. 204 explains "all," sabbam, for Dīghanakha as all uprisings and re-linkings, for to this extent he is an annihilationist. Gotama, however, takes "all" in its literal sense.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. M. i. 229 f., 238 ff. and M. iii. 128 f. for this epithet.

<sup>7</sup> That is, "pleasing" too.

<sup>8</sup> MA. iii. 205 distinguishes these views as annihilationism and eternalism.

<sup>9</sup> As at M. i. 411.

<sup>10</sup> As at M. i. 130, 257.

<sup>11</sup> There is no indication whether the thoughts of the learned man stop here or at the end of the previous sentence.

<sup>12</sup> As at M. i. 144.

<sup>13</sup> As at M. i. 435.

<sup>14</sup> Cf. D. iii. 275, "the escape from what has become, is composite, originating from conditions, is its stopping"; and see S. ii. 26 which enumerates the things that, arising from cause, are impermanent, etc.; cf. A. v. 187.

<sup>15</sup> Cf. S. ii. 94, 125, iv. 2, 86; also S. iii. 46, 189; A. v. 3.

<sup>16</sup> Cf. S. iii. 138. MA. iii. 208 says he does not concur with the eternalists nor dispute with the partial-eternalists.

<sup>17</sup> Cf. S. i. 14; D. i. 202, quoted at MA. iii. 208.

<sup>18</sup> MA. iii. 208 says "he talked about the getting rid of the eternal having known through super-knowledge the eternalism of these things and those; he speaks of getting rid of the partially eternal through super-knowledge as to annihilation, as to partial eternalism; he speaks of getting rid of material shape through super-knowledge as to material shape".

<sup>19</sup> As at Vin. i. 12.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
3. Paribbājaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
3. The Division on Wanderers

74. Discourse to Māgandiya

Māgandiya Sutta

---

[501] [181]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying among the Kurus - the market town of the Kurus was called Kammāssadhamma - on a spreading of grass in the fire-room<sup>1</sup> of a brahman of the Bhāradvāja clan.

Then the Lord, having dressed early in the morning,
taking his bowl and robe,
entered Kammāssadhamma for almsfood.

Having walked in Kammāssadhamma for almsfood, returning from his alms-gathering after the meal, having plunged into a forest thicket,
he sat down at the root of a tree
for the day-sojourn.

[502]Then the wanderer Māgandiya, who was constantly pacing up and down and roaming about on foot, approached the fire-room of the brahman of the Bhāradvāja clan.

The wanderer Māgandiya saw the spreading of grass made ready in the fire-room of the brahman of the Bhāradvāja clan; seeing it, he spoke thus to the brahman of the Bhāradvāja clan:

"For whom is this spreading of grass laid down in the good Bhāradvāja's fire-room?"

It seems like a recluse's steeping place."

"Māgandiya, there is the recluse Gotama, son of the Sakyans,
gone forth from the Sakyan clan, and about this revered Gotama a lovely reputation has gone abroad thus:

He is indeed the Lord,
perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One,
endowed with right knowledge and conduct,
knower of the worlds,
Well-farer,
incomparable trainer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and men,
the Awakened One,
the Lord.

That sleeping place is ready for this good Gotama."

"Indeed, good Bhāradvāja, we are seeing a poor sight in seeing the sleeping place of the good Gotama, the destroyer of growth."<sup>2</sup> [182] "Mind what you say,<sup>3</sup> Māgandiya, mind what you say, Māgandiya.

For many learned nobles and learned brahmans and learned householders and learned recluses have great faith in this good Gotama, and are trained in the ariyan right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled."<sup>4</sup>

"If we could only see that revered Gotama face to face, Bhāradvāja, face to face would we say to him:

'The recluse Gotama is a destroyer of growth.'

What is the reason for this?

It is handed down thus in a discourse of ours."

"If it is not disagreeable to the good Māgandiya, I will tell this to the recluse Gotama."

"It is of no consequence if the good Bhāradvāja should tell him just what has been said."

Then the Lord, with purified deva-hearing surpassing that of men, heard this conversation between the brahman of the Bhāradvāja clan and the wanderer Māgandiya.

Then the Lord, emerging from solitary meditation towards evening, approached the fire-room of the brahman of the Bhāradvāja clan;
having approached, he sat down on the spreading of grass that was ready.

Then the brahman of the Bhāradvāja clan approached the Lord;
having approached, he exchanged greetings with the Lord;
and having conversed in a friendly and courteous way,
he sat down at a respectful distance.

As the brahman of the Bhāradvāja clan was sitting down at a respectful distance,
the Lord spoke thus to him:

"There was some conversation, Bhāradvāja, between you and the wanderer Māgandiya [503] concerning this same grass spreading."

When this had been said the brahman Bhāradvāja, greatly moved and startled,
spoke thus to the Lord:

"But this was the very thing I wanted to tell the good Gotama, but the revered Gotama anticipated me.

But this conversation between the Lord and the brahman of the Bhāradvāja clan was interrupted when the wanderer Māgandiya, who was constantly pacing up and down and roaming about on foot, approached the Lord in the fire-room of the brahman of the Bhāradvāja clan;
having approached, he exchanged greetings with the Lord;
having conversed in a friendly and courteous way,
he sat down [183] at a respectful distance.

As the wanderer Māgandiya was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord spoke thus to him:<sup>5</sup>

"Māgandiya, the eye delights in material shapes, is delighted by material shapes, rejoices in material shapes;
it is tamed,
watched,
guarded and controlled by a Tathāgata,
and he teaches dhamma for its control.

Was it on account of this, Magandiya,
that you said:

'The recluse Gotama is a destroyer of growth!'"

"Just on account of this did I say, good Gotama:

'The recluse Gotama is a destroyer of growth.'

What is the reason for this?

It is handed down thus in a discourse of ours."

"The ear, Magandiya, delights in sounds, is delighted by sounds, rejoices in sounds;
it is tamed,
watched,
guarded and controlled by a Tathāgata,
and he teaches dhamma for its control.

Was it on account of this, Magandiya,
that you said:

'The recluse Gotama is a destroyer of growth!'"

"Just on account of this did I say, good Gotama:

'The recluse Gotama is a destroyer of growth.'

What is the reason for this?

It is handed down thus in a discourse of ours."

"The nose, Magandiya, delights in smells is delighted by smells, rejoices in smells;
it is tamed,
watched,
guarded and controlled by a Tathāgata,
and he teaches dhamma for its control.

Was it on account of this, Magandiya,
that you said:

'The recluse Gotama is a destroyer of growth?'

"Just on account of this did I say, good Gotama:

'The recluse Gotama is a destroyer of growth.'

What is the reason for this?

It is handed down thus in a discourse of ours."

"The tongue, Magandiya, delights in tastes is delighted by tastes, rejoices in tastes;
it is tamed,
watched,
guarded and controlled by a Tathāgata,
and he teaches dhamma for its control.

Was it on account of this, Magandiya,
that you said:

'The recluse Gotama is a destroyer of growth?'

"Just on account of this did I say, good Gotama:

'The recluse Gotama is a destroyer of growth.'

What is the reason for this?

It is handed down thus in a discourse of ours."

"The body, Magandiya, delights in touches is delighted by touches, rejoices in touches;
it is tamed,

watched,
guarded and controlled by a Tathāgata,
and he teaches dhamma for its control.

Was it on account of this, Magandiya,
that you said:

'The recluse Gotama is a destroyer of growth?'

"Just on account of this did I say, good Gotama:

'The recluse Gotama is a destroyer of growth.'

What is the reason for this?

It is handed down thus in a discourse of ours."

The mind, Māgandiya, delights in mental states, is delighted by mental states, rejoices in mental states;
it is tamed,
watched,
guarded,
controlled by a Tathāgata,
and he teaches dhamma for its control.

Was it on account of this, Māgandiya,
that you said:

'The recluse Gotama is a destroyer of growth?'" "Just on account of this,
good Gotama, did I say:

'The recluse Gotama is a destroyer of growth.'

What is the reason for this?

It is handed down thus in a discourse of ours."

"What do you think about this, Māgandiya?

Suppose someone [504] who formerly revelled in material shapes cognisable by the eye -
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring
- after a time, having known the coming to be and passing away of material shapes
and the satisfaction
and the peril of them
and the escape (from them) as it really is,
getting rid of craving for material shapes, suppressing the fever for material shapes, should dwell devoid of thirst,
his mind inwardly calmed.

What have you, Magandiya, to say of him?"

"Nothing, good Gotama."

"What do you think about this, Māgandiya?

Suppose someone who formerly revelled in sounds cognisable by the ear -
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring
- after a time, having known
the coming to be and passing away

of sounds
and the satisfaction
and the peril of them
and the escape (from them) as it really is,
getting rid of craving for sounds, suppressing the fever for sounds,
should dwell devoid of thirst,
his mind inwardly calmed.

What have you, Magandiya, to say of him?"

"Nothing, good Gotama."

"What do you think about this, Māgandiya?"

Suppose someone who formerly revelled in smells cognisable by the nose -
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring
- after a time, having known
the coming to be and passing away of smells
and the satisfaction
and the peril of them
and the escape (from them) as it really is,
getting rid of craving for smells, suppressing the fever for smells,
should dwell devoid of thirst,
his mind inwardly calmed.

What have you, Magandiya, to say of him?"

"Nothing, good Gotama."

"What do you think about this, Māgandiya?

Suppose someone who formerly revelled in tastes cognisable by the tongue

-

agreeable,

pleasant,

liked,

enticing,

connected with sensual pleasure,

alluring

- after a time, having known

the coming to be and passing away

of tastes

and the satisfaction

and the peril of them

and the escape (from them) as it really is,

getting rid of craving for tastes, suppressing the fever for tastes, should dwell devoid of tastes,

his mind inwardly calmed.

What have you, Magandiya, to say of him?"

"Nothing, good Gotama."

"What do you think about this, Māgandiya?

Suppose someone who formerly revelled touches cognisable by the body -

agreeable,

pleasant,

liked,

enticing,

connected with sensual pleasure,

alluring

- after a time, having known

the coming to be and passing away

of touches
and the satisfaction
and the peril of them
and the escape (from them) as it really is,
getting rid of the craving for touches, suppressing the fever for [184] touches,
should dwell devoid of thirst,
his mind inwardly calmed.

What have you, Māgandiya, to say of him?"

"Nothing, good Gotama."

"Now I, Māgandiya,
when I was formerly a householder,
endowed and provided with the five strands of sense-pleasures, revelled in them -
in material shapes cognisable by the eye, agreeable, pleasant agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in sounds cognisable by the ear agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in smells cognisable by the nose agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,

connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in tastes cognisable by the tongue,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in touches cognisable by the body,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring.

I had three palaces, Māgandiyā, one for the rains,
one for the cold weather,
one for the hot weather.

I, Māgandiyā,
during the four months of the rains being delighted in the palace for the rains by women musicians,<sup>6</sup> did not come down from that palace.

But after a time,
having known the coming to be and passing away of sense-pleasures and the satisfaction and the peril of them and the escape as it really is,
getting rid of the craving for sense-pleasures,
suppressing the fever for sense-pleasures,

I dwelt devoid of thirst,
my mind inwardly calmed.

I saw other beings not yet devoid of attachment to sense pleasures who were pursuing sense-pleasures (although) they were being consumed by craving for sense-pleasures, burning with the fever for sense-pleasures.

I did not envy them:
I had no delight therein.

What was the reason for this?

It was, Māgandiya,
that there is this delight which, apart from pleasures of the senses,
apart from unskilled states of mind, [505] stands firm on reaching<sup>7</sup> a deva-like happiness.

Delighting in this delight,<sup>8</sup>
I do not envy what is low,<sup>9</sup>
I have no delight therein.

Māgandiya, it is like a householder or a householder's son,
rich,
of great wealth,
of many possessions
who, endowed and provided with the five strands of sense-pleasures, might revel in them -
in material shapes cognisable by the eye, agreeable, pleasant agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in sounds cognisable by the ear agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in smells cognisable by the nose agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in tastes cognisable by the tongue,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in touches cognisable by the body,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
[185] alluring.

He, having behaved well in body, having behaved well in speech, having behaved well in thought,
at the breaking up of the body after dying,
might arise in a good bourn,

a heaven world,
in companionship with the Devas of the Thirty-Three.

Surrounded there in the Nandana Grove by a throng of nymphs, he, endowed and provided with the five deva-like strands of pleasures of the senses,
might revel in them.

He might see a householder
or a householder's son
endowed and provided with the five strands of sense-pleasures.

What do you think about this, Māgandiya?

Would that young deva, surrounded by a throng of nymphs in the Nandana Grove, endowed and provided with the five deva-like strands of sense-pleasures and revelling in them - would he envy that householder
or householder's son
or their five strands of human sense-pleasures, and revert to human sense-pleasures?"

"No, good Gotama. What is the reason for this ? It is that deva-like sense-pleasures are more wonderful and excellent than human sense-pleasures."

"Even so did I, Māgandiya,
when I was formerly a householder,
endowed and provided with the five strands of sense-pleasures,
revel in them -
in material shapes cognisable by the eye,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in sounds cognisable by the ear agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in smells cognisable by the nose agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in tastes cognisable by the tongue,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in touches cognisable by the body,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring.

But after a time,
having known the coming to be
and passing away of sensual pleasures
and the satisfaction
and peril of them
and the escape as it really is,

getting rid of the craving for sense-pleasures,
suppressing the fever for sense-pleasures,
I dwelt devoid of thirst,
my mind inwardly calmed.

I saw other beings not yet devoid of attachment to sense pleasures
who were pursuing sense-pleasures
(although) they were being consumed by the craving for sense-pleasures, [506] burning with the fever for sense-pleasures.

I did not envy them;
I had no delight therein.

What was the reason for this?

It was, Māgandiya,
that there is this delight which,
apart from pleasures of the senses,
apart from unskilled states of mind,
stands firm on reaching a deva-like happiness.

Delighting in this delight,
I do not envy what is low,
I have no delight therein.

Māgandiya, it is like a leper, a man with his limbs all ravaged and festering,<sup>10</sup> and who,
being eaten by vermin,
tearing his open sores [186] with his nails,
might scorch his body over a charcoal pit;
his friends and acquaintances,
his kith and kin
might procure a physician and surgeon<sup>11</sup>;
that physician and surgeon might make up a medicine;
he, taking that medicine,
might be freed of that leprosy,

he might be well,
at ease,
independent,
his own master,
going wherever he liked.<sup>12</sup>

He might see another leper, a man with his limbs all ravaged and festering, and who,
being eaten by vermin,
tearing his open sores with his nails,
might scorch his body over a charcoal pit.

What do you think about this, Māgandiya?

Would that man envy that other leper man his charcoal pit or his course of medicine?"

"No, good Gotama.

What is the reason for this?

It is, good Gotama,
that if there is illness,
there is something to be done through medicine;
but if there is not illness there is nothing to be done through medicine."

"Even so did I, Māgandiya,
when I was formerly a householder,
endowed and provided with the five strands of sense-pleasures,
revel in them -
in material shapes cognisable by the eye,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,

connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in sounds cognisable by the ear agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in smells cognisable by the nose agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in tastes cognisable by the tongue,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring;

in touches cognisable by the body,
agreeable,
pleasant,
liked,
enticing,
connected with sensual pleasure,
alluring.

But after a time,
having known the coming to be
and passing away of sense-pleasures

and the satisfaction
and peril of them
and the escape as it really is,
getting rid of the craving for sense-pleasures,
suppressing the fever for sense-pleasures,
I dwelt devoid of thirst,
my mind inwardly calmed.

I saw other beings not yet devoid of attachment to sense-pleasures
who were pursuing sense-pleasures
(although) they were being consumed by the craving for sense-pleasures, burning with the fever for sense-pleasures.

I did not envy them;
I had no delight therein.

What was the reason for this?

It was, Māgandiya,
that there is this delight which,
apart from pleasures of the senses,
apart from unskilled states of mind,
stands firm on reaching a deva-like happiness.

Delighting in this delight,
I do not envy what is low,
I have no delight therein.

[507] Māgandiya, it is like a leper
a man with his limbs all ravaged and festering, and who,
being eaten by vermin,
tearing his open sores with his nails,
might scorch his body over a charcoal pit;
his friends and acquaintances,
his kith and kin
might procure a physician and surgeon;
that physician and surgeon might make up a medicine;

he, taking that medicine,
might be freed of that leprosy,
he might be well,
at ease,
independent,
his own master,
going wherever he liked.

Two strong men,
taking hold of him by his arms, might drag him towards a charcoal pit.

What do you think about this, Māgandiya?

Would not that man twist his body this way and that?"<sup>13</sup>

"Yes, good Gotama.

What is the reason for that?

It is, good Gotama, that contact with the fire is painful, for it is both exceedingly hot and afflicting."

"What do you think about this, Māgandiya?

Is it only now that contact with the fire is painful and both exceedingly hot and afflicting,
or was contact with that fire also painful before and both exceedingly hot and afflicting?"

"It is both now, good Gotama, that contact with the fire is painful, exceedingly hot and afflicting,
and also before that contact with that fire was painful, exceedingly hot and afflicting.

Yet, good Gotama, this leper,
a man with his limbs all ravaged and festering,
being eaten by vermin,
tearing his open sores with his nails,
his sense-organs injured,<sup>14</sup> might,
from the painful contact with the fire, receive a change of sensation and think it pleasant."

"Even so, Māgandiyā, far into the past contact of sense-pleasures [187] is painful, exceedingly hot and afflicting,
far into the future too
contact of sense-pleasures is painful,
exceedingly hot and afflicting,
and also now in the present
contact of sense-pleasures is painful, exceedingly hot and afflicting.

But those beings, Māgandiyā, not yet devoid of attachment to pleasures of the senses, who are being consumed by the craving for sense-pleasures and burning with the fever for sense-pleasures, their sense-organs injured, may, from painful contact with sense-pleasures themselves,
receive a change of sensation and think it pleasant.

Māgandiyā, it is like a leper,
a man with his limbs all ravaged and festering,
and who, being eaten by vermin,
tearing his open sores with his nails,
scorches his body over a charcoal pit.

But the more, Māgandiyā, this leper,
a man with his limbs all ravaged and festering,
and who, being eaten by vermin,
tearing his open sores with his nails,

scorches his body over a charcoal pit the more those open sores of his [508] become septic and evil-smelling and putrefying and there is only a sorry relief and satisfaction to be had from scratching the open sores.

Even so, Māgandiya,
do beings who are not yet devoid of attachment to sense-pleasures, while being consumed by the craving for sense-pleasures
and burning with the fever for sense-pleasures, pursue sense-pleasures;
and the more these beings who are not yet devoid of attachment to sense-pleasures
while being consumed by the craving for sense-pleasures
and burning with the fever for sense-pleasures, pursue them,
the more their craving for sense-pleasures increases, the more they burn with the fever for sense-pleasures, and moreover there is only a sorry relief and satisfaction to be had from the five strands of sense-pleasures.

What do you think about this, Māgandiya?

Have you ever seen or heard of a king or a king's chief minister who, endowed and provided with the five strands of sense-pleasure - revelling in them
- and who had neither got rid of the craving for sense-pleasures nor suppressed the fever for sense-pleasures, dwelt
or is dwelling
or will dwell
devoid of thirst,
his mind inwardly calmed?"

"No, good Gotama."

"It is good, Māgandiya. Neither have I seen or heard of this,
that a king
or a king's chief minister who, endowed and provided with the five strands of sense-pleasure -
revelling in them
- and who had neither got rid of the craving for sense-pleasures nor suppressed the fever for sense-pleasures, dwelt
or is dwelling
or will dwell
devoid of thirst,
his mind inwardly calmed.

But, Magandiya, whatever recluses and brahmans, dwelt or are dwelling
or will dwell,
devoid of thirst,
with a mind inwardly calmed,
all these,
having known the coming to be
and passing away of these same sense-pleasures, their satisfaction and peril
and the escape as it really is,
on getting rid of the craving for sense-pleasures, suppressing the fever for sense-pleasures,
dwelt
or are dwelling
or will dwell
devoid of thirst,
with a mind inwardly calmed."

Then the Lord at that time uttered this solemn utterance:

[188] "Health<sup>15</sup> is the highest gain, Nibbāna the highest bliss;
And of Ways, the Eightfold leads to deathlessness, to security."<sup>16</sup>

When this had been said, the wanderer Māgandiya spoke thus to the Lord:

"It is marvellous, good Gotama,
it is wonderful, good Gotama,
how well this is spoken by the good Gotama:

[509]"Health is the highest gain, Nibbāna the highest bliss."

For I too, good Gotama, have heard of this as having been spoken by earlier teachers of teachers of the wanderers:

"Health is the highest gain, Nibbāna the highest bliss."

So that this agrees, good Gotama."

"But as to what you heard, Māgandiya, as having been spoken by earlier teachers of teachers of the wanderers:

"Health is the highest gain, Nibbāna the highest bliss."

what is that health, what is that Nibbāna?"

When this had been said, the wanderer Māgandiya stroked his own limbs with his hands and said:

"This is that health, good Gotama, this is that Nibbāna.

For I, good Gotama, am at present in good health,
I have no disease at all."

"Māgandiya, it is like<sup>17</sup> a man blind from birth who could not see dark or bright shapes, nor green,

yellow,
red or crimson shapes,
who could not see what is even or uneven,
who could not see the stars,
who could not see the moons and suns.

If he should hear a man with vision saying:

'Indeed it is pleasing to have a lovely,
unstained, pure white cloth,'

he would walk about searching for a white (cloth).

But some man might deceive him with a greasy grimy coarse robe, saying:

"My good man, this is a lovely,
unstained,
pure white cloth,'

and he might take it;
having taken it,
he might put it on;
having put it on,
he might, in his pride,
utter a cry of pride:

'Indeed it is pleasing to have a lovely,
unstained,
pure white cloth.'

What do you think about this, Māgandiya?

If that man, blind from birth, had known and seen,
would he have taken that greasy grimy [189] coarse robe;
having taken it,
would he have put it on;

having put it on,
would he, in his pride,
have uttered the cry of pride:

'Indeed it is pleasing to have a lovely,
unstained,
pure white cloth'?

Or was it from faith in the man with vision?"

"Not knowing, good Gotama, not seeing,
that man,
blind from birth,
might take a greasy grimy coarse robe;
having taken it he might put it on;
having put it on,
he might, in his pride,
utter a cry of pride:

[510] 'Indeed it is pleasing to have a lovely,
unstained,
pure white doth.'

It was from faith in the man with vision."

"Even so, Māgandiya,
wanderers belonging to other sects are blind, they are without vision;<sup>18</sup> not knowing health, not seeing Nibbāna,
they yet speak this verse:

'Health is the highest gain, Nibbāna the highest bliss.'

But, Māgandiya,
this verse was uttered in days gone by by perfected ones,
fully Self-awakened Ones:

Health is the highest gain, Nibbāna the highest bliss;
And of Ways, the Eightfold leads to deathlessness, to security.'

This has now come down gradually to the ordinary people.

And although, Māgandiya, this body has become an ill,
an imposthume,
a barb,
a misery
and a disease,
yet of this body that has become an ill,
an imposthume,
a barb,
a misery
and a disease,
you say:

'This is that health,
this is that Nibbāna.'

So you have not that ariyan vision, Māgandiya, by which you might know health,
might see Nibbāna."

"I have reliance thus in the good Gotama that he could so teach me Dhamma
that I might know health,
might see Nibbāna."

"Māgandiya, it is like a man blind from birth who could not see dark or bright shapes,
nor green,
yellow,
red or crimson shapes,
who could not see what is even or uneven,
who could not see the stars,
who could not see the moons and suns.

His friends and acquaintances,
kith and kin,
might procure a physician and surgeon;
that physician and surgeon might make up a medicine, but fail to provide him with eyes with it or clarify his eyes.

What do you think about this, Magandiya?

Would that doctor feel much trouble and anxiety?"

"Yes, good Gotama,"

"Even so, Magandiya, if I were to teach you dhamma:
This is that health,
this is that Nibbāna -
you would not know that health, would not see that Nibbāna.

It would be a trouble to me, it would be a vexation to me."

[511] "I have reliance thus in the good Gotama
that he could so teach me dhamma
that I might know health,
might see Nibbāna."

[190] "Māgandiya, it is like a man blind from birth who could not see dark or bright shapes,
nor green,
yellow,
red or crimson shapes,
who could not see what is even or uneven,
who could not see the stars,
who could not see the moons and suns.

If he should hear a man with vision saying:

'Indeed it is pleasing to have a lovely,
unstained, pure white cloth,'

he would walk about searching for a white (cloth).

But some man might deceive him with a greasy grimy coarse robe, saying:

'My good man, this is a lovely,
unstained,
pure white cloth,'

and he might take it;
having taken it,
he might put it on.

His friends and acquaintances,
his kith and kin
might procure a physician and surgeon;
that physician and surgeon might make up a medicine for him, emetics,<sup>19</sup> purgatives, collyrium (for the eyes), ointments,
the nose-treatment.<sup>20</sup>

Because of that medicine he might regain his vision,<sup>21</sup> might clarify his eyes.

But with the regaining of his vision he might get rid of that desire and attachment to that greasy grimy coarse robe, and he might regard that man as no friend, might even regard him as an enemy and consider depriving him of life, thinking:

'For a long time indeed I have been defrauded, deceived,

and cheated by this man with a greasy grimy coarse robe who said:

"My good man,
this is a lovely,
unstained,
pure white cloth."

Even so, Māgandiya,
if I were to teach you dhamma, saying:

'This is that health,
this is that Nibbāna'

you might know health,
might see Nibbāna.

With the arising of your vision, you might get rid of that desire and attachment to the five groups of grasping, and this might even occur to you:

'For a long time indeed I have been defrauded, deceived and cheated by this mind for, grasping, I grasped after material shape itself for, grasping, I grasped after feeling itself for, grasping, I grasped after perception itself for, grasping, I grasped after the habitual tendencies themselves; grasping, I grasped after consciousness itself.

Conditioned by grasping after this,
there was becoming for me;
conditioned by becoming, birth; conditioned by birth, old age and dying, grief, sorrow, suffering, lamentation and despair [512]came into being.

Thus is the origin of this whole mass of anguish."

"I have reliance thus in the good Gotama
that he could so teach me Dhamma that I could rise from this seat, not blind."

"Well then, Māgandiya, do you consort with true men;
if you, Māgandiya,
consort with true men,
then will you, Māgandiya,
hear true dhamma;
if you, Māgandiya,
hear true dhamma
then will you, Māgandiya,
fare along in accordance with dhamma;
if you, Māgandiya,
fare along in accordance with dhamma,
then [191] will you, Māgandiya,
know for yourself,
then will you see for yourself that:

"These ills are imposthumes, barbs - but ills, imposthumes, barbs can be stopped here without remainder;
from the stopping of grasping after this,
there is the stopping of becoming for me;
from the stopping of becoming,
the stopping of birth;
from the stopping of birth,
old age and dying,
grief,
sorrow,
suffering,
lamentation and despair
are stopped.

Thus is the stopping of this whole mass of anguish."

When this had been said,
Māgandiya the wanderer spoke thus to the Lord:

"It is excellent, good Gotama,
excellent, good Gotama.

It is, good Gotama,
as if one might set upright what had been upset, or might disclose what had been covered,
or point out the way
to one who had gone astray,
or might bring an oil-lamp into the darkness
so that those with vision might see material shapes -
even so in many a figure
has dhamma been made clear by the good Gotama.

I am going to the revered Gotama for refuge
and to dhamma
and to the Order of monks.

May I receive the going forth in the revered Gotama's presence,
may I receive ordination."

"Māgandiya, if a former member of another sect wishes for the going forth
in this dhamma and discipline,
wishes for ordination,
he undertakes probation for four months.<sup>22</sup>

At the end of the four months the monks,
if they so decide,
may let him go forth,
may ordain him into the status of a monk;
but even here differences among individuals are known to me."

"If, revered sir, former members of other sects,
wishing for the going forth in this dhamma and discipline,
wishing for ordination,
undertake probation for four months, and if at the end of the four months the monks,
if they so decide,
let them go forth,
ordain them into the status of a monk,
then will I undertake probation for four years;
at the end of the four years the monks,
if they so decide,
may let me go forth,
may ordain me into the status of a monk."

[513] But the wanderer Māgandiya received the going forth in the Lord's presence,
he received ordination.

Soon after he was ordained
the venerable Māgandiya, dwelling alone,
aloof,
diligent,
ardent,
self-resolute,
in no long time
having realised here and now
by his own super-knowledge
that matchless goal of the Brahma-faring
for the sake of which young men of family
rightly go forth from home into homelessness,
entering on it,
abided [192] in it.

And he knew:

"Destroyed is birth,
brought to a close the Brahma-faring
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of being such or so."

So was the venerable Māgandiya one of the perfected ones.

Discourse to Māgandiya:
The Fifth

---

<sup>1</sup> MA. iii. 209, in the agnihotra-hall.

<sup>2</sup> bhūnahuno. MA. iii. 211: hatavaḍḍhino mariyādakārakasm ... vaḍḍhihato mariyādakāraḅko, a killer of growths, the maker of stringent controls (or, rules); and it explains by saying that Māgandiya holds that there should be development and growth in all the six sense-spheres, while the Lord holds that there should be restraint of them, and MA. cites verses at Miln. 167. The word bhūnahu occurs at Sn. 664, in voc. (SnA. 470: bhūtihanaka vuddhināsaka) and at Jā. v. 266, in the plural. See JāA. v. 272: te iaīnam ativattāro attano vaḍḍhiyā hatattā bhūnahuno. Cf. Miln. 314, bhūtahacca, citing the above M. passage. Chalmers translates bhūnahu as "rigid repressionist," i.e. of the senses, which the wanderer thinks should be given full scope. See above Intr. p. xv.

<sup>3</sup> As at Vin. ii. 186.

<sup>4</sup> ariye ñāye dhamme kusale. Cf. M. ii. 181, 197, A. i. 69, D. ii. 151. MA. iii. 211 says: parisuddhe kāraṇe dhamme anavaḅje.

<sup>5</sup> MA. iii. 213 says it is said that the Lord told the wanderer not to speak to him, and began teaching dhamma at once.

<sup>6</sup> MA. iii. 215-6 says there were women everywhere; they were not only musicians, but door-keepers and barbers.

<sup>7</sup> samadhiggayha tiṭṭhati as at M. ii. 25; S. i. 86; Iti. p. 16. Samadhigaṇhāti appears to mean to reach, acquire, and also to distinguish (see MA. iii. 268 where it is glossed by visesetvā).

<sup>8</sup> MA. iii. 216 says the delight of attaining the fruit of the fourth meditation.

<sup>9</sup> hīnasa. MA. iii. 217 gives hīnajanasukha and also the five strands of human sense pleasures.

<sup>10</sup> Cf. S. iv. 198.

<sup>11</sup> As at M. i. 429, ii. 216.

<sup>12</sup> M. ii. 216.

<sup>13</sup> As at M. i. 365.

<sup>14</sup> upahatindriya.

<sup>15</sup> MA. iii 218, for those who get wealth and fame and sons from (reciting) verses health is not the highest gain - yet it is higher than these. But for anyone who has the happiness of meditation or the Way or the fruits, there is no bliss higher than Nibbāna.

<sup>16</sup> Cf. Dhṛp. 204.

<sup>17</sup> As at M. ii. 201.

<sup>18</sup> Said of Pokkharasāti at M. ii. 202.

<sup>19</sup> The following list also occurs at D. i. 12.

<sup>20</sup> As at Vin. i. 204.

<sup>21</sup> cakkhūni uppādeyya, he might acquire eyes, make them arise. So, in this paragraph cakkhuppādā is translated as "the regaining of his vision" and in the next as "the arising of your vision."

22 As above, p. 59.

---

Majjhima Nikāya
II. Majjhima-Paṇṇāsa
3. Paribbājaka Vagga

The Middle Length Sayings
II. The Middle Fifty Discourses
3. The Division on Wanderers

76. Discourse to Sandaka

Sandaka Sutta

---

[513] [192]

THUS have I heard:

At one time the Lord was staying near Kosambī in Ghosita's monastery.

Now at that time the wanderer Sandaka was staying in the Fig Tree<sup>1</sup> Cave with a great company of wanderers, with at least five hundred wanderers.

Then the venerable Ānanda, emerging from solitude towards evening, addressed the monks, saying:

"Come, your reverences, we will go to Devakaṭa Pool so as to see the Cave."

"Yes, your reverence," these monks answered the venerable Ānanda in assent.

Then the venerable Ānanda, together with many monks, approached Devakata Pool.

Now at that time the wanderer Sandaka was sitting down with the great company of wanderers shouting out with a loud noise,
a great noise,
talking various kinds of inferior talk,<sup>2</sup>
that is to say:

talk on kings,
thieves,
great ministers,
armies,
fears,
battles,
food,
drink,
clothes,
beds,
garlands,
scents,
relations,
vehicles,
villages,
market towns,
towns,
the country,
women,
heroes,
streets,
wells,
those departed before,
talk of diversity,
speculation about the world,

speculation about the sea, [514]talk about becoming or not becoming thus or thus.

The wanderer Sandaka saw the venerable Ānanda coming in the distance; seeing him, he called his own company to order,
saying:

"Good sirs, let there be little noise;
do not, good sirs, make a noise; this is a disciple of the recluse Gotama who is coming - the recluse Ānanda.

For as long as disciples of the recluse Gotama have [193] been staying near Kosambī the recluse Ānanda has been among them.

These venerable ones wish for little noise, they are trained to little noise, they are praisers of little noise.

So he may consider approaching if he knows that this is a company of little noise."

Then these wanderers fell silent.

Then the venerable Ānanda approached the wanderer Sandaka.

The wanderer Sandaka spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda:

"Let the revered Ānanda come, there is a welcome for the revered Ānanda; it is long since the revered Ānanda made this opportunity,<sup>3</sup>
that is to say
for coming here.

Let the revered Ānanda sit down, this seat is ready."

Then the venerable Ānanda sat down on the seat that was ready.

And the wanderer Sandaka,
having taken a low seat,
sat down at a respectful distance.

Then the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the wanderer Sandaka
as he was sitting down at a respectful distance:

"What is the talk
for which you are now gathered together here, Sandaka?

And what was your talk that was interrupted?"<sup>4</sup>

"Let be that talk, good Ānanda, for which we are now gathered together here.

It will not be difficult for the good Ānanda to hear this talk later.

It were good if some dhamma-talk belonging to his own teacher were to occur to the revered Ānanda himself."

"Well then, Sandaka, listen,
attend carefully
and I will speak."

"Yes, sir," the wanderer Sandaka answered the venerable Ānanda in assent.

The venerable Ānanda spoke thus:

"Sandaka, these four ways of living a non-Brahma-faring have been pointed out
by this Lord who knows and sees,
perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One;
and four comfortless Brahma-farings
have been pointed out
in which an intelligent man
could certainly not live a Brahma-faring,
or, if living it,
could not gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled."

"And what, good Ānanda, are these four ways of living a non-Brahma-faring that have been pointed out by the Lord who knows and sees,
perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One
in which [515]an intelligent man
could certainly not live a Brahma-faring,
or, if living it,
could not gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled?"

---

"As to this, Sandaka, some teacher speaks thus and is of this view:<sup>5</sup>

'There is no (result of) gift,
no (result of) sacrifice;
there is no [194] fruit
or ripening of deeds
well done or ill done;
there is not this world,
there is not a world beyond;
there is not (benefit from serving) mother or father;
there are no beings of spontaneous uprising;
there are not in the world
recluses and brahmans who are faring rightly,
proceeding rightly,
and who proclaim this world
and a world beyond,
having realised them
by their own super-knowledge.

This man is derived
from the four great elements
so that, when he passes away,
the earthy part of his body returns and relapses to earth,
the fluid part to water,
the hot part to heat,
the windy part to wind,
and his sense-organs pass over into the ether.

Four men,
with a bier as the fifth,<sup>6</sup>
go along taking the corpse;
as far as the cemetery
they make known his characteristics.<sup>7</sup>

His bones become pigeon-grey.

Offerings end as ashes.

It is imbeciles who speak of giving.

It is vain,
lying,
empty talk
on their part
who profess to say:

There is.<sup>8</sup>

Fools and wise alike
are annihilated
and destroyed
at the breaking up of the body;
after dying they are not.'

---

Wherefore, Sandaka, an intelligent man reflects thus:

'This worthy teacher speaks thus
and is of this view:

"There is no (result of) gift,
no (result of) sacrifice;
there is no fruit
or ripening of deeds
well done or ill done;
there is not this world,
there is not a world beyond;
there is not (benefit from serving) mother or father;
there are no beings of spontaneous uprising;
there are not in the world
recluses and brahmans who are faring rightly,

proceeding rightly,
and who proclaim this world
and a world beyond,
having realised them
by their own super-knowledge.

This man is derived
from the four great elements
so that, when he passes away,
the earthy part of his body
returns and relapses to earth,
the fluid part to water,
the hot part to heat,
the windy part to wind,
and his sense-organs pass over into the ether.

Four men,
with a bier as the fifth,
go along taking the corpse;
as far as the cemetery
they make known his characteristics.

His bones become pigeon-grey.

Offerings end as ashes.

It is imbeciles who speak of giving.

It is vain,
lying,
empty talk
on their part
who profess to say:

There is.

Fools and wise alike
are annihilated
and destroyed
at the breaking up of the body;
after dying they are not."

■

If this is a true word
of this good teacher, then what is done herein<sup>9</sup>
is without my doing it, what is lived herein
is without my living it.

Moreover both of us are herein
on an exact level in attaining recluseship, although I do not say:

"We will both be annihilated and destroyed
at the breaking up of the body;
after dying we will not be."

It is excessive of this good teacher
to be naked,
shaven,
to practise squatting on his heels,
to pluck out the hair of his head and beard,
while I am living in a house
surrounded and supported by sons, delighting in Kāsi's sandal-wood perfumes,
decked with garlands,
scents
and unguents,
enjoying the use of gold and silver.<sup>10</sup>

For in a future state
I will be on an exact level in wayfaring<sup>11</sup>
as this good teacher.

Knowing what,
seeing what,
should I fare the Brahma-faring
under this teacher?'

He, realising that this is a way
of living a non-Brahma-faring, goes away uninterested
in this Brahma-faring.

This, Sandaka, is the first way of living a non-Brahma-faring
that [195] has been pointed out
by this Lord who knows and sees,
perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One,
(a way) in which an intelligent man could certainly not [516] live a Brahma-faring
or, if living it,
could not gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled.

---

And again, Sandaka,
some teacher here speaks thus
and is of this view:<sup>12</sup>

'From doing, from making (another) do,
from mutilating,
from making (another) mutilate,
from threatening,
from making (another) threaten,
from causing grief,
from tormenting,
from torturing,
from making (another) torture,
from making onslaught on creatures,
from taking what is not given,
from house-breaking,
from plundering,
from robbery,
from waiting in ambush,
from going after other men's wives,
from lying speech —
from acting (thus) evil is not done.

If anyone with a discus having an edge sharp as a razor should make the
creatures of this earth into one mass of flesh,
into one heap of flesh,
from that source there is not evil,
there is not the perpetuating of evil.

And if anyone should go to the south bank of the Ganges slaying and
striking,
mutilating,
making (others) mutilate,
threatening,
making (others) threaten,
from that source there is not evil,
there is not the perpetuating of evil.

And if he should go to the north bank of the Ganges giving,
making (others) give,

offering,
making (others) offer,
from that source there is not merit,
there is not the perpetuating of merit.

There is no merit from giving,
from taming oneself,
from restraining oneself,
from truth-speaking,
there is not the perpetuating of merit.'

■

Wherefore, Sandaka, an intelligent man reflects thus:

'This worthy teacher speaks thus and is of this view:

"From doing, from making (another) do,
from mutilating,
from making (another) mutilate,
from threatening,
from making (another) threaten,
from causing grief,
from tormenting,
from torturing,
from making (another) torture,
from making onslaught on creatures,
from taking what is not given,
from house-breaking,
from plundering,
from robbery,
from waiting in ambush,
from going after other men's wives,
from lying speech —
from acting (thus) evil is not done.

If anyone with a discus having an edge sharp as a razor should make the creatures of this earth into one mass of flesh,
into one heap of flesh,
from that source there is not evil,
there is not the perpetuating of evil.

And if anyone should go to the south bank of the Ganges slaying and striking,
mutilating,
making (others) mutilate,
threatening,
making (others) threaten,
from that source there is not evil,
there is not the perpetuating of evil.

And if he should go to the north bank of the Ganges giving,
making (others) give,
offering,
making (others) offer,
from that source there is not merit,
there is not the perpetuating of merit.

There is no merit from giving,
from taming oneself,
from restraining oneself,
from truth-speaking,
there is not the perpetuating of merit."

If this is a true word
of this good teacher,
then what is done herein
is without my doing it,
what is lived herein
is without my living it.

Moreover both of us are herein
on an exact level in attaining recluse-ship,
although I do not say:

"Evil will not be done by the deeds of both."

It is excessive of this good teacher
to be naked,
shaven,
to practise squatting on his heels,
to pluck out the hair of his head and beard,
while I am living in a house
surrounded and supported by sons,
delighting in Kāsi's sandal-wood perfumes,
decked with garlands,
scents
and unguents,
enjoying the use of gold and silver.

For in a future state
I will be on an exact level in wayfaring
as this good teacher.

Knowing what,
seeing what,
should I fare the Brahma-faring
under this teacher?'

He, realising that this is a way
of living a non-Brahma-faring,
goes away uninterested
in this Brahma-faring.

This, Sandaka, is the second way of living
a non-Brahma-faring
that has been pointed out
by this Lord who knows and sees,

perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One,
(a way) in which an intelligent man
could certainly not live a Brahma-faring
or, if living it,
could not gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled.

---

And again, Sandaka, some teacher here speaks thus
and is of this view:13

'There is no cause,
no reason for the defilement of creatures,
creatures are defiled without cause,
without reason.

There is no cause,
no reason for the purification of creatures,
creatures are purified without cause,
without reason.

There is not strength,
there is not energy,
there is not human vigour,
there is not human effort;
all creatures,
all breathing things,
all beings,
all living things
are without power,

without strength,
without energy,
bent by fate,
chance,
and nature,
[517] they experience pleasure and pain amid the six classes.'

■

Wherefore, Sandaka, an intelligent man reflects thus:

'This worthy teacher speaks thus and is of this view:

'There is no cause,
no reason for the defilement of creatures,
creatures are defiled without cause,
without reason.

There is no cause,
no reason for the purification of creatures,
creatures are purified without cause,
without reason.

There is not strength,
there is not energy,
there is not human vigour,
there is not human effort;
all creatures,
all breathing things,
all beings,
all living things
are without power,
without strength,
without energy,
bent by fate,
chance,

and nature,
they experience pleasure and pain
amid the six classes.'

If this is a true word
of this good teacher,
then what is done herein
is without my doing it,
what is lived herein
is without my living it.

Moreover both of us are herein
on an exact level in attaining recluse-ship,
although I do not say:

"We will both be purified without cause, without reason."

It is excessive of this good teacher
to be naked,
shaven,
to practise squatting on his heels,
to pluck out the hair of his head and beard,
while I am living in a house
surrounded and supported by sons,
delighting in Kāsi's sandal-wood perfumes,
decked with garlands,
scents
and unguents,
enjoying the use of gold and silver.

For in a future state
I will be on an exact level in wayfaring
as this good teacher.

Knowing what,
seeing what,

should I fare the Brahma-faring
under this teacher?'

He, realising that [196] this is a way
of living a non-Brahma-faring,
goes away uninterested
in this Brahma-faring.

This, Sandaka, is the third way of living
a non-Brahma-faring
that has been pointed out
by this Lord who knows and sees,
perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One,
(a way) in which an intelligent man
could certainly not live a Brahma-faring
or, if living it,
could not gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled.

---

And again, Sandaka, some teacher here speaks thus
and is of this view:<sup>14</sup>

These seven classes
are not made
or caused to be made,
they are not created
or caused to be created,
they are barren (of results),
standing stable as a mountain, stable as a pillar,<sup>15</sup> they do not move

or change
or injure one another,
they are unable to affect one another's pleasure
or pain
or pleasure-and-pain.

What are the seven?

Earth,<sup>16</sup>
water,
heat,
wind,
pleasures,
pains,
life-principles -
these seven.<sup>17</sup>

These seven classes
are not made
or caused to be made,
they are not created
or caused to be created,
they are barren (of results),
standing stable as a mountain,
stable as a pillar,
they do not move
or change
or injure one another,
they are unable to affect one another's pleasure
or pain
or pleasure-and-pain.

Herein there is neither slayer nor one that makes another slay,<sup>18</sup> neither hearer<sup>19</sup> nor one that makes another hear, neither knower<sup>19</sup>

nor one that makes another know.

Even he who cuts off (another's) head with a sharp sword
deprives no one of life,
for the sword merely penetrates the gap between the seven classes.

There are these fourteen hundred thousand chief kinds of birth,<sup>20</sup> and sixty hundred
and six hundred.

There are five hundred karmas<sup>21</sup> and (another) five karmas<sup>22</sup> and (another) three karmas.<sup>23</sup>

There is a karma<sup>24</sup> and half a karma.<sup>25</sup>

There are sixty-two practices,
sixty-two sub-divisions (in a great kalpa<sup>26</sup>), six classes [197] of mankind,<sup>27</sup> eight stages in (the life of a) man,<sup>28</sup> forty-nine hundred modes of livelihood, forty-nine hundred wanderers,<sup>29</sup> [518] forty-nine hundred nāga-dwellings,<sup>30</sup> twenty hundred faculties,
thirty hundred Niraya Hells,
thirty-six places where dust collects,
seven births where there is consciousness,<sup>31</sup> seven births where there is no consciousness,<sup>32</sup> seven kinds of production where there are joints in the stalk,<sup>33</sup> seven kinds of devas,<sup>34</sup> seven kinds of men,<sup>35</sup> seven kinds of demons,

seven lakes,
seven knots,<sup>36</sup>
seven (greater) mountains,
seven hundred (smaller) mountains, seven (great) dreams,<sup>37</sup>
seven hundred (lesser) dreams.

There are 84,000 great kalpas
in which both fools and the wise, when they have run on
and circled on,
will make an end of anguish.

It is useless to say:

"I, by this moral practice
or habit
or austerity
or Brahma-faring<sup>38</sup> will bring an unmatured karma to maturity,<sup>39</sup> or gradually exhaust karma already matured."<sup>40</sup>

This is [198] not so.

Happiness and pain are measured out
(as) in a bushel;
circling on has its limits fixed;
there is not decline and growth, there is not high degree or low.<sup>41</sup>

Indeed, just as a ball of thread,
when thrown down,
unwinds itself as it rolls,<sup>42</sup> even so will fools and the wise alike,
when they have run on
and circled on,
make an end of anguish.'

■

Wherefore, Sandaka, an intelligent man reflects thus:

'This worthy teacher speaks thus and is of this view:

These seven classes
are not made
or caused to be made,
they are not created
or caused to be created,
they are barren (of results),
standing stable as a mountain,
stable as a pillar,
they do not move
or change
or injure one another,
they are unable to affect one another's pleasure
or pain
or pleasure-and-pain.

What are the seven?

Earth,
water,
heat,
wind,
pleasures,

pains,
life-principles -
these seven.

These seven classes
are not made
or caused to be made,
they are not created
or caused to be created,
they are barren (of results),
standing stable as a mountain,
stable as a pillar,
they do not move
or change
or injure one another,
they are unable to affect one another's pleasure
or pain
or pleasure-and-pain.

Herein there is neither slayer nor one that makes another slay, neither hearer
nor one that makes another hear, neither knower
nor one that makes another know.

Even he who cuts off (another's) head
with a sharp sword
deprives no one of life,
for the sword merely penetrates the gap between the seven classes.

There are these fourteen hundred thousand chief kinds of birth,
and sixty hundred
and six hundred.

There are five hundred karmas and (another) five karmas and (another) three karmas.

There is a karma
and half a karma.

There are sixty-two practices,
sixty-two sub-divisions (in a great kalpa,
six classes of mankind,
eight stages in (the life of a) man,
forty-nine hundred modes of livelihood,
forty-nine hundred wanderers, forty-nine hundred nāga-dwellings,
twenty hundred faculties,
thirty hundred Niraya Hells,
thirty-six places where dust collects,
seven births where there is consciousness, seven births where there is no consciousness,
seven kinds of production
where there are joints in the stalk, seven kinds of devas,
seven kinds of men,
seven kinds of demons,
seven lakes,
seven knots,
seven (greater) mountains,
seven hundred (smaller) mountains,
seven (great) dreams,
seven hundred (lesser) dreams.

There are 84,000 great kalpas
in which both fools and the wise,
when they have run on

and circled on,
will make an end of anguish.

It is useless to say:

"I, by this moral practice
or habit
or austerity
or Brahma-faring
will bring an unmatured karma to maturity, or gradually exhaust karma already matured."

This is not so.

Happiness and pain are measured out
(as) in a bushel;
circling on has its limits fixed;
there is not decline and growth,
there is not high degree or low.

Indeed, just as a ball of thread,
when thrown down,
unwinds itself as it rolls,
even so will fools and the wise alike,
when they have run on
and circled on,
make an end of anguish.'

If this is a true word
of this good teacher,
then what is done herein
is without my doing it,
what is lived herein
is without my living it.

Moreover both of us are herein
on an exact level in attaining recluse-ship,

although I do not say:

"When we have both run on
and circled on
we will make an end of anguish."

It is excessive of this good teacher
to be naked,
shaven,
to practise squatting on his heels,
to pluck out the hair of his head and beard,
while I am living in a house
surrounded and supported by sons,
delighting in Kāsi's sandal-wood perfumes,
decked with garlands,
scents
and unguents,
enjoying the use of gold and silver.

For in a future state
I will be on an exact level in wayfaring
as this good teacher.

Knowing what,
seeing what,
should I fare the Brahma-faring
under this teacher?'

He, realising that this is a way
of living a non-Brahma-faring,
goes away uninterested
in this Brahma-faring.

This, Sandaka, is the fourth way of living
a non-Brahma-faring
that has been pointed out
by this Lord who knows and sees,

perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One,
(a way) in which an intelligent man
could certainly not live a Brahma-faring
or, if living it,
could not gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled.

---

These, Sandaka, are the four ways of living a non-Brahma-faring that have been pointed out
by this Lord who knows and sees,
perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One,
[519] and in which an intelligent man
could certainly not live a Brahma-faring,
or, if living it,
could not gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled."

"It is wonderful, good Ānanda,
it is marvellous, good Ānanda, that although there are these four ways
of living a non-Brahma-faring, they have been pointed out
by this Lord who knows and sees,
perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One,
as those in which an intelligent man
could certainly not live a Brahma-faring,

or, if living it,
could not gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled.

§

But now, good Ānanda, what are these four comfortless Brahma-farings
that have been pointed out
by this Lord who knows and sees,
perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One,
and in which an intelligent man
certainly could not live a Brahma-faring,
or, if living [199] it,
could not gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled?"

■

"As to this, Sandaka,
some teacher,
all-knowing,<sup>43</sup>
all-seeing,
claims all-embracing knowledge-and-vision,
saying:

'Whether I am walking
or standing still or asleep
or awake,

knowledge-and-vision is constantly and perpetually before me.'

He enters an empty place,
and he does not obtain almsfood,
and a dog bites him,
and he encounters a fierce elephant,
and he encounters a fierce horse,
and he encounters a fierce bullock,
and he asks a woman and a man their name and clan,
and he asks the name of a village or a market town
and the way.

He, being one who asks, 44
'How was this?'

answers,

'I had to enter an empty place,
therefore I entered;
I had to obtain no almsfood,
therefore I obtained none;
(someone) had to be bitten by a dog, therefore I was bitten by one;
(someone) had to encounter a fierce elephant, horse
and bullock,
therefore I encountered them;
(someone) had to ask a woman and a man their name and clan, therefore I asked;
(someone) had to ask the name of a village
and market town
and the way,
therefore I asked.'

Whereupon, Sandaka,
an intelligent person reflects thus:

'This revered teacher,
all-knowing,
all-seeing,
claims all-embracing knowledge-and-vision,
saying:

"Whether I am walking
or standing still or asleep
or awake,
knowledge-and-vision is constantly
and perpetually before me."

He enters an empty place,
and he does not obtain almsfood,
and a dog bites him,
and he encounters a fierce elephant,
and he encounters a fierce horse,
and he encounters a fierce bullock,
and he asks a woman and a man their name and clan,
and he asks the name of a village
or a market town
and the way.

He, being one who asks,
'How was this?'

answers,

'I had to enter an empty place,
therefore I entered;
I had to obtain no almsfood,
therefore I obtained none;
(someone) had to be bitten by a dog,

therefore I was bitten by one;
(someone) had to encounter a fierce elephant, horse
and bullock,
therefore I encountered them;
(someone) had to ask a woman and a man their name and clan,
therefore I asked;
(someone) had to ask the name of a village
and market town
and the way,
therefore I asked.'

Having realised that this Brahma-faring is comfortless,
he goes away uninterested in this Brahma-faring.

This, Sandaka, is the first comfortless Brahma-faring
that has been pointed out
by this Lord who knows and sees,
perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One,
and [520] in which an intelligent man
certainly could not live a Brahma-faring,
or, if living it,
could not gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled.

---

And again, Sandaka,
some teacher here depends on report,<sup>45</sup> holds to report for his 'truths,' he teaches dhamma according to report,<sup>46</sup>

according to hearsay
and tradition,
according to the authority of the collections.<sup>47</sup>

If a teacher, Sandaka, depends on report, holds to report for his 'truths,' he remembers (part) well
and he remembers (part) badly,
and is both right and wrong.

Wherefore, Sandaka, an intelligent person reflects thus:

'This worthy teacher depends on report,
holds to report for his 'truths,' he teaches dhamma according to report, according to hearsay
and tradition,
according to the authority of the collections

If a teacher depends on report,
holds to report for his 'truths,'
he remembers (part) well
and he remembers (part) badly,
and is both right and wrong.

Having realised that this Brahma-faring is comfortless,
he goes away uninterested in this Brahma-faring.

[200] This, Sandaka, is the second comfortless Brahma-faring
that has been pointed out
by this Lord who knows and sees,
perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One,
and in which an intelligent man
certainly could not live a Brahma-faring,
or, if living it,

could not gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled.

---

And again, Sandaka, some teacher here is a reasoner and investigator;<sup>48</sup> he teaches dhamma
on a system of his own devising,
beaten out by reasoning
and based on investigation.

If, Sandaka, a teacher is a reasoner and investigator, part is well reasoned
and part is badly reasoned,
and is both right and wrong.

Wherefore, Sandaka, an intelligent person reflects thus:

'This worthy teacher is a reasoner and investigator
he teaches dhamma
on a system of his own devising,
beaten out by reasoning
and based on investigation.

If a teacher is a reasoner and investigator,
part is well reasoned
and part is badly reasoned,
and is both right and wrong.

Having realised that this Brahma-faring is comfortless,
he goes away uninterested in this Brahma-faring.

This, Sandaka, is the third comfortless Brahma-faring
that has been pointed out
by this Lord who knows and sees,
perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One,
and in which an intelligent man
certainly could not live a Brahma-faring,
or, if living it,
could not gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled.

---

And again, Sandaka, some teacher here is stupid and confused;<sup>49</sup> because of his stupidity and confusion,
on being asked a question on this or that [521] he falls into equivocation, into eel-wriggling.<sup>50</sup>

'It is not thus for me,<sup>51</sup>
it is not so for me,
it is not otherwise for me,
I do not say it is not,
I do not say it is not not.'

Wherefore, Sandaka, an intelligent person reflects thus:

'This worthy teacher is stupid and confused because of his stupidity and confusion,
on being asked a question on this or that he falls into equivocation,

into eel-wriggling:

'It is not thus for me,
it is not so for me,
it is not otherwise for me,
I do not say it is not,
I do not say it is not not.'

Having realised that this Brahma-faring is comfortless,
he goes away uninterested in this Brahma-faring.

This, Sandaka, is the fourth comfortless Brahma-faring
that has been pointed out
by this Lord who knows and sees,
perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One,
and in which an intelligent man
certainly could not live a Brahma-faring,
or, if living it,
could not gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled.

These, Sandaka, are the four comfortless Brahma-farings that have been pointed out by this Lord who knows and sees,
perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One,
and in which an intelligent man
certainly could not live a Brahma-faring,
or, if living it,
could not gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled."

---

"It is wonderful, good Ānanda,
it is marvellous, good Ānanda, that these four comfortless Brahma-farings have been pointed out by this Lord who knows and sees,
perfected one,
fully Self-Awakened One,
as those in which an intelligent man
could certainly not live a Brahma-faring
or, if living it,
could not gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled.

§

Good Ānanda,
what does this Teacher teach, what does he profess whereby an intelligent man [201] could certainly live a Brahma-faring and, living it, could gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled?"

"As to this, Sandaka, a Tathāgata arises in the world,
a perfected one,
a fully Self-awakened one
endowed with right knowledge and conduct,

well-farer,
knower of the worlds,
the matchless charioteer of men to be tamed,
the Awakened One,
the Lord.

He makes known this world
with the devas,
with Māra,
with Brahmā,
creation
with its recluses and brahmans,
its devas and men,
having realised them by his own super-knowledge.

He teaches dhamma which is lovely at the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely at the ending,
with the spirit and the letter;
he proclaims the Brahma-faring
wholly fulfilled,
quite purified.

A householder
or a householder's son
or one born in another family
hears that dhamma.

Having heard that dhamma,
he gains faith in the Tathāgata.

Endowed with this faith
that he has acquired,
he reflects in this way:

'The household life is confined and dusty;
going forth is of the open;

it is not easy for one who lives in a house
to fare the Brahma-faring
wholly fulfilled,
wholly pure,
polished like a conch-shell.

Suppose now that I,
having cut off hair and beard,
having put on saffron robes,
should go forth from home
into homelessness?'

After a time,
getting rid of his wealth,
be it small or great,
getting rid of his circle of relations,
be it small or great,
having cut off his hair and beard,
having put on saffron robes,
he goes forth from home
into homelessness.

He, being thus one who has gone forth
and who is endowed with the training
and the way of living of monks,
abandoning onslaught on creatures,
is one who abstains from onslaught on creatures;
the stick laid aside,
the knife laid aside,
he lives kindly,
scrupulous,
friendly
and compassionate
towards all breathing things and creatures.

Abandoning the taking of what is not given,
he is one who abstains from taking what is not given;
being one who takes (only) what is given,
who waits for what is given,
not by stealing he lives with a self become pure.

Abandoning unchastity,
he is one who is chaste,
keeping remote (from unchastity),
abstaining from dealings with women.

Abandoning lying speech,
he is one who abstains from lying speech,
a truth-speaker,
a bondsman to truth,
trustworthy,
dependable,
no deceiver of the world.

Abandoning slanderous speech,
he is one who abstains from slanderous speech;
having heard something here
he is not one for repeating it elsewhere
for (causing) variance among these (people),
or having heard something elsewhere
he is not one to repeat it there
for (causing) variance among these (people).

In this way
he is a reconciler of those who are at variance,
and one who combines those who are friends.

Concord is his pleasure,
concord his delight,
concord his joy,
concord is the motive of his speech.

Abandoning harsh speech,
he is one who abstains from harsh speech.

Whatever speech is gentle,
pleasing to the ear,
affectionate,
going to the heart,
urbane,
pleasant to the manyfolk,
agreeable to the manyfolk -
he comes to be one who utters speech like this.

Abandoning frivolous chatter,
he is one who abstains from frivolous chatter.

He is a speaker at a right time,
a speaker of fact,
a speaker on the goal,
a speaker on dhamma,
a speaker on discipline,
he speaks words that are worth treasuring,
with similes at a right time
that are discriminating,
connected with the goal.

He comes to be one who abstains
from what involves destruction to seed-growth,
to vegetable growth.

He comes to be one who eats one meal a day,
refraining at night,
abstaining from eating at a wrong time.

He comes to be one who abstains
from watching shows of dancing,
singing,
music.

He comes to be one who abstains
from using garlands,
scents,
unguents,
adornments,
finery.

He comes to be one who abstains
from using high beds,
large beds.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting gold and silver.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting raw grain.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting raw meat.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting women and girls.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting women slaves and men slaves.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting goats and sheep.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting fowl and swine.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting elephants, cows, horses, mares.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting fields and sites.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting messages or going on such.

He comes to be one who abstains from buying and selling.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting from cheating with weights.

He comes to be one who abstains
from accepting from cheating with bronzes.

He comes to be one who abstains
from cheating with measures.

He comes to be one who abstains
from the crooked ways of bribery, fraud and deceit.

He comes to be one who abstains
from maiming, murdering, manacling, highway robbery.

He comes to be contented
with the robes for protecting his body,
with the almsfood for sustaining his stomach.

Wherever he goes
he takes these things with him as he goes.

As a bird on the wing
wherever it flies
takes its' wings with it as it flies,
so a monk,
contented with the robes for protecting his body,
with the almsfood for sustaining his stomach,
wherever he goes
takes these things with him as he goes.

He, possessed of the ariyan body of moral habit,
subjectively experiences unsullied well-being.

Having seen a material shape with the eye,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwells with this organ of sight uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of sight,
he comes to control over the organ of sight.

Having heard a sound with the ear,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwells with this organ of hearing uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of hearing,
he comes to control over the organ of hearing.

Having smelt a smell with the nose,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwells with this organ of smell uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of smell,
he comes to control over the organ of smell.

Having savoured a taste with the tongue,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwells with this organ of taste uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of taste,
he comes to control over the organ of taste.

Having felt a touch with the body,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he dwells with this organ of touch uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,
evil unskilled states of mind,
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of touch,
he comes to control over the organ of touch.

Having cognised a mental object with the mind,
he is not entranced by the general appearance,
he is not entranced by the detail.

If he lives with this organ of mind uncontrolled,
covetousness and dejection,

evil unskilled states of mind
might predominate.

So he fares along controlling it;
he guards the organ of mind,
he comes to control over the organ of mind.

If he is possessed of this ariyan control of the (sense-) organs,
he subjectively experiences unsullied well-being.

Whether he is setting out
or returning,
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is looking down
or looking round,
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is bending back
or stretching out (his arm),
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is carrying his outer cloak,
his bowl,
his robe,
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is munching,
drinking,
eating,
savouring,
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is obeying the calls of nature,
he is one who comports himself properly;
whether he is walking,
standing,
asleep,
awake,
talking,

silent,
he is one who comports himself properly.

Possessed of this ariyan body of moral habit
and possessed of this ariyan control of the (sense-) organs
and possessed of this ariyan mindfulness
and clear consciousness,
he chooses a remote lodging in a forest,
at the root of a tree,
on a mountain slope,
in a wilderness,
in a hill-cave,
in a cemetery,
in a forest haunt,
in the open
or on a heap of straw.

He, returning from alms-gathering
after his meal,
sits down cross-legged
holding the back erect,
having made mindfulness
rise up in front of him.

He, having got rid of covetousness for the world,
lives with a mind devoid of coveting,
he purifies the mind of coveting.

By getting rid of the taint of ill-will,
he lives benevolent in mind;
and compassionate for the welfare
of all creatures and beings,
he purifies the mind of the taint of ill-will.

By getting rid of sloth and torpor,
he lives devoid of sloth and torpor;

perceiving the light,
mindful and clearly conscious,
he purifies the mind of sloth and torpor.

By getting rid of restlessness and worry,
he lives calmly,
the mind subjectively tranquillised,
he purifies the mind of restlessness and worry.

By getting rid of doubt,
he lives doubt-crossed;
unperplexed as to the states that are skilled,
he purifies his mind of doubt.

He, by getting rid Of these five hindrances - defilements of a mind and weakening to intuitive wisdom -
aloof from pleasure of the senses,
aloof from unskilled states of mind,
enters and abides in the first meditation,
which is accompanied by initial thought and discursive thought,
is born of aloofness
and is rapturous and joyful.

If a disciple attains such lofty eminence under this Teacher, [522] an intelligent person could certainly live that Brahma-faring and,
living it,
could gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled.

■

And again, Sandaka, a monk,
by allaying initial and discursive thought,
his mind subjectively tranquillised
and fixed on one point,
enters on

and abides in
the second meditation
which is devoid of initial and discursive thought,
is born of concentration
and is rapturous and joyful.

If a disciple attains such lofty eminence under this Teacher,
an intelligent person could certainly live that Brahma-faring and,
living it,
could gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled.

■

And again, Sandaka, a monk,
by the fading out of rapture,
dwells with equanimity,
attentive and clearly conscious,
and experiences in his person
that joy of which the ariyans say:
'Joyful lives he who has equanimity and is mindful,'
and he enters on
and abides in
the third meditation.

If a disciple attains such lofty eminence under this Teacher,
an intelligent person could certainly live that Brahma-faring and,
living it,
could gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled.

■

And again, Sandaka, a monk
by getting rid of joy,

by getting rid of anguish,
by the going down of his former pleasures and sorrows,
enters on
and abides in
the fourth meditation
which has neither anguish nor joy,
and which is entirely purified
by equanimity and mindfulness.

If a disciple attains such lofty eminence under this Teacher,
an intelligent person could certainly live that Brahma-faring and,
living it,
could gain success in the right path,
in dhamma,
in what is skilled.

■

Thus with the mind composed,
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable,
stable,
immovable,
he directs his mind
to the knowledge and recollection of former habitations.

He recollects a variety of former habitations, thus:

One birth,
two births,
three births,
four births,
five births,

ten births,
twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,
fifty births,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
and many an eon of integration
and many an eon of disintegration
and many an eon of integration-disintegration:

'Such a one was I by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so I was nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I came to be in another state
where I was such a one by name,
having such and such a clan,
such and such a colour,
so I was nourished,
such and such pleasant and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end.

Passing from this,
I arose here.'

Thus he recollects divers former habitations
in all their modes and detail.

■

With the mind composed thus,
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable,
stable,
immovable,
he directs his mind
to the knowledge of the passing hence
and the arising of beings.

With the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men,
he sees beings as they pass hence
or come to be;
he comprehends that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going,
according to the consequences of deeds,
and thinks:

'Indeed these worthy beings
who were possessed of wrong conduct in body,
speech
and thought,
scoffers at the ariyans,
holding a wrong view,
incurring deeds consequent on a wrong view -
these, at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a sorrowful state,
a bad bourn,

the abyss,
Niraya Hell.

But these worthy beings
who were possessed of good conduct in body,
speech
and thought,
who did not scoff at the ariyans,
holding a right view,
incurring deeds consequent on a right view -
these at the breaking up of the body after dying,
have arisen in a good bourn,
a heaven world.'

Thus with the purified deva-vision
surpassing that of men
does he see beings as they pass hence,
as they arise;
he comprehends that beings are mean,
excellent,
comely,
ugly,
well-going,
ill-going
according to the consequences of deeds.

■

With the mind composed thus,
quite purified,
quite clarified,
without blemish,
without defilement,
grown soft and workable,
stable,
immovable,

he directs his mind
to the knowledge of the destruction of the cankers.

